THE RAT AND THE WEASEL.—My informant states that a farmer in the State of Maine, of his acquaintance, has noticed at different times for the period of two weeks, combats between a large rat and a weasel in his barn; from which encounters the latter invariably came off second best. One day, being at work near his barn, his attention was attracted to the weasel very busily engaged in digging a hole in a dung heap. He watched the weasel until he had tunneled the heap and made a hole of considerable size at the entrance, and about half way through the heap; the rest of the hole was tapered off, so that at the place of egress it was of barely sufficient size for the slim little body of the weasel to pass through. When the plotter had finished his hole, he went into the barn and engaged his antagonist ratship. Beaten of course again in the encounter, the weasel ran, pursued by the rat, into the hole of the dung hill, the grain eater little suspicious of the snare laid for him. Like many unfortunate human beings, the poor rat was "stuck," and halted sadly between the two extremes; while his cunning little foe emerged from the small end, and whipped round briskly to the larger entrence, brought up the rear, and there was soon a dead rat. Here now was a regular plan laid, a shrewd design carried out successfully on the part of the weasel, for destroying a foe which was too much for him in a fair fight. It showed forethought and contrivence, and there are very strong symptoms of something more than mere instinct. [Valley Farmer.

Jonathan Ahead—Or a Tale of Love and Stratagem.

BY JEROME W STALDING.

"The critter lovee me! I know she loves me!" said Jonathan Dohkins, as he sat on the corn-field fence, meditating the course of true love, that was running—as Mr. Shakespeare said it did—rather roughly. "If Suke Peabody has taken a shine to that gawky, long-shanked, stammerin', shy critter, Gussett, just because he's a city feller, she ain't the gal I took her for, that's certain. No, it's the old folks, darn their ugly plotnrs. Old Mrs Peabody was allers a dreadful hifelntin' crittor, full of stuck up notions; and the old man's a regular soft-head, driven by his wife jnst as our old one-eyed rooster is driven about by our cantankerous five-toed Dorkin' hen. But if I don't spile his fun, my name ain't Jonathan. I'm going to the city by railroad next week, and when I come back, I'll wake snaks—that's all."

The above soliloquy may serve to give the reader some idea of the land in the pleasant rustic village where the speaker resided.

Mr. Jonathan Dohkins was a young farmer well to do with the world, and looking out for a wife, and had been paying his addresses to Miss Susan Peabody. One Mr. Cornelius Gussett, who kept a dry goode shop in Hanover street, Boston, suddenly made his appearance in the field and began the cutting out game.

Dazzled with the prospect of becoming a gentleman's wife, and pestered with the importunity of her aspiring mamma, the village beauty began to waver, when her old lover determined on a last and bold stroke to foil his rival. He went to the city and returned; of his business he said nothing—not even to a pumping old maiden aunt, who kept house for him. He went not near the Peabodys, but labored in his corn-field, awaiting the result of his machinations.

The next day, Mr. Gussett was seated with he old folks and their daughter, in the best room of Peabody's mansion, chatting as pleasantly as possible, when the door opened, and in rushed a very dirty Irish woman.

"Is it there ye sit, Mr. Cornelius Gussett! Come ont of that before I fetch ye, ye spalpoen! Is that whet ye promised me before the prast, ye hathen, ye nager? Running away from me and the childer—forsakin' yer lawful wedded wife, and runnin' after the Yankee gals, ye infidel!"

"Woman, there must be some mistake here," stammered Gussett, taken all aback by this charge.

"Divil a bit, of a mistake, ye serpint! Oh, wirra, wirra, was it for the likes of ye I sacked little Dennis McCarty, who loved the very ground I trod on, and all bekase ye promised to make a lady of me, ye black, dirty thafe o' the world! Will ye come on to the railroad station, where I left little Patrick, bekase he was too sick with the small-pox to come eny further, or will ye wait till I drag ye?"

"Go—go along; go, and I'll follow you," gasped Gussett. He thought it best to temporise.

"I'll give you ten minutes," said the virago: "if ye ain't there, it's me cousin, Thaddy Magrundy, will be afther ye, ye thafe!"

And away went the unbidden guest.

Mr. Gussett was then engaged in stammering ont a denial of all knowledge of the virago, when the parlor door again opened, and a little, black-eyed, hatchet-faced woman, in a flashy silk gown, and a cap of many ribbons perched on the top of her head, invaded the sanctity of the parlor.

"Is he here?" she cried in a very decided French accent.

Then she added with a scream:

"Ah! mon Dieu! sare he is! Traitore, monster! Vat for you rune away from me? Dis two, three yeare I nevair see you—nevair, and my heart broke very bad entirely."

"Who are you?" cried Gussett, his eyes starting ont of his head, and shivering from head to foot.

"He asks me who I am! Oh! you are a very respectable old gentleman—you hear what he asks! Who am I?—perfide, I am your wife!"

"I never saw you before, so help me God!" cried Gussett energetically.

"Don't you swear!" said old Mr. Peabody; "if you do, I'll kick you into fits. I won't have any profane swearing in my house."

"Oh, bless you, bless you, respectable old gentlemen! Tell him he must come wis me; tell him I have spoke to se constable; tell him—" here sobe interrupted her utterance.

"It's a pesky bad business," said the deacon, chafing with unwonted ire. "Gussett, you are a rascal!"

"Take care, Deacon Peabody, take care, sir," said the unfortunate shop-keepor.

"I remarked that you were a rascal, Gusset. You have gone and married two wives, and that ere's flat burglary if I know anything about the Revised Statoote."

"Two vife!" shrieked the little French woman.

"Half-a-dozen for aught I know to the contrary!" said the deacon. "Neow you get ont of my house; go away to the station and cleer ont to Boston, I want nothing more to do with you"

"But, deacon, heer me."

"I don't want to hear you, you serpint," cried the deacon, stopping his ears with his hands; "you marryin' two wives, and comin' a countin' a third! Go 'long; clear ont."

Even Mrs. Peabody, who was inclined to put in a word for the culprit, was silenced. Susan turned from him in despair; he fled to the railroad depot, hotly pursued by the clamorous French women.

That afternoon, as Miss Susan Peabody was walking towards the village, she was overtaken by Mr. Jonathan Dohkins, dressed in his best, and driving a fast-going horse before his Sunday-go-to-meeting gig. He reined up and thus accosted her:

"Hello, Suke; get in and take a little ride."

"Don't keer if I do, Jonathan," replied the young lady, accepting the proffered seat.

"I say, you," said Jonathan, grinning, "that ere city feller's turned out poorly, ain't he?"

"It's dreadful, if it's true," replied Susan.

"You had a narrow escape, didn't ye?" pursued her old lover. "But he warn't any account, no how. What do the old folks think of it?"

"They hain't said a word since he cleared ont."

"Forgot the night I cerried you home from singing-school?" asked Jonathan, suddenly branching off.

"No, I hain't," replied the lady, blushing and smiling at the same time.

"Remember them apples I gin ye?"

"Oh, yes."

"Well, they was good, wasn't they?"

"Fustrate, Jonathan."

"Go a hull orchard full of such kind of fruit," said Jonathan suggestively.

Susan was silent.

"G'lang!" exclaimed Jonathan, putting the braid to his black horee.

"Have you any idee where we're going to, Suke?"

"I'm going to the village."

"No you ain't; you are going along with me"

"Where to?"

"Providence; and you don't come back till you're Mrs. Dobkins, no how you can fix it."

"How yuu talk, Jonathan."

"It's a fact."

"But, then, the old folks—" commented Susan.

"Darn the old folks," said Jonathan, putting on the string again; "ef I was to leave you with them much longer, they would be a tradin' you off to some city feller who has half a dozon wives already."

The next day as Mr. and Mrs. Dohkins were returning home, said Jonathan confidentially:

"May as well tell you, Suke—for I hev'nt any secrets from you neow—that Gussett never saw them women afore they stepped into your house and blowed him up, as I had thought. Cost me the dollars—thunder! I told them what to say, and I expect they done it well. Gussett may be a shop keeper, but if he expects to get ahead of Jonathan Dohkins he must get up a plaguy sight earlier in the morning."

CONSEQUENCES OF THE WAR.—Wanted, a few smart, handsome young gentlemen to dance at evening parties, on account of the great drain of officers that the war has carried off to the East. They must convoree freely about the weather, the opera, and all fashionable topics, and be accustomed to good society. They must be well practiced in the polka, waltz (single or well as a deux temps,) schottische, and not be above dancing in a quadrille if needed. They must be single, and not exceed the age of forty. They must not refuse to dance with an elderly lady occasionally, if the size of her property is such as to warrant the presumption. The terms offered, including champagne supper, are of the most liberal description, and may be ascertained at Gunter's, St. James's Square, or of the Secretary of the "Distressed Young Ladies' Elegant Partners' Association," at Hanover Square rooms. Young gentlemen presenting themselves must bring with them a white neck cloth as a specimen. Not the slightest objection, at present, to officers in the militia, but no troublesome, unless extremely rich and highly respectable in the wholesale line, need trouble himself by applying. Wanted, also, a few agreeable, rattling, clever young fellows, who can sing, conjure and play tricks. A vacancy for a young nobleman who can fry omelettes in his hat, in a genteel establishment, where hot suppers are given and a servant in livery is kept. Terms, including kid gloves, (new, not cloaned,) well worth the attention of younger sons, who have very little or nothing on their hands. Inquire as above. N. B—A good light dinner Irishman is in large request. [Punch

VERDICT OF A CHICAGO CORONER'S JURY.—The Chicago Press publishes the following verbatim copy of a verdict rendered a few days since by a Coroner's jury upon the body of a female child found upon the lake shore:

STATE OF ILLINOISE, Cook county, ss.

At an Inquisition taken for the peopel of the State of Illinoise and county of Cook this 26th day of May a.d. 1854 before Mr. Anetin Ilynes Coroner of said county of Cooke upon the view of the body of Femnle Child, neme unknown than and lying dead upon the oatlis of Twelve Good and Lawful Men of the peopel of the Said State and County of Cock and When and who the said osme to hie or she ceme to her death We the Jury do say We the Jurors do Agree The Body came to her Death by death unknown.

The editor of the Pitshurgh Poet has turned type-setter. His first effort appeared under his editorial head a few days ago, and will be found below. He will, no douht, be "one of them," some of these days:

NeWpriNteR.

This is our eg ort at typesetting.—we pesume that it will show that we oan learn fast.

we are self-taught too. We Want ho help, as will have it right without ecieitance. The proof will need no corcteion, we don't intend to try it every day; but we will let the drinters know thet we aro one off them.

talk about the ART of drinting! It is just is easy as rolliog off a log.

ANECDOTE OF PETER CARTWRIGHT.—While he was preaching, years ago, Gen. Jackson entered the church, when a pastor seated in the pulpit, gave hie "Brother Certwright" a nudge, and whispered that the old hero had just come in—as much as to advise, "now be particular what you say." But Peter, to the astonishment of every one, louder then ever exclaimed—"Who cares for Gen. Jackson? He'll go to hell as soon as any body, if he don't repent!"

When the sermon—a home-made one—was ended, a friend asked the General what he thought of that rough old fellow, and received for answer: "Sir, give me twenty thoueand such men, and I'll whip the whole world, including the devil!"

KILLED BY LIGHTNING.—We understand that on Friday last, Mr. Lewis P. Breedlove was killed by lightning, near LaPisce, Macon county, Ala. He was on horseback at the time, and the horee was also killed. He was struck on the head, the fluid passing down hie body to the horse. Mr. B. was a school-teacher, and was at the time of the accident returning from hie school to his residence. [Montgomory (Ala.) Advertiser, let.

A quaker said to a gunner, "Friend, I counsel no bloodshed, but if it be thy design to hit the little man in the blue jacket, point thine engine three inches lower."

To the disgrace of the canine race, a drunken dog made his appearance in Milwaukee. The Democrat says "he acted pretty much as other folks do when in a similar state. He made very good rail fence for a few minutes, and then went and laid down by the side of a wood-pile."

There is an inscription on a tombstone at La Point, Lake Superior, which reads as follows: "John Phillips, accidentally shot as a mark of affection by his brother."

It is not a little singular that the letters that spell debt are the initials of the sentence, "Dun Every Body Twice;" and the letters which spell credit, are the initials of the sentence, "Call Regularly Every Day—I'll Trust."

Valuable Land for Sale.

FIFTEEN HUNDRED AND SEVENTY-FIVE ACRES in the western part of Alabama, fourteen miles from the Bigbee river and eight from the M. & O Railroad. Most of the land is very rich, with good buildings on each, comprising dwellings, negro cabins; and also a superior horse-power Sawmill. On the east is a good neighborhood, and on the west an extensive range for stock—800 acres in cultivation, and well watered.

A more desirable place can seldom be found where land is rich

Terms easy. For further information, apply to JAS B. RAMSEY, Daleville, Lauderdale co., Miss.

june 17, 1854 tf

To Booksellers, Agents, and Peddlers.

BURNETT & BOSTWICK, PUBLISHERS,

15 Camp Street, 15

HAVE just issued from their press the following valuable works:

VOYAGE OF THE U. S. EXPLORING SQUADRON, commanded by Capt. Charles Wilkes of the U. S. N., together with Explorations and Discoveries made by Admiral D'Urville, Capt. Ross and other Navigators and Travelers, and an account of the Expedition to the Dead Sea under Lieut. Lynch, with numerous illustrations.
LIFE OF JOHN C CALHOUN.
LIFE OF JAMES K. POLK, with a history of his Administration.
THE HEROINES OF HISTORY.
HEROINES OF THE CRUSADES.
PANORAMA OF NATIONS.
THE GREAT CITIES OF THE WORLD.
LIVES OF JOHN AND CHARLES WESLEY.
WILLIS'S WORKS—seven volumes.
THE MIRROR OF THE SOUL.
FARM AND FIRESIDE.
RURAL HOMES, &c. &c.

For the sale of the above and many other works, which are all very valuable and popular, we desire to establish an agency in every county and parish in the South; and therefore offer unparalleled inducements to country dealers, agents and peddlers.

A Catalogue of all our publications furnished on application, post paid, to

BURNETT & BOSTWICK, Publishers,
may 27 6m 15 Camp street, New Orleans.

THE BRITISH QUARTERLIES,

AND

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.

LEONARD SCOTT & CO., No. 34 Gold street, New York, continue to publish the following British Periodicals, viz:
THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW, (Conservative.)
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW, (Whig.)
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW, (Free Church.)
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW, (Liberal.)

AND

BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE, (Tory.)

—TERMS—

For any one of the four Reviews ..... $8 00 per annum
For any two " " ..... 5 00 "
For any three " " ..... 7 00 "
For all four of the Reviews, ... 8 00 "
For Blackwood's Magazine, ... 3 00 "
For Blackwood and the three Reviews, 9 00 "
For Blackwood and the four Reviews, 10 00 "

Payments to be made, in all cases, in advance. Money current in the State where issued will be received at par.

Address, post paid, LEONARD SCOTT & CO., 79 Fulton at., New York. Entrance 54 Gold at.

☞ Postage on Blackwood and the four Reviews, 72 cents a year. [Nov13-1y.]

ENERGETIC BUSINESS MEN

CAN find profitable employment in selling GOODRICH'S LAST GREAT WORK,

A HISTORY OF ALL NATIONS,

From the earliest period to the present time, or

UNIVERSAL HISTORY,

IN WHICH THE

History of every Nation, Ancient and Modern,

is separately given By S G. GOODRICH, Consul to Paris, author of "Peter Parley's Tales," &c., 1207 royal octavo pages, illustrated by 70 maps and 700 engravings, bound in morocco.

☞ The work is not for sale in Book-Stores, but is sold ONLY by Canvassing Agents, to whom the exclusive right of sale in their territory is given by the publishers.

Twelve Thousand Copies already Sold

by our Agents. Canvassers who obtain but one subscriber per day make good wages.

☞ An active, energetic Agent wanted in every unoccupied county in the United States and Canadas. For full particulars, &c., address

MILLER, ORTON & MULLIGAN, Publishers, Auburn, N. Y.

LA GRANGE COLLEGE.

The next term of this Institution will commence on WEDNESDAY, JULY 19.

FACULTY:

R. H. RIVERS, D. D., President and Professor of Mental and Moral Science and Belles Lettres
C. F. CASEY, A. M., Professor of Ancient Languages.
A. P. RICE, A. M., Professor of Pure Mathematics.
Rev. D. B. ROSE, A. M., Prof. of Mixed Mathematics.
THOS. P. HATCH, A. B., Professor of Natural Science.
THOS. SMITH, A. D., Principal of Preparatory Department.

EXPENSES:

Tuition per term of five months,	$25 00
Board (washing included)	50 00
Room rent and servant's hire	8 00
Chemical fee (senior year)	5 00

In the Department of Mathematics, Professor Rice will give instructions in Practical Engineering, without extra charge.

Important additions have recently been made to the laboratory and the means of illustrating the different Departments of Natural History, and in all departments of the College, no pains will be spared to provide the best facilities for a thorough and practical education. The plan of endowment has been favorably received, and we confidently expect its speedy accomplishment.

The foundations of a new and large college building will soon be laid, and we intend to make LaGrange College, in every respect, inferior to no institution in the West.

THOS. P. HATCH,
my20 2m Secretary of the Faculty.

Education.

A young man who will graduate at Randolph, Macon College, Virginia, next June, would like to enter upon the pleasant task of instructing youth, as soon thereafter as possible. He intends making teaching a lifetime business, hence Trustees of Academies would do well to procure his services, as they can be permanently secured by a first rate salary. He intends doing his duty in his profession, and will be satisfied with nothing short of good pay for his services. Certificates of character and scholarship will be sent to those desiring to procure a teacher, which cannot fail to give satisfaction. Terms and location, including its salubrity and condition of society, must accompany all communications to J. P. D., Randolph, Macon College P. O., Virginia. ap22 2m*

Dr. J. T. Kennon,

Castilian Spring,

Holmes County, Mississippi,

Is now prepared to offer good accommodations to invalids who may desire to visit Castilian Spring, or place themselves under his care for treatment. This is one of the most desirable retreats for invalids in the South, located in an elevated healthy region of country, with abundance of fine Freestone water. The mineral water is composed very strongly of Iron, Sulphur, Magnesia and Soda, and contains largely of Carbonic Acid Gas.

The diseases which it has cured are Dyspepsia, Dropsy, General Debility, Affections of the Kidneys, Bladder, and the various functional and organic derangements of the Womb. This water is especially efficacious in Diseases of Females.

Board, per week—$7.

Reference—Ministers of Miss. Conference.

Rev. J. B. Walker, Rev. H. N. McTyeire, } New Orleans.

march 4 6m

JEFFERSON BOOK STORE.

W. FLEMMINO, BOOLSELLER and STATIONER, corner of Jackson and Tchoupitoulas streets, Fourth District, New Orleans, would respectfully call the attention of Country Merchants, Colleges, Academies, Public Schools, etc., to my

LARGE STOCK OF SCHOOL BOOKS,

Consisting in part of—

SPELLING BOOKS, READING BOOKS, DICTIONARIES, Grammars, Rhetoric, Composition, Chemistry, Botany, Mineralogy, Geology, Natural History, Astronomy, Drawing, Book-keeping, Geography, Biography, Natural Philosophy, Elocution, Logic, History, Arithmetic, History, Geometry, Surveying, Mensuration, French Grammars, Dictionaries, Readers, etc.

SPANISH, GERMAN AND ITALIAN GRAMMARS, Dictionaries, Readers, etc.

GREEK AND LATIN BOOKS of all descriptions.

MISCELLANEOUS AND STANDARD WORKS; RELIGIOUS AND THEOLOGICAL WORKS, all denominations, which I offers to sell at much lower prices than heretofore sold in the South.

FANCY EMBOSSED NOTE PAPER AND ENVELOPES;
LETTER, CAP AND RECORD PAPER, of all qualities. Ruled and Plain.
BLANK BOOKS, of all descriptions and sizes;
CHEAP PUBLICATIONS, MAGAZINES AND NEWSPAPERS;
CHRISTMAS AND NEW YEAR'S PRESENTS;
ANNUALS for 1854, of all descriptions and styles of binding;
ALBUMS, FANCY PORTFOLIOS, WORK-BOXES, WRITING DESKS, PORT MONNAIES, CARD CASES, MUSIC, etc.

For sale, on reasonable terms, by

WILLIAM FLEMING,
feb25 1y Bookseller and Stationer.

☞ All orders promptly attended to.

OCEAN SPRINGS.

The undersigned, having been appointed as agent for the sale of lots at Ocean Springs, has, under the authority of the proprietors at the place, had the whole property resurveyed and a map made upon a large scale; also, lithograph plans in pamphlet form, for distribution to persons wishing to purchase. To two will enable any one to see the location and qualities of any particular lot, or they will be shown them on the spot, either by one of the owners, or the subscriber.

The advantages of the watering place cannot be known or fully appreciated, except by a visit to the place, and this is respectfully solicited from all those having any idea of locating on the Lake shore. The land on the Bay consists of the finest bluffs, with large live oak trees, between here and Mobile; some twenty or twenty-five feet above the level of the lake, with ravines between each bluff, and which serve as a drain to them and to all the land in the rear back to old Fort Bayou, upon which the two springs are situated, say about three-quarters of a mile from the Bay. The whole of the land between the Bay and the Bayou is better drained than any other place upon the Lake. The soil is good, and produces (with little aid, and which is at hand in the bottoms) excellent corn and vegetables. The absence of sand, so common at the watering places, affords a fine opportunity for good drives.

The Bay affords the best opportunity for sailing with safety, of any place upon the coast. Abundance of fish and oysters can be obtained at all times, and in the winter, ducks in any quantity. The bathing is also very superior.

The superior virtues of the two springs (sulphur and chalybeate) have not only been proven by the analysis of some of our first chemists, but their medicinal qualities have been fully demonstrated in the cure of several well-known citizens of this and other States.

A hotel of the first class will be kept open summer and winter, and in addition to which an infirmary will be established from the first of May next, near the springs, under the management of two of the most respectable physicians of the city.

Persons wishing to purchase any of this property are invited to call on the undersigned and inspect the large plan and lithographs, and for full particulars.

J. O. PIERSON, Real Estate Broker, mh11 fim 7 Commercial Place.

WHOLESALE DRY GOODS TRADE.

SPRING IMPORTATIONS, 1854.

JOSEPH H. PALMER & CO. have in store and are receiving regularly from the European and American markets their usual supplies of seasonable Goods, viz:

PRINTED GOODS, comprising Calicoes of various styles and qualities; Lawns, Jaconets, Organdies, Barages, &c.

LINEN GOODS—Irish Linens of every grade. Linen Drills, Linen Sheetings, Table Linens, Brown Linens, Grass Linens, Brown Hollands, Brown and Bleached Duck, Planters' Linens, Farmers' Drills, Linen and Lawn Handkerchiefs, every quality.

SILK GOODS, embracing plain and figured Dress Silks, Plaid Silks, Foulards, Satins, Velvets, Florences, Shawls, Handkerchiefs, Sewings, &c.

WOOLEN and WORSTED GOODS, comprising De Laines, Barages, Merinos, Alpacas, Bombazines, Canton Cloths, &c.

COTTON GOODS, consisting in part of Brown and Bleached Cotton Shirtings and Sheetings, of every quality and width; Cottonades, Camlets, Chambrays, Nankeens, Checks, Stripes, Denims, &c., at extremely low prices by the piece and package only.

JOSEPH H. PALMER & CO.,
feb18 Importers and Wholesale Dealers, 47 Camp st.

PHILADELPHIA SADDLERY AND TRUNK WAREHOUSE.

S. ROBB & CO.,

No. 4 Magazine street, one door from Canal street,

New Orleans.

The subscribers invite Planters and Dealers in Saddlery etc., to call and examine their stock.

They are constantly receiving Goods from the Manufactory in Philadelphia, and direct from England, and are prepared to offer liberal inducements to purchasers.

Their stock in store is large and well assorted, and is comprised as follows:

Saddles, Bridles and Martingales in great variety; Coach, Gig, Buggy, Dearborn, Stage, Wagon, Dray, Cart and Plough Harness; Horse and Mule Collars, Hames and Hind Bridles; Trace Chains; Medical Bags; Saddlery Hardware; Leather of all descriptions; Couch Furniture and Trimmings; Trunk Trimmings; Saddlers' Coach and Trunkmakers' Tools; Oil, Varnish; India Rubber and Patent stretched Leather Gin and Mill Bands; India Rubber Goods; Traveling and Packing Trunks, Valises, Leather and Carpet Traveling Bags, &c.

m 2 '52—1y

Bells! Bells!! Bells!!!

Far Churches, Academies, Factories, Steamboats, Plantations, etc., made, and a large assortment kept constantly on hand by the Subscribers,

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Publishing Committee Louisiana Conference, { J. C. KEENER, L. PARKER, J. B. WALKER.

H. N. McTYEIRE, EDITOR.

J. HAMILTON, D. D., T. W. DORMAN, W. MURRAH. } Publishing Committee Alabama Conference.

VOL. IV. NO. 21. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, JUNE 24, 1854. WHOLE NO. 177.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

THE AGED MINISTER.

He stands before me now, a reverend form
Once much renowned for stately beauty, when
The warm blood flowed unfettered through his veins.
Beneath his dark, serene and passive eye,
In by-gone days, the fount of intellect
Held many kindling waves of mental fire—
Far even yet a passing spark may rouse
That quiet eye to pour its speaking thoughts
Upon the favored ones who watch his lips
As if they were the oracles of God.
Once—when the singing birds of verdant Springs
Now numbered with the records of the past,
Cheered him along the dim and lonely path
Mid half unbroken forests, and the scenes
Of Nature's landscapes, and untutored sons,
His footstep did not falter at the door
As it does now, nor then did trembling limbs
Betoken that to him the strife of war,
Of rattling armor and contending powers,
Full soon should cease for ever.

I love to gaze
Upon that aged soldier's face. So long
Has he been looking Zion-ward, that light
From the Eternal City seems to fall
Fresh from the great white throne upon his head
And makes each silv'ry lock a witness true
Of faithful service in his Master's cause.
In storm and sunshine, persecution, praise,
Amid all the varied stages of success
With which the blood-stained banner has been crowned,
He has been ever firm; fixed on the Rock
Of endless ages, opposition moved
No muscle of his frame, nor yet betrayed
By brief prosperity to cast aside
His trusty sword, or shield of confidence,
In Jesus trusting, his has been a life
Of toil and triumph, victory and peace.
How oft that shattered voice, now nearly spent,
Has sweetly wooed the sinner to the Cross!
How oft those lips, though quivering now with age,
Have whispered words of mercy to the soul
By sins unnumbered at the altar bowed,
Or lifting up the voice of earnest prayer,
Have claimed the promises to sinners given,
Till mighty faith in strong believing hearts
Has reached the prize and torn the vail away
And heavenly glory filled the temple's Courts!

He moves among us now
A monument of former greatness. His
Shall never more an active officer
Stand at the head of Israel and lead
The way to victory. But it is enough
That he hath held the flag-staff years ago,
And planted it within the citadel
Of many cities strongly fortified
By all the arts of sin. But yet his age
Has never dimm'd his courage, for although
He may not strike a blow himself, his heart
So ardent burns to see his Master's cause
With still increasing honors crowned, that oft
When loudest roars the din of war, and fast
The closing ranks engage in earnest strife,
I see his frosted locks amidst the rage
Of fiends offended, and victorious shouts
Of saints refreshed, in peerless beauty wave,
Whilst o'er those furrowed cheeks the tear-drops roll,
Drawn from his genial heart by sunny rays
Of heavenly joy. He may not preach again,
For now his stammering tongue no longer gives
The portrait of his thoughts. And yet to me
He is an eloquence unequaled here,
For now he stands between the militant
And the triumphant hosts, and with one hand
He clasps the Captain of the hosts above,
And with the other leads his friends below.

Whene'er I look beyond
The bounds of Time, and in the spirit gaze
Upon the unseen world, I fondly ask
Have I a trophy there? I know not if
A ministerial seal of mine has passed
The sluggish river, and in Heaven views
The blessed Son of God. But how is it
With this old servant of the Lord? We need
Not question here! His word has fallen oft
On fruitful ground, and many souls were born
To God, who own him as the instrument
In bringing them from darkness unto light.
And many scores of these have reached the shore
Of safe deliverance, beyond the reach
Of sickness, pain, and suffering; and they form
A coronet of joy, in waiting now
To welcome him to mansions in the skies!
From the young lambs by his instruction brought Into the Shepherd's fold, to aged sires
And mothers fond, a goodly company
Waits the loved disciple in the land
Whereof his testimony has been given
Near three-score years gone by.

Oh, if my Lord
Would spare me in this world of pain and woe,
To gather silvery hairs and triumphs oft
Upon the field of battle, I would fain,
Like this beloved patriarch, look up
And claim my treasure where no moths corrupt;
A host of angel spirits taught the road
To life and glory by my truthful word.

But if I die
Whilst yet my youthful locks betoken few
Of the sharp struggles on the field of strife,
Meekly I own thy sovereign power, my God,
But yet one prayer I ask: beside my wife
And children there, let me at least find one
To Heaven pointed by my ministry,
And then Thy righteous will be done!

ALPHA.

Athens co., Alabama Conf., 1854.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

THE WAY IT WAS DONE.

MR. EDITOR—Not a great many weeks, or months, or perhaps years ago, a duel was fought between two lawyers (one an editor,) which had the singular effect of metamorphosing one of the parties, who had been denounced by the other as a deceitful, cowardly liar, into a gentleman upon terms of equality and friendship with his antagonist. How was it done? Did an explanation take place after the duel, which had the effect of giving satisfaction to both parties? No; nothing of the kind. One had branded the other with the above harsh epithets, and the result was a challenge, which was accepted, to be fought with rifles. At the fourth round the challenged party was disabled by a serious though not mortal wound; whereupon the other went up and gave his hand, which was accepted, and expressed himself as gratified to find it no worse, and promised also to do all he could for the comfort of his antagonist. No explanation it seems was necessary to make the parties to friendship. A rifle ball did the whole work. It had the effect of wiping every stain off the character of the man who had been denounced in a most scurrilous editorial.

Now does not every sensible man see the utter folly of duelling. How ridiculous a farce is a duel conducted as above. When will men in high places learn to lay aside false honor and seek that true Wisdom which alone can save the soul.

Now, Mr. Editor, the above cap will no doubt fit many heads, and no harm can result from publishing it.

Yours, etc. A FACT.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

"TYPES OF MANKIND."

A MAN IN PERPLEXITY.

MR. EDITOR—I have lately been thrown into quite an awkward predicament by the discoveries of those distinguished men who have produced that wonderful book, "Types of Mankind." I wish to state the grounds of my perplexity, and if you or any one else can help me, let me conjure you by all your regard for an honest, suffering humanity, to afford that help without delay. Perhaps those literary Goliahs may be moved with compassion at the sufferings of a man (I don't know what race he belongs to exactly,) and extend a helping hand. The grounds of my difficulties are these: I had been accustomed to receive the statements of the Bible as decisive proof and infallible facts, and had found great comfort in its doctrines and the indulgence of the hopes which it holds out; and I had intended to teach these delightful lessons to my sweet babes, to lead and point them to the Saviour, and through Him to a blessed, permanent, endless home in Heaven. But, oh me! how are our hopes dashed as in a moment. Messrs. Nott, Morton and others have just discovered that the statements of that cherished book are not reliable, its hopes delusive, its Saviour an impostor, and its Heaven a chimera! They have demonstrated, it is said, that mankind did not all descend from Adam and Eve, that each distinct variety of what we used to call "our race," had its separate and distinct origin and primary father. So Eve was not justly or truly named, for "she is" not "the mother of all living." And the tale of a flood which "destroyed every living thing that breathed upon the face of the earth," and of an "ark wherein eight souls were saved," namely, Noah and his three sons, with their wives, is unfounded and fabulous. And the Prophet which speaks of God making one woman that he might seek a godly seed, was in gross error; for God must have made several women—see Malachi, 2 ch., 15 v. Again; the Bible everywhere represents mankind as in a lapsed and fallen state, in consequence of the sin and fault of Adam and Eve. "In Adam all die." "By one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin." "By one man's offence death reign by one"—that is by one sin. "By one man's disobedience many were made sinners." But all this has been proven to be absolutely false; so it is said. For how could the Indians in America, or the Negroes in Africa, be affected by Adam's sin in Asia? Besides, Adam had no connection with them; and God heard as well onased them with death and toil and pain for the sin of an inhabitant of the Moon, as for Adam's disobedience. So this will have to be set down as another old and unfounded legend. There is, however, one faint hope left, namely, that the children of Adam and Eve have been redeemed by Jesus Christ. For them, and them only, the Bible offers a Saviour. If others are redeemed, we are not informed of the fact—are not authorized to offer salvation to them. To encourage the hope and faith of Adam and his children, the Saviour was promised; of his descendants he came, and for his family His Mediatorial acts are all along represented as being performed, exclusively performed: Ro. 5 ch., 1 Cor., 15 ch.

Now, Mr. Editor, the hope this leaves, even if it was not contradicted by the manner in which the Bible contradicts these late demonstrations in other respects, is involved in much confusion. For I can't tell for the life of me whether I am a pure blooded child of Adam or not. And O! my poor children, what shall I do for them? I had indulged in the pleasing hope that, through the Saviour, one of them—a beautiful, sprightly, affectionate little daughter—had gone to a bright, fadeless, joyous home. But I can't tell from whom she sprung! Then the races have mingled and intermingled until there are any conceivable proportions of Adamite blood to be found mingled with the blood of others.

Mr. Editor, I believe you are a preacher, and I would like to know how you will manage this matter. Will you attempt to conform your pulpit instructions to the demonstrations of these philosophers. They tell me they have proven the world to be mighty old, much older than Moses, and Paul, and Peter thought it was. But, after all, I am very loth to give up my Bible, my Saviour, my hope of Heaven. Wonder if there is not some mistake in these new discoveries. Is it not possible? Let us suggest a few points about which, after all, we can but think there may be some mistake. Will those gentlemen take them again into profound consideration? Is it not possible that God, for wise and gracious reasons, effected the distinctions of color and organization, etc., which now characterize the family of man? Is it not possible that the Bible account of the original unity of the races may be correct, and that the present variations may be accounted for on the ground that it was the will of God that they should exist, and that His will was effected in this respect as in most others, by the operation of mysterious and inscrutable causes? Who can account for the varieties of complexion, form and physiognomy which obtain even in the same little household? Or among the immediate children of the same parents? Might not some invisible mysterious causes have produced changes of a more marked character as well as these smaller ones? Moses says, "the whole earth was of one language and speech," and that God confounded the original language; might not He, also, have set in operation causes that would make this variety of speech permanent and national, by producing marked and permanent physical differences, and by these causes necessitating the organization of distinct communities! May we not account for the "Types of Mankind" thus, and still believe Paul when he says, "God hath made of one blood all nations."

And then as to the age of the world. Did not God make the world? Might He not have made many things, at once, which we think have been formed by the slow process of natural laws? If those wise men had met Adam—a full grown man—the evening after God had made him, would they not have proven that he was twenty-five or thirty years old? If they had seen the hills and dales, rocks and mountains, trees and plants, rivers and oceans, birds and beast—if they had seen these things upon the morning of the first Sabbath, they would have decided infallibly that they were hundreds or thousands of years old. Who can tell what convulsions, floods and earthquakes have done? Gentlemen, your demonstrations and Scripture are antagonisms; they can not go together; we must reject the one or the other. And if our Bible must be given up, what shall we do? Our souls pant for immortality and blessedness, and we have looked around us with unspeakable anxiety for a sure foundation upon which to plant our feet, and thought we had found it in the Scriptures. But you have removed our foundation. Where shall we go? Shall we turn to the dark, bloody systems of Polytheism? Or to the absurdities of Mohammedanism? Or will you give us a new and better Religion? If so, please hasten its introduction. Your late demonstrations do not meet the wants of a guilty, struggling immortal, but take from us the balm and what we thought was the panacea of our diseased natures and numerous misfortunes. Until your new system shall be introduced, we must, it would seem, grope through the gloom of life, not knowing whither we go; and O, if the dark fate of death shall fall upon us, whence shall light break upon our fading vision?

Mr. Editor—What course do you think we had better take? Shall we pertinaciously and obstinately hold on to our exploded Christianity—teach it to our babes, and preach it to all; or shall we wait in idle expectation for the new developments?

J. W. E.

DeKalb, Miss., June 8, 1854.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

A BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH.

MRS. REBECCA S. SAUNDERS.

The life of a Christian is always interesting, whether there be marked peculiarities about that life or not. It is encouraging and profitable to read of the reclamation of any one from sin—of the after struggle with temptation and trial—of the final conflict and triumph. There is a book on high in which are recorded the lives of all God's faithful servants. To con over the pages of that book, will, perhaps, be one of the delights of eternity. But the interest with which we read Christian biography is heightened when the subject is one in whose life the Christian graces manifested themselves in a peculiar and extraordinary degree. That there are differences in the characters of Christians, can not be denied. How these originate, we may not always explain. Mental and moral organization, early training, religious opportunities, the strength of faith—each enters into the question; yet some, we know, are very much in advance of others in Christian attainment. Amid the host of witnesses for Christ, there have always shone out some whose faith and self-denial and earnest piety have distinguished them from the Church generally. The Church always has, and always will have its Chrysostoms, its Jeremy Taylors, its Fenelons, its Fletchers and its Parsons. There are those, too, who differ as much from their immediate Christian associates as these men differ from the whole Christian Church. And while it would not be well to write books containing the lives of such, lest the world be burdened with them, it is well to give them some exemption from that oblivion which rests upon the great majority of departed Christians, and to hold up their lives, however briefly, for the imitation of others, and especially those who have known and loved them.

Sister Rebecca Savilla Saunders was born sometime in the year 1829; professed religion and became a member of the M. E. Church in the tenth year of her age; was married to Rev. R. M. Saunders, of the Alabama Conference, in September, 1850, and departed this life on the 9th of January, 1854, aged 25 years.

Unlike most young persons, she did not wait until she had enjoyed the forbidden pleasure of the world before becoming religious. While yet but a mere child, she gave her heart to God. Then began a work of grace which nourished her inner life unto the "stature of the perfect man in Christ Jesus," preparing her for her future career of usefulness, and making her outward life universally wondered at and admired. The growth and development of her mind and body were not more regular and healthy than the growth and development of her spiritual character. In her Christian life there were uniformity, regularity, zeal and cheerfulness. While there were, doubtless, occasional fluctuations in her religious life, there were none materially affecting her enjoyment or the discharge of her duty. There was a continued devotion to duty and a continued flow of "peace toward God through our Lord Jesus Christ." She was regular in her attention to those private means of grace so essential to religious progress, never suffering them to be interrupted by any pressure of business or by any particular condition of mind. She was uniformly zealous. Her efforts for the promotion of the kingdom of Christ were active and untiring. In times of revival she would earnestly beseech her friends to present themselves at the altar for prayer; and she would labor with those who were seeking Christ, with much earnestness and effect.

Withal, there was little of the sombre and the repelling in her religion. Here was emphatically a religion of cheerfulness. It shed a sweet, refreshing light over her whole Christian character and life. Her artlessness and amiability were exceedingly winning. They recommended herself and her religion wherever she went, and gained for her a large circle of warm and admiring friends.

Nearly four years ago she was married by the writer to her now bereaved husband; and she was called to enter upon the arduous duties of an itinerant's wife. In her previous life she had been kindly cared for by the best of parents; and, reared in the midst of comfort and plenty, she knew nothing of inconvenience or want. But with a readiness and cheerfulness rarely witnessed, she entered upon the path Providence seems to have chosen for her; and, until her death, devoted herself, soul and body, to her peculiar work. After being sometime in the work, she writes in her journal, "I glory in the Itinerancy as far as I have any experience. I have never had a desire to leave its field. I feel now, indeed, that I want my location to be in heaven. Lord I do not desire a home on earth; I feel, and I wish to feel always, that I am a pilgrim and a stranger, journeying through this vale of tears."

Sometime during last year the health of her husband compelled him to relinquish his charge and desist from preaching. This was a very sore affliction to her, as we learn by the following extract: "Husband is about to give up his work in M——, on account of his health. I feel very sad about it. Lord, if it be thy holy will, restore him again, that he may be able to go on in the ministry! Lord help me! O, resign me to thy holy will! I need thy grace now! O, strengthen me!"

She was truly a help-mate to her husband, especially in connection with his ministerial duties, she seems to have been fitted, in an extraordinary degree, both by nature and education, for such a station. Such was the depth of her piety, the consistency of her life, and the original vigor and cultivation of her mind, that she was well prepared to discharge the duties of a minister's wife with patience, with cheerfulness, with discrimination, and with success. If it were true that some women are called to be minister's wives, we would believe that she was one. Her sympathies, her modes of thought, her education, as well as her own preferences, inclined her for several years previous to her marriage in that direction. We have only to regret that she was cut off in the midst of the career of usefulness upon which she had comparatively just entered.

Her activity manifested itself in every sphere where she could be useful. She writes thus in her journal. "April 9th—Another holy Sabbath has dawned upon us. Attended Sabbath school. Lord let me love it more." She took great pleasure in instructing young persons and leading them to Christ. She sympathized very intensely with her husband in his ministerial labors, temptations and trials. The success of his labors interested her very deeply. In a word, she as nearly filled our ideal of a minister's wife as any one we have ever known. Her uprightliness of mind, her educational opportunities, her sweetness of temper and refined manners well adapted her for any circle of society in which she was called to move, and made an association with her always acceptable and profitable.

More than two years since she sought and obtained the blessings of sanctification. The following is an extract from a letter written shortly after. "Glorious and wonderful news! After many sore temptations, much and severe wrestling, struggling and agonizing, in seeking the great blessing of sanctification, or perfect love, my great and merciful Heavenly Father has enabled me at last to present myself a sacrifice upon His holy altar, with the free and full surrender of soul and body, every power known and unknown, my life and health, all my attainments in this life, property and friends, all I am, or have, or ever will be, to God for ever. Bless the Lord, O my soul! Bless His holy name! for He hath shown me marvelous kindness! Now I know that the Lord saveth His anointed!"

She says again: "I do not remember to have been troubled with one temptation until after I commenced seeking holiness of heart. But, O, I have been at times as it were surrounded by clouds, and it seemed there was no peace on earth for me, indeed, no more for ever, as if the spirit of God had deserted me. My heart was as a stone, and I felt miserable. Yet, after a time, he has given me grace to help me, to struggle until I gained the victory. And O how sweet has that victory always been! My soul seemed filled with the love of God and of heaven." Her journal is filled with expressions of her subsequent religious enjoyment. The improvement in her Christian character until her death, proved how deep and thorough the work of sanctification had been.

But, useful, pious, consistent as she was, a bright light in the Church, an example to all, she has gone away from us into the world of spirits. The Church feels and mourns her loss; her parents are sorely afflicted; her brothers and sisters miss her sweet counsels and example; her two precious babes must journey through life without a mother's tender care; and her almost broken-hearted husband suffers a deep and awful sorrow, upon which we dare not intrude, and which can only be alleviated by the grace of God, which happily he enjoys. We close with an extract from her obituary written by her husband.

"A few days before her fatal illness seized her, she obtained, she said, a greater blessing than she had ever before experienced. During her illness of almost three weeks, she was calm, patient, and resigned. Not a murmur escaped her lips. Two or three days before her death she called her husband to her bed-side and said—"I am so happy." She could scarcely refrain from shouting aloud. She talked of heaven as her happy home—often said 'sweet, sweet heaven.' She prayed for entire resignation to the divine will—prayed for her husband, for her two dear sweet little children, and for every body. Her husband asked her if she feared death. She replied in the most emphatic manner, no, no! When death came, she sunk so suddenly and so rapidly, that she could say nothing. But she has said enough. God be praised for what she has said. She has left parents almost heart-broken, to whom she was ever affectionate and obedient. She has left a husband bowed down with grief, to whom she was all that a wife could be. He has lost the best of wives, but Heaven has gained the brightest of angels. She has left two sweet children, too young to know her worth or mourn her loss, to whom she would have been a mother indeed had she lived. She has left us in this poor, cold, cheerless world; but we will meet her in Heaven."

THOS. H. FOSTER.

Macon, Miss., June, 1854.

REV. ROBERT NEWTON, D. D., one of the fathers of the English Wesleyan Church, died at his residence in Yorkshire, England, on 30th April. The Watchman, May 3, pays the following tribute: [En.

THE DEATH OF DR. NEWTON.

For sorrow and for joy, the Missionary Anniversary will be very remarkable. At the meeting of the previous year, an uncommon burst of feeling was evoked when two venerable men appeared together on the platform—Jabez Bunting, with tottering limbs, supported by the arm of the bending but still noble Robert Newton. On Monday the former was greeted with a welcome as cordial as before, but a grief covered his countenance, of which those who hailed him knew not the cause. But soon the secret was told, and fell heavily on the heart of all. Robert Newton—the life, the power, and the joy of so many Missionary Meetings—had passed away from earth to heaven.

After fifty-five years of Herculean labor, this matchless harvestman had, only two or three weeks ago, removed to the town of Easingwold, in his native Yorkshire, where, amid his family, the last Messenger found him. On Tuesday last he was seized with paralysis, and on Sunday morning, about half-past four o'clock, he said, "Farewell, sin and death," then shortly afterwards crying, "Praise the Lord," he peacefully went to "glory in the cross of his Lord Jesus Christ," with rapture of which his mightiest eloquence never raised a conception. Although for the last two years he had abridged the toils in which his life was spent, he had never "ceased to work;" and at the moment when he was called home, the walls of London were placarded with the announcement that he would preach on the following day. His years had passed three score and ten, but his emotions were fresh; his vigor was so far broken as to forewarn his friends, but not so far as to distress them by a wreck of greatness. Not abruptly checked amid full activity, not left to fade in lengthened inaction, his Master gently relaxed his evening toil, and then took him home to rest. But a year or two ago we all saw him in a stately age, unbent, unwearied, and unchilled; now we think of him in immortal youth and scarcely recall the brief stage of translation which intervened. Had his warmest friends chosen beforehand, perhaps they would have said, "So let Robert Newton die: let Providence give intimation of our coming loss, but spare us and spare him the scenes of an infirm old age." Nor could any have beforehand devised a worthier testimonial to the unequaled champion and orator of Missions than that which, by a strange coincidence, was prepared for him on Monday. That Society which had so often revived its spirit and quickened its march under the music of his voice, was arrested in the midst of one of its fullest and happiest meetings, with tidings that he was no more. Man and woman, all over that vast multitude, bowed under a personal sorrow, and youth and age together dropped a tear. That moment of silence and grief was such an ovation as a worldly hero seldom wins, and such as the warm and modest heart of Dr. Newton would have felt more than a noisy or a splendid tribute.

Gifted with a lofty figure, a noble visage, and a shining eye; with a voice that could whisper to five thousand, or swell to musical thunder; with emotions genial as the rising sun; with direct insight into the common breast, its movements and its wants; with strong English sense, and unerring instincts of propriety; with a fancy that played with every gentle and beautiful thing; with rapid apprehension of all thoughts and facts lying within the range of ordinary truth; with a clear hold of short and ready arguments; with a bright and forceful diction; with eminent power of narration, and with incomparable facility for seizing upon an incident and wielding it at his will, and with action the most natural and apt; adding to all this an invincible tenacity of the most sacred and potent themes of the Gospel, a glow of Christian earnestness and brotherliness that made his hearers and himself seem thinking and feeling together, and an amazing inheritance of that mysterious power called eloquence, which, lying neither in reason, imagination, fervor, diction, nor delivery, inspires them all, and multiplies indefinitely their analytically assignable forces—it was no wonder that, from the first moment Robert Newton appeared as a preacher, love and admiration followed him, and that at every point of his ceaseless traveling they met him afresh; that to the last days of his old age they revived at the news of his coming, and "waited for him as for the rain, and opened their mouths wide as for the latter rain." Never was popularity so universal, so affectionate, and so unfading. It was not the thinker, not the orator, not the divine, not the champion, which the hearts of the whole Methodist people warmly cherished for so many years; it was the MAN, their own Robert Newton, the loveable human being, beautiful by the Creator's hands, beautiful by the gifts of mind, beautiful by the graces of sanctified life, beautiful by the simplicity of an unspoiled spirit, true to his calling, lightsome in heavy toil, great enough for the greatest occasion, humble enough for the cottage congregation, brilliant enough for the most polished auditor, homely enough for the collier or the clown. His claims addressed themselves to the whole man: the eye, the ear, the mind, the heart, and preeminently the conscience, were in turn called upon to do him homage.

We always doubted whether his mental power was duly estimated, even by those who most loved and admired him. He never dived into such depths that ordinary men wondered whither he was gone, or soared to such altitudes that their eye could no longer follow his course. His range of thought lay within the limits of ascertained truth; and on the frontier line of the region of speculation he never trod. Consequently, that class who value intellect in proportion as it can wrap itself in luminous cloud, were ready to speak lightly of the intellectual scope, while extolling every other qualification, of Dr. Newton. But in whose sermons was there a more natural and judicious connection of thought? Who trod with a firmer step all the pleasant though straight ways of evangelical doctrine? Who gave the Christian a stronger, shorter, terser reason for the hope that was in him, and, at the same time, fanned the hope reposing on that reason, into a livelier flame? In that great power which sets truth clearly before a human understanding, engages the aids of the imagination and stimulates the heart, Dr. Newton had few rivals; and we have sometimes felt his powerful arm bear us bodily away, when we could easily forsake, or foil, the more intellectual discourser who would affect to criticise his simpler style. It was simple; but it was solid, manly, bright, affectionate, and strong. It was worthy of a Minister of God. It was fit to use in dealing with immortal men, on themes which concern immortality. True, that, for the last years of his life, he generally preached over again his old sermons; but they were far from being stereotyped. We have heard very great variations in the same sermon at different times. He appeared only to preach from a subject which was just then warmly present to his own mind, and thus ever animated the oldest theme with extempore emotion. The vivacity of personal sympathy with his subject which he manifested in delivering his oldest sermons, far surpassed that which many feel with their newest. But we to the man who, without his rare qualities, attempts in this manner to walk in his steps!

Dr. Newton was eminently a Methodist Preacher. In the pulpit, Christianity was not to him a curious science, but a heaven-sent message. His congregation were not critics to be propitiated, or admirers to be indulged; but sinners to be convinced, penitents to be cheered, believers to be built up. To him religion was ever presented in its cardinal points, as a great system of saving grace. He transcendently gloried in the cross of Christ. He felt and proclaimed the Gospel to be the Power of God unto salvation. You never heard him without wishing to be better in religious life. Among his brethren in the Ministry, whether in Conference or out of it, he was ever frank, kindly, and fraternal; most strictly attentive to rule, honoring all talent and all virtue. He fulfilled an office with the fidelity of a good man, and the ease of a great one; without a touch of the indifference which they affect who fancy that they honor office, or of the importance which they assume who feel that office has honored them. He never raised or exasperated strife; he sought peace, and pursued it. Who can expose a wound and say he gave it? Yet, in times of trial, his broad breast was as firm as in times of peace it was gentle. Among the people he was ever such as became his office. Regular, considerate, temperate, with a constant cheerfulness and suavity, he was not only welcomed, but hailed in the homes of multitudes. Perhaps no man was ever more indebted to hospitality in all parts of the United Kingdom and in America. And certainly never was hospitality offered to a nobler or purer guest. Never did any family feel their spirits darkened by the shadow of his greatness; once among them, the Orator was as themselves. Never did a young Minister learn from him one unministerial habit, or one ungenerous sentiment. He traveled, he preached, he spoke, with no limit to his labor but time. As much work as could be crowded into the hours he was able and willing to do. Stronger than almost any public man, he had not those intense mental fires which burn out many, and yet as much fire as armed and moved all his prodigious physical powers. By Ministers and people at home, by Missionaries and their flocks abroad, by families whose fireside was wont to be honored by his presence, by congregations who yearly counted on hearing his voice, and by not a few who heard in it the call that awoke them to seek their God, he will be deeply mourned. On a Sabbath-day his toils ceased; and never was heartier laborer welcomed to the companionship of those who have entered into rest. On that same day on which the most musical voice that pleaded the cause of Christian Missions was hushed, fall also the most musical hand that wrote sacred song for the marching army of Christ. Many a time had the flashing eye of James Montgomery, from his regular annual seat in the chair of our Missionary Meeting at Sheffield, shot forth unwonted fires on the form of the great Orator, who celebrated in finest prose the evangelical truths he sang in beautiful verse. Two lyres are broken together, but the harpers both to-day are harping "with the harps of God."

Some will ask, who is to succeed him? No one. Such men never have successors. The Lord creates, converts, and uses them; whilst He is doing so they are indispensable; but when He takes them away, He carries on the work better than before. The same power and grace which made Robert Newton, can and will give us the men for our time. The gifts God has given us in the past foretell the gifts of the future. We may lawfully mourn, but rejoice in hope, for the cause that is bereaved. He was but one jewel given to the Church by Him who said to her, "Thou shalt be as a crown of glory in the hand of the Lord, and as a royal diadem in the hand of thy God." Other gems now unknown, will easily be set on her brow, by the wealthy hand of her Lord. But not only for the Church would we mourn; we can not but think of those who stand near the bier of the fallen Evangelist. Who shall repair to them that great loss? Yet, surely, amid all their tears, any human heart may praise God for the destiny by which it is privileged to pronounce over the corpse of Robert Newton the word—"My husband!" or "My father!"

The Old Wife's Kiss.

The funeral services were ended, and as the voice of prayer ceased, tears were hastily wiped off from wet cheeks, and long-drawn sighs relieved suppressed and choking sobs, as the "mourners" prepared to "take leave of the corpse."

It was an old man that lay there, robed for the grave. More than three score years had whitened those locks, and furrowed that brow, and made those stiff limbs weary of life's journey, and all the more willing to lie down and rest where weariness is no more suffered, and infirmities are no longer a burden.

The aged have but few to weep for them when they die. The most of those who would have mourned their loss have gone to the grave before them: harps that would have sighed and harmonies are shattered and gone. And the few who remain are looking gradeward, rather than graveward—to life's opening; rather than to its closing goal; are bound to, and living in the generation rising, more than the generation departing.

Youth and beauty have many admirers while living—have many mourners when dying. Many tearful ones bend over their coffined clay, many sad hearts follow in their funeral train. But age has few admirers, few mourners.

This was an old man, and the circle of mourners was small. Two children, who had themselves passed the middle of life, and who had children of their own to care for, and to be cared for by them. Besides these, and a few friends who had seen and visited him while sick; and possibly had known him for a few years, there were none others to shed a tear except his old wife. And of this small company the old wife seemed to be the only heart mourner. It is respectful for friends to be said for a few minutes, till the service is performed, and the hearse is out of sight. It is very proper and suitable for children, who have outgrown the fervency and affections of youth, to shed tears when an aged parent says farewell, and lies down to quiet slumbers. Some regrets, some recollection of the past, some transitory grief, and the pangs are over. Not always so. But often, how little true genuine heart sorrow there is!

The old wife arose with difficulty from her seat, and went to the coffin to look her last look—to take her last farewell. Through the fast falling tears she gazed long and fondly down into that pale, unconscious face. What did she see there? Others saw nothing but the rigid features of the dead; she saw more! In every wrinkle of that brow, she read the history of years. From youth to manhood, from manhood to old age; in joy and sorrow, in sickness and health—it was all there; when those children, who had now outgrown the sympathies of childhood, were infants lying on her bosom, and every year since then—there it was! To others, those dull, mute monitors were unintelligible; to her, they were the alphabet of the heart, familiar as household words!

And then the future! "What will become of me? What shall I do now?" She did not say so; she did not say any thing; but she felt it. The prospect of the old wife is clouded. The home circle is broken, never to be re-united; the visions of the hearth-stone are scattered for ever. Up to that hour there was a home, to which the heart always turned with fondness. But that magic is sundered; the keystone of that sacred arch has fallen, and now home is no where this side of heaven! What shall the old wife do now? Go and live with her children—be a pensioner upon their kindness; where she may be more of a burden than a blessing, so at least she thinks? Or shall she gather up the scattered fragments of that broken hearth, make them her temple and her shrine, sit down in her chill solitude beside its expiring fires and die? What shall she do now?

They gently crowded her away from the dead, and the undertaker came forward with the coffin-lid in his hand. It is all right and proper—of course, it must be done; but to the heart mourner, it brings a kind of shudder, a thrill of agony, as when the headsman comes forward with his axe! The undertaker stood for a moment with decent propriety, not wishing to manifest a rude haste, but evidently desirous to be expeditious as possible. Just as he was about to close the coffin, the old wife turned back, and stooping down, imprinted one long, last kiss upon the cold lips of her dead husband, then staggered to her seat, buried her face in her hands, and the closing coffin hid him from her sight for ever!

That kiss! Fond token of affection, and o sorrow, and memory, and farewell! I have seen many kiss their dead—many such seals of love upon clay cold lips—but never did I see one so purely sad, so simply heart-touching and hopeless as that! Or if it had hope, it was that which looks beyond coffins and charnel-houses, and damp, dark tombs, to the joys of the home above. You would kiss the cold cheek of infancy. There is poetry; it is the last rose-bud! Or the pallid cheek where beauty blushed. There is romance there; for the faded flower is still beautiful! In childhood, the heart yields to the stroke of sorrow, but recoils again, elastic with faith, buoyant with hope. But here was no beauty, no poetry nor romance. The heart of the old wife was like the weary swimmer, whose strength has often raised him above the stormy waves, but, now exhausted, sinks amidst the surge.

Why should the old love the old, or kiss the cold, unloving lips? Ah, why should they? Does affection grow old? Does the true heart feel the infirmity of years? Does it grow cold when the step becomes unsteady, and the hands hang down? Who shall say that the heart of the old wife was not as young and warm as in those early and brighter days, when he wooed and won her? The temple of her earthly hope had fallen, and what was there left but for her to sit down in despondency, among its lonely ruins and weep, and die? Or, in the spirit of a better hope, await the dawning of another day, when a hand divine shall gather its scattered dust, and rebuild, for immortality, its broken walls.

May the old wife's kiss, that linked the living with the dead, be the token of a holier tie, that shall bind their spirits, in that better land, where tears are wiped from all faces, and the days of their mourning are ended! [illegible]

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Christian Advocate.

Terms: $1 50 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:

SATURDAY, JUNE 24, 1854.

THE CONFESSION IS OUT.

In noticing Dr. Ives' "Trials of a Mind" we did not know of Churchmen in our neighborhood, confidently in the same category. We say "confidently"; because for some time we have had misgivings as to the soundness of the ecclesiastical body growing up in Mississippi, under the leadership of Bishop Green and the organship of the Church Herald. But the issue of this organ, 10th inst., puts the question beyond doubt. In the editorial columns we have it—from the Bishop's supervision, if not his pen. The article is headed "Baptismal Regeneration."

[illegible] an article in an exchange paper, [illegible] ld."

We need not add that it was not an Episcopal paper; no Episcopalian who has any regard for truth or the doctrines of the Church to which he professes to belong, can consistently with either, so hold or believe. Let men give what meaning they please to the word 'regeneration,' there is not and can not be the slightest doubt that the Episcopal Church explicitly teaches that it invariably takes place in the sacrament of Baptism, whether administered to infants or adults.

All baptized persons are regenerated or born again, according to the view of the Episcopal Church; and as we hold to that view as being the "Doctrine which is according to Godliness," we propose briefly to show: 1st. That such is the view of the Episcopal Church. 2d. What the Church means by being regenerated or born again; and in doing this, we shall show that the doctrine is not "absurd."

We quote again from this long article, evidently set forth with studied care. As clearly as possible, within the limits that can be allowed to it, and not in a garbled and perverted manner, would we set forth their position. With pain these taints are detected in a body that is of late putting forth much activity and making some progress. It must be purged before, with such belief and tendencies continued, the intelligent and Protestant people of Mississippi will consider its progress a blessing.

Precisely what change it (baptism) works in the moral conformation of man; what new germ or principle it plants into his spiritual nature, we know not; we may not know. Our Saviour declined to inform Nicodemus, when he sought him at midnight, and inquired into this very mystery; and we would do well to receive in faith the answer which he received. That some extraordinary grace, some wonderful quickening energy, some great gift of the Holy Ghost is conferred upon us in this blessed sacrament, we dare not doubt. It is ONE, of the two only sacraments, which Christ has ordained in His Church. It is that one with which He has directly and so far as man's power is concerned, inseparably, united salvation.

This for a saving clause:

Let us not, however, be misunderstood. We do not believe that the baptized child who, whether from parental neglect, evil association or other cause, falls into sin after baptism, will, unless he repent and turn to God, escape the wrath to come; any more than we believe that the sincere adult, who has received in manhood this solemn rite, but afterwards is drawn away and enticed, will be admitted into the mansions of eternal blessedness, unless he again renew his vows in penitence and humiliation. There is but one Baptism, as there is but one Lord, one Faith. (Eph. iv. 5.

So far, well. Dr. Ives was along there and was constrained to go further. Some sacramental way, by priestly administration, will, by and by, be felt to be necessary for the forgiveness of post-baptismal sins. Then for the "Trials of a Mind." So the editors of the Church Herald, their bishop and clergy, are in a chrysalis state. How long will it take them to emerge? Locusts are seventeen years working to the surface. High-churchmen may progress faster.

A MAN IN PERPLEXITY.

Our correspondent is not the only man in perplexity. "The Types of Mankind," is the title of a large octavo work from the pen of a Southern Doctor of Medicine—J. C. Nott—and J. R. Gliddon, the man who professes to know so much about mummies. The names of Agassiz, Dr. Morton, and others, are printed on the title page as coeditors and authors, and there is a vast splurge at wisdom the volume through. The editor of the N. York Independent was induced, by the great talk respecting the Types, to buy a copy and examine it. The story respecting a man being found in cypress layers, and who, it is said, must have been deposited there 145,000 years ago, is contained in the work, and it is told in Mr. Gliddon's best style of the true sophomoric. "Altogether," says the Independent editor, "the book, with its 738 pages, is a grand humbug, and that, too, spite of the lofty commendations of the National Intelligencer, the New York Evening Post, etc. Any man who is goose enough to spend $5 in its purchase, is entitled to all the comfort he may experience in burning the points of his fingers. Science and its votaries are always to be treated with respect; but in noticing Mr. Gliddon we see but obeying a wise maxim, of which we give him the benefit without insisting that he shall acknowledge its inspiration—Answer a fool according to his folly."

A TEMPERANCE PEN.—The Mississippian has been shown a most beautiful silver box, containing the pen with which Gov. McRae signed the great temperance reform bill passed by the last Legislature of Mississippi. It is intended as a present by the ladies of Jackson to the Rev. C. K. Marshall, of Vicksburg. The box bears the inscription: "Presented to the Rev. C. K. Marshall, of Vicksburg, the Apostle of Temperance in Mississippi, by the Ladies of Jackson."

SPIRIT OF THE CHURCHES.

All the Churches are taking action on the subject of Ministerial support—aiming only at carrying out the doctrine of the Bible—They that preach the Gospel should live by the Gospel: nothing more or less. This is one part of the fruit of resolutions, very generally adopted. "Prayer," etc. The Presbyterian Assembly (O. S.) adopted these resolutions:

1. Resolved, That we affectionately and earnestly recommend to the Churches under our care, that they scrupulously avoid holding out any inducements to a minister to become their stated supply, or settled pastor, which will not be realised.

2. Resolved, That we earnestly recommend to every Presbytery, that unless suitable provision be made for the support of a minister or stated supply, they decline to give their aid or sanction, as a Presbytery, to settle him in any congregation which is able to furnish such suitable provision.

3. Resolved, That we recommend to the elders, and deacons, and trustees of our churches and congregations, to meet together on some day before the 1st November next, and yearly thereafter, or oftener if necessary, and institute the inquiry, whether their minister or stated supply is properly and fully supported; and if they find that he is not so supported, to take immediate measures to increase his support, and report to their Presbytery at its next meeting.

4. Resolved, That we recommend to the Presbyteries to require of every minister to preach on the subject of ministerial support: "That, laying aside all false delicacy, they enlighten their people upon this, as upon any other branch of Christian duty, pleading not for themselves, but for their Master, if happily they may reclaim their respective charges from a grievous sin, which must bring down God's displeasure;" and that the Presbyteries call upon every minister to answer whether he has complied with their injunction.

The New School Presbyterian Assembly, recently in session at Philadelphia, passed a resolution to the effect that single preachers shall receive not less than $500 a year for their services, and married preachers not less than $750.

In 1850 the income of the lawyers in this country was $23,000,000; that of the physicians $20,000,000; and that of the clergy but $3,000,000.

The Episcopal Convention of Pennsylvania passed a resolution fixing the minimum salary of a single minister at $500, and $750 for a married man.

The question of ministers' salaries has been taken up by the Unitarians in Boston and vicinity, with deliberation and thoroughness. At the last annual meeting of the "Society for the Relief of Aged and Destitute Clergymen," a committee was appointed to investigate this subject, and their report has recently appeared in pamphlet form. A statement of facts has been obtained from all the parishes of the denomination in New England; and from these facts the following conclusions are drawn: "1. The present low salaries paid to the clergy of all denominations in New England, not only subject ministers to social suffering, and lessen their respectability in the eye of the world, but, moreover, rob them of due mental independence, and greatly abridge their professional usefulness. 2. Precarious and incompetent support prevents many young men of talent and character from entering the sacred profession."

REFORM IN SCHOOL LAWS.

The element of self-government and no government at all, is ruining our Educational Institutions. The authority and independence of the Schoolmaster—respect for him and his office—are on the decline. The rod and discipline, under which the great men of the present and past were trained, is "old fogy" now. An exchange paper is facetious, referring to the disgraceful acquittal of Mat. Ward:

SPORT IN KENTUCKY.—Young Sportsman: "I say, friend, is there any thing to shoot about here?"

Farmer: "Wal, I don't know, stranger; but you can go down to the cross-roads and take a pop at the school-master, just to keep your hand in."

The Baptist Chronicle speaks gravely and weightily, as becomes the subject: "Many cases of the murder of Instructors have we heard of; not one of which, so far as we know, has ever been followed by punishment. He who butchers a Teacher, butchers in safety and without fear.

"We write these things with the deepest regret; we write them in sorrow, grieved to the heart that we must so speak. But we see the South hasting to ruin. Murder stalks through the land. In this morning's paper alone, five murders are recorded; all of which occurred in our loved land of the South. Duelling is on the increase. Street fights are of daily occurrence. And, in almost all these cases, the violated Law is inoperative or unadministered.

"Insubordination is increasing fearfully in our male Educational Institutions. In many, the government is practically in the hands of the pupils. The cause of sound, thorough, practical, useful Education is suffering."

REV. C. C. GILLESPIE, Editor elect of the Texas Christian Advocate, passed through this city 17th inst., with his family, en route for Galveston; to which place it is proposed to remove the paper from Houston. Most heartily do we admit him to the degree of D. E. Q.

UNIVERSITY OF MISSISSIPPI.—The Catalogue of the University of Mississippi has been received, which shows 158 students—seniors 29, juniors 30, sophomores 45, freshmen 29, irregulars 15.

CHANGES.—The General Conference of the M. P. Church, at its late session, withdrew its control from the Church papers and Book Concern. Hereafter the Church papers are to be controlled by the Annual Conferences which support them. This arrangement the editor of the Methodist Protestant thinks favorable to the harmony and perpetuity of the Church, by lessening the causes of discord.

A SPECIMEN OF JESUITISM.

The following extract from a letter of Dr. Cook, President of the Wesleyan Conference in France, to the Advocate and Journal, shows the means to which the Catholic press will sometimes resort in Catholic countries, in order to discredit Protestantism. Of course the end sanctifies the means. Lying a little to promote the truth, is quite innocent; and where the interests of the Church are greatly promoted thereby, may possess merit sufficient to counterbalance many grievous sins. Possibly it is in view of this consolatory doctrine that the journals referred to have propagated the monstrous fibs contained in the extracts below. Dr. C. says:

"The labors of the Jesuit press here, in the defamation of Protestantism, are unwearied. No stone is left unturned, no means disdained by which the reputation of Protestants may be tarnished. Just now, it is true, they spare their nearest neighbors a little, and seek their subjects of vituperation across the Atlantic. They find the text on which they found one of their little sallies, in a letter from the minister of justice, in Mexico, to the archbishop, informing the latter that 'The American Bible Society' (which the minister says is 'composed principally of Protestant Methodists, and is possessed of vast resources,') introduces, by the frontier of Texas, Bibles and other books of Protestant proselytism! The effects of which are increased,' he says, 'by the introduction of a great number of French romances, which if they do not directly inculcate Protestantism, are a weapon against Catholicism, by corrupting the morals of the Mexican youth!

THEOLOGICAL PROFESSORS.—The Presbyterian General Assembly has elected Rev. Alexander T. McGill, D. D., Professor of Pastoral Theology in the Theological Seminary at Princeton. Dr. McGill has for a number of years been the principal Professor in the Western Theological Seminary located in Allegheny City, and his removal from it will be felt as a loss. He is among the most distinguished men of his Church, and deservedly exercises a great influence. He is amply qualified for the duties of his new position. Rev. William Plumer, D. D., was elected by the Assembly to fill the place made vacant by the removal of Dr. McGill, in the Western Seminary; but has not yet signified his acceptance. Dr. P. is an able man.

REV. J. BORING.—The Chambers Tribune, (Ala.) 15th inst., speaks of two sermons delivered by Dr. Boring, there, Sabbath previous, to large audiences, many of whom were his old neighbors:

He possesses none of those boisterous traits which too often mar the beauty and simplicity of pulpit eloquence, but is a plain spoken, practical, and at times, very eloquent preacher. The marks of a true Christian soldier are upon his brow, and the first impression of any one would be, that he was a "man of God."

Mr. Boring was a member of the late Conference, at Columbus, and was instructed by them to publish a religious paper at San Francisco, California. It will, of course, be interesting, and any one who desires to know what is going on in California, would do well to subscribe. The price of the paper will be $3 per annum.

EXTRAORDINARY LICENSE.—On Sunday night about 11 o'clock, one Mr. Keating, a teacher in the Catholic schools of the Fourth District, was arrested for being found secreted in bed in the house of Madame King. This is the same man who has taken such an active part in the District as a politico-religious Catholic, attempting to lead at least the Irish at political meetings, and interfering with the public schools and the administration of Justice.

The Captain of the police, John Staip, released him on his own responsibility, and the clerk of the Recorder, John Daily, had no minute of his arrest upon his books. This is the first time we have heard of a party arrested being released without bail, and no notice taken of the matter. The women who procured his arrest appeared to prosecute the next morning, or in all probability no knowledge would have been had of the arrest.

We suggest to the officials of the Fourth District that there must be no distinctions shown in the execution of duty—that Jesuits and Protestants must be treated alike. [Creole, 21st inst.

CAUTION.—One J. J. Cowart, formerly a Minister, having fallen under serious indictments, is published in the Little Rock (Ark.) paper, and warned against by the Rev. W. C. Young, P. C. He is supposed to be somewhere in the South.

A RUB.—Dr. Summers, in his admirable book notices for the Visitor, delivers the following trenchant opinion on the Conflict of Ages: "A work which indicates mental derangement induced by a close training in Calvinistic theology. Too much notoriety is given to this silly production."

WESLEYAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

The anniversary of the Wesleyan Missionary Society was held in Exeter Hall, London, on Monday morning, May 1. The financial report showed the income of the year to have amounted to $554,000, and the expenditure about the same. The general summary of all the missions under the direction of the Wesleyan Missionary Committee, was:

Central and principal stations, called circuits,	367
Chapels and other preaching places,	3,116
Ministers and assistant missionaries,	507
Catechists, interpreters, day school teachers, etc.,	703
Unpaid agents, as Sabbath school teachers, etc.,	8,779
Full and accredited Church members,	110,228
On trial for Church membership,	4,873
Scholars in the day and Sabbath schools,	78,811
Printing establishments,	8

A most solemn impression was made on the minds of the vast assemblage by the announcement of the decease of Dr. Newton, intelligence of which reached London during the progress of the meeting. For twenty years past, Dr. Newton had been one of the speakers on this annual occasion, and almost invariably made the speech preceding the collection.

BOOK NOTICES.

FLORA LINDSAY; or Passages in an Eventful Life: By Mrs. Moodie. 1 vol., pp. 343. Dewitt & Davenport, New York.

The publishers, through T. L. White, 105 Canal street, have laid this book on our table. The adventures of a newly married pair of the old country, in attempting a "clearing" in the New World, are set forth, taking in style, but not so flattering in realities. Mrs. M. was the Flora, and gives her own history, under this pleasant mask. She has won for herself a sort of Mrs. Kirkland reputation in this line of authorship; not so bad.

L. SCOTT & Co., New York, are very prompt in issuing republications of the leading English Periodicals and supplying them to subscribers. Blackwood for May is on our table, and the London Quarterly and Westminster Review. The last is a model of review literature.

The following is the age attained this year by some of the principal British magazines and reviews. The oldest is the Gentleman's Magazine, which has been published 124 years; the Wesleyan Methodist Magazine 77; Evangelical Magazine (about) 57; Christian Observer 53; Eclectic Review 52; Edinburgh Review 52; Quarterly Review 46; Blackwood's Magazine 39; New Monthly Magazine 34; Westminster Review 30; Frazer's Magazine 25; Church of England Magazine 24; Dublin University Magazine 22; Tait's Edinburgh Magazine 21; Bentley's Magazine 18; Christian Remembrancer 14; North British Review 11; British Quarterly 10; Journal of Sacred Literature 7; Notes and Queries 5; New Quarterly Review 3; London Quarterly Review 1.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHER, is one of the latest and most valuable books added by Summers to the catalogue. The duty, qualifications, encouragement and discouragement of the responsible office, are set forth. Our English correspondent has sent by mail, through us, for a copy.

RESOLUTIONS

Passed by the Sabbath School of Franklin Street Church, Mobile.

WHEREAS it has pleased Almighty God in His All-wise Providence to remove from our midst our highly esteemed and dearly beloved Brother, G. K. D. McLELLANN, the President of this Society, and an efficient and zealous laborer in the nursery of the Church—our Sabbath School. And whereas it is fitting that we give expression of our high appreciation of his character, both as a man and a Christian, in the several relations which he sustained to us, and the poignant sorrow which the announcement of his death has occasioned; Therefore,

Be it Resolved, That in his death we have sustained a loss almost irreparable; and while we meekly bow to the afflicting dispensation of One who is too wise to err, and too good to be unkind, we yet keenly feel the sad bereavement that has befallen us in the removal, by the insatiate hand of Death, of the brightest star in our galaxy, the leading spirit in all our religious and benevolent enterprises, and an ardent and a faithful coöperater in our Missionary and Sabbath School associations—whose memory we will ever cherish, and whose many virtues we will emulate.

Resolved, That we tender to his stricken family our heart-felt condolence and warmest sympathies, humbly praying that they may realize the Heavenly consolation, that they sorrow not as those without hope; and that He whose ways are past finding out, may prove indeed to them, a Father to the fatherless and a Husband to the widow.

Resolved, That the foregoing be spread upon the Minutes of this meeting—that a copy be sent by the Secretary to the widow of our lamented Brother, and to the editors of the Sunday School Visitor and of the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication, to be signed by the Secretary and presiding officer of this meeting.

J. SHEPHERD, V. Pres't.
THO. STRANO, Jr., Sec'y.
June 4, 1854.

DOMESTIC MISSIONS.

ARCOLA AND COTTONWOOD MISSION, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

We now send you the report of this mission for the first and second quarters. The mission now embraces 23 preaching places and 28 farms, which shows an increase of 6 appointments and 10 farms since Conference. Thirty-two have been received by certificate and about 145 on probation, 8 baptized, 50 expelled and 3 have died. Many have professed conversion; the number not known. Our greatest success has been at some of the new places which were "ripe to the harvest." Some of the old appointments are doing very well; others, however, are cold and formal. At three of the places that have been served for years, no society has been formed yet. Why it is that no more success has attended preaching at those places, we can not tell. That it is so, is a source of mortification to the missionary; but while God prospers his work through them generally, they take it for granted that the fault is not in them; and are prompted to perseverance in their labor of love, hoping in due time to see the "pleasure of the Lord prospering" at every point. We are of the opinion that our success would be more general and permanent did the owners and overseers attend preaching more regularly, and make it appear that all, white or black, were equally interested in the Gospel message.

We do not attribute this neglect to attend our appointment on the part of the whites to any disregard of the work in which we are engaged. In some instances, it is from pure, but misguided motives; but in most cases it arises from coldness in religion or from no religion at all. The state of religion among the whites in the bounds of the mission, is very low. Not quite religion enough to give them a lively interest in the cause of God among themselves even, and of course not enough to cause them to attend with the missionary and assist him in his important and responsible work. May the Lord renew his work among the whites. Then shall we expect greater success among the Blacks. May all who love the Lord Jesus aid us by their daily prayers in this most Catholic work, etc.

A. MCBRIDE,
F. M. CHANE.

REVIVAL INTELLIGENCE.

SAN FELIPE CIRCUIT, TEXAS CONFERENCE. We have had a most excellent revivel of religion at Union Chapel Church, on this Circuit. Thirty-one persons (whites) united with the Methodist E. Church, South, on trial, and twelve colored persons. And there was, according to our account, about the same number of conversions as accessions; say 30 white and 10 or 12 colored persons.

The Church was greatly stirred up and revived, and prepared I trust for more faithfulness in future. After twelve days' labor we closed the meeting, leaving fifteen mourners at the altar, and a deeply serious congregation. I think the Gospel leaven is at work among the intelligent citizens of this rich Brazos country. God grant that it may continue to work until they are all leavened and eternally saved.

We were assisted in this meeting by Bros. Cooley, McLeod and Parker; all of whom did us valuable service, for which they have our hearty and sincere thanks.

May 29. A. M. BOX.

PENSACOLA, FA.—We have been blessed with a gracious Revival of Religion, resulting in forty-two additions to the Church—27 white and 15 colored. Our meetings continued every night for more than three weeks with unabated interest. Brothers Dickerson, Golson, Harris, and Brother Thomas, Chaplain in the Navy, rendered efficient aid.

Our Sunday School is prosperous, and the work of the Lord is steadily progressing with us. JOSEPH B. COTTRELL.

June 12.

HILLSBORO' CT., MISS. CON.—The campaign has fairly opened on the Hillsboro' circuit, and our God is with us in His reviving, saving, converting and sanctifying power. We have just closed a two days' meeting at Salem Church, Leake county. Had ten accessions to the Church, and several genuine, old-fashioned Methodist shouting conversions, both on the first and second days of the meeting. O, 'twas a sweet time of saving power among the people, and the glorious effects produced are but faintly made apperent in the result we have named. We are much indebted for the success attending our meeting to the earnest and faithful labors of the Rev. Lewis Tinor, L. E., who approved himself "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed." We regarded it as a token for good, and a proof of the genuineness of the revival, that the malice of hell and the rage of wicked men was excited, but offering no compromise with the powers of darkness, the work went on gloriously, and sinners were out to the heart, on the right hand and on the left. We regard the revival as but just commenced; and it was with profound regret we were compelled, from unavoidable circumstances, to close the meeting—the altar still crowded with penitents. ENWIN MORTIMER.

June 12.

JACKSON, MISS.—The Presbyterian Witness of 15th inst. says: A protracted meeting has been going on for some days in the Methodist Church, and will probably continue for several days to come. The ministers who have been assisting the pastor of that Church, are Rev. C. K. Marshall, of Vicksburg, Rev. R. Abbey, of Yazoo, and Rev. Mr. Strickland, of this place.

COMMENCEMENT NOTICES.

The Annual Examination of the Students in the Centenary Institute will commence on Friday the last day of June, and will continue until the following Wednesday, which is Commencement Day. The Commencement Sermon will be preached on the intervening Sabbath. At the close of the exercises on Wednesday, the 5th July, the Literary Address will be delivered by Wm. A. Chambers, Esq., of Russell county, Alabama.

A. H. MITCHELL, Pres't.

CENTENARY COLLEGE OF LOUISIANA.

The Annual Examination and Commencement Exercises of this Institution will begin on Monday, 17th, and close on Wednesday, 26th of July.

The Examination of the Preparatory Department will take place on Monday and Tuesday (17th, 18th). Wednesday, Thursday and Friday (19th, 20th, 21st) will be devoted to the Examination of the Regular College Classes.

On Sabbath, 23d, the Rev. Dr. Stanton, President of Oakland College, Miss., will deliver the Commencement Sermon.

The joint Board of Trustees and Visitors will convene on Monday, 24th. Exhibition of the Preparatory School in the evening of the same day, at candle-lighting.

Tuesday, 25th, the Literary Societies will hold their Annual Celebration; at which time they will be addressed by the Hon. C. Roselius. Annual Meeting of the Alumni Association in the afternoon—Orater of the occasion, C. T. Dunn, Esq.

Wednesday, 26th—Commencement; Addresses by the Graduating Class; Baccalaureate Address and Conferring of Degrees.

It is earnestly hoped that the State Visiting Committee, Visiting Committees of the Patronizing Conferences, and the Examining Committee may be punctual in attendance. The friends of learning and the public generally are cordially solicited to be present on the occasion. W. H. SCALES,
Sec. of Fnoulty P. T.

Jackson, La., June 18, 1854.

The Annual Meeting of the Joint Board of Centenary College will be held at Jackson, La., on the 24th of July, 1854.

W. H. WATKINS, Sec'y.

RAFFLING AND LOTTERIES.

MR. EDITOR—You will please give the following preamble and resolutions an insertion in the Advocate, and oblige

MONTGOMERY CT., ALA. CONF.

WHEREAS, being fully convinced of the evil tendency of Lotteries and Raffling, having for their object the promotion of benevolent and praiseworthy institutions and causes; it being an enticing and growing evil, and one which is calculated by its seeming palliating circumstances to warrant participation: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the members of the Quarterly Meeting Conference of Montgomery Circuit, do regard all such as being nothing more than a genteel species of gambling, and sincerely hope that our people will discountenance and have nothing to do with them.

Resolved further, That we request our Presiding Elder to bring the subject before his several Quarterly Meeting Conferences throughout the District, that they may take such action upon the subject as may accord with their judgment.

Done by order of the Quarterly Conference, June 3d, 1854.

S. ARMSTRONG, P. E.
R. A. BREWER, Sec'y.

[The hunter's faithful dog is not nearer to him than the itinerant's horse to him. Both deserve well at the hands of their masters. The itinerant's horse is almost a character, and many an one has found a niche in the history of pioneer Methodism. Cruelty to animals, whether by neglect or ill-usage, is ill becoming in any case—in this especially. Here's a plea for Dobbin that will make him prick his ears in very equine gladness. The complaints, doubtless, have more of truth than poetry.] En.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

THE ITINERANT'S HORSE;

OR—DOBBIN'S EXPERIENCE.

As I am a public character, and as many important interests hang upon my faithfulness, I deem it not improper that the manner in which my private interests are cared for should be known to the public.

I am native of Tennessee—the land of corn and clover; and was brought South in company with numbers of my fellows, and sold to a young gentleman aged about 20 years, of dark hair and eyes, rather prominent forehead, wide mouth, and a member on probation in the ——— Conference. He has received his appointment to B. Circuit—16 preaching places—and has closed his first round. A sketch of my experience in regard to this first round I hope will not be uninteresting to your readers, Mr. Editor, nor unprofitable to my fellows, who are alike situated.

April 1st.—Very cold and wet, and the roads muddy. My master rode me 8 miles, and as he was rather late in starting, I was urged by whip and spur to unusual speed, for fear the congregation should be waiting. On arriving at the church, I was hitched to a small dog-wood bush and left to my own reflections.

I looked around at the other horses, and as none of them seemed to be very social, I concluded to employ the time in biting the dogwood; a tolerable substitute for that delicious mineral, salt; of which I had not had the pleasure of tasting since I left Tennessee.

After services my master went home with the wealthiest member of the society; not that he would not have gone with the poorest, but they did not ask him. They thought he had rather go with the rich brother, and therefore did not invite him to visit them until he could make it convenient.

I was left at the rack until the comfort of my master was cared for; then led by a half frozen son of Ethiopia to a stable, or rather pen, which was about half knee deep in mud and frozen water. A rail was thrust across the door, so that I was made a prisoner for the night. At this crisis Sambo was called to replenish the sinking fires, and I was left to stamp about in my uncomfortable prison and anxiously await his return.

Presently the rain began to descend in torrents and night closes in, and no corn or fodder.

I expected my master to visit me, and see that I was suitably provided with provender; but it is quite chilly, and he might get his boots muddy. Besides, if he should appear to be over anxious for my comfort, he might offend the good brother, and that would be fatal to the quarterage collections, for the brother has always been liberal when the preacher pleased him.

I neigh and snort, but no notice is taken of my efforts to let my situation be known; so I give up in despair and conclude to be as patient as I can until morning.

After a while I heard my master's voice lead off in singing "Praise God from whom all blessings flow," and I could catch some of the sentences of his prayer as he commended himself and the family to the watchful care of their Heavenly Master, etc. And the thought stole across my mind, "If your Heavenly Master cared as little for you as you do for me, you would be in a most deplorable condition." My master slept in a warm, downy bed; I starved in a cold, wet pen.

In the morning Sambo was very busy blacking my master's boots, making fires, etc., and did not have time to feed me until the family sat down to breakfast. He then hastily threw me a few ears of corn and a bundle of fodder, which I attacked with a ravenous appetite; but I had scarce made my attack upon the scant supply before me, when I was ordered out and saddled, my master wishing to make an early start.

I was fretful, and was pawing the ground when he came out, and he concluded that I was in fine spirits; and mounting, he put spurs and set me off at a brisk pace.

I was again tied up, and this evening my master went home with a local brother, a man who has very strong sectarian prejudices. I was again left at the rack till the comfort of my master is cared for. After so long a time, John Wesley, the eldest son of the local brother, leads me to the lot, (no stable this time) and I am turned loose to play and wallow. John W. throws me a bundle of fodder, and thinks horses ought not to have corn so soon after being rode. He leaves, and having multiferious duties to attend to, forgets to feed the preacher's horse, and I am left to starve until morning.

My master and the local brother have been all this time engaged in animated discussions of doctrinal points, and I have had no attention from either of them. In the morning J. W. feels rather bad because he did not give me corn last night, and I am pretty well fed; but the whole roost of fowls are pecking at my corn, and when the last grain has been consumed by us, I did not feel like bursting; but I eat my fodder and felt better than I did on yesterday.

And so I have gone from place to place as the convenience or duties of my master lead him; and my sufferings have been various; sometimes suffering for food, and sometimes for water. I have not felt the scratch of a curry comb for a fortnight. A comb has sometimes been used to rub off the surplus mud. For the last day or two my master has whipped and spurred me to make me improve my gaits, but I was so weak, hungry and tired, that it had but little effect.

He thinks he was badly swindled by the drover, and that I am a poor horse. On arrival at this resting place, he orders a boy to give me some oppcras to improve my appetite. The hostler, knowing I will remain for several days, gave me a half basket of corn to save the trouble of feeding so often; and I being almost starved, eaten all that was given me, and this meal, am foundered stiff. I have just been [illegible] the fainting point, and drenched with all the prescriptions of the neighborhood. My condition is pitiable. Mr. Editor, can you come to our relief, and with your [illegible] pen, blister the consciences of our negligent masters, and, by so doing, you will merit the gratitude of our suffering race to the [illegible] generation.

Done.

NOTICE.

Please publish the following notice to Preachers of the First Year, Alabama Conference.

☞ You will please prepare for a [illegible] ing examination on Goold Brown's Grammar.

E. J. HAMIL, Ch'n. of Co.

Prattville, June 16, 1854.

WARNING FROM HENRY CLAY.—Henry Clay said in 1830, and it applies with ten-fold force at the present time—

"The Abolitionists, let me suppose, in their present aim of uniting the inhabitants of the free States as one man against the inhabitants of the slave States. Union on this will beget union on the other. And this of reciprocal consolidation will be attended with all the violent prejudices, embittered passions and implacable animosities which ever degraded or deformed human nature. A mutual dissolution of the Union will have taken place, and the forms of its existence remain. The valuable element of union, mutual kindness and feelings of sympathy, the fraternal bonds, which now happily unite us, will have been extinguished. One section will stand in menacing and hostile array against the other. The dissolution of opinion will be quickly followed by a dissolution of arms. I will not attempt to describe scenes which now happily lie concealed from our view. Abolitionists themselves would shudder back in dismay and horror at the contemplation of desolated fields, conflagrated cities, murdered inhabitants, and the overthrow of the whole fabric of human government that ever was made to animate the hopes of civilized man. Nor do I think these Abolitionists flatter themselves that they can succeed in their object of uniting the people of the free States, they will enter into a contest with a numerical superiority that will ensure victory. All history and experience proves the hazard and uncertainty of war, and we are admonished by Holy Writ that the battle is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong. But if they were to conquer, whom would they conquer? A foreign foe—one who had insulted our flag, invaded our shores, and laid our country waste? No, sir; no, sir. It would be a conquest without laurels, without glory; it would be a suicidal conquest; a conquest of brothers by brothers, achieved by one over another of the descendants of common ancestors, who nobly pledging their lives, their fortunes, their sacred honor, had fought and bled, side by side, in many a hard battle on land and sea, severed our country from the British crown, and established our national independence."

Let every man reflect on this, for it is a session but the prophecy of a wise and a patriot statesman. As long as Abolitionism was confined to a few fanatics, there was little danger, but when honest and sensible citizens allow their feelings to interfere with their regard for the law of the land, our existence as a nation is in danger. [Boston Post.

MR. EVERETT ON SLAVERY.—The Utica (N. Y.) Daily Observer quotes the following extract from a speech delivered by Edward Everett in the House of Representatives in 1827. The New Haven Register expresses the hope that political clergymen of New England may read it carefully:

"Sir, I am no soldier. My habits and education are very unmilitary; but there is no man in which I would sooner buckle a knapsack on my back, and put a musket on my shoulder than that of putting down a servile insurrection at the South. The great relation of servitude in some form or other, with greater or less departure from the theoretic equality of man, is inseparable from our nature. Domestic slavery is not, in my judgment, to be set down as a moral or irreligious relation. No, sir, the Old Testament says: 'Slaves, obey your masters.' I can not admit that its duties are not prescribed and sanctioned by religion. I know no way by which this form of servitude can be upheld but by political institution."

EFFECTS OF RAILROADS.—The following extract of a letter from a gentleman (a citizen of Jackson) now attending the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in Buffalo, we find published in the True Witness. We serve as an additional argument to those who appreciate the advantages of railroads, and endeavoring to arouse public interest on the subject in Mississippi:

"I was strolling on the bank of the river near the depot, on Saturday evening, when accosting a plain-looking citizen, asked him what that depot lot, with a spacious brick pile, was worth? He said he had sold it a few years ago for a "Jersey wagon and two chunks of mules," but he supposed it was now worth a hundred thousand dollars! It is not so with our depot lots in Jackson. When will our people learn sense? Not until the power of commerce and trade before their eyes shall show them, by fruits reaped by others and refused by them, that there must be faith, hope both in him who would win the prize of even worldly prosperity. Would that our loved Mississippi could learn the lesson before it is too late! Memphis, Atlanta, Charleston, Mobile, New Orleans, all see it, and are alive. We are resolving until we have lost our all in the 'immense' effort, and nobody has ever to build a hotel! I was sitting with a hundred passengers at a dinner table in Atlanta last summer, near the depot, and beside with a brother Mississippian about the 'ups of life' around us then. An old gentleman opposite remarked to me: 'Sir, twelve years the spot you occupy was not more than ten yards from my deer stand; now you are in the centre of a village of 7000 souls, and can't for yourself how the town is growing.' Fine houses were going up every where; mechanic shops were all around the track, and every one was at work."

An English journal states, with great seriousness, that an emigrant with a wooden leg was allowed to land in the United States. It is said that the regulations here are also very strict with regard to the "lame and blind."

SABBATH OBSERVANCE IN FRANCE.—At first sight, such a title as this may appear to be a paradox. We are very happy to inform our readers that this is not the case. The other day we met in the pages of a London contemporary with a paragraph, copied apparently from Galignani's Messenger, which contained a startling announcement. Those who have been much accustomed to travel on the Continent of France especially—have been much shocked at the systematic desecration of the Sabbath. All the shops, and all the places of amusement, are open on the Sunday, which is a day of much changing and indulgence, and not of prayer. Now, a movement has commenced in Paris which bids fair to progress. The paragraph we refer to reports a meeting to have taken place in that city, presided over by a banker, and attended by the chief tradesmen of the chief business streets. It appears that considerable numbers of these tradesmen already close their shops on Sunday, and that more adherents will soon come in. The originator of the movement, Mr. Cochrane, an English gentleman, well known in the Metropolis through his active use of philanthrophy.

We do not pretend to hope that this Sabbath observance is yet a religious movement; but that it will tend to this result we entertain a shadow of doubt.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

HYMENEAL:

MARRIED—By Rev. J. A. Ivey, on 19th inst. NATHAN BERWICK, Esq., of St. Mary's parish, La., and Miss OLIVIA KNOTT, only daughter of Capt. R. L. Robertson, of this city.

OBITUARY:

DIED—In Fayette county, Ala., 8th June, FRANCIS M. HULL, in the twentieth year of his age.

He had been a member of the M. E. Church about three years, and somewhat unfaithful until the present year.

This year he had been endeavoring to live in the discharge of duty, and, consequently, had the comforts of religion in his last illness.

Some two hours before he died he exherted his father and mother to be more faithful, and to raise up their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord; and to his brothers and sisters he said—"Weep not for me, but consider your own condition and weep for yourselves."

And thus one in the prime of life and viger of manhood has suddenly fallen. And it is the sincere prayer of the writer, that his young acquaintances and all who may read this, would take warning and be also ready, for they know not the day nor the hour when the Son of Man will call for them.

W. E. CAMERON.

At his residence in Greene county, Ala., MILES MCASHAN, in the 47th year of his age.

He embraced religion at a camp-meeting at Salem Church in 1835; at which time he attached himself to the M. E. Church, in which he lived, and from which he has gone to the Church triumphant.

He was a kind husband, an affectionate father, and an indulgent master. He has left a wife and seven children, and a large circle of relations and friends to mourn his loss; but let them be faithful, and though he can not come again to them, they can go to him.

I visited him frequently during his illness, and although his affliction was protracted, he bore it all with Christian courage and fortitude; and frequently he said to me that he would be glad his sufferings were over. On the Monday night preceding the Wednesday evening of his death, I said to him, "Miles, you are now drawing near the point of which you have frequently said you would be glad you had passed—how do you feel on the subject?" He said, "perfectly resigned." I then prayed with him, took his hand, bade him farewell, and left him with this promise, that I was to meet him in Heaven. And thus in full prospect of a blessed immortality, he left this poor world. A FRIEND.

We new mourn the death of Sister BETHELA ATKINSON; but are glad to say we have every assurance that while we in sadness contemplate the ravages of death, the deceased and truly beloved one rejoices in the unsullied joys of Paradise.

She was, indeed, the Christian, friend, wife, mother and mistress—lived in the enjoyment of sanctifying grace, faith and love. These great virtues she manifested clearly in all the relations she sustained to life; hence her peaceful and triumphant death.

Sister A. was a native of North Carolina—the daughter of William and Eliza Biggs, and the happy consort of Robert Atkinson, with whom she emigrated to this State and county a few years since. She embraced religion and joined the Methodist Church in the year 1850. Died of Typhoid Fever on the 26th of May last, aged 24 years.

Truly did she "pass away" in the midst of life. J. A. GODFREY.

Brownsville, June 2, 1854.

At the residence of her husband, Theodore Froehlich, in Pickens County, Ala., on the 5th day of June, inst., Mrs. LOUISA FROEHLICH, daughter of Z. D. and Jane Carroll, in the 21st year of her age.

The subject of this notice was born in the adjoining county of Tuscaloosa, on the 5th of December, 1833.

In the year 1848, the deceased attended a protracted meeting held at Bear-Creek camp ground, where she became truly penitent, and made her way to the Altar, exclaiming

"Here, Lord, I give myself away,
'Tis all that I can do!"

She took God at his word, who says: "Seek and ye shall find," and then she testified that God had power on earth to forgive sin. She united with the Church, and lived a faithful and consistent member up to the day of her death.

Long will the writer of this remember his last interview with her. When we entered her room, she was exhorting the family and friends present, by all means to meet her in Heaven. On the verge of time, she exclaimed, "Oh! that I had strength to shout the praise of God!" She requested that her infant boy should be raised to read the Bible and go to Sabbath schools, and then she gave him to God. She said it is nothing to die; for—

"Jesus can make a dying bed
Soft as downy pillows are,
While on His breast I lean my head
And breathe my life out sweetly there."

During her last illness her sufferings were intense, yet not a murmur escaped her lips. Dear friend, we would not call the buck! Although the husband is bereaved of an affectionate wife; the sweet babe of a fond mother; the parents of a dutiful child; the Church of a consistent member, we sorrow not as those who have no hope, for our loss is her eternal gain.

"I heard her bid the world adieu,
I saw her on the roaring billow,
Her far off home appeared in view
While yet she pressed a dying pillow."

G. W. G.

We don't think our readers ought to be deprived of all the good things said by the North, because we happen to occupy a Southern latitude; hence, we can not forego the following:

JEFFERSON REVISED.—It is thought they have got a new edition of the "Declaration of Independence" at the South especially calculated for that latitude. The following is said to be the beginning of the precious instrument: "White men are born with considerable freedom, and endowed with inalienable rights, among which are life, liberty, and the pursuit of niggers." [Portland Advertiser.

WOOD PAINTING.—The N. Y. Times gives the following portraiture of fashionable life and society in New York:

"Our fashionable society in this city is a sham from beginning to end. It is utterly unsound, depraved and unnatural—a deceptive piece of rotten wood, made to look shiny with French polish, and glittering with the phosphorescent light of corruption—a copper cent trying its very best to look like a five-franc piece, and, what is worse, in nine cases out of ten succeeding."

List of Remittances

Received at the Office of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, from 1st to 22nd June, inclusive.

A—J. Abney, $11.
B—B Barrou, $3; A. D. Beal, $1 50; Rev. D. S. Bristel, $1 50.
C—S. H. Cox, $3; D. C. B. Connoly, $15; J. Crowson, $5; Mrs. S. B. Carson, $1 50; J. J. Cocke, $2.
F—A. Fail, $4; C. G. Fife, $2.
G—T. Gilpin, $3; R. C. Goodzion, $1; E. W. Griswold, $50.
H—Mrs. N. T. Howard, $1 50; F. Haines, $1 75; M. A. Hornby, $2 50.
J—Mrs. M. A. Johnson, $1 50; W. C. Johnson, $2.
K—T. J. Kogor, $3.
L—W. E. M. Linfield, $2.
M—J. Matthews, $10; H. H. Montgomery, $5; C. McLeod, $15.
N—W. B. Neal, $5.
P—J. Pipes, $10; W. J. Peacock, $1 50.
R—R. Randle, $5; Mrs. F. R. Ramsey, $1 50; T. G. Rice, $1 50; R. Rande, $5.
S—S. A. Simmons, $1 50; S. M. Sweet, $1 50; R. W. Spence, $10; J. L. Shuford, $4; C. Shaunfield, $3.
T—J. M. Towles, $5; D. S. Thomas, $1 50.
V—W. Vonahles, $10.
W—J. O. Woodward, $12; J. H. Wilson, $1 50; Mrs. M. Wickliffe, $3.

Plan of Episcopal Visitation for the Years 1854-5.

BISHOPS SOULE AND PAINE.

Louisville Conference, Russellville, Ky.....Sept. 20, 1854.
Tennessee " Florence, Ala.....Oct. 5, 1854.
Memphis " Somerville, Tenn.....Oct. 25, 1854.
Arkansas " Helena, Ark.....Nov. 8, 1854.

BISHOP ANDREW.

Alabama, at Talladega.....Dec. 13, 1854.
Louisiana, at Franklin, La.....Jan. 10, 1855.
Pacific Conference, at Sacramento City....April 18, 1855.

BISHOP CAPERS.

Georgia Conference, at Atlanta, Ga.....Dec. 13, 1854.
Florida " at Madison, Fla.....Jan. 3, 1855.
Colored Missions in South Carolina and Georgia.

BISHOP PIERCE.

Holston Conference, at Cleveland, Tenn....Oct. 11, 1854.
N. Carolina Conference, at Pittsboro', N. C..Nov. 1, 1854.
S Carolina Conference, at Columbia, S. C..Nov. 15, 1854.
Virginia Conference, at Norfolk, Va.....Nov. 29, 1854.

BISHOP EARLY.

Western Virginia, at Louisa, Ky.....Sept. 6, 1854.
Kentucky, at Maysville, Ky.....Sept. 19, 1854.
Mississippi, at Jackson, La.....Nov. 8, 1854.
Eastern Texas, at Tyler, Texas.....Nov. 29, 1854.
Texas, at Chapel Hill, Washington co.....Dec. 13, 1854.

BISHOP KAVANAUGH.

Missouri Conference, at Brunswick, Mo....Oct. 11, 1854.
St Louis Conference, at Jefferson City, Mo..Oct. 25, 1854.
Indian Mission, Riley's Chapel, Cherokee Nation.....Nov. 10, 1854.
Washitaw Conference, Washington, Hempstead county, Ark.....Dec. 6, 1854.

The Annual Meeting of the Bishops to be held at Nashville, October 2, 1854.

Our Foreign Population.

Every reflecting and well disposed person in this country, of foreign birth, must deeply regret the course of conduct pursued of late years by a great majority of our naturalized citizens and those who expect to become so. Increasing year by year in unmorical strength, and naturally apt to be governed by feelings and prejudices acquired in the countries of their origin, they have, through a strange infatuation, acted as if with the purpose of obtaining an extra allowances of privileges and immunities by playing into each other's hands, so to speak, and building up a distinct foreign feeling and influence. They have banded together, cultivated and fostered an anti-American spirit, alike dangerous to themselves and repugnant to our institutions, and have, by letting loose the wildest and most licentious passions, produced in different parts of the country scenes but little short of anarchy and civil war.

Politicians have not been slow to appreciate the weight and importance of the foreign vote when controlling influences should unite it for either of the great political parties struggling for ascendancy in the country. This was not a difficult matter. Every body knows how it was accomplished, and the poor dupes themselves must begin to see, and unless they alter their conduct, will soon bitterly feel, how completely they have been deluded and betrayed. They have been beset by artful demegogues, their prejudices of country and race appealed to, their condition here misrepresented, their importance to our country, ourselves and our politics, magnified and enlarged upon until they verily believed themselves indispensable to our political existence, and the sole architects and supporters of our greatness among the nations of the earth. In itself this might be but a harmless vanity which it would have been well enough to indulge and laugh at, but the consequences have been most deplorable, and have finally brought about a condition of things which our foreign population should have dreaded above every thing. Not satisfied with the power thrust into their hands, they became the tyrants of the party to which they owed their importance: foreign caucuses, from which the purity of the English tongue was banished, must be held to consider the selection of candidates; no ticket could receive their sanction and co operation unless it afforded an opportunity for the display of their foreign prejudices and predilections; they must vote for somebody born in the "old country," or they would vote for nobody; there must be a proper representation of some parts of Germany and all parts of Ireland; and, finally, after their caprices had been consulted, their whims gratified, and the certainty of success secured thereby, their conduct at the polls, their riots, violence, perjury and drunkenness, disgusted honest men and brought odium and disgrace upon whatever party they supported.

This course of conduct has been steadily pursued for a number of years; it has become a frightful evil, which rapidly increased in extent each year, and grew more formidable at each election; it has roused a spirit of resentment and indignation among the native population throughout the land, which, unless their character and conduct undergo a complete change, may not be pacified until the foreign classes find themselves deprived of the power to abuse and pervert blessings and privileges which would be extended to them in no other country under the sun.

The best and most intelligent classes of the native population of this country are probably quite as much opposed to political as to religious intolerance, but they cannot long submit to a most unwarrantable and audacious encroachment upon their rights. They can not submit to see their elections converted into turbulent and violent outbreaks, ending perhaps in murder; they can not submit to see the laws and the sacred rights of suffrage repeatedly trampled under foot, and the ballot-box made an instrument of continual fraud and perjury; they can not submit to be insulted, jostled, beaten and driven from the polls by bands of men whose unintelligible accent testifies that they have not lived in the country a sufficient time to acquire the rights of citizenship; they can not submit to a condition of things, finally, which fills the journals of the day with accounts of assaults and batteries, outrages upon persons and property, crimes of every shade of atrocity, and fanatical outbreaks like those which have recently disgraced the cities of New York and Brooklyn. [Daily Crescent.

Weather, Crops, etc.

The Autaugaville (Ala.) Mercury, of the 10th instant, says:

"The weather is dry and warm in this neighborhood, and the crops are prospering."

The Linden (Marengo Co., Ala.) Jeffersonian, of the 12th instant, says:

"For the last two or three weeks we have had frequent showers of rain, which, with the warm weather, have caused corn, cotton and grass to grow very rapidly. Crops look quite promising, and though cotton is unusually small for the season, owing to the late Spring; yet, if no untoward luck should befall it hereafter, there will be an average crop raised."

MARION (Miss.) June 6.—We have had a succession of fine rains, and the crops in this vicinity are now growing finely. Farmers are complaining of wet weather and its never failing accompaniment—grass. The entire crop—corn and cotton—is very backward, though the late rains will bring it out materially, unless the grass prevents it."

FLAX CULTURE.—The Louisville Journal says, a much larger amount of land has been given to the cultivation of flax this Spring than in any former year. "In Ohio there are thirteen extensive oil mills; in Kentucky, Indiana and Missouri, there are five more; in all eighteen mills, that we know of, which manufacture nearly 1,000,000 bushels of flax-seed annually, and are capable of working double that quantity."

The Savannah (Ga.) Courier, of the 12th inst. says:

"The continued rains of the present month have, in some parts of the State, impaired the prospects of the crops. The grounds have been too wet for proper culture, so that both cotton and corn are 'in the grass.' The plant has grown very rapidly, and should a drouth follow, will be likely to drop its forms and fruit. Besides, wet seasons are generally fruitful of caterpillars and other enemies of the great staple."

"We have conversed with the Hon. Mewell Cobb, of Houston, as well as with some of the most intelligent gentlemen from Troupe, Crawford, Monroe, Newton, Burke, Wilkinson, Hancock and Jones, all of whom concur in the opinion that the growing crop of corn is the most promising ever produced in Georgia. There is not only much more planted, but the grounds are in fine order and the growth exceedingly healthy. Of the cotton crop little can yet be said; the yield will depend entirely upon the character of the seasons in July, August and September."

The Albany (Ga.) Courier of the 10th inst. says:

"We have had abundance of rain for two weeks, and our planters are now rather anxious for dry weather, to drive the lice from the cotton and to enable them to kill out the grass. Cotton is looking well in most sections. The corn crop never looked better. At present we have promise of abundant harvest."

The Albany (Ga.) Patriot of the 9th inst. says:

"The weather since our last writing has been very warm, with frequent showers of rain. Our planters are complaining bitterly of the grass in their crops, caused by the late rains. Every one is hard at work, and we trust none will suffer materially. The health of the county continues good."

The Savannah (Ga.) Republican of the 12th inst. says:

"Notwithstanding the recent heavy and long continued rains in this vicinity, we are informed it has been quite dry in Macon and the central portion of the State, and that the crops in that region would be all the better with rain. The cotton and corn, however, are doing well; and with good seasons, as the farmers say, it is believed they will yet recover from the disastrous effects of the cold weather in April and the latter part of May. The copious rains which fell on the seaboard the early part of last week did not extend more than a hundred miles up the Central road."

The St. Augustine (Fa.) Ancient City of the 10th inst. says:

"We have from all quarters the most favorable accounts of the growing crops. The rains have been abundant and seasonable, and the quantity of provisions which will be laid by, will much assist the new settlers in the interior."

We received a cotton bloom which was taken from the plantation of Mr. T. S. White, on the 9th inst. This is the earliest that we have known during the present season. It indicates the backward state of the crop, as in former years they have frequently been obtained in the latter part of May in abundance. The frequent rains which have recently visited this portion of country have been very unfavorable to farming operations, particularly as they succeeded the unfavorable weather during the Spring months. A desirable change may, however, make amends hereafter for the past; and the fears so naturally entertained in the commencement of the season may all be dissipated in a month, by flourishing cotton and fair prospects. [Brandon (Miss.) Republican.

MORE RAIN.—We do not know that we should turn grumblers, and complain of the elements, but it does appear that there has been rain enough in Natchez lately, to last at least one month. Some of our country planters are beginning to cry "enough," and we have no doubt they are about right. So far as the city is concerned, perhaps a dark, cloudy day may be more agreeable to her denizens, than the heat of a summer's sun, but it is often destructive to plantations. [Natchez Courier.

Up to last week the prospects for good crops looked gloomy enough; but since the weather having cleared up, and the planters begin to get their crops clean, we hear several complain that they never had better prospects for good crops of corn than they have this season. The cotton plant looks as promising, as could be expected from the unfavorable state of the spring. The fertile lands of Union need only the right kind of scratching to pay the tiller with an abundant yield for his pains. [Farmerville (La.) Enquirer.

FLORIDA CROPS.—The Ancient City has from all quarters the most favorable accounts of the growing crops. The rains have been abundant and seasonable, and the quantity of provisions which will be laid by, will much assist the new settlers in the interior.

The Alligator Advertiser says, that, owing to the recent heavy yet refreshing rains the planting interests in our section is cheering. We are in the full enjoyment, if such it be, of exceedingly warm weather.

EARLY COTTON BLOOM.—We received on Tuesday the following note from a prominent planting friend in Bolivar county, (about 33½ degrees north latitude,) with the cotton bloom mentioned enclosed in it. We should also like to know if any of our Southern friends can beat it this season:

"BOLIVAR, Miss., June 10.

"Mr. Editor: I enclose you a cotton bloom that was found in my field to-day. This we consider early, at least for up here. I would like to know if any of our more Southern friends can beat it." [Vicksburg Whig.

STEAMSHIP CITY OF GLASGOW.—The Portland (Me.) papers of the 10th inst. contain the arrival of the brig Saginaw, from Trinidad, whence she sailed on the 13th ult. The Saginaw reports as follows:

"On the 6th inst., in lat. 37, long. 70, 10 A. M., discovered at considerable distance to leeward what appeared to be a steamship. At 5 P. M she was again seen; she looked like one of the Liverpool steamers, and appeared to be abandoned. They bore down for her, but the wind soon died away, and the fog shut down thick, when they lost sight of her; she was not to be seen the next morning. Capt. P. thinks it was the City of Glasgow, but was not near enough to ascertain to a certainty."

MORE EFFIGIES.—An effigy was found hanging on a tree at the corner of Main street and the Square, in Charlestown, Mass., on the 10th inst. It was cut down and placed in the watch-house. On its breast were the words: "Frank Pierce, the Traitor of the North." In his hand he had a whip, with the word "Nebraska" at the end of the snapper. The figure was dressed in black pants, brown coat, glazed cap, and boots, with epaulettes on each shoulder.

Commissioner Loring was found hung in effigy in New Bedford, on the 12th inst., on a tree near Liberty Hall, in that place, with the following inscription: "A dutiful son, who obeys his father in all things." Below was an image of the devil. After being pelted with stones, it

Louisiana Items.

GOOD SIGNS.—The Baton Rouge Advocate has the following notice of the robbery of two young gentlemen, members of the bar of that city. We think it is a good sign when we can record the stealing of money from a couple of young lawyers:

DARING ROBBERY.—Last night a "daring thief" entered the law-office of our young friend, S. S. Hall, while he and a friend were calmly reposing in the "arms of Morpheus," and relieved the pockets of those gentlemen of "all the 'loose change' found therein. Such an act demands the immediate attention of our police authorities, in order to prevent a like outrage upon the "peace and dignity" of the law and its administrators. The thief, in making this haul, we doubt not, will ultimately find, by dear-ly bought experience, that "honesty is the best policy."

For fear, however, that the foregoing may induce a large number of the "profession" here to flock to Baton Rouge, in hopes of getting a goodly number of dollars to be filched from them, we quote what the Comet has to say upon the subject.

BURGLARY.—On Thursday night last, a couple of virtuous young gents retired to rest in a small back office on Laurel street; and the back door having been accidently left open, thieves entered, and not satisfied with filching all the small change from their vest pockets, did actually take the casing for their nether extremities, and transport them to a neighboring yard. When the parties awoke from their slumbers, they found alas, that they were most feloniously brought to a primitive condition—a condition in which the venerable progenitors of man hid their faces. They did not swear, as immoral young men would have done under similar circumstances, but went in quest of their lossing garments to the neighboring yards. The sun was up, and therefore the people of that locality did not mistake them for midnight spectres (we hear of no fainting) when the young gents did find their covering, they found that between themselves, they were minus in "change" the sum of six dollars and six bits.

BATON ROUGE AND ITS RAILROAD.—This town has voted $100,000 to construct a railroad from the river to intersect the Jackson and Northern Road near Springfield. It is supposed the parish will vote $100,000 more. There is also a spirited movement for an individual subscription. Baton Rouge is not afraid of issuing bonds. Go ahead, gentlemen, you are right. Be ready to break ground at once, and there will be no more talk of removing the State-House. [Creole.

The action of the citizens of Baton Rouge upon the railroad question, is receiving commendation in every direction. What other evidence do we need to show that we are right, than this universal acknowledgment of the fact among those who are not particularly interested. "What everybody says must be true." The city has nobly done its duty, and it now remains for the parish to do hers. There is not a property holder in the parish of East Baton Rouge who is not equally interested in pushing forward this enterprise, with those who reside in the city. We therefore hope our police jury will lose no delay in submitting the question to the people, whether or not they will authorize the parish to subscribe for stock in the proposed road. [Gazette.

OUR RAILROAD.—The Board of Directors of the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Texas railroad, commenced their June session on last Thursday, which continued until yesterday. There was quite a full board in attendance and much business of importance, tending to the success and final completion of the road, was transacted—the full proceedings of which will be officially published in our next issue. We doubt if a more able Directory were ever assembled. [Ouachita Register.

The same paper says:—The Ouachita, at this point, is now higher than it has been at any time before during this year, and is still rising slowly. The navigation still continues good through to Camden, Ark.

THE VICKSBURG, SHREVEPORT AND TEXAS RAILROAD.—The Madison Journal of the 9th inst. says: Col. Coleman, President of the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Texas Railroad, writes us from Monroe, under date of June 6, stating that 50 miles of the Road has been put under contract at the rate of $10,000 per mile—trustle-work, bridges, embankments, cross-ties, drains, culverts, track laying and materials, all included in the contract. The company is to furnish the iron, spikes and chairs. This is certainly encouraging news to the friends of the Road. It is now evident that this important work, which is to add so much to the wealth and prosperity of North Louisiana, will be pressed forward in earnest, and the stock subscribers will at once see how necessary it is that their instalments should be paid up promptly. The President requests that the instalment of 10 per cent. now due will be paid over immediately, and we hope none will hold back. If the people throughout North Louisiana will only give to this enterprise the aid which it is their interest to do, the day is not far distant when the scream of the locomotive will be heard through her parishes, bearing off the rich products from thousands of acres hitherto valueless, and thus making her one of the most wealthy and desirable portions of our habitable globe. [Concordia Intelligencer.

Mississippi Items.

A meeting of conditional stockholders in the Central Railroad was held in the Chenery Court-room on Saturday evening last, according to previous notice. The object of the meeting was explained by Gen. John D. Freeman, who was called to the chair, to be the appointment of delegates to represent Jackson in the Railroad Convention which was to have been held in Coffeeville, Yallobusha county, on Wednesday last. The meeting elected Messrs. W P. Anderson, Oliver H. Barrett and Philip Hilzheim delegates to the convention, who, we understood, left in the stage on Sunday night for Coffeeville.

By the action of this convention it will be determined whether Jackson will be selected as the terminous of the Central Road,—a matter in which the citizens of this place take a lively interest. In addition to the fifty thousand dollars subscribed in this vicinity, Jackson also tenders a lot of ground for a Depot to the Company free of charge. The city, in its corporate capacity, it is said, will take stock to the amount of fifty thousand more. If those inducements, united, will not secure the terminus at this point, we bow with the best grace we can to a higher bidder.—Flag of the Union.

STATE AID TO RAILROADS.—The sum of twenty five thousand dollars has been paid from the State Treasury to the Agent of the New Orleans and Great Northern Railroad Company last week; and to the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company, the sum of fifty thousand dollars. The people's money is in a fair way of benefitting the people. [Ib.

The Holly Springs Banner of June 9th, makes record of a most melancholy casualty, as follows: "Mr. George Caruth, living not far from Lamar, shot himself on Friday, the 2d inst. The accident happened in this way: He was told by one of his negroes that there was a runaway negro in the woods near his house. He took his horse-pistols, which were loaded, in the holsters, and started to see about it. When he got out into the yard where his horse was, he threw the holsters over his saddle, when one of the pistols went off, the ball striking him in the right thigh severing the two main arteries. The shock was so great that no reaction took place, and he died in about five hours. We have known him almost since boyhood, and can safely say we have never known a more estimable young man. He leaves a young wife to deplore his sudden and untimely death."

A LITTLE BOY WITH DELIRIUM TREMENS.—A man named Taylor, near Winchester, Ia., has a son only four years old, who is a common drunkard! The Emblem says that on the 18th ult. his father, who had been fishing, gave the child a bottle of whisky to carry; he drank too much, and was taken very sick, then with a twitching in one arm and side, which was soon followed by delirium tremens, that lasted for twelve hours. It was a horrible thing to see the little fellow screaming at and jumping from the snakes that he thought he saw. [Dayton (O.) Empire.

SYDNEY SMITH'S WIT.—The article on Tom Moore, in the Edinburgh Review, is from the pen of Mrs. Grote, wife of the historian of Greece, the eccentric lady was the theme of the Rev. Sydney Smith's celebrated entomological reply. Somebody asking the origin of the word "grotesque," Sydney promptly answered: "Oh!

LATER FROM CALIFORNIA.

The United States mail steamer United States, Capt. Lucas, brings the California mails with dates from San Francisco to the 1st instant.

The United States left Aspinwall, June 16, at 1 o'clock, A. M., arrived at the bar 20th at 1 o'clock, P. M., making the passage in four days and twelve hours. The United States connected with the Pacific mail steamship John L. Stephens, which left San Francisco at 9 o'clock, P. M., of the 1st inst., thus making the entire voyage to New Orleans in eighteen days and sixteen hours, a passage unprecedented, and shorter than has ever been accomplished. The transit of the Isthmus is now accomplished easily in six hours. The railroad is completed as far as the summit, ten miles from Panama, and about four miles of the track is laid from Panama, thus making only six miles of mail conveyance. The Isthmus is remarkably healthy. The steamer Illinois was to leave Aspinwall on the evening of the 16th; she was detained twenty-four hours by the carelessness of the mail agent, who did not put all the mails in the car, twenty-three bags having been left behind. The Illinois takes 450 passengers and about a million treasure.

The North Star sails the same time as the Illinois, with 250 passengers and $100,000 in treasure. The harbor of Acapulco is still blockaded by an armed vessel-of-war, of Santa Anna.

From the San Fransisco papers we glean the following items of general news for the fortnight preceding the 1st inst.:

The trial of the French Consul, Mr. Dillon, had terminated by the discharge of the jury, they being unable to agree. Ten were for conviction, and two for acquittal. He was fully convicted by public opinion.

In the case of Sr Del Valle, the Mexican Consul, all further proceedings have been dismissed by the United States District Attorney, and the prisoner has accordingly been dismissed without any sentence being inflicted.

The new steamer Arispe, running between San Francisco and Humboldt Bay, struck a rock and sank before she could be got in shore the next morning. The passengers and crew were saved, but lost all their baggage.

The weather has been, for most of the time, very delightful.

Business has continued very depressed; and not even the accounts from the mines, which are the most favorable from every point, or the promise to farmers of abundant crops, can impart any activity to a market prostrated by an over-supply of every commodity, and having no outlet for the surplus.

The Legislature adjourned on the 15th May.

A man named Sampson, a barber, flung himself from a precipice, near San José, and was instantly killed. He leaves a wife and family in New York city.

A destructive fire occurred at Yreka on the 12th May, by which $147,000 worth of property was destroyed.

A man by the name of William Robeson, in the service of the United States, a native of Shelby Mills, Ky., committed suicide at Crescent City on the 8th of May, by shooting himself with a revolver. He leaves a wife and child at Shelby Mills. Cause, family difficulties.

Charles Dubois also committed suicide at Crescent City by taking opium, on the 12th May.

The Supreme Court, sitting at San José, adjourned on the 16th May, till first Tuesday in July next.

John K. Kane, a young man about 21 years of age, from Baltimore, Md., was murdered at Camptonville about the 15th May, by a man named Mat. Blackmore, who had not been arrested.

The skeletons of two white men have been recently found near Georgetown, under what are believed to be suspicious circumstances.

The engineers are engaged in surveying the railroad line between Sacramento and Mormon Island.

A large fire proof building is being constructed at Vallecito, Calaveras county, composed of lava. This article, although sufficiently hard to resist the action of the weather, is easily worked.

The Columbian Clipper says that McCann, who killed Wm. M. Higgins, at Moquelumne Hill, last winter, went to the Atlantic States by one of the last steamers. He evaded the vigilance of the officers by donning woman's apparel.

An attempt was made to fire an empty building at Marysville on the night of the 20th May.

A destructive fire occurred at Park's Bar, on the Yuba river, on the 21st May.

Mr Silas H. C. Hiatt, aged 25 years, formerly from Niles, Michigan, where he leaves a wife and child, was killed by the caving of a bank at North Eureka, on the 10th May. The Sierra Citizen says he lost his life by stopping a moment to obtain a lantern, and was found buried under some six feet of earth and rubbish, standing erect, still retaining his grasp of the hoe he was using when the alarm was given.

Thomas H. Corwin, convicted of murder and under sentence of death, escaped from the Mariposa jail on the night of the 18th of May, and is still at large.

Mr. A. F. Hudler, who arrived from the Stanislaus, informs the San Joaquin Republican that the recent cold nights have done irreparable injury to the wheat crop. He says that the yield will not be more than half as large as was anticipated some thirty years ago.

The Sacramento Journal says fishermen's drafts on the waters of the Sacramento have not been so liberally paid of late as during the early part of the season. Ten days ago, the finest salmon sold for one cent a pound; it is now worth eight cents, with a prospect of a still further rise.

A boy named Harvey T. Shockley, aged about twelve years, was drowned at Marysville on Monday, 23d May. His body was found about three hours afterwards, when an ineffectual attempt was made to resuscitate him.

The Grass Valley telegraphic correspondent of the Sacramento Union informs that paper that the South Yuba Canal will shortly be completed by means of capital furnished from London.

A destructive fire occurred in Marysville on the night of the 25th May, by which the greater portion of the block bounded by D, I, 2d and 3d streets was destroyed, together with portions of two other blocks adjoining.

Horace Brewster has been found guilty of manslaughter in the District Court at Auburn, and sentenced to one year in the State prison.

Lolu Montez, while riding near her residence in Grass Valley, was thrown from her horse into a ditch, and came near losing her life.

A man named Jamse Carlisle was shot by one George Transfield in a difficulty at Sanobez's Rancho on the night of the 27th May. The verdict of the Coroner's Jury was "Justifiable Homicide," on the ground that Transfield acted in self defence. Carlisle leaves a widow and child in Missouri.

Three duels have been fought during the last two weeks, two of which have terminated fatally. The first took place on the morning of the 21st, between Numa Hubert, late member of the Assembly from this city, and G. T. Hunt; weapons, duelling pistols at twelve paces. At the third fire Mr. Hunt fell, mortally wounded, and died in a few hours.

On the morning of the 24th, Thos. L. Benson and —— Mengis, two stevedores of our city, fought with Colt's revolvers, and at the second fire Mr. Benson was shot through the body. He died the next day. Another duel is reported to have occurred yesterday morning, in which one of the parties was wounded in the shoulder. Names unknown.

C. Dowdigan and J. Hawkins fought a duel on the morning of the 19th of May near the city; weapons, rifles at forty paces. At the second fire Mr. Dowdigan was slightly wounded in the fleshy part of the arm, and the difficulty was adjusted.

An English boy called "Tom," about sixteen years of age, and formerly from Liverpool, was drowned about noon yesterday at the foot of M street, while attempting to get upon the Fish Market from a small boat in which he had been fishing. [Sac. Union.

A NUT FOR GEOLOGISTS.—We learn from our Georgetown correspondent, that while tunneling in Manaluke Hill, thereafters of a building were found in a perfect state of preservation one hundred and fifteen feet below the surface. [Coloma Argus.

A murderous affray took place at Diamond Springs, in the Pacific Saloon, on the 28th ult., between John Harris and some man named Helms, in which Harris was stabbed in the back and abdomen. Two of the Helms died immediately and have not yet been arrested; two

From the Isthmus.

We take the following from the Aspinwall Courier of the 15th inst.

General Posada is ordered to take command of the Provinces of Carthagena and the department of the Magdanela.

He is now raising recruits in Panama, and will leave this for Carthagena in the first English steamer with such force as he may collect.

It is understood that all laborers employed on the railroad are exempted from military service.

The Panamano says: "By a letter received from Carthagena, June 6th, we are informed that on the 24th of last month, General Melo attacked the constitutional forces assembled in Capiquira under General Franco, and routed them with considerable loss. The defeated party had fallen on Ambalema, Honda and La Mesa; that Melo's agent in Bogota, Berinac, Obregan, etc., committed all kinds of cruelties and excesses. In order to effect the payment of the tax which was levied on every person. A person of the name of Don Ildefonso Santamarie, had been imprisoned and kept in prison twenty-six hours without food, light or water, who finally had to ransom himself with $8000.

From private accounts received by the Panamenon, it gives, and we extract the following: "Gen. Franco Capiquira." The former being greatly molested by the guerilla parties of the latter, in his advance on Capiquira, determined on attacking and taking that city, although Gen. Herrera and himself had agreed not to attack the enemy. The rebels had fortified themselves strongly in their houses, and by those means caused serious injuries to the constitutional party; but even with all this, fighting desperately, they managed to cut their way through and reached the "plaza Mayor," but Gen. Franco was killed by a discharge from the church steeple.

Discouraged by this unhappy event, the troops began retiring in good order, but Melo in person pursued and completely routed them. The loss sustained is estimated at 500. In consequence of this, the forces of General Lopez, stationed in the town of La Mesa, formed with the troop sthat marched from Popayan, Antioquia and Cauca. Gen. Herrera had escaped uninjured from the defeat of Capaquira, and effected to march to Anibalema, after separating in San Juan del Rio Seco from Senor Jose de Dios Ueros, who had arrived at Honda.

Gen. Juan Jose Reyes Patrie was in Tunja with 15,000 men, awaiting 400 "Bancros."

AN EXPECTED ENGAGEMENT AT SEA.—One of these days we may expect to hear of a naval engagement between the Russians and the British, in the Pacific or Indian Ocean. The London Globe says:

"Prowling about the South Seas there are to heavy Russian frigates, the Diana and a consort. A Russian squadron is at Batavia. Lawless California and the mongrel republics of South America are infested with desperadoes to whom piracy would be pleasant pastime; and if the war lasts, clipper privateers from these quarters, under the Russian flag, will soon be at it, dogging all gold ships. But to the Diana. Unquestionably it would be possible for this fine frigate and her consort, well handled by dashing commanders, to steal along and successfully destroy one six Australian and New Zealand chief towns—Sydney, Melbourne, Adella, Hobart Town, Auckland and Wellington. Most of these places are noble deep water ports, where even a seventy-four might anchor within a mile of the buildings. All are utterly defenceless against attack from sea, the few pop-gun batteries possessed by Sydney and another place or two would be swept away by a frigate's first broadside."

POLITICAL.—The Washington correspondent of the Journal of Commerce alludes to the municipal election in the Federal city in the following terms:

"The Washington City municipal election, which came off yesterday, is to be viewed as a marked feature in the history of the times. It shows that a new party is springing up, in these otherwise quiet times, which will dislocate old parties, and give a new direction to political power. For, if the "Know Nothings" could take that city, under circumstances of great discouragement, what city can they not take?

SINGULAR CASE OF DEATH.—Mr. Ed. Knight, an Englishman, passenger on the Herculanum, which was run into by the steamer Skelly, off Nice, and sunk, who was rescued, has since died at Geneva, of gangrene, resulting from a bite of his wife. During their last struggles in the sea, Mr. Kolght proposed to abandon the children, as he could not save both them and her, but she declined, and so went down with them, in the desperation of the moment biting off one of his fingers.

NEW YORK RAILROADS.—From the report of railroads in New York, it appears that the number of persons carried over these roads, during 1853, was 8,174,364, twenty-five per cent. of the whole population of the United States. These passengers traveled an aggregate of 397,282,298 miles. Of this mighty multitude, 137 were killed, and 209 persons were injured with vehicles at road crossings, 57 by being run over. Of these, the dead and wounded, 14 perished by voluntarily jumping on or off trains while in motion; 10 by collision while walking, standing or laying on the track; 9 by collisions; 6 by trains being thrown off the DEATH ON MOUNT VESUVIUS.—A letter from Naples states that on the 14th ultimo Mr. J. Delius, of Bremen, having ascended Mount Vesuvius with a party of his countrymen, went too near the edge of the crater, and the ground giving way under him he fell into the abyss. His groans were heard from the bottom, but when some persons descended, by means of ropes, he was dead.

DIVING FOR GOLD.—The Worcester (Mass.) Spy states that Mr. C. B. Pratt, the diver, left that city on Tuesday last, with his assistants, to renew his search after the treasure of the British ship of war Huzzar, sunk in seventy feet of water during the Revolutionary War. About a million of dollars were on board at the time, which were destined to pay off the troops of the British army, then in the Highlands.

It is stated that more than seventy cattle have recently died in Montpelier and vicinity from the effects of being bitten by mad dogs.

The first bale of cotton ever sent to Charleston from Nashville, Tenn., was received there last week.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

Friday Morning, June 23.

COTTON....The demand yesterday was limited and the sales did not exceed 1600 bales. Prices were generally full, and we quote:

NEW ORLEANS CLASSIFICATION.

Inferior	5@5¾	Middling Fair	9¾@10¼
Ordinary	6@6¼	Fair	10¾@11
Middling	7¼@8¼	Good Fair	nominal.
Good Middling	8¾@9½	Good and Fine	—@—

COTTON AND TOBACCO STATEMENT.

	Cotton—bales.	Tobacco—hhds
Stock on hand Sept	10,572	39,468
Received since	1,206,902	41,428
" yesterday	1,930—1,400,029	60—81,807
	1,410,601	70972
Exported to date	1,225,867	26,134
" yesterday	2,854—1,228,241	520—26,654
Stock

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Stocks.

Arise! for the day is passing
While you lie dreaming on;
Your brothers are armed in armor,
And forth to the fight are gone;
Your place in the ranks awaits you;
Shame, man, has a part in play;
The past and the future are nothing
In the face of the stern to-day.

Arise from your dreams of the future—
Of gaining a hard-fought field,
Of storming the airy fortress,
Of bidding the giant yield;
Your future has deeds of glory,
Of honor; (God grant it may!)
But your arm will never be stronger
Or needed as now—to-day.

Arise! If the past detain you,
Her promises and storms forget!
No chains so unworthy to hold you
As those of a vain regret;
Sad or bright, she is lifeless ever;
Cast her phantom arms away.
Nor look back, save to learn the lesson
Of a nobler strife to-day.

Arise! for the hour is passing;
The sound that you dimly hear,
Is your enemy marching to battle!
Rise! rise! for the foe is near!
Stay not to brighten your weapons,
Or the hour will strike at last,
And from dreams of a coming battle
You will wake and find it past.

Fashionable Intelligence.

If any person can bring before the public a more perfect burlesque than the following, which we take from the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin, let him do it:

Marriage in High Life—Great Festivities.

The following report of an event of great interest to the gay world has been sent to us by a friend, who found it in the street in New York. It is supposed to have dropped from the pocket of a reporter of the New York Express, Evening Post or Times, and we take this method of presenting it to the world, as well as of enabling its proper owner to procure it and give it to his impatient readers:

The Marriage Fete at Crowswood.

"The fashionable world has been much interested in the nuptial ceremonies attending the union of Miss Dinah Dora Blowitt with Mr. Samuel Scott Ditchie, better known as Sambo Ditchie—both parties being distinguished in the colored literary circles of our great country. The marriage was solemnized at Crowswood, the residence of the bride's uncle, on Saturday last, in the presence of a highly distinguished party of guests from this and the adjoining States. The weather, sympathizing with the occasion, was highly propitious to the gathering of the company, but less so to their separation. The sun had considerately sheathed his fiery arrows, and a personal friend of the bride, who is by profession a street-waterer, had the night before gone over the road with his cart and laid the dust so as to prevent the gentlemen and ladies from getting their shoes and stockings dirtied.

"The distance from the city being only a few miles, most of the guests went on foot, but some of the more distinguished went in omnibuses, and a few of the aristocracy drove to the scene of the festivities in their own drays. Mr. Pompey Johnson, a wealthy hod carrier, took a gay party of his friends in a furniture car, hired for the occasion; but their enjoyment was considerably dampened by the absence of Mrs. Johnson, who, owing to the house-cleaning going on at the mansion where she presides as maid-of-all-work, was unavoidably detained at home. General regret, too, was felt at the absence of Mr. Julius Quash, the celebrated wit of the colored circles, who was unable to enjoy the festive scene, it being the height of the white-washing season.

"By half-past two o'clock most of the guests had arrived, and rarely has such a brilliant company been assembled in this or any other country. They entirely filled the drawing-room of the Crowswood mansion—a spacious apartment of 12½ feet square. About three o'clock a strain of bewitching music was heard from the back porch, where a friend of the groom's—a celebrated amateur performer on the banjo—had stationed himself, and to these enchanting sounds the bridal procession advanced into the saloon. The bride leaned upon the arm of her venerable Uncle Edward, and the groom upon that of Aunt Chloe, and they were attended by a train of sixteen bridesmaids and groomsmen, all chosen from the beauty and fashion of the colored aristocracy.

"The bride wore a splendid dress of white decision, over pink muslin, which contrasted and harmonized beautifully with the ebon of her polished complexion. Her splendid masses of noble hair were unadorned except by a wreath of white and crimson peonies, plucked fresh from the garden of Crowswood by her own fairy fingers; for we may add, par parenthèse, that it is one of Mrs. Ditchie's fancies never to wear artificial flowers or other imitations of nature for ornament. From the wreath hung a veil of rich bobinet that cost at least twenty-five cents a yard. A necklace of wax beads—the splendid gift of the happy bridegroom—encircled her black-swan-like neck in flattering contrast, and a Berthe of delusion was looped up at her breast by a magnificent mother-of-pearl brooch, three inches in diameter. The groom's dress was a long-tailed blue coat, white vest and pants, white cravat and white cotton gloves, and his feet were encased in a pair of boots expressly polished for the occasion by one of the groomsmen, a professional gentleman in that line of business.

"The marriage ceremony was according to the well-known impressive service of the Ethiopian church, and was performed with great feeling by the Rev. Cæsar Jones, pastor of the Ethiopian Chapel in that vicinity. We have no room to describe the entire service, but to the questions that were to make the twain one flesh it was remarked that the groom replied promptly, though almost inaudibly, 'I will, hoss!' and the bride, in a clear but slightly tremulous tone, 'Well I does!' As soon as the ceremony was concluded, the happy bridegroom folded his bride to his bosom and imprinted upon her blushing cheek a long, fervent salutation, and then the joyous company gathered around to offer their congratulations.

"Soon afterwards the dancing took place to the inspiring strains of Lucy Neal and the Virginia Break-down, while a portion of the company partook of a bountiful supply of refreshments. The bride and groom departed early, the amateur artist on the banjo, before referred to, striking up, as they took their leave, the happily-chosen air of 'Carry me back to Ole Virginia.' The gay company soon afterwards took their leave of the hospitable halls of Crowswood, and returned to their homes by the several private conveyances by which they arrived. A slight shower, which had fallen during the festivities, was the only contretemps to this otherwise joyful occasion.

"It is understood that the happy couple proceeded to Philadelphia, where they were to dine with a brother-in-law of the bride's, at his mansion in Small street. From thence they were to proceed to the residence of the groom's venerable father, and after that to his own home, which awaits its new mistress with anxious interest."

By a singular coincidence, we have received, since the above was in type, the following exclusive account of another fashionable affair, containing many particulars not heretofore given to the world:

Mrs Mowatt's Wedding.

NEW YORK, June 10, 1854.

Dear Bulletin: Although you have seen in the New York papers such full accounts of Mrs. Mowatt's wedding, your readers, will no donbt, be glad to have some further particulars in reference to this great event. The following incidents occur to my memory as worthy to have a place among those already chronicled by the "Express" and others:

DISTINGUISHED GUESTS.

We observed among the foreign guests, Sir Philip Pilensky, wearing his order of the Shoulder-Knot; Herr Von Zoobbe, dressed very simply in the costume of a New York editor; Mr. Jenkins, of the London Post, and our old and esteemed friend, James Yellowplush, Esq.

BEFORE THE CEREMONY.

About four minutes before the ceremony, I am told that Mrs. Mowatt drank a part of a tumbler of water, making the striking remark: "How very cold it is!"

As the bridal party entered, Mr. Brown suddenly discovered that he had dropped a moss rose bud from his buttonhole, and with great presence of mind arrested the further progress of the procession until Mrs. D——, of W——g, gracefully placed a beautiful forget-me-not in his lapel. Immediately upon the conclusion of the ceremony Mr. Ritchie blew his nose, using a very handsomely embroidered "mouchoir," marked with his initials in full. We understand that the article was purchased at Stewart's, about a week ago, by Dr. G——, of Troy, for this special occasion.

[illegible]

TRIBE OF BRIDAL PARTY, ETC.

The groom was dressed with singularly delicate taste, in a black dress coat with tore skirts, black pantaloons, and white vest, patent leather pumps and silk stockings. We did not see his hat, but are informed that it is strictly in keeping with the rest of the costume, the whole of which is the production of an eminent Parisien artist.

Mr. Brown was dressed precisely like the groom, and would have been mistaken for him, had he not worn the Rose-bud before mentioned, instead of a wedding-favor. The editors and reporters of the New York Express, were arrayed in as unique uniform, consisting of yellow plush knee breeches, cotton stockings, and well blacked shoes, highly ornamented coats, somewhat resembling the liveries of English footmen, powdered hair and cocked hats They attracted much attention, and the perfect ubliquity of some of their corps, gave rise to the following excessively witty conundrum:—"Why is Ravenswood like an island? Because it is invested by the babbling Brooks!"

MOVEMENTS OF THE BRIDAL PARTY

The bridal party left New York for Philadelphia yesterday at 5½, P. M., in car A, but passed in car B, at Trenton. They reached Philadelphia safely, and drove rapidly up Walnut street to Dock street and thence to the Girard House. They occupied the superb suite of rooms Nos. 14 to 18. To-day they will proceed to Baltimore—the bride wearing a neat traveling dress of brown linen, and the groom a plain brown "dust catcher." In Baltimore they will dine with Mr. and Mrs. G——, and reach Washington on Saturday night. On Monday Mrs. Ritchie will attend to a little shopping, accompanied by the fourth groomsman and bridesmaid, and the party will then continue their southern course. As it is all important that the public should be advised of their future movements, I shall endeavor to note down, as I receive them, every minute detail, and furnish you with a complete report in my next.

Yours truly, HENRY HANGERON.

A Street Scene.

This world is a great dice box, and nobody can tell what will "turn up" at the next throw. There are incidents and romances enough transpiring every day in the streets of the metropolis to furnish material for the poet and novelist to the end of time.

A short time since, a well dressed gentleman was passing up Broadway. Foreign enough evidently given to a face once fair, a tinge of bronze, and though nearly half a century might have rolled over his head, yet it had left few traces behind it, and no evidence that the shadows were falling far to the eastward.

Near Trinity Church sat an old apple woman. A tattered cloak of plaid was thrown over her shoulders; her eyes were dim, her hand trembling, and her thin gray hair, escaping from the keeping of a cap, guiltless of lace, lay upon her cheek. The old woman was watching for customers, and her eyes rested upon the form of the stranger as he proceeded leisurely along, pausing now and then as he seemingly recognized some spot familiar in other days or noticed some unexpected, and to him, doubtless, painful changes.

The old woman suddenly dropped her basket, and the apples rolled hither and thither, but she did not see them. "George!" she exclaimed, as she sprang to her feet, "George!" The stranger turned in the direction of the voice. In an instant his quiet manner vanished. "George!" "Mother!" and the twain were clasped in each other's arms. Greatly did some marvel at the scene. "Has the old woman fainted?" cried one. "Has she been stealing?" asked another. Yes, she had been stealing—stealing whole years of care from Time, and flinging it to the winds. "But one touch of nature makes the whole world kin," and there was many a heart that beat softer at the scene.

Twenty years ago "George" had left his home in Utica, N. Y., and gone "down to the sea," and "done business upon the great waters." After varied fortunes, that brightened at last, he had returned to find the old homestead razed to the ground, a block of stores occupying its site, every inch of which had been dear to him. He found no brother, no sister to welcome him; but an old man pointed out his father's grave. It was sunken, and without a stone to mark where he lay. Of his mother he could obtain no trace. She had left Utica long ago to seek her son in New York, and never returned.

Who can tell how she watched, and waited, and wept for her first-born, wandering son? Who can tell by what a painful descent she went down from comfort to a home in the street, old age, and poverty?

But it was all made right. The dead was alive again, and the lost was found." And to-day, who thinks she would exchange places with the most favored of fortuna that dwell in mansions of marble?

God grant that much joy break not the pitcher at the fountain, or the wheel at the cistern. God grant many such meetings in this world of partings! [New York Tribune.

A MOTHER STEALING HER OWN CHILDREN.—Mrs. Nichols, of the Brattleboro' Democrat, thus describes an affecting scene which she witnessed in the cars:

The 12th of this month I was on my way to Templeton, Mass., to lecture, by invitation, on Woman's Rights. About twelve miles from home, two men, one the High Sheriff of our county, came into the car, and after looking around, as though in search of some one, the elder man opened the door of the ladies' saloon, and directly the cry was heard—

"Oh, father! father! don't take away my children! They are my children—they are my children, father!"

I sprang to my feet, and being acquainted with all the parties, soon got an explanation. The old grandfather had come with a Vermont Sheriff to take from the mother his son's children, who had been taken from her by her husband (whom she had left in Massachusetts for his drunken abuse), and carried to his father in Vermont.

"She had stolen them," the old man said—(stolen her own children! almost equal to a man's stealing himself! I told him)—"and my son away in Indiana looking for a place. She had besides, as he charged, stolen blankets and a bed-quilt. (They were carried from her own father's when she married, but became her husband's, who transferred them with her children to his father.) Well, we had a Woman's Rights lecture, or THEY did. Every man in the cars was a Woman's Rights man on the question before them; and the fellows, after trying in vain to get the second child—they had snatched the eldest (four years old) before we knew what they were about—got off at the first stopping-place. Then arrangements were made for its recovery. I took the little one, two years of age, along with me to Templeton, and the mother stopped at Oranga, six miles below where the men had stopped, and assisted by a leading man of the place, providentially on board, sent a Sheriff back and brought the little one and its kidnappers to Orange also. There they had to sit out the night under the care of a Massachusetts Sheriff, and learn, at a good round cost, that they were out of their jurisdiction, and had no authority to take the children from Massachusetts soil. The parties being all in the first class of wealth and intelligence in their own town, the matter has made a good deal of stir, and all for woman's rights to her babes. They were both girls, and two so perfectly beautiful children, in one family, I never saw, and their mother also young and beautiful.

A gentleman employed in one of the telegraph offices in France, accidentally brought his arm in contact with one of the wires while the electric current was passing through it. So violent was the shock, that he was raised from his chair and thrown with great force through an open window into the adjoining garden. When he recovered his senses, he had no recollection of what had happened, and could only be convinced of it by finding that his hair and beard, which were previously of a beautiful jet black, had become in various places as white as snow. It devolves on men of science to explain this phenomenon, which will form an epoch in the history of electricity.

"Where is your house?" asked a traveler in the depths of one of those old solemn wilderness of the Great West.

"House? I ain't got no house."

"Well, where do you live?"

"I live in the woods, sleep on the Great Government Purchase, eat raw bear and turkey, and drink out of the Mississippi." And he added: "It is getting too thick with folks about here You're the second man I've seen within the past month, and I hear there's a whole family come in about fifty miles down the river. I'm going to find out who the moody cusses."

The Grave in the Wilderness

BY FORDLY JESSUP.

What a field of romance there is in the West! Like its own beautiful prairies, it spreads before the traveler, inviting him to plnck the many colored flowers that bloom around him. The story of the red man of the forest and plain, his wrongs, his resentments, and his inevitably approaching fate, are calculated to call up at once the tear of pity and the blush of shame. Though from the nature of things it seems ordained that he should pass away, yet such is a hard fate. His very nature, wild, romantic, and adverse to restraint, renders it impossible that he should ever assimilate himself to the manners and laws of civilized life; and as mankind are still toiling up from the night of barbarism and superstition to the broad noon-light of enlightment, the poor Indian can but fade away before the coming day.

The valor of King Philip of Pokanoket, the eloqnence of Red Jacket, the indomitable resistance of Tecumseh, the heart-burning wrongs of Osceola, the manly grief of Logan, the calm patience of the Fox Patriarch, and the virtues of Pocahontas, have been themes of story and song; hnt how many thousands more, whose hearts olung as fondly to their hearth-stones and fathers' graves, have gone down into the shades of oblivion, with no pen to perpetuate the memory of their strnggles or their fate! It is upon this olass of aboriginel inhabitants that the execrations of a cruel world have been heaped; to these have the epithets, merciless, revengefnl, and bloodihirsty, been applied by their civilized foes scarce less tiger-like than they. When they heve seen their homes passing by frend or violence into the hends of their pale faced neighbors, when they saw the whitee becoming a powerful people, themselves fading away before his approoch—becoming yearly weeker and weeker—destined to total extinction, hope sometimes yielded to desperation, and, in the wild frenzy of their exoitablo nature, they committed exoosses which were deepened in spirit and effect by the vengeance and resentment of the whites.

To speak of conqnest between our pioneer fathers and the sons of the forest is bnt to relate an old story. To point to the rude mounds now leveled by the wheels of Time, where some victim of strife was hastily laid by his comradee, is but to repeat every day scenes in the early history of the West.

Long years ago, when every foot of the Western frontier was disputed ground, Capt. Ward left his home of peace and security in the East, to endure the hardships and share the dangers of frontier life, takieg with him his wife and several small children. He was accompanied by a widowed sister and her son, a noble youth of nineteen. The convenience of a luxuriously furnished room in a majestio steamer, plowing her way through the rippling wavelets laving her sides, was then unknown. Our pioneers embarked in a square bait boat, some eight or ten feet broad by fifty in length. They had on board abont n dozen horses, besides other stock, and with the man engaged to work the boat there were nearly a dozen persoes. Slowly and wearily they drifted down the broad and beautiful Ohio, keeping in the middle of the stream, as well to enjoy the current, as to avoid danger from the parties of Indians which might be prowling along the shore. Day after day dawned and closed upon them, and they had passed the great border battle-ground, where wild, undisciplined valor was strnggliog to resist the approsch of usurpetion end civilization. They no longer feared the deadly missiles from the shores, nor started at every sound that came to their ears, as at the footsteps of an unseen foe. A sense of security naturally brings with it a relaxation of vigilenco and a diminution of exention.

Just at the close of a beautiful day, the rowers, weary of labor, had ceesed, and the boat was drifting down the current, when Ward oelled to his pilot:

"Rogers, enppose we put in this elde of that point yonder, fasten our boat to one of those trees, and put up for the night."

"It looks like a good place," replied Rogers, "and I am in favor of stopping; besides, I hear some wild turkeys, and would like to have one for breakfast."

The boat turned toward the point in question, the children were all animation at the idea of stretching their cramped and wearied limbs on the shore; the women were already getting out their provisions and making preparations for supper. They were within fifty yards of the shore, when their attention was arrested by the cracking of a stick. The Captain remerked that instead of turkey they might have a supper on venison. "No," shouted Rogers, who was steering the boat, "It's Indians. Row for your lives or we are all dead!" With all haste the boat was put about, but before it was headed toward the middis of the stream, the crash of a hundred rifles broke upon the stillness of those mighty solitudes, and a shower of balls swept around the little boat. The nephew of the Captain sprang up, seized his rifle and fired at the foremost Indian, who from his dress appeared to be the leader of the band. The Indian fell, and the young man at the seme moment. The cool and intrepid exertions of the oarsmen soon placed them beyond the reach of danger; as they knew it to be only a hunting party, they wore aware that they were destitute of oanoes and did not fear pursuit; still their condition was a deplorable one. Many of their horses were killed, others were wounded and plunged fearfully; one child, sorerely wounded, lay in the boet, his head supported by his mother, while the crimson current of life flowed rapidly from his bosom. He whispered a few words of encouragement and consolation to his mother, breathed a preyer commending his spirit to heaven, and expired.

Night thickened around them. Silently they sought the shore, and in silence partook of their humble repast, and in sorrow prepared the last resting-place of the dead. No white-robed priest stood beside that lonely graye to utter a prayer over the deperted, but the heart-broken mother knelt beside the remains of her only child, and placing her hand above that heart, now etified for ever, breathed such a prayer as only a soul crushed by sorrow still relying on Heavee can utter. Manly cheeks were wet within that little group, and, from eyes unused to weep, the tear of pity flowed. In the morning, Rogers assisted the mother in piecing a rongh stone at the head of the grave, and the little band of adventurers, saddened by the events of the past, yet hopeful of the future, started again on their journey towards the setting sun.

Long and obequered years hays passed, and the whole face of the mighty West has changed. The red man, driven back before the rolling tide of civilization, no longer lurks upon the banks of the Qneee of Rivers. The unsightly rafts that drifted upon its quiet waters have given place to floatieg palaces, furnished with all the oonvenlences and luxuries that taste or comfort oan suggest. Long after the event which we have related had transpired, Rogers, then an old hunter, stood beside that simple stoee; the mound they had piled above the pulseless had sunk to a level with the snrrounding earth—and his eye moistened as he related the incident to a comrade, and his lip quivered as he wound up his story with, "Ah! preachers may talk of sublimity, but I never saw any religion so sublime as that of that mother by the side of the grave of her son in the wilderness."

MOBILE AND OHIO RAILROAD.—The sixth division of this work consists of the main line in Kentucky, forty miles in length, and the Paducah and Columbus branches, respectively fifty-nine and five miles long; making the total length of the division, main road and branches, one hundred and four miles; of which seventy-two and five-eights are in progress. The Paducah branch is all in the hands of oee efficieut company, who have now fifteen miles at the Paducah and nearly ready for the tracks, and can complete the whole by the 1st of December next. Thirteen miles and a half in Hickman oonnty, Kentucky, iuoluding the Columbus branch, has made some progress to the emount of $5000, but will be urged rapidly on as soon as the remaining thirty-one and a half miles in Fulton and Ballard counties can be put under contract. Iron rails have been ordered to Paducah in moderate quantity, that the track-leying may be commenced as early as practicable. With a continued supply of rails at Padneah, the tracks may reach Jackson, Tennessee, by the 1st of October, 1855. [Louisville Courier

Valuable Land for Sale.

FIFTEEN HUNDRED AND SEVENTY-FIVE ACRES in the western part of Alabama, fourteen miles from the Bigbee river and eight from the M. & O. Railroad. Most of the land is very rich, with good buildings on each, commodious dwellings, negro cabins; and also a superior horse-power Sawmill. On the west is a good neighborhood, and on the west an extensive range for stock—800 acres in cultivation, and well watered.

A more desirable place can seldom be found where land is rich

Terms easy. For further information, apply to

JAS. B. RAMSEY.

June 17, 1854. Columbia, Conecuh co., Ala.

MAYORALTY OF NEW ORLEANS,
June 16, 1854.

Common Council—City of New Orleans.

[No. 1577.]

AN ORDINANCE to authorize the Mayor of the city of New Orleans, in pursuance of the powers, and subject to the conditions therein mentioned, of the act of the Legislature of the State of Louisiana, approved 15th March, 1854, to subscribe on behalf of the city to the stock of the Pontchartrain Railroad Company to construct a railroad from New Orleans to Mobile.

Be it ordained by the Common Council of the city of New Orleans, That the Mayor of the city of New Orleans subscribe on behalf of the city of New Orleans, to the stock of the Pontchartrain Railroad Company, in the sum of one million five hundred thousand dollars.

SEC. 2. Be it further ordained, etc., That the subscription of the city to the stock of said company shall be payable in bonds of said city for $1000 each, having thirty years to run, bearing interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, with interest coupons attached, payable semi-annually in New Orleans or New York, transferable by the endorsement of the President and Secretary of the said company; and said bonds may be converted into the stock of the said company at any time not exceeding five years from their date, under such regulations as the President and Directors may see fit to adopt, the parties in interest agreeing thereto

SEC. 3. Be it further ordained, etc., That a tax on every species of property, occupation, trade or profession now taxable in said city, shall be levied in January of each year, commencing in January, 1855, sufficient to pay the annual interest on said bonds, specifying the rate of said tax, which shall be collected at the same time and in the same manner as the consolidated loan tax of the said city.

SEC. 4. Be it further ordained, etc., That the bonds of the city, issued for the stock of the said company, shall be issued and received at their par value for said stock; and to insure the full and punctual discharge at maturity of said bonds, the stock of said company thus issued to the city of New Orleans shall be forever pledged for the redemption of said bonds in the amount of ten shares for each bond of one thousand dollars.

SEC. 5. Be it further enacted, etc., That in pursuance of section third of the act of the Legislature above recited of March 15, 1854, all ordinances, resolutions or other acts passed by the Common Council after the first day of January of each year, commencing on the 1st January, 1855 except an ordinance to impose said consolidation loan tax, and an ordinance imposing a tax specially for the payment of the annual interest on bonds issued by the city of New Orleans as its subscription to the stock of the other Railroad Companies in the State, shall be null and void unless a resolution levying a special tax for the payment of the interest on the bonds thus issued to the Pontchartrain Railroad Company for its stock, shall have been previously passed; it being understood agreeably to the several provisions in said section contained, that no levy of a tax for the payment of interest on said bonds shall be made whenever a dividend of six per centum per annum shall have been declared for any year on the stock of said Pontchartrain Railroad Company held by the city, which dividends shall be applied by the city to the payment of the interest; and that whenever the dividends of said railroad stocks owned by the city shall amount to more than six per centum per annum, the excess after payment of interest as aforesaid shall be applied agreeably to the third section of the law aforesaid to the purchase of the bonds issued under this ordinance, and that whenever a dividend of less than six per centum per annum shall be declared during any year on the stock of the city, a tax for interest shall be levied for the difference only between the amount of said annual dividend and the amount of the annual interest.

SEC. 6. Be it further ordained, etc., That immediately after the passage of the ordinance authorizing the subscription to the stock aforesaid, and its approval by the voters of the city of New Orleans, as hereinafter provided, the Mayor shall cause bonds to be issued to the Pontchartrain Railroad Company for the amount of said subscription on receiving from said company certificates for fifteen thousand shares of its capital stock of one hundred dollars full paid in the manner following, to wit: Bonds to the amount of five hundred thousand dollars at the time of subscription; the further sum of five hundred thousand dollars in bonds whenever an additional amount of private subscriptions shall have been obtained to the amount of five hundred thousand dollars on which ten dollars in cash upon each share of one hundred dollars shall have been paid up at the time of subscription, the balance subject to the call of the Board of Directors; and the further sum of five hundred thousand dollars in bonds whenever the Mayor of the city shall be satisfied that sixty miles of said road between New Orleans and Mobile have been constructed and are capable of transportation thereon; And provided, That from the time of the city subscription to the stock of the said company, the old and new stockholders and the city shall in all respects be upon an equal footing, in proportion to their respective number of shares, as to the exercise of that may accrue on the road in existence, as well as that to be constructed to Mobile; and provided further, that the rights and exclusive privileges now held by the Pontobartrain Railroad Company, and by which, under charters granted by the States of Alabama and Mississippi, the said Pontchartrain Railroad Company has obtained the privilege of constructing and maintaining a railroad from New Orleans to Mobile through those States, shall, on the subscription of the city, as above set forth, become the joint asset of the new as well as old stockholders of the said Pontchartrain Railroad Company, and of the city of New Orleans; and thereupon the Mayor of the city is authorized and required to execute before the secretary of said company a pledge of the said stock, to secure the full and punctual discharge at maturity of the bonds thus issued, in the amount of ten shares for each bond of one thousand dollars, agreeably to section fourth of the law above recited.

SEC. 7. Be it further ordained etc., That this ordinance shall not be valid or take effect until it shall have been approved and ratified, at an election to be held for that purpose by order of the Common Council, by a vote of the majority of the qualified voters of said city, which election is hereby directed to take place within fifteen days after the passage of this ordinance, and shall be preceded by a public notice of ten days to be published by the Mayor in the newspaper chosen by the Common Council and shall in all respects be conducted, when not herein otherwise provided, in the same manner prescribed by law for the city elections; and at said election the vote shall be taken in the following manner: Those who approve of the ordinance shall inscribe or have inscribed on their tickets the following words: "In favor of the tax to aid in the construction of a railroad to Mobile;" and those who disapprove of said ordinance shall inscribe or have inscribed on their tickets, "Against the tax to aid in the construction of a railroad to Mobile;" Provided, That the Board of Directors of said company shall, in conformity with the sixth section of the act above recited, notify the Mayor in writing of their consent to accept said ordinance before the publication of the said notice of election.

SEC. 8. Be it further ordained, etc., That in the month of January of each year, or at such time as the other stockholders of said Pontchartrain Railroad Company shall elect their directors, the Common Council shall elect, agreeably to the provisions of the seventh section of the act above recited, by joint ballot, three directors of said company, who shall be citizens of New Orleans. They shall serve for one year, or until their successors are elected, and shall not be members of either Board of the Common Council or officers of the Corporation.

[Signed] W. S. CAMPBELL,
President Board of Assistant Aldermen.
[Signed] JAS. H. CALDWELL,
President Board of Aldermen.

Approved June 16, 1854.
[Signed] JOHN L. LEWIS, Mayor.
A true copy. D. A. ST. CERAN, j20 Clerk.

Pensacola House.

MRS. SIMONDS has opened the above-named House, and is prepared to accommodate boarders and transient customers. Every attention will be given to make all comfortable who may favor her with their patronage.

The Pensacola House is situated on Government st., one door above the Florida House, commanding a view of the Bay, and receiving the breese unobstructed.

JOSEPH H. COTTRELL.

Pensacola, Fla., June 24, 1854. ly

To Booksellers, Agents, and Peddlers.

BURNETT & BOSTWICK, PUBLISHERS,
15 Camp Street, 15.

HAVE just issued from their press the following valuable works:

VOYAGE OF THE U. S. EXPLORING SQUADRON, commanded by Capt. Charles Wilkes of the U. S. N., together with Explorations and Discoveries made by Admiral D'Urville, Capt. Ross and other Navigations and Travelers, and an account of the Expedition to the Dead Sea under Lieut. Lynch, with numerous illustrations.

LIFE OF JOHN C. CALHOUN.

LIFE OF JAMES K. POLK, with a history of his Administration.

THE HEROINES OF HISTORY.

HEROINES OF THE CRUSADES.

PANORAMA OF NATIONS.

THE GREAT CITIES OF THE WORLD.

LIVES OF JOHN AND CHARLES WESLEY.

WILLIS'S WORKS—seven volumes.

THE MIRROR OF THE SOUL.

FARM AND FIRESIDE.

RURAL HOMES, &c. &c.

For the sale of the above and many other works, which are all very valuable and popular, we desire to establish an agency in every county and parish in the South; and therefore offer unparalleled inducements to country dealers, agents and peddlers.

A Catalogue of all our publications furnished on application, post paid, to

BURNETT & BOSTWICK, Publishers,
may 27 6m 15 Camp street, New Orleans.

THE BRITISH QUARTERLIES,

AND

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.

LEONARD SCOTT & CO., No. 34 Gold street, New York, continue to publish the following British Periodicals, viz:
THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW, (Conservative.)
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW, (Whig.)
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW, (Free Church.)
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW, (Liberal.)

AND

BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE, (Tory.)

—TERMS—

For any one of the four Reviews.....$3 00 per annum
For any two " " ..... 5 00 "
For any three " " ..... 7 00 "
For all four of the Reviews, ... 8 00 "
For Blackwood's Magazine, ... 3 00 "
For Blackwood and the three Reviews, 9-00 "
For Blackwood and the four Reviews, 10 00 "

Payments to be made, in all cases, in advance. Money current in the State where issued will be received at par. Address, post paid, LEONARD SCOTT & CO.,
79 Fulton st., New York. Entrance 54 Gold st.
☞ Postage on Blackwood and the four Reviews, 72 cents a year. (Nov13-1y.)

ENERGETIC BUSINESS MEN

CAN find profitable employment in selling

GEORGACHI'S LAST GREAT WORK,

A HISTORY OF ALL NATIONS,

From the earliest period to the present time, or

UNIVERSAL HISTORY,

IN WHICH THE

History of every Nation, Ancient and Modern,

is separately given. By S. O. GOODRICH, Consul to Paris, author of "Peter Parley's Tales," &c. 1207 royal octavo pages, illustrated by 70 maps and 700 engravings, bound in morocco.

☞ The work is not for sale in Book-Stores, but is sold only by Canvassing Agents, to whom the exclusive right of sale in their territory is given by the publishers.

Twelve Thousand Copies already Sold

by our Agents. Canvassers who obtain but one subscriber per day make good wages.

☞ An active, energetic Agent wanted in every unoccupied county in the United States and Canadas For full particulars, &c., address

MILLER, ORTON & MULLIGAN,
Publishers, Auburn, N. Y.

LA GRANGE COLLEGE.

The next term of this Institution will commence on WEDNESDAY, JULY 19.

FACULTY:

R. H. RICE, D. D., President and Professor of Mental and Moral Science and Belles Lettres.
O. F. CASEY, A. M., Professor of Ancient Languages.
S. P. RICE, A. M., Professor of Pure Mathematics.
Rev. R. B. ROSS, A. M., Prof. of Mixed Mathematics.
THOS. P. HATCH, A. B., Professor of Natural Science.
THOS. SMITH, A. B., Principal of Preparatory Department.

EXPENSES:

Tuition per term of five months.....$25 00
Board (washing included)..... 50 00
Room rent and servant's hire..... 3 00
Chemical fee (senior year)..... 5 00

In the Department of Mathematics, Professor RICE will give instructions in Practical Engineering, without extra charge.

Important additions have recently been made to the Laboratory and the means of illustrating the different Departments of Natural History, and in all departments of the College, no pains will be spared to provide the best facilities for a thorough and practical education. The plan of endowment has been favorably received, and we confidently expect its speedy accomplishment.

The foundations of a new and large college building will soon be laid, and we intend to make LaGrange College, in every respect, inferior to no institution in the West. THOS. P. HATCH, my20'2m Secretary of the Faculty.

Education.

A young man who will graduate at Randolph, Macon College, Virginia, next June, would like to enter upon the pleasant task of instructing youth, as soon thereafter as possible. He intends making teaching a lifetime business, hence Trustees of Academies would do well to procure his services, as they can be permanently secured by a first rate salary. He intends doing his duty in his profession, and will be satisfied with nothing short of good pay for his services. Certificates of character and scholarship will be sent to those desiring to procure a teacher, which cannot fail to give satisfaction. Terms and location, including its salubrity and condition of society, must accompany all communications to J. P. D., Randolph, Macon College P. O., Virginia. ep22 2m*

Dr. J. T. Kennon,

Castilian Spring,
Holmes County, Mississippi,

Is now prepared to offer good accommodations to invalids who may desire to visit Castilian Spring, or place themselves under his care for treatment. This is one of the most desirable retreats for invalids in the South, located in an elevated healthy region of country, with abundance of fine Freestone water. The mineral water is composed very strongly of Iron, Sulphur, Magnesia and Soda, and contains largely of Carbonic Acid Gas.

The diseases which it has cured are Dyspepsia, Dropsy, General Debility, Affections of the Kidneys, Bladder, and the various functional and organic derangements of the Womb. This water is especially efficacious in Diseases of Females.

Board, per week—$7.

Reference—Ministers of Miss. Conference.
Rev. J. D. Walker, } New Orleans.
Rev. H. N. McTyeire, }

march 4 6m

JEFFERSON BOOK STORE.

W. FLEMMING, BOOLSELLER and STATIONER, corner of Jackson and Tchoupitoulas streets, Fourth District, New Orleans, would respectfully call the attention of Country Merchants, Colleges, Academies, Public Schools, etc., to my

LARGE STOCK OF SCHOOL BOOKS,
Consisting in part of—

SPELLING BOOKS, READING BOOKS, DICTIONARIES, Grammars, Rhetoric, Composition, Chemistry, Botany, Mineralogy, Geology, Natural History, Astronomy, Drawing, Book-keeping, Geography, Biography, Natural Philosophy, Elocution, Logic, History, Arithmetic, History, Geometry, Surveying, Mensuration, French Grammars, Dictionaries, Readers, etc.

SPANISH, GERMAN AND ITALIAN GRAMMARS, Dictionaries, Readers, etc.

GREEK AND LATIN BOOKS of all descriptions.

MISCELLANEOUS AND STANDARD WORKS; RELIGIOUS AND THEOLOGICAL WORKS, all denominations, which I offer to sell at much lower prices than heretofore sold in the South.

FANCY EMBOSSED NOTE PAPER AND ENVELOPES;

LETTER, CAP AND RECORD PAPER, of all qualities. Ruled and Plain.

BLANK BOOKS, of all descriptions and sizes;

CHEAP PUBLICATIONS, MAGAZINES AND NEWSPAPERS;

CHRISTMAN AND NEW YEAR'S PRESENTS;

ANNUALS for 1854, of all descriptions and styles of binding;

ALBUMS, FANCY PORTFOLIOS, WORK-BOXES, WRITING DESKS, PORT MONNAIES, CARD CASES, MUSIC, etc.

For sale, on reasonable terms, by

WILLIAM FLEMING,
feb25 1y Bookseller and Stationer.
☞ All orders promptly attended to.

OCEAN SPRINGS.

The undersigned, having been appointed as agent for the sale of lots at Ocean Springs, Miss., under the authority of the proprietors of the place, had the whole property resurveyed and a map made upon a large scale; also, lithographs plans in pamphlet form, for distribution to persons wishing to purchase. The two will enable any one to see the location and qualities of any particular lot, or they will be shown them on the spot, either by one of the owners, or the subscriber.

The advantages of this watering place cannot be known, or fully appreciated, except by a visit to the place, and this is respectfully solicited from all those having any idea of locating on the Lake shore. The land on the Bay consists of the finest bluffs, with large live oak trees, between here and Mobile; some twenty or twenty-five feet above the level of thelake, with ravines between each bluff, and which serve as a drain to them and to all the land in the rear back to old Fort Bayou, upon which the two springs are situated, say about three-quarters of a mile from the Bay. The whole of the land between the Bay and the Bayou is better drained than any other place upon the Lake. The soil is good, and produces (with little aid, and which is at hand in the bottoms) excellent corn and vegetables. The absence of sand, so common at the watering places, affords a fine opportunity for good drives.

The Bay affords the best opportunity for sailing with safety, of any place upon the coast. Abundance of fish and oysters can be obtained at all times, and in the winter, duckain any quantity. The bathing is also very superior. The superior virtues of the two springs (sulphur and chalybeate) have not only been proven by the analysis of some of our first chemists, but their medicinal qualities have been fully demonstrated in the cure of several well-known citizens of this and other States.

A hotel of the first class will be kept open summer and winter, and in addition to which an infirmary will be established from the first of May next, near the springs, under the management of two of the most respectable physicians of this city.

Persons wishing to purchase any of this property are invited to call on the undersigned and inspect the large plan and lithographs and for full particulars.

J. G. PIERSON, Real Estate Broker,
mh11 6m 7 Commercial Place.

WHOLESALE DRY GOODS TRADE.

SPRING IMPORTATIONS, 1854.

JOSEPH H. PALMER & CO. have in store and are receiving regularly from the European and American markets their usual supplies of seasonable Goods, viz:

PRINTED GOODS, comprising Calicoes of various styles and qualities; Lawns, Jaconets, Organdies, Barages, &c.

LINEN GOODS—Irish Linens of every grade, Linen

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Publishing Committee Louisiana Conference, { J. C. KEENER, L. PARKER, J. B. WALKER.

H. N. McTYEIRE, EDITOR.

J. HAMILTON, D. D., T. W. DORMAN, W. MURRAH. } Publishing Committee Alabama Conference.

VOL. IV. NO. 22. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, JULY 1, 1854. WHOLE NO. 178.

From the Nashville Christian Advocate.

TRACT SOCIETY OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

MR. EDITOR—As the Report on the Tract Society, adopted by the late General Conference, provides for the immediate organization of this institution in the city of Nashville, I forward you for publication, without delay, the Report, embracing the Constitution of the Society. Editors of other Church papers will please copy it into their columns.

THOS. O. SUMMERS.

Charleston, June 6, 1854.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE TRACT SOCIETY.

The Committee, to whom was referred a resolution of inquiry concerning the organization of a Tract Society in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, report:

They consider it necessary that judicious and systematic measures be speedily adopted, and vigorously prosecuted, to secure the more general diffusion of the Books, Tracts, and Periodicals of the Church—they believe that this end will be subserved by the organization of a Tract Society, to be located at the place at which the Book Concern is to be established, with auxiliaries in each annual conference, and sub-auxiliaries in every pastoral charge. They accordingly recommend to the General Conference the adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolved, 1. That Bishop Soule, E. Wadsworth, and M. M. Henkle, be authorized and empowered, as a committee on behalf of the General Conference, to organize, in the city of Nashville, in the month of June next, or as soon thereafter as they may find convenient, a Tract Society, under the provisions of the following constitution:

CONSTITUTION OF THE TRACT SOCIETY OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

Article I. This association shall be called The Tract Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Art. II. Its object shall be the diffusion of religious knowledge, by the circulation of the publications of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Art. III. Any person paying to this Society one dollar per annum, shall be a member; and the payment of twenty dollars, at one time, shall constitute a member for life; and the payment of fifty dollars at one time, shall constitute a director for life.

Art. IV. Life-members and Life-directors shall be entitled to receive Tracts, at any one time, to the amount of one-half the sum paid by them.

Art. V. The annual meetings of the Society shall be held at such time and place as the Board of Managers shall determine.

Art. VI. The officers of the Society shall be a President, Vice Presidents, a Corresponding Secretary, a Recording Secretary, a Treasurer, and nine Directors; all of whom shall constitute a Board of Managers, any five of whom shall be a quorum to do business.

Art. VII. The Senior Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, shall be President of the Society, and the other Bishops, Vice Presidents. Each Annual Conference may elect a Vice President, and the Society shall elect one at each annual meeting. The Book Editor shall be the Corresponding Secretary, and the other officers shall be elected by the Society at each annual meeting.

Art. VIII. The funds of this Society shall be expended under the direction of the Board of Managers, in payment of the necessary expenses of the organization, and in the promotion of its general objects. In all cases of gratuitous aid, Books and Tracts shall be given instead of money, unless the latter is strictly necessary to the accomplishment of a constitutional object.

Art. IX. The Board of Managers shall have power to enact their own by-laws, to fill vacancies in the Board, occurring during the year, to provide for the publication of Tracts, to make appeals to the Church in behalf of the objects of the Society, to raise and disburse funds, to employ colportours, and to establish Committees of Finance and Appropriations.

Art. X. Each Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, may form a Conference Tract Society, auxiliary to this, with power to adopt such measures as, in the judgment of said Conference, are best fitted to promote the objects of this Society, and to form sub-auxiliaries in its several circuits and stations. The Presidents of the Conference Auxiliaries shall be Vice Presidents of this Society.

Art. XI. This Constitution shall not be altered, except by the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Resolved, 2. That the General Conference recommend to all the Annual Conferences the formation of Conference Auxiliary Societies, under the provisions of the following constitution:

CONSTITUTION OF THE TRACT SOCIETY OF THE ——— CONFERENCE, OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

Art. I. This Society shall be known as "The Tract Society of the ——— Conference."

Art. II. It shall be auxiliary to the Tract Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, whose purpose it shall promote, by aiding its funds, and by colportage or otherwise circulating the publications which receive its sanction.

Art. III. Any person may become a member of this Society by the payment of —— per annum, or a member for life by the payment of —— at any one time. Life-members shall be entitled to receive Tracts, at any one time, to the amount of one-half the sum paid by them.

Art. IV. The business of the Society shall be conducted by a President, Vice President, Secretary, Treasurer, and twelve Directors—ministers and laymen—who shall constitute a Board of Managers, any five of whom shall be a quorum.

Art. V. The Board shall meet on the —— day of the session of the conference, to fix the time and place, and to make other arrangements for the annual meeting of the Society.

Art. VI. At the annual meeting of the Society, the Annual Report of the Secretary shall be submitted, also that of the Treasurer, duly certified; annual subscriptions shall be renewed, and officers elected for the ensuing year.

Art. VII. This Constitution shall not be altered but by a majority of the Society present and voting on the proposed alteration.

Resolved, 3. That the General Conference recommend to all the Quarterly Conferences in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, the formation of Tract Societies, auxiliary to the Tract Society of the Annual Conference within whose bounds they may be located, under the provisions of the following constitution:

CONSTITUTION OF THE TRACT SOCIETY OF THE QUARTERLY CONFERENCE OF ———.

Article I. This Society shall be known as "The Tract Society of the Quarterly Conference of ———."

Art. II. It shall be auxiliary to the Tract Society of the ——— Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, whose purposes it shall promote, by aiding its funds, and by circulating the publications which receive the sanction of the Tract Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Art. III. Any person may become a member of this Society by the payment of any amount in aid of its funds.

Art. IV. The business of the Society shall be conducted by a President, Vice President, Secretary, Treasurer, and five Directors, who shall constitute a Board of Managers, four of whom shall be a quorum.

Art. V. The annual meeting of the Society shall be held at such time and place as the Board of Managers shall designate. At this meeting the Secretary shall present the Annual Report of the proceedings of the Society, and the Treasurer shall report the condition of the treasury. Abstracts of these reports shall be forwarded to the Tract Society of the Annual Conference, to which this Society is auxiliary.

Art. VI. This Constitution shall not be altered but by a majority of the members of the Society present and voting on the subject, at any annual or special meeting of the Society.

Resolved, 4. That the General Conference recommend to all the ministers and members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to do all they can to carry out, with promptitude and vigor, the provisions of the foregoing resolutions.

Respectfully submitted,

THOS. O. SUMMERS, Ch'n.

Columbus, Ga., May 27, 1854.

The following paper was presented, read, and laid on the table at the late General Conference, and afterwards taken up, and ordered to be published in the Church papers:

SYSTEM OF COLPORTAGE

Recommended to the Annual Conferences for a more thorough supply of our people with Books.

1. There shall be a Standing Book distributing Committee instituted in each Annual Conference, who shall confer with the Presiding Elders as to the wants of the several districts, and the kind of books necessary to supply each district, and report the same to the conference.

2. The Book-distributing Committee shall have authority, with the consent of the Bishop, to employ the requisite number of Colportours for each district (or districts combined together as a field of labor) from among the effective or superannuated ministers, local preachers, or pious laymen recommended by the Quarterly Conference as proper persons for this work.

3. The Committee shall then order from the Depository with which the Conference is connected, or from the General Book Concern, at certain points within each district, such a supply of books as they judge necessary, subject to the use of the Colporteurs appointed to that field of labor; and at the ensuing session of the Annual Conference, the Colporteurs shall report to the Committee the amount sold, and pay over to them the proceeds; also the amount of books gratuitously distributed, under such limits and restrictions as the Committee shall institute. If any of the books on hand are not saleable, the Committee shall order them to such points within the bounds of the Conference as may need them, or return them uninjured to the Depository, according to the arrangements they may make with the Agent.

4. The Committee shall have power, under the direction of the Annual Conference, to make arrangements with the American Bible Society for a supply of Bibles and Testaments, for sale and gratuitous distribution, and with our Agents, for a supply of Tracts and other cheap works, to meet the wants of the necessitous in each particular district.

5. Collections may be taken up in every part of the work, when, in the judgment of an Annual Conference, it is necessary for the support of the Colporteur system, to be paid over to the Book-distributing Committee, out of which, with the profits arising from the sale of books, they shall pay the Colporteurs for their services, and the surplus shall go to secure the Conference against any loss that may arise from damages sustained, and for books gratuitously distributed.

6. The Colporteurs shall be subject in their operations to the advice and direction of the Book-distributing Committee, who shall have the entire control of the whole system of Colportage under our economy. The Colporteurs shall report quarterly a full account of their transactions to a Quarterly Conference designated by the Presiding Elders superintending the district within whose bounds they labor. Provided, that nothing herein contained shall be so understood as to interfere or prevent any of our preachers from purchasing and selling books as heretofore.

ABSTRACT OF THE REPORTS Adopted by General Conference of 1854.

In the published proceedings these Reports were referred to by number and title, and the action taken on them stated. Some of them will be incorporated into the Discipline, and our readers will soon have them in that permanent form. Others will not. Without giving the whole of each report—containing much of merely local interest, or that has been already published in our columns—we give an abstract of the material acts and alterations. [ED.

From Report No. 2 of Committee on Episcopacy.

The Committee judge that the Indian Missions may be greatly benefitted by such Episcopal visitations as will allow the Bishop attending the Indian Mission Conference time to visit the most prominent points in that work; and preach among them from place to place before each annual session—which work itself would require the labor of one Bishop at least one month at each visitation.

We are of opinion that it is very desirable, and perhaps in some cases necessary to the success and perpetuity of some of our colored missions, that they have at least an occasional Episcopal visit. And although it may be true, that unless the number of Bishops is greatly increased, they can not be expected to visit all the Missions to the people of color, nor, in fact, any one of them very frequently, yet we believe there are times and places at which such visits are vastly important to the interests of these Missions; and perhaps, in some cases, to their very existence and perpetuity.

We think, moreover, that it is highly important to the interests of the Church, that our Bishops should visit and preach in many places among our people, remote from our towns and cities not heretofore visited, and where their labors would be highly prized, and where sometimes local preachers are to be found holding certificates of election to orders, but who, except for such visitations, might never be ordained.

Report No. 4 of same Committee, regulating Episcopal Decisions.

The Committee on Episcopacy recommend that the Discipline be so changed on page 38, that answer 7 to question 3d shall read as follows:—They shall decide all questions of law coming before them in the regular business of an Annual Conference, and may require such questions to be presented in writing, and on the order of the conference such questions and the decisions of the Bishop shall be recorded on the journal of the conference. When the Bishop shall have decided a question of law, the conference shall have the right to determine how far the law, thus decided or interpreted, is applicable to the case then pending. An Annual Conference shall have a right to appeal from such decision to the college of Bishops, whose decision in such cases shall be final. And no Episcopal decision shall be antheritative except in the case pending, nor shall any such be published until it shall have been approved by the college of Bishops. And each Bishop shall report in writing to the Episcopal college, at an annual meeting to be held by them, such decisions as he has made, subsequently to the last preceding meeting; and all such decisions, when approved by the college of Bishops, shall be either recorded in a permanent form, or published in such manner as the Bishops shall agree to adopt; and when so approved, and recorded or published, they shall be authoritative interpretations or constructions of the law.

Also, so to amend answer 6 to question 1st on page 40 of the Discipline, as to require a presiding elder to decide all questions of law which may come up in the regular business of the quarterly conference when submitted to him in writing; and all such questions, with the decisions of the presiding elder thereon, shall be recorded on the journal of the conference.

Lost Report of same Committee, No. 7, on Appropriations for Support of Bishops.

Resolved, 1. That the fiscal year of the Bishops shall commence on the first day of June; and they are hereby authorized to draw on the Book Agents quarterly, in advance, for the amounts hereinafter provided for.

2. That the Bishops are requested to keep an account of their traveling expenses, drawing on the Book Agents for payment. The arrearages now due Bishops Capers and Paine, on account of excess of traveling expenses over the appropriations of the last four years, are hereby ordered to be paid.

3. That the appropriations for the support of the Bishops, annually, for the ensuing four years, and covering every thing except traveling expenses, shall be as follows:

Bishop Soule	$1000
Andrew	1400
Capers	1450
Paine	1400
Pierce	1450
Early	1300
Kavanaugh	1000
Mrs. Bascom	600

4. That in order to conform the language of the Book of Discipline to the foregoing method of supporting the Bishops, the answer to question 3d of section 5 of the 2d part, be stricken out, and the following inserted, viz:

"Ans. The allowances of the Bishops shall be estimated at each General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, by the Committee on Episcopacy, the aggregate to be drawn in quarterly instalments in advance from the Book Agents, beginning with June 1st of each year. The traveling expenses of the Bishops shall also be paid by the Book Agents aforesaid, upon the presentation of their accounts."

From Report No. 3 of Committee on Books and Periodicals on various subjects.

Report of the Book Agent—that we find the Concern to be in a healthy condition—the accounts being correct, so far as we can judge. We require our Agents in future to be very explicit in their exhibits of salaries and expenses, as well as assets and liabilities.

The Quarterly Review. We recommend that the Conference authorize the Agents to furnish the editor of the Quarterly Review the necessary facilities for conducting that Journal.

Terms on which the Advocates should be published. We think it inexpedient for the General Conference to fix the terms of our Advocates, and that this matter should be left to the judgment of the Agents or Publishing Committees.

Regulating the question and claims of Back Dividends.

Whereas, in the settlement of the Property question at New York, the sum decreed in favor of the South was so aggregated by the Court as to make it extremely difficult now to determine what exact proportion thereof should be considered as "Dividends;" and whereas a large amount of the claim of the claimants upon this fund, considered in strict equity, has been met by the increased liberality of the Church, therefore, in order that justice may be done every where in the administration of the money received, be it resolved—

(1.) That each Annual Conference, at the next ensuing session (should any claims be presented,) shall take measures to ascertain precisely, or as nearly as possible, what difference exists, if any, between the per cent. paid such beneficiary claimants before and since the division of the Church.

(2.) If upon examination the result shall show that there has been no diminution, then shall it be considered that no claims remain to be satisfied. But if it shall appear that the per cent. upon the claims presented, as paid to these beneficiaries, has been to any extent lessened from what it was before the division of the Church, and from what it probably would have been if no such division had taken place, then shall the amount of difference be recognized in favor of such claimants, and be paid to them out of the money recovered in the suit, if applied for, at the sessions of the Annual Conferences next succeeding the present General Conference.

(3.) The amount, according to the foregoing rule of calculation, being so ascertained and graduated to the number of actual living claimants presenting their claims, may be drawn for upon the Book Agents by order of Conference—the Bishop and Secretary signing the drafts.

On sectional papers asking aid.

We recommend the following resolutions, viz:

Resolved, That the Agents be authorized to afford, for the several periodicals asking relief of this General Conference, the following loans to the Publishing Committees of said periodicals, for their establishment and support; provided that the said loans shall be returned, from time to time, to the Agents, in profits from the publication of said periodicals, to wit:

To the Publishing Committee of the periodical at St. Louis,	$5000
To the Publishing Committee of the periodical at Knoxville,	$5000
To the Publishing Committee of the periodical at Galveston,	$5000
To the Publishing Committee hereafter to be appointed by the Pacific Conference, for a periodical to be published within its bounds,	$5000

Resolved, That the Book Agents be instructed to procure the New Orleans Christian Advocate and the Memphis and Arkansas Christian Advocate from their present publishers, and make them the property and establish them under the control of this General Conference; provided that not more than $6000 be expended for the former and $5000 for the latter.

On the Vanhouten Will—From Report No. 5 of same Committee.

We have considered the subject of C. Vanhouten's Will, referred to us, and recommend the following, viz:

Resolved, That the Rev. Richard Abbey and Rev. Levi Pearce, or either of them, be, and are hereby appointed the lawful agents and attorneys of this General Conference, to take all necessary steps to secure and receive all money or other property that may be coming to the General Conference, or in any way to be used for the benefit of the M. E. Church, South. And that they, or either of them, receiving any money under the Will of Bro. Cornelius Vanhouten, deceased, shall, after paying all necessary expenses, pay it over, one-half to the Treasurer of the Missionary Society of the M. E. Church, South, and the remaining half to our Book Agents, and report the same to our next General Conference.

From Report No. 1 of the Committee on Boundaries.

The Committee on Boundaries beg leave to recommend, that for all that part of the description of the Boundary of the Kentucky Conference, after the words "in Cincinnati, Ohio," [Dis. p. 154] the following be substituted: "Except that part of the State of Kentucky included in the Western Virginia Conference."

Your committee having carefully considered the petition of the Rev. Joel Saunders and the letter of R. Randle, which recommend the omitting off of an important portion of the Louisiana Conference, beg leave to report that in these recommendations they do not concur.

That in the Boundary of the Virginia Conference (p. 156,) after the words "on the North," the whole be struck out and the following inserted, "by the Allegheny Mountain."

That the Boundaries of the Florida Conference be made to read as follows: (p. 158.)

Florida Conference shall include all that part of the State of Georgia not included in the Georgia Conference, and all of the State of Florida not included in the Alabama Conference.

Your Committee having carefully considered the petition of the Arkansas Conference and of the delegates of the same, for a division of said Conference, do recommend that the Arkansas Conference be divided into two Conferences—the one to be called the Arkansas Conference, and the other the Ouachita Conference, and to be bounded as follows:

Arkansas Conference shall include all the State of Arkansas north of a line commencing at the mouth of White river, and running thence up said river to the mouth of Des Arc Bayou, thence up said Bayou to the mouth of Cypress Bayou, thence up said Bayou to its head, thence down the Palarm Creek to the Arkansas River, thence up said river to the mouth of the Petit Jean, thence along the line between Yell and Perry counties to the southwest corner of Perry, thence in a direct line to the southwest corner of Yell county, and thence due west to the western line of the State.

Ouachita Conference shall include all the State of Arkansas not included in the Arkansas Conference.

The Committee having considered the petition of the East Texas Conference, for a change of the name and boundary of the Texas Conference, recommend, 1. That there be no change in the name of the Texas Conference. 2. That the boundary of the East Texas Conference be so changed as to read, "to the source of the west fork of the same, and thence due north to Red River," instead of the "middle fork of the same," as it now stands.

Pacific Conference shall include the State of California and that part of the Territory of New Mexico west of the Rocky Mountains.

There shall be a Kansas Mission Conference, including the Kansas Territory and that part of the Territory of New Mexico not included in the Pacific Conference.

Report No. 3 of the Committee on Itineracy.

The Committee on Itineracy, to whom was referred the memorial of brethren of the Alabama Conference, asking that the city of Mobile be "exempted from the rule which prohibits the Bishops from continuing ministers more than two years in the same circuit or station;" and also a resolution "instructing them to consider and report on the propriety of altering the rule in reference to stationing preachers so as to allow of their remaining more than two consecutive years in the cities of Galveston, Houston, Indianola, Port Lavaca and Brownsville," beg leave to say that they have given due attention to the representations of those who ask this change; and have weighed the reasons on which it is urged: they have surveyed the subject in its attributes, and in its relations to the purity and perpetuity of an Itinerant system of propagating the Gospel, and as the result of their mature reflections, are convinced that it is impolitic and inexpedient to grant the requests contained in the memorial and resolution above referred to. They, therefore, recommend for adoption the following resolution, as expressive of the sense of the General Conference.

Resolved, That there exists at the present time no sufficient reason for changing the law of the Church as to the appointment of ministers, or the length of time in which they may remain in the same field of labor.

Report No. 5 of same Committee on relation of Local Preachers.

The Committee on Itineracy, to whom was referred the memorial "respecting the relations and duties of Local Preachers, with the view of bringing that branch of our ministry into more effective usefulness," beg leave to state that, in their judgment, the subject of the position, employment and usefulness of the local ministry of the Church is one eminently deserving the devout and deliberate consideration of the General Conference. There is, perhaps, no greater diversity of endowments and acquirements in the local than in the traveling ministry. They are equally under vows to make full proof of their ministry; and are alike bound "to serve God for the promoting of his glory and the edifying of his people." But by the organic laws of the Church, they are placed in positions independent of each other, and in relations to the great work of building up the kingdom of God in the world, if not totally distinct, yet materially different; the one under a law that allows of occasional and partial performance of ministerial functions at their own option as to time and place of service; the other, pledged to a course of labor that allows no choice of place, and demands entire consecration of talents and time to the work of the ministry. These relations to each other, and to the entire duties of the ministry, are established by the laws of the Church; and while it is maintained, that under our ecclesiastical system the subject is within the control of the General Conference; and also, that "the more effective usefulness" of this branch of our ministry is a legitimate subject of legislation, it is, nevertheless, believed that the circumstances under which the essential and fundamental changes asked for in the memorial are brought under the consideration of the General Conference, do not justify at this time a course of legislation contemplating a thorough change in our ecclesiastical polity, and requiring an entire reconstruction of our system of government.

Your Committee do not regard it as their duty to express an opinion as to the merits of the plan submitted to their consideration. They deem it enough to state, that it comes before them signed by only two of the thousands of local ministers within the jurisdiction of the Church; that they have no means of knowing whether it be desired, or would be acceptable to the great body of those for whom, in this particular case, legislation is asked; and they therefore recommend for adoption the following resolution:

Resolved, That while we greatly desire the more effective usefulness of the local ministry of our Church, and are ready by all appropriate means to foster, encourage, and augment their usefulness, we deem it inexpedient to legislate so largely upon the subject; or to attempt, without their consent and cooperation so essential a change in their position and relations.

From Report No. 8 of same Committee on leaving members of the Conference without appointment, by request.

The Committee on Itineracy, to whom was referred a communication of the Bishops calling the attention of the General Conference "to the fact that some of the Annual Conferences are in the habit of asking the Bishops presiding to leave their members without appointments," they also say that notwithstanding their doubts of the lawfulness of such a course of proceeding, they have, nevertheless, yielded to such requests on the part of Annual Conferences, but they are so persuaded of the illegality of such appointments that they feel themselves impelled, by a proper regard for the law and discipline of the Church, and for the sake of uniformity of administration, to suggest to the General Conference the importance of an enactment either declaring or disavowing the legality of the relation to which they call the attention of the General Conference.

Your Committee have given this subject their careful consideration, and are of the opinion that the relation is illegal and ought not to be continued; they therefore recommend for adoption by the General Conference the following resolution:

Resolved, That an Annual Conference has no authority, under the discipline of the Church, to leave an effective member of its body without an appointment at his own request.

Report No. 11 of same Committee on the Journals of Annual Conferences.

The Committee on Itineracy having had the journals of the several Annual Conferences under their careful examination and consideration, beg leave to state that they find many defects and errors in the mode of keeping these records which, in their judgment, ought to be corrected, both for order and uniformity in journalizing, and for the sake of historical accuracy and correctness in these important records of the executive administration of the Church. Among other things herein complained of, they specify the following:

1. They find in the journals of the East Texas Conference for 1851, that certain questions of law were submitted to the President of the Conference; that there is no record of any opinion or decision given by the president; but it is stated that the vote of the Conference was taken upon the points of law submitted to the president; a procedure in the case, in their judgment, entirely discordant with the provisions of the Discipline, defining the duty of a president of an Annual Conference (see Discipline, page 38,) and in the second case an assumption of power, on the part of the Conference, in contravention of law, of dangerous tendency, and highly detrimental to private rights, especially when personal character is involved.

2. They find in the journals of the following Conferences, Pacific and East Texas, that individuals are left "without appointments at their own request"—a mode of disposing of ministers for which there is no law, and which is in conflict with the declared judgments of the General Conference.

3. They find defective records of the ordinations of Deacons and Elders at some of the sessions of the following Conferences: Memphis, Indian Mission, Louisville, St. Louis, Texas, Kentucky, Mississippi, Pacific, Tennessee; and the Alabama Conference reports the ordination of Elders, but not of Deacons.

4. They find no notice of the examination of candidates for Deacon's Orders in the Indian Mission, Louisiana, Holston, St. Louis, and South Carolina Conferences.

5. They find defects in recording Statistics in the following Conferences: Virginia, North Carolina, East Texas, Georgia, Indian Mission, Carolina, East Texas, Georgia, Indian Mission, Mississippi, Pacific, Louisiana, St. Louis, Holston and Alabama.

6. They find omissions to record the regular minute questions and answers in the following Conferences: North Carolina, Memphis, Mississippi, Virginia, Indian Mission, Louisiana, Holston, Texas, Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama and South Carolina.

7. They find omissions to record the Stations of the Preachers in the East Texas, Indian Mission and Holston Conferences.

8. In conclusion, they find and report among many other defects of a less important character, which they omit to specify, the following, which they deem sufficiently reprehensible to bring under the notice of the General Conference in order to their correction.

First. Resolutions referred to as introduced and adopted by the Conference, but which are not only not recorded, but their character even is not stated.

Second. In several cases the Journals, not signed by the Bishop presiding at the session. In one, they are not signed by the Secretary.

Third. The relations of members of Conference are changed and continued without any reference to the former or existing relation of the parties.

Fourth. Matters pertaining to the trial of ministers are expunged from the Journals; and testimony in the case ruled out by a vote of the Conference.

Fifth. In one Conference, the Bishop being compelled to leave sometime before the adjournment, an Elder, not a Presiding Elder, is placed over the Conference as President.

Sixth. In another, no one is mentioned as occupying the chair; no mention of religious services at its opening; and no record of the reading and approval of the minutes of the preceding session.

In all these respects, your Committee find the Journals of the several Annual Conferences defective, indicating great carelessness in the Secretaries, and failure on the part of the Episcopacy to carry out the law of the General Conference of 1850 for the correction of these errors and defects. The matters complained of may, in some of their aspects, be regarded as trivial. But considering them, as we do, as historical records, and estimating their value by their accuracy and completeness, we can not refrain from calling your attention to these defects, and invoking your authority for their correction. In order to the accomplishment of this desirable and important object, we recommend the adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolved 1. That the Bishops be, and they hereby are instructed to see that the Secretaries of the several Annual Conferences enter upon their respective Journals, as fully as may be, answers to each of the questions contained in question 4th, chapter 2d, section iii, pages 31 and 32 of the Discipline; and that they record all such other matters of business as come under the cognizance of Conference, or constitute the regular proceedings of the session.

Resolved 2. That the Annual Conferences be, and they hereby are, instructed to require their respective Secretaries to conform their Journals to the plan indicated in this report, and especially set forth in the first of these resolutions.

Resolved 3. That the Annual Conferences be, and they hereby are, instructed to require their Secretaries to record in their Journals the memoirs of the deceased members of their bodies.

Resolved 4. That the Annual Conferences be, and they hereby are, instructed to require their Secretaries to procure and keep for the use of the Conference, the Journals of the General Conference as they now are, or may be hereafter, published.

Resolved 5. That the Secretary of this General Conference be, and he hereby is, instructed to have this report, with its resolutions, printed in circular form, and supply each of the Bishops with copies of the same, to be by them given to the Secretaries of the several Annual Conferences, for their guidance in keeping their respective Journals.

Respectfully submitted.

From the China Mail, April 6.

Funeral of an American Sailor.

One of the standing opinions about the Japanese, destined to be thrown down by Com. Perry, has been that they were invincibly intolerant of Christianity. Indeed, this has generally been assigned as a main reason for their exclusiveness. To the emblem of the Cross they still object; but the story of the expelled Portuguese, that every Christian landing at Japan was required to trample on it, or on a representation of the Virgin and Saviour, must, if true, have been almost entirely confined to themselves and their co-religionists. More recent writers, who have been able to deny that such is now the custom, tell us the "practice of religious rites is prohibited by irrevocable Japanese laws;" but the following narrative of the funeral of a marine of the United States squadron shows that there is as little foundation for the one statement as for the other:

On the 9th of March, the day following the first meeting between Com. Perry and the Imperial Commissioner from Yedo, to negotiate the terms of a commercial treaty, a soldier's and a Christian burial was given to a marine, Robert Williams, who had died a few days before on board the steamer Mississippi. The party detailed for this purpose consisted of several officers, one of them the Chaplain in his gown, an escort of eight marines in charge of a corporal, and four marines as bearers of the corpse. Two boats left the ship; one containing the officers, and the other the body and escort. Upon reaching the shore the party was met by several Japanese officials, ready to conduct them to the grave. The escort landed first, and received the body with the usual honors. The little procession was then formed; first the escort, followed by the music, drum and fife; next the body borne on the shoulders of four messmates; and then the Chaplain with the other officers, and a few sailors from the boats bringing up the rear. In this order, with the music playing a dead march, the party moved to the grave, winding through the streets of a village, a distance of nearly half a mile. On either side of the road, and on the surrounding hills, at the foot of one of which the grave had been made, thousands of people, men, women and children, could be seen, all manifesting eager curiosity to witness a sight so entirely novel in their land.

I could not but think as we passed along, how strange, not only the procession, but each of us individually, must appear to that eager throng, not one of whom probably had ever before looked upon the face of a stranger from a foreign country; and yet there was no undue noise made, or apparent alarm on the part of any of them; only intense interest in observing what was passing before them. As we neared the grave (which occupied a very pretty spot) the voice of the Chaplain could be heard: "I am the resurrection and the life, saith the Lord; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth in me, shall never die." As we gathered around the grave, and the reading of the beautiful and touching burial services proceeded, the scene was one of unusual interest; for the time and place, and circumstances, all conspired to make it, as an incident, honorable to our short sojourn in a land where, for centuries, it is said, the symbol of our religion has been trodden under foot. The Church burial service being ended, the escort fired three volleys over the grave. I had expected that on this there would have been some commotion among the crowd, but I noticed only at the first discharge, that for a moment there was a slight movement, as of surprise, and then all were again quiet and attentive observers.

Having now committed to the earth, with all due honor, the remains of our deceased shipmate, the procession was reformed, and with music to the front, again passed through the village and the thousands of spectators to our boats on the beach. Here we took leave of the officials, who throughout the entire ceremony had conducted themselves with great propriety, and extended to us every civility, and returned to the ship, pleased with the consciousness of not only having witnessed, but assisted in giving, such honors, in such a place, to a deceased brother. W. B. S.

WEIGHING TOBACCO SMOKE.—A story has been told of a wager, once laid by Sir Walter Raleigh with Queen Elizabeth, that he would determine the exact weight of the smoke that went off in a pipe of tobacco. This he did by weighing the ashes, and the Queen readily granted that what was wanted in prime weight must have evaporated in smoke; and when she paid the wager, she said pleasantly that she had heard of many laborers in the fire who had turned their gold into smoke, but Raleigh was first to turn his smoke into gold.

CUBAN DIFFICULTIES.—The Washington Union, in reference to the statement that our difficulties with the Spanish Government are in a course of settlement, says: "That our difficulties with Spain remain unadjusted, and that all rumors as to any change in the policy of the Administration, are fabulous."

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Christian Advocate.

Terms: $1 50 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:

SATURDAY, JULY 1, 1854.

PLEASE ATTEND.

Accounts are being sent out to all the Agents whose Post-offices have been reported. Those who have not forwarded a list of the Post-offices in their Circuit, will please do so promptly: it will be small trouble to them and much gain to the office.

☞ Remember that the subscription price, at present so low, is due in advance, and not at the end of the year.

☞ We hope the Book Agents will soon be able to make arrangements whereby the Advocate will be issued under highly favorable auspices, enlarged and improved. Meantime we need from our friends active and prompt efforts to collect back subscriptions and increase the list. We need money now: need it much, and will need it every week.

☞ The receipts for several weeks past have not met current expenses. Collect and send forward. Bills current at home are at par. Remit them by mail at our risk.

Health and Weather.—The "oldest inhabitant" has no remembrance of hotter weather than that of four days past. Last summer the weather was pleasant at this date, and—sickly. Now Sirius rages—man and beast and bird pant, and—there is no yellow fever.

Rev. R. L. Stanton, D. D., has resigned his post as President of Oakland College, Miss. His resignation has been accepted with resolutions of high compliment.

Opelousas Railroad.—The Secretary or Directors of this popular and progressing road furnished us with an invitation to a rail-ride, at the opening, some months ago, when the cars made their first trip. Like many regretful disappointed ones on that occasion the note coming through the Post-office, reached us too late to avail ourselves of it. The cars now run to Bayou Des Allemandes, and soon to Thibodaux.

Book Agents.—The Nashville Advocate informs us that

"A meeting of the joint Board of the Agents and Book Committee, was held in this city on Wednesday of last week. Brothers Stevenson and Owen were both present, and seem resolved to address themselves to their work with much zeal and energy. They expect as soon as practicable to erect the necessary buildings, procure machinery and materials, and begin the work of manufacturing books. Some time, however, will be required to get these plans matured, so as fairly to begin the operations of the establishment. Until they shall be ready to enter upon the work of manufacturing, they will continue to supply their customers from the Depositories at Louisville and Richmond, as heretofore. They have also made arrangements with Messrs. McFerrin & Hunter, of Nashville, by which all persons ordering books from this city, may be supplied upon the same terms as at Louisville or Richmond. Messrs. McFerrin & Hunter will keep constantly on hand a supply of the books of the General Catalogue, and will be ready to fill all orders that may be sent to them for the works published by the Agents."

The Agents are not men who will give the Church cause to complain of them; but patience must be exercised. They cannot control the funds and do everything in a day. As to the lot and buildings of the Book Concern at Nashville, it is presumed there will be no delay. Seventy thousand dollars will do it, and hand it over to the Agents, with the keys, and leave their original capital untouched. This will be noble, and becoming our connectional head-quarters. A proper exemplification of liberality there will go out upon the whole church with effect. It is for them to pitch the tune, in finance and literature, in itineracy, and in all the essentials of Methodistic economy.

According to the following extract from an exchange paper, they will do this nobly—even outdo their word by their deed:

"The citizens of Nashville have selected a lot, 90 by 300 feet, right in the heart of the city, upon which they design erecting at once the Book Concern buildings. The whole will, on completion, be presented by the citizens of Nashville to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and will be a gift worth not less than $75,000 to $90,000."

REVIVAL INTELLIGENCE.

Milton, Fla.—Rev. L. P. Golson writes, June 22: In my last I ventured a prediction that there was a better day ahead for Milton. That day is now dawning upon us, through the blessings of God. We have closed a meeting of five weeks' duration, which has resulted in great good to our town.

Perhaps it is due me to state that the long continuance of this meeting was the result of solicitations from the congregation. We often numbered from fifteen to forty mourners at the altar for prayers—many of whom have embraced religion and joined the Church.

Brethren Cottrell, of Pensacola, Thomas, Chaplin of the Navy Yard, Harris, of Warrington, did us good service during the meeting.

Brethren Burts and Hart, Local M., labored successfully. Brother Mitchel (Baptist,) who resides in this place, labored with us faithfully. We believe that much good has been done, and many of our citizens received lasting benefit, and have great reason to praise God for his mercies.

Religious Revival. — The Antaugaville (Ala.,) of the 10th inst. says:

"We have never, in our life, witnessed a more extensive revival than the one which is now going on in our village. Two weeks have now elapsed since its commencement, and in that time about 120 have professed religion!

Columbus, Miss.—We learn that there has been a gracious revival of religion among the Methodists in this place. Rev. J. Hutchison, the pastor, has received many converts into the Church of Christ—about 65 have professed. Brother L. J. Schoolar, who has charge of the colored congregation, is witnessing displays of God's mercy and converting power among his people.

Fayette, Miss. Conf.—We have just closed a meeting of some four weeks' continuance in this place. The meeting has been one of great interest to the Church and the community generally. It was characterised by close attention to the Word of God and deep concern for the salvation of the soul. As many as forty were several times seen at the altar of prayer—there were many conversions to God—fifty in all have been added to the Church.

We are under many obligations to Brothers Capers, now Bros. Mortimore Johnson and Jones for their help in the various services of the sanctuary during the meeting.

J. L. Forsith and G. H. Clinton.

June 20, 1854.

Algiers, La. Conf.—For three weeks a series of religious meetings have been carried on in the little Methodist Chapel at Algiers. The services have been conducted by Rev. Moses U. Payne, Local Preacher, who has labored with success. Congregations have been full, and about twenty-three souls converted and added to the Church.

METHODIST PRESS.

Pewed Churches.—The Editor of the Chicago Advocate attended the dedication of Union Chapel in Cincinnati. He acknowledges Cincinnati the Metropolis of Methodism in the West. The Church has done well there, "but that," says the Editor, "she has of late years failed to exemplify that inherent power of adaptation—that elasticity of her economy, to meet social and popular exigencies, which, while it need not cool her heart of fire (never has) and soul of love, but enlargee her embrace of power, recent contrasts with the success of sister churches in Cincinnati, and other statistics, tend but too plainly to show."

This Union Chapel is the party of "adaptation," and in favor of pews and family sittings. The Conference opposed the principle and left them without a pastor. The matter was brought before the General Conference of 1852, and the congregation sustained. They have a very active and liberal membership, large congregations, Sunday Schools, and an imposing Gothic building. The painted windows are of stained glass, the pews are of solid oak, neatly carved, and all handsomely cushioned, upholstered and carpeted.

The Editor liked things:

But the voice of the General Conference, so far from hereticalizing it, or pronouncing as irregular or anti-Methodistic, the Union chapel movement, sanctioned and legitimized it. At this the Union chapel brethren, though gratified, assumed no air of triumph, but continued on the even tenor of their way, until the amplest success has crowned their efforts. The praise of their perseverance, zeal and liberality, is in the mouths of all their friends, and as for their enemies—enemies of the movement we mean—they are fast living and loving them into friends. Success is dissipating prejudices which were mistook for arguments. The history of the movement is an instructive example in the history of Methodism in the West. Hereafter, Union chapel in Cincinnati will be looked to as the exponent of a progressive, liberal and ethetic Methodism in the West. Neither pews, nor choirs, nor suadry et ceteras, in no wise deemed out of place in the house of God by prospering sister churches, and which, it is deemed by some, are now demanded by changes in our social condition, the increase and improvement in popular intelligence, taste, etc.—the sundry things, we say, which it is deemed no merit or amuletic evidence of primitive Methodistic simplicity to do without, (while the doing with, is a great convenience, as well as an innocent gratification of mind, and of our love of the beautiful and the true,) are not to be ignored, in the congregational services of Union chapel, it would seem. We have, and shall continue, to watch this "Young America" type of Cincinnati Methodism with extraordinary solicitude.

The main interest in the Christian Advocate & Journal is the Editor's engagement with the powers of abolitionism. The Troy Conference originated a substitute for the "general rule" on slavery, which is passing round, concurred in by some Conferences, non-concurred by others. It proposes to exclude from membership all voluntarily holding slaves or buying them, except for emancipation. A prominent member of the Troy Conference communicates to Dr. Bond, plainly that they are weary of waiting on him and and his border brethren:

"With the power in our hands to place ourselves right before the world, the disciplinary sanctions of slavery in the M. E. Church ought not, and can not (innocently) be endured! Six hundred thousand anti-slavery Methodists standing where they would not, and tolerating and consenting to what they abhor, out of respect for a few hundred," etc.

The old hero fights back:

Again, the General Conference of 1828 unanimously decided that they could not exercise any strictly legislative power over the Church; that the General Conference was only authorized to make "rules and regulations" for the carrying into effect the laws of the only Lord and Lawgiver of the Church. They disavowed any right to make laws, either "of moral or civil force." They could neither take from nor add to the legal code enacted, and commanded to be published, by Him who is "head over all things to the Church." But the conditions of Church-fellowship are plainly and explicitly laid down in the Scripture code, and therefore no Church has a right to alter or add to them. To do so would be to renounce the authority of Him to whom all power is given both in heaven and on earth, and to "teach for doctrines the commandments of men." An error which brought upon the Jewish nation the judicial blindness with which they were cursed at the time of our Saviour's advent, and which has produced the same effect in the Romish and some other christian Churches; for the King of saints will not give his glory to another.

The proceedings of the General Conference, South, come to his relief—its action on the Ninth Section, and attempt on the "General Rule:" and in his issue of 15th inst., the case is colored desperately; looks to requisition of Cuba—repeal of law prohibiting African Slave trade—plays into hands of Southern politicians, etc.

Of course, the Editor must show to those he is conserving that there is a middle-ground, and it is large, and he occupies it. New England and her confederates on one extreme—the South construed to the other: between is a distinct platform. Push both ways and make room. He must clear a position, then claim and defend it.

READING FOR THE DOG-DAYS.

This is warm weather, very. Action is exciting, thought is exciting; so writing is, almost. In the three days just gone the thermometer has reached 99, in the shade. We must entertain our readers with something not profound and not dull—and here it is to our hand—the "Bishop's Journal." What Bishop? The "Bishop of Mississippi"! The Church Herald will understand that, and from its columns we take the itinerary.

Friday, May 27, 1853, begins some memorable entries. True, a circuit-rider would count them every-day affairs, but a different character is on the road here. Sixteen miles on horse, "a plantation horse" at that, was excruciating. "Our sufferings is intolerable."

Friday 27—Leaving one of my family quite sick, I set out on my northern and eastern visitation. Next day the horses ran away with the stage, and I was compelled to ride forty-five miles in an open wagon under a hot sun. I got that night within sixteen miles of De Kalb, where I was to preach the next day. Next morning I rode a plantation horse, and reached De Kalb just in time for services. Whilst there, was most kindly entertained by a worthy Methodist lady. I preached both forenoon and at night. The congregations were large and attentive. The services were new—many having heard them for the first time. There is here but one member of our Communion; several others once belonged to us, but from want of Church service, and a thorough knowledge of the Church as a Divine Institution, far above any of the inventions of man, they have joined themselves to the several sects by which they were surrounded, whose teachings and solicitations they found it too hard to resist.* I distributed some books and tracts, with a view of instructing some and interesting others in the Church.

After giving the charitable reader time to digest the latter part of that and draw conclusions as to the type of its Churchmanship and Christian fellowship, we present the foot note, indicated by the *:

*I have frequently been asked, what a member of our Communion should do, when cut off by Providence from the ministrations of the Church, and surrounded by Christian friends of other organizations. My invariable reply has been, "Read your Bible and your Prayer-Book; pray daily and earnestly for the privilege of once more treading the courts of the Lord's house, and then patiently wait God's own good time."

Here's a precious morceau of the "Communion of Saints." What a lucid comment on the relations of "the whole family in heaven and earth"! The fraternal spirit here shown is only equalled by the tender care for hungry souls. "Wait till you can get bread from our hands—what if we can not feed you—wait." The Bishop by "God's own good time" means, of course the Church's own good time—which is long a-coming.

Again; his "divine institution" taken about by the "Bishop of Mississippi," in slow coaches, comes at last to find its work done by the "inventions of man."

May 31—Preached next day in the "Church of the Messiah," and confirmed two persons.

The Church building being yet unfinished, was not consecrated. The congregation is small but intelligent; nor is there hope of its being much larger. The ground seems for the present, preoccupied by the sects.

The "Bishop of Mississippi" puts a strict construction on the text "Beware of Dogs." He is at Hernando:

Wednesday, 6—Preached to a pretty full congregation. Confirmed one person. I was here much annoyed by a dog. People ought not to let their dogs accompany them to the house of God. It is a profanation of the place, as well as a disturbance of the Divine worship. This congregation is at a stand. There is no interest taken in the Church except by the Pastor and his family and one or two other persons.

Moreover, the dog is not a rubrical animal, anyhow.

Such was his statue under the temple dispensation, and the "Bishop of Mississippi" has formally and officially, in his robes and before the Convention, settled the matter. We remember once reading a story about the Scotch Kirk-goers, taking the guardians of their sheep-folds along with them to the Kirk. When the congregation, at a given signal, rose up for the benediction, there was such a lively re-union among the dogs the minister could not be heard. After many frustrations they hit on a plan to cheat the dogs by receiving the benediction sitting!

We may return to this document again, in case the weather remains so trying and the times dull.

COMMENCEMENT NOTICES.

The Annual Examination of the Students in the Centenary Institute will commence on Friday the last day of June, and will continue until the following Wednesday, which is Commencement Day. The Commencement Sermon will be preached on the intervening Sabbath. At the close of the exercises on Wednesday, the 5th July, the Literary Address will be delivered by Wm. A. Chambers, Esq., of Russell county, Alabama.

A. H. Mitchell, Pres't.

Centenary College of Louisiana.

The Annual Examination and Commencement Exercises of this Institution will begin on Monday, 17th, and close on Wednesday, 26th of July.

The Examination of the Preparatory Department will take place on Monday and Tuesday (17th, 18th). Wednesday, Thursday and Friday (19th, 20th, 21st) will be devoted to the Examination of the Regular College Classes.

On Sabbath, 23d, the Rev. Dr. Stanton, President of Oakland College, Miss., will deliver the Commencement Sermon.

The joint Board of Trustees and Visitors will convene on Monday, 24th. Exhibition of the Preparatory School in the evening of the same day, at candle-lighting.

Tuesday, 25th, the Literary Societies will hold their Annual Celebration; at which time they will be addressed by the Hon. C. Roselius. Annual Meeting of the Alumni Association in the afternoon—Orator of the occasion, C. T. Dunn, Esq.

Wednesday, 26th—Commencement; Addresses by the Graduating Class; Baccalaureate Address and Conferring of Degrees.

It is earnestly hoped that the State Visiting Committee, Visiting Committees of the Patronizing Conferences, and the Examining Committee may be punctual in attendance. The friends of learning, and the public generally, are cordially solicited to be present on the occasion.

W. H. Scales,
Sec. of Faculty P. T.

Jackson, La., June 18, 1854.

The Annual Meeting of the Joint Board of Centenary College will be held at Jackson, La., on the 24th of July, 1854.

W. H. Watkins, Sec'y.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

MODERN PREACHING.

The power of the modern pulpit, compared with the primitive and apostolical, is not proportionate to its numerical strength and auxillary forces. The ministry in every subsequent age has outnumbered that of the apostolical by thousands; but its fruits have not been proportionate to this superiority. In every age of Christianity the pulpit has gathered increasing facilities and aids in the performance of its functions. Literature, science and art—all the advancements of civilization, have befriended the Gospel, and placed themselves in the attitude of allies to the chief means of its promulgation. With these aids and facilities, almost unknown in the first preaching of the Gospel, modern preaching has fallen behind in its comparative results. Twelve, or possibly twenty, men there have been in every generation who have been instrumental in the conversion of as many souls as were the same number of apostles and evangelists in the first century of our era. It cannot be shown certainly, but we think it not improbable, that modern preachers may be pointed out who have had as many immediate seals to their ministry as any of the inspired college could count to theirs.

If we confine our parallels to Methodism, Wesley and Whitfield can be considered scarcely inferior to Paul and Peter in the aggregate conversions witnessed by them. Many of our early American preachers would furnish us with similar results. Later evangelists have numbered their thousands. Even now, Caughey is almost weekly adding hundreds to triumphs already swelled beyond tens of thousands. The lesser lights and the comparatively unknown, in hundreds of instances, have almost, if not altogether, reached apostolical success. There are those who come up yearly from their circuit toils, leaving behind them hundreds of epistles to tell the history of their successes. Whilst there are individual examples of apostolical success, it must be admitted, as respects the whole, that modern preaching falls far below the power of the primitive pulpit. We are disposed to admit that the actual results of modern preaching are equal—even greater than in the days of an inspired ministry; and that a larger proportion of labor is now exhausted upon the discipline and conservation of the harvested field, than in the time of St. Paul. But these admissions do not weaken the conclusion. With the present numerical force of the ministry; with the vantage ground which the pioneering of eighteen centuries gives us; with the aids of a mature and wide-deed civilization; and with the cooperation of education and literature, the present should almost infinitely outstrip the march of the primitive pulpit. Its aggression and successes are not proportionate. They may equal, and even exceed, actually; but this is not enough; the excess should bear a just proportion to increased and accumulating facilities; which it does not.

To account for the inferior power of modern preaching, the advantages of an inspired ministry, which the primitive pulpit had, and which the modern has not, have been adduced. This can not fully meet the case. The ministry of the Apostles embraced a wider range of functions than that of subsequent times. The pulpit then was a fountain of revelation, as well as of exposition and persuasion. Besides the Old Testament Scriptures, which were presented on their own Divine authority, the text books of the first preachers were for the most part unwritten, and it pertained to them not only to preach the Gospel, but to complete and systematize its truths. An inspired ministry under these circumstances was a necessity. The period of inspiration seems to have terminated with this necessity—probably with the Apostles themselves. From that time, furnished with a complete, well-authenticated body of revelation, the proper functions of the preacher no longer required plenary inspiration, nor the power of miracles. To the Bible he was to add nothing; he was to take nothing from it. To enforce it upon the faith and acceptance of the world, was the extent of his commission. If the uses and advantages which accrued to the apostolical ministry, from inspiration, were confined to functions, exclusively its own and foreign to the preacher proper an[illegible] times, it follows that the possession of inspiration in the one case, and the absence of it in the other, does not at all account for a comparative and proportionate difference of power. As incumbents of the apostolical office, and as the supplementary channels of an unfinished revelation, the Apostles were inspired in the fullest sense of the term; but that this peculiar inspiration was carried into those pulpit functions which have descended to the present age, remains to be proved. For aught that can be shown to the contrary, the modern pulpit, in its true and guaranteed sphere, is as much inspired as the pulpit proper of St. Paul. The results of the former, in many instances, have been marked with the same power and demonstration that characterized the latter. The pulpit set up in apostolical times was instituted for all time, and the same blessings of spiritual vitality and success belong to it of right in every age. To see it in its true light, it must be eliminated from the incidents of inspiration and apostleship. These have passed away, but that remains intact in its functions and privileges. The elements of its power have been the same in every period of its history. These have never been inspiration nor miracles; but God in his Word and Spirit. The promise of Christ, "Lo I am with you alway," is the pulpit's peculiar benediction of all time; designed for its possession, not less in modern than in primitive times, and all of its triumphs have flowed from this source. If its legitimate function were reached by inspiration of any kind, it must have been the same that affects them now—that moving of the Holy Ghost which constitutes a Divine call to preach the Gospel. This may be regarded as the extent of pulpit inspiration; and this belongs as much to the present as the apostolic age. The modern preacher is as truly called as was St. Paul; and whatever advantage accrue from this source, must attach equally to both.

If this reasoning is inconclusive, we can safely abandon it for another position. If inspiration ever belonged to the pulpit proper in any other than this last sense, and it had been essential to its success, it would not have been withdrawn. The same may be assumed of the continuance of miracles in the Church. They were necessary for certain purposes at the time, but their withdrawal indicates that we can now do quite as well, if not better, without them. The conclusion is warranted by the fact; but its correctness, if our purpose required it, might be shown upon other grounds. The possession of inspiration, then, in one case, and the absence of it in the other, does not account for the proportionate feebleness of modern preaching.

Should it be insisted upon to the contrary, this solution can not possibly come to our assistance in a comparison of the present with the proximate past. Contemporaneous preaching has, on the whole, less vigor and power than the preaching of half and a quarter of a century ago. Here, on the score of inspiration, both stand upon the same ground; and something else must be resorted to in order to account for the difference.

That the different phase of human society, opinion, education, and human nature itself, with which the modern pulpit has to deal, is more against its success than another phase of the same things was against the Apostles or our forefathers, can not safely be assumed. We have a juster appreciation of our own difficulties, but it is not likely that they are greater than those which have surrounded the pulpit in other times. It has always battled against the same errors and opposition in part; and where they have not been the same, the exchange has not been in favor of the past, but rather against it. The cause must be sought in the pulpit itself; in those who are the incumbents of its responsibilities and the stewards of its privileges. The institute itself is diseased—a wasting consumption is at its vitals. Palsy has stricken it in its march. Its life is one of languor—its progress is one of lameness.

Those who have attempted the diagnosis, have located the derangement variously; taken altogether, they have perhaps arrived at a large amount of truth. Literary qualifications, spiritual attainments, and manner of delivery, comprise the fields which these explorers have chiefly canvassed. In the first, the pulpit of the present day has never been excelled. Its literary and educational qualifications are at least as proportionate to the demand as they have ever been. It may sorely feel the want of them, but not more than at any time since the days of the Apostles. The times may demand a ministry of more thorough mental discipline, and of more extensive intellectual resources; but this demand is as nearly such as it has ever been. They who ascribe the comparative inefficiency of the pulpit to ignorance, must be mistaken. The evil of ignorance is not new under the sun; it has existed of old. In the second, we may possibly fall behind; but this is doubtful. We believe there is as much spirituality now in the Church, as at any period of its history. That type of spirituality which makes up the staple of the believer's attainments, is largely possessed by the orthodox ministry. Its subjective power on the inner life will compare favorably with that of other generations. In these things we praise the past just as we eulogize the dead; we deal our strictures upon the present just as we indiscriminately belabor living men. When looked at with impartiality and candor, the dead are no better than the living; the present is just as good as the past; probably something better. In the third, there is a greater difference; but it is extremely problematical whether, after balancing the advantages and disadvantages of extemporaneous and written sermons, we shall find in the result the solution we are seeking. There is a great deal of powerless extemporizing. There are a few who read effectively. It is clear, there may be eminent success in both modes; equally clear that there is a great deal of dullness in both. The charge of comparative feebleness lies more heavily against a reading ministry; but it also lies with fearful weight against the extemporizing. The extemporaneous pulpit is less powerful now. The results of these respective modes are inferior. Whilst this view of the subject does not lessen the superiority of extemporaneous preaching, it shows the modes of preaching do not unravel the difficulty. This is rather a collateral thread, not immediately connected with the warp and woof of our inquiry. Whatever may be the merits of these respective modes, it can not be denied that the success of either is dependant upon qualifications extrinsic of itself. In any view of the subject, the barrenness of the pulpit can not be attributed to want of the extemporaneous element; and if it could be, its absence would remain to be accounted for, which, so far as we can see, leaves the matter precisely where it was before.

Upon the palpable inadequacy of all these we propose a cause which, if no better, is at least more satisfactory to ourselves: the unbelief of the ministry. Its want of objective faith in the divine institution, and special spiritual blessings of the pulpit, and in the cardinal doctrines which it is commissioned to urge upon the belief of the world. Faith in itself and faith in its doctrines, is that essential which lies under and back of every thing else. "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith."

A living ministry, vocal of Gospel truth, is the chief, divinely-appointed instrument of evangelizing the world, and to it inheres so much of special spiritual power as is requisite for the accomplishment of this end. The tendency of these times is to skepticism upon this point. Hence the pulpit, in the estimation of its occupants, has lost its high, independent position, and is ranked only as one amongst other means; its fellowship, if not subordinate, is no more than that of equality. In many instances precedence is given to education, to the distribution of Bible and Tract literature, and to single and exclusive projects of moral reform. Judging from the custom which obtains of filling our Colleges, Schools, and Editorial chairs with the marrow of the ministry, the subordination of the pulpit to these is self-confessed. Not a few ordained preachers practically avow that their usefulness is greater out of the pulpit and pastorate than in them. As things are now tending, the time seems to be approaching when the pulpit shall be degraded from even an equivocal peerage; when its divine identity shall be lost in this human miscellany; and when the ministry, with the simplicity of a Dogberry, shall write Ichabod upon its own stronghold. Whatever may be the value of all other instrumentalities, we hold that they are essentially different from a living, speaking ministry—subordinate to it in the relation of auxiliaries. The Gospel reveals God; the pulpit is the vocal, sympathetic, persuasive revelation of the Gospel. As such, it has a peerless individuality, marked by the divinity of its institution and its own peculiar benediction; an individuality distinctive and eminent from the time of the Apostles to the present period.

In like manner as we have eliminated it from the incidents of inspiration, miracles and apostleship of other times, we must disintegrate it from every thing that is merely auxiliary to it now. The want of this discrimination, and disbelief of the truth which it evolves, has led not unfrequently to the abandonment of the pulpit for other fields of benevolent labor, and caused a partial and divided occupancy, which has marred its character and crippled its efficiency. The ministerial call is determined very much by our views of the pulpit. If the latter has nothing in it pre-eminent and distinctive, the former has just as little. If the pulpit may be lawfully wedded and amalgamated with other institutions, the ministerial vocation is nothing more than a call to the paternity of its hybrid deliverances. Faith in the pulpit as a divine institute would correct these evils, whilst it would arm the preacher with a moral power that would be invincible. It would restrain him to the citadel, and to the artillery which Heaven has mounted upon its bulwarks. It would lead him to attach a definite and present sense to the words of Jesus, "Lo I am with you alway."

Much as we hesitate to express it, we honestly avow the conviction, that there is in the modern ministry a growing relaxation of stringent orthodoxy. The pulpit holds some of the essentials of Christian revelation with a tamer grasp than formerly. It may not be disbelief, but it is a subdued tone not many steps removed from skepticism. In public sentiment, in those currents that ebb and flow around the base of the pulpit, may be heard the murmurs of a startling infidelity. There is a loosening, a gradual giving way from beneath, that threatens a land slide of orthodoxy—a crevasse of its firmest embankments. If our creed is drying up at the root, must it not have commenced drying at the top? Whilst it must be confessed that the majority of Christians act as if a universal atonement and the perdition of ungodly men were figures rather than realities; we are forced to the more humiliating acknowledgment, that the voice of the ministry, in too many instances, indicates that it is giving out the expiring throes of the faith once delivered to the saints. An evangelical charity has, to some extent, degenerated into latitudi[illegible] This, in part, may be the secret [illegible] dut-tenance which characterizes the pulpit to-day. The tolerance which gave to the orthodox the right hand of brotherhood has unconsciously grown into a fellowship of their errors. Whilst we have been [illegible] with heretics, we have been feeding heresy. Whether this is the cause of unbelief, or only in part, is not [illegible] There is an overwenning fastidiousness in denouncing the more severe truths of the pulpit; a morbid delicacy in pressing their logical conclusions, and a sensitiveness in their personal application which is a weakened conviction of their [illegible] Whilst its catechisms and text-books are changed, the pulpit is not without its [illegible] modified theology. There is in it the heart of unbelief in departing from the living God." This is one of the marked distinctions between modern and primitive preaching. The Apostles, and the preachers of a century ago, believed what they preached. There was no giving way upon any point great or small. Around such doctrines as "that Christ died for all, and that all are dead;" "he that believeth shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned," they concentrated all the vigor of their mental and emotional being. They believed them, believed them strongly; and they preached zealously, powerfully. In ministry cultivate a vivid perception, cherish a wide, deep, absorbing conviction the truth of these fundamental doctrines, there will be an earnestness and a decision in their words that few can withstand. These will inspire a zeal before which manuscript sermons will be scattered like chaff before the march of a whirlwind. The [illegible] horsed upon the fiery ardor of a faith like this, will break from the trammels which have so long environed it, and arouse the slumbering world by its fresh and burning utterance.

---

Woodman.

MISSIONARY REPORT.

Dayton Mission—Ala. Conf.

To the Rev. H. N. McTyeire, Assistant Secretary of the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Dear Brother—It becomes my duty to report the state of the Dayton Mission of the Alabama Conference.

The Dayton Mission is, I think, in a healthy condition, although I can not call it very prosperous, yet there is good attendance at the most of my appointments. At two of the appointments where there are Churches or houses prepared for the purpose, I have large congregations, who listen to the Word with great interest.

I got to the Mission the first of January, found all the appointments on my plan, and have kept them up until now with one exception—that the appointment at Col. Crop heads, had been taken by a Baptist preacher. So you see our Baptist friends will have some of the fruit of our labor, though it is among the negroes, yet I thought to myself it would have looked a little better if a friend had got out into the forest and cut and hewed his own timber, especially as there is room in this thickly populated country for all to work.

I now have eleven appointments, at which I preach once in four weeks, but have to preach altogether on the Sabbath, which gives me three appointments every Sunday but one. It is a tax upon my strength, heretofore, by the blessing of God, I have been able to bear. The drawback upon this arrangement is, one can not do his work well when it has to be done in such a hurry. There are 178 members on this Mission; thirteen have joined this year; one has been returned out; three dropped; two have professed to find peace in believing; twenty-one children have been baptized; a great many children are regularly catechised, and the ready manner they answer the questions in the Catechism, show they have not been neglected by my predecessors on the Mission. I look to this department of our work as the more important part, as it is laying the foundation of piety and religion in riper years.

Yes, to the young and rising generation we look for a Church when the present membership shall have passed away.

I have said there has been two conversions on the Mission, and as there was something rather peculiar in the case of one of them, I will state the facts connected with it and leave others to make their own comments: After preaching at Col. DuBose's plantation, I opened the door of the Church for the reception of members, and stated I did not wish any one to join unless they had fully made it up in their minds to make a lifetime business of it. One man came forward, who, as I was informed by the overseer, was one of the worst stutterers in the world, and on my next visit to that place, I held a class meeting. When this man's name was called, he came forward and told his experience without a stutter on his tongue. He got religion in the woods. Sometime before day, his overseer had well nigh whipt him for being absent that morning, before learning the cause. I had been there twice since; he is still rejoicing in hope of the glory of God, and I sincerely trust, is truly a converted man. There are a great many on the Mission that seem to be anxiously seeking religion, and I hope they will shortly find the pearl of great price.

I will conclude by saying I find it a secret pleasure to offer to the negro the benefits of the Gospel of our salvation.

I ask an interest in the prayers of the friends of Missions.

Jesse Ellis.

June 17, 1854.

An Ugly Customer.—A little girl about four years of age, residing in Centre Bridgton, in Maine, having been apparently out of health for some time, and troubled with a bad cough, on Sunday last her mother gave her a lobelia emetic; soon after which she vomited up a black snake! A physician was called, and the child is now doing well. The snake was covered with a scaly substance, was about as large around as a lady's finger, and was eighteen inches in length. It was alive when ejected. How long it had been in the stomach is unknown, but probably was swallowed in water when it was very small, as, for some time past, the health of the child had been wasting away. [Portland State of Maine.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

HYMENEAL:

MARRIED—lly Rev. D. L. Watkins, May 39th, Mr. CHARLES A. WILLIAMS and Miss MARGARET E. CLOWER; all of Bastrop, La.

June 12th, by same, Rev. GEO. W. EVANS, of the Louisiana Conference, and Miss MARY H. CLOWER, of Bastrop, La.

In Black Hawk, Miss., June 21st, by Rev. J. Nicholson, Mr. P. P. JONES and Miss MARY A. BALL: all of Black Hawk.

OBITUARY:

DEATH OF MRS. ANDREW.

It is with extreme sorrow that we record the death of Mrs. LEONORA, the beloved wife of our much afflicted friend, Bishop Andrew. This took place on the 10th inst., at Oxford, the residence of the Bishop. It has made his hearth desolate, and turned his home into a "house of mourning." After several years of infirm health, this excellent lady, fitted by natural endowments and careful cultivation to grace the domestic circle in the highest walks of social life, has been removed to the better society of the heavenly world. We beg the indulgence of our bereaved friend, for making public a few paragraphs from a private letter giving us information of this mournful event. He says: "You will remember my great anxiety to leave Columbus I have rarely spent a more unhappy fortnight; I felt that public duty seemed to call me to remain, while the claims of a sick family, and especially the condition of my beloved wife, feeble and sick as I knew her to be, urged my return. When I reached home, I found her health worse than I anticipated, though she was able to be out of bed. I arrived at home on Saturday morning, and on Wednesday night my brother, H. H. Andrew, died of dysentery after three days' illness. When I returned home from his dying couch I found my beloved wife struggling with the same disease. From the beginning I had but little hope, owing to her long continued prostration. She gradually sunk under the power of disease, until Saturday last. She conversed but little during her sickness, and was frequently rather flighty, as she was incessantly under the influence of powerful opiates; yet frequently a short exclamation would escape her lips, as "bless the Lord oh my soul, and all that is within me bless his holy name!" Once when I spoke to her she said, "yes, I love God, and trust in him, and want to go to him when I die." The last word which she was heard to articulate was, "almost home." My precious Leonora was a desponding, doubting, Christian; never confident, but conscientious in the discharge of her duties. Her piety was quiet and unobtrusive. She loved the house of God and the class room, though but rarely able to visit them for months, in consequence of sore and almost uninterrupted affliction. Indeed she had been for many years the child of affliction. And what more should I say of my loved and lost one, as a wife devoted almost beyond example. Indeed the main study of her life seemed to be to promote my happiness. My society seemed to be almost the light of her existance; hence my long absence fell with agonizing weight upon her. Yet she never whispered one word of hinderance to me. She was kind to all, and especially the poor, who never went empty from her door. Indeed she was always ready to encourage me to every work of benevolence and kindness. In the very difficult and responsible relation of step-mother, I regarded her as a model; her only fault was too much indulgence. Yet she succeeded in governing my young children by the influence of her kindness and gentleness; and I think few step-mothers have ever been more affectionately regarded than she was by my children. As a mistress, she was humane, kind and considerate; and those who witnessed the deeply affected group of her servants who pressed about her dying couch, or about the coffin to catch a last look at the calm and placid countenance of their much loved and honored mistress, would have needed no further comment upon her character in that relation. Her own children and mine have lost one of the best of mothers; but oh, who can estimate my loss? My home is desolate. The future for earth seems dark and cheerless. Yet the Lord hath done it, and I know it is right. My soul is sad, very sad; yet faith points to a city which hath foundations. In my Father's house I know there are many mansions, and in some of those bright mansions, I shall meet the loved ones who have gone before me."—S. C. Advocate.

General Intelligence.

THE ELECTION.—The following is the result of the election held yesterday for the ordinance to subscribe $1,500,000 to the stock of the Pontchartrain and Mobile Railroad:

PRECINCTS	FOR.	AGAINST
First	83	323
Second	106	174
Third	80	340
Fourth	68	304
Fifth	92	324
Sixth	153	344
Seventh	208	275
Eighth	178	157
Ninth	134	65
Tenth	424	25
Eleventh	732	17
Twelfth	422	28
Thirteenth	463	95
Fourteenth	142
Fifteenth	984	12
Sixteenth	468	1
Seventeenth	183	1
Eighteenth	1023	16
Nineteenth	120	18
Twentieth	567	10
Twenty-first	339	1
Twenty-second	53	470
Twenty-third	94	271
Total	7001	3292
Majority	3709

MORTUARY.—The following is the report of interments in the different cemeteries of the city, for the week ending on Sunday, June 25, 6 o'clock, P. M. The Catholic Cemetery No. 1, which reported 8 last week, has made no report this week:

Protestant, Girod street	6	Catholic No. 2	10
Odd Fellows' Rest	3	St. Vincent de Paul	22
Cypress Grove, No. 1	4	Lafayette, 4th District	36
" " 2	10	Hebrew, Lafayette	1
Charity Hospital	14
St. Patrick's	43	Total	170

The number of interments for the three previous weeks were: June 4, 194; 11, 184; 18, 189.

MELANCHOLY OCCURRENCE.—A young man, named Parker Andrews, a clerk in the employ of Messrs. Hall & Rodd of this city, lost his life on Sunday at Bayou des Allemendes, whither he had gone on a pleasure excursion in the Opelousas cars, in company with several of his comrades, by the upsetting of a small boat made in the shape of an Indian canoe, in which himself and a young man named Pitcher were paddling around in the bayou. When the boat capsized, a skiff left the shore and went to the assistance of the young men. Pitcher was rescued, but as Andrews was being taken in the boat he suddenly and most unaccountably sank into the water, and has not since been seen. It is supposed that he was dragged under by an alligator. He was a very estimable young man, about 20 years of age.

PETRIFIED.—An Indian agent named Vaughn, who has traveled extensively in the Northwest, says that in one region of the country north of Utah everything is inclined to petrification. Logs of wood, limbs, vegetables, and once animals, might be seen turning into rock. A tortoise by the shore that would weigh 400 pounds; also birds, fishes, and animals. He has with him several eagle quills, petrified and perfect, also the hand of a human curious specimens of wood and stone.

A GOOD REBUKE.—Theodore Parker, Phillips & Co., of Boston, constituted themselves into what they term a vigilance committee, and passed resolutions recommending the different towns of the Commonwealth to omit the usual celebrations on the 4th of July, and toll the bells in honor of Tony Burns, Esq. They sent one of their circulars to Marblehead, which was returned to them with the following endorsement:

The Selectmen, after a glance at the infamous suggestions contained in the within circular, have deemed it unworthy of notice, and return it to the source from whence it came.

WM. KNIGHT, JOHN ADAMS,
GEO. KNIGHT, SIMON STONE,
BENJAMIN BROWN.

Marblehead, June 14.
Good for Marblehead!

GEN. QUITMAN AND THE FILIBUSTERS.—An article appeared in the Washington Union some days since, in which a friend of Gen. Quitman alluded to the attempt to connect him with the alleged filibustering movements against Cuba. This article has induced Gen. Quitman to send to the Hon. Wiley P. Harris the following significant despatch:

New Orleans, June 14.—Tell the editor of the Union that no man is authorized to speak for me but myself. Publish this.

J. A. QUITMAN.

THE CANADIAN AND UNITED STATES RECIPROCITY TREATY.—Quebec, June 17.—The Quebec papers of to-day give a synopsis of the Elgin treaty, in the settlement of the Fishery question, which has been agreed upon at Washington, the substance of which is as follows:

Article 1st throws open the British American fisheries, excepting those of New Foundland, the mouths of rivers and the salmon, shad and shell fisheries, to American citizens.

Article 2d gives the British a right to American fisheries to the 36th parallel.

Article 3d provides for the free exchange of certain commodities, among which are enumerated flour and all kinds of breadstuffs, cotton, cheese, butter, tallow, lard, all kinds of coals, pitch, tar, turpentine, lumber, rice and manufactured tobacco.

Article 4th throws open the St. Lawrence and the Canadian canals to American vessels, the American Government undertaking to urge the State Governments to admit British vessels to their canals.

Article 5th provides the manner and mode of ratification of treaty.

Article 6th provides for including New Foundland in the rights of the treaty, if she should consent.

A NEW SECTIONAL MOVEMENT.—The Western papers are clearly becoming tired of the eternal distinctions of North and South, so often produced in political debates at Washington and elsewhere, now-a-days. A St. Louis paper asks, in all seriousness, whether it is "not time that the Western States were admitted into the Union?" It claims that the very existence of the great and powerful West is ignored and lost sight of in the sport of these "petty contending factions."

True it is, that the West cares little for the ridiculous disputes concerning the political morality of slaveholding, which are used as levers to move the masses of the people of the more Eastern States. Iowa, Illinois and Indiana laugh at the factious violence of Massachusetts or South Carolina. They have a higher destiny to work out, and have no time to lose, and no inclination to lose it, in indulging childish jealousies such as creep into the political issues of older communities—older, but scarcely stronger.

In the great proviso hubbub of 1847–50, it was the voice of the great West which commanded peace, and it was the example of the central Western States which enforced it.

But the paper we allude to, not content with claiming for its section of the Union a recognition to respect and attention, seeks in ignoble imitation of the vary disputes it condemns, to mark out a strictly Western policy in behalf of which to labor. It exaggerates "the millions lavished on the seaboard" to contrast them with the "paltry Congressional appropriations to the West." It complains of the discontinuance of Western post-offices in the latest schedule from the Postal Department. It charges the Secretary of the Interior with suffering the act of Congress providing for the immediate purchase of Indian titles, to sleep an entire year, without official action. It remarks that the Secretary of State "having made the land ring with his demand for the release of Koszta, has quietly replied to the complaints of Western citizens in like troubles abroad, that he could do nothing for them." And, rising higher in the scale of denunciation, it alleges that the "resident has threatened a veto of the Homestead bill—the only measure of intrinsic importance to the West which had a prospect of a passage through Congress. This impassioned rehearsal of local wrongs is concluded with a hope that the West shall rally to the support of a Western champion, under whose invincible leadership "the present pirate watchwords" of a North and a South shall become obsolete in the land.

The paper from which we quote is the St. Louis Democrat, and the "champion" whom it indicates is of course the redoubtable Thomas H. Benton, of Missouri. Let us see how this new sectional movement will progress. [Albany Argus.

The Portsmouth Journal, under the head of traditionary sketches, publishes the following account of a model jury of the olden time:

"About eighty years ago a man came to his end by a casualty at the Island of Shoals, and a coroner from Portsmouth visited the island to make an inquest. Twelve jurors were summoned from those who were first met with, and directed to sit on the body. They went into the house, and soon some of them returned, and informed the coroner that he would hold but six! They were again instructed and sent in. They reported that he was drowned. They were again sent back for further investigation. In due time they returned with the report that they had notched on one stick all his good deeds they could find, and on another all his bad ones. The latter numbered most, and therefore they gave their verdict that he had gone to the wicked place. One of his good qualities was reported to be, that he could carry a can of flip at arm's length around the island, and not spill a drop."

ATROCIOUS OUTRAGE.—We have just received a visit from Mr. Edward Pepper, a reporter of the N. Y. Times, who details, so far as he can, under the suffering of wounds, the following atrocious outrage: He was in the vicinity of South Ferry, in Stone street, a place inhabited chiefly by Irishmen, when the cry arose among a crowd of them there assembled: "This is one of them!" "A Know Nothing," etc.; and he was knocked down with a loaded whip-handle, and beaten severely in the head and body, and would have been killed if it had not been for the exertions of some fifteen policemen; Officer Sheen suffering also from his close proximity with the victim. The attack was made upon Mr. Pepper because the mob supposed him to be a "Know Nothing," as they said. But the victim did not happen this time to be an American, but an Irish Catholic. We mention this fact to shew that not only was this foreign mob brutal to the last degree, but so blindly furious as to mistake one of their own countrymen for a supposed political opponent.

Several others were also beaten at the same spot during the afternoon. The mob in question watched the ferry for victims during the afternoon, and made assaults only equaled in their violence by their cowardice. Where is the Police that should prevent things? The Police, we are informed, fought well, and even desperately, but surely there could be a prevention for these outrages. This matter is of such fearful significance that it will not be suffered to rest. If Americans are to be murdered for a political creed by foreigners, in their own country, our society is at an end. We must have a thorough reform, and justice as summary as terrible. [N. Y. Tribune.

The Chinese are said to have labored for centuries under great embarrassment for not knowing how to make a barrel. They could make the staves, and set them up and hoop them in; they could make the heads and put one of them in; and, indeed, with the help of a man inside, they could put the second in; but how to get the man out after the barrel was headed up, that was a problem they could not solve.

In China, if a young man is not married by the time he is twenty, he is drummed town. No place for bachelors among the fum."

Later from Mexico.

The steamship Orizaba arrived yesterday morning from Vera Cruz, bringing intelligence from that port to the 22d instant.

The most important item of news contained in the papers is the announcement of the sudden death by cholera of Madame Henriette Sontag, Countess de Rossi, which took place in the city of Mexico on the morning of the 18th. The Vera Cruz papers merely announce the fact, and as we have not received our exchanges from the city of Mexico, we are not able to give the particulars of the demise of this renowned "divinity of song." It appears, however, that the opera of "Lucrezia Borgia" had been announced at the "Oriente" theatre—the audience had assembled, and that at the hour fixed for the curtain to rise the manager appeared and, stating that Madame Sontag had been taken suddenly ill, postponed the performance and closed the theatre. On the following day she died.

Mexico appears to be enjoying tranquility, with the exception of an occasional skirmish in the South between Alvarez and the Government troops. An account is given of one of these "bush-fights" between 300 men on each side, in which it is stated, after fighting two hours, the Government troops were victorious, having killed one of the enemy's men and taken two prisoners, who were immediately shot as traitors.

Santa Anna's birth-day, the 13th inst., was celebrated with immense enthusiasm throughout the country. And his Serene Highness signalized the return of his natal day by a kingly act of kindness—he pardoned all the soldiers in the army who were undergoing punishment for trivial offences, and all deserters.

The locusts have made their appearance in the States of Oajaca and Vera Cruz, and are causing great damage—they appear to be more ruthless in their invasion and less acceptable to the Mexicans than were the Yankees in 1846.

The corner-stone of the monument to be erected to Santa Anna in Cordova was laid on the 13th with great pomp.

Gen. Ampudia has been raised to the dignity of commander in the national order of Guadalupe.

The cholera is raging in Mexico, and on the 12th a grand procession was formed and marched through the streets to a cathedral dedicated to "Our Lady of the Remedies," to implore Heaven for ruin, the scarcity of which is supposed to be the cause of the unhealthy condition of the city.

Texas Items.

We learn from the Clarksville Standard of the 27th ult., that on the 13th ult., Mr. Wm L. Harper was killed by one Jesse C Russell in Hopkins county. A reward of $1,000 is offered for the apprehension and delivery of Russell to the Sheriff of Hopkins county. Said Russell is described as being five feet ten inches high; black hair, inclined to curl; black eyes, heavy black beard; about thirty-three years old; will weigh 165 or 170 pounds; one of his wrists is crooked and he is said to be very quick.—[Galveston Times.

MORE KILLING.—We extract the annexed account of the killing of Milton P. Mize by A. E. Howell, from a letter received from Groce's Retreat, under date of the 10th instant.

"On Monday, the 14th inst., a man of the name of Milton P. Mise was killed by A. E. Howell. They appeared very friendly, until a few minutes before the horrid deed was committed. The only cause of the melancholy difficulty was Liquor. Both of the parties were intoxicated. Howell was acquitted by the Magistrate, on the ground that he was acting in self-defence. [Galveston News.

WEATHER, CROPS, RIVERS, &C.—The weather continues almost insufferably hot, notwithstanding the strong wind, accompanied with rain, with which we were visited a few mornings since. The little breeze which we now have is from the North-East, bringing with it legions of mosquitoes.

At last accounts, the Brazos river was falling slowly. It had been over its banks, in the neighborhood of Washington, but, we suppose, not enough to do any very serious injury to the bottom farms.

The Huntsville item of the 17th inst. has the annexed paragraph:

"We have had such heavy rains in our section of country, lately, that the crops of cotton have suffered considerably. The river continues in good navigable order, and the upper counties are now well supplied with the necessaries of life."

The Houston Morning Star of the 21st inst. says:

"The corn crop in Harris county is very promising. The same can probably be said of most counties in the State."

We clip the following paragraphs from the Austin Times of the 10th inst.:

"We learn that the wheat crops in Williamson county and the counties above, exceed all previous calculations. They have two excellent flour mills in Williamson. We shall have domestic biscuit this year.

"Mr. Hawpe, Sheriff of Dallas county, reports the wheat crop in that section as having turned out good. The greater portion of the harvesting has been completed.

"The crops, coming from Houston by way of Waxeca, Brenham and Matson's, look tolerably well. The cotton is not forward, appearing generally to be a second planting, only a few inches high.

"On the Colorado the corn and cotton crops are looking remarkably fine.

"The late rains have rendered the prospects of a large yield of corn west of the Trinity almost certain.

"Millet is now being raised by many of our farmers. The present crop will be a good one.

"Irish potatoes have done well.

"This will be a good year for farmers, if appearances can be trusted."

The Texas Star, at Gilmer, gives the following account of the weather and farming prospects:

"Of late we have had a great deal of rain, accompanied with fearful winds, which have blown down a great many trees, to the great damage of our farmers. The season is evidently too wet for the farming interest. However, crops look finely upland, yet the bottoms are entirely too wet. We learn that the roads are in a bad condition, being torn up by the rain and obstructed by the fallen timber."

A NEW COLONY IN LIBERIA.—We have seen in some of our exchange papers mention made that the Ohio Colonization Society had bought a tract of land without the limits of the Republic of Liberia for the purpose of forming an "Ohio Colony." The facts, we believe, are these, as we find them in the Cincinnati Christian Advocate:

"Charles McMicken, Esq., of this city, in 1848, offered funds to Mr. Christy for the purchase of lands in Africa for an Ohio colony. To give an additional check to the slave trade, they carried on extensively at Grand Cape Mount and Galinas, it was proposed to make the purchase outside the limits of Liberia, and, if possible, to obtain one or both of these districts. By an additional offer of funds in England, and a smaller sum from Solomon Sturges, Esq., of Putnam, Ohio, the President of Liberia was enabled, in 1850, to purchase and annex to the republic both those regions. Subsequently, the Legislature of Liberia passed a bill authorizing a settlement to be made at Grand Cape Mount, but in consequence of the English offering $10 per head to the chiefs for laborers, to be shipped to the West Indies, a war broke out among the tribes to catch apprentices for Jamaica, and the place could not be settled. The Liberians are unable to make the defences, and erect the houses necessary for the security and comfort of emigrants, and the work must be delayed till the funds for this purpose can be raised in the United States.

PERHAM OUTDONE.—A tailoring firm in New York city advertise that they will give to every patron who purchase goods to the umount of three dollars, a sealed envelope, "containing a ring of some kind, varying in value from 25 cents to $100, which can be opened immediately after the purchase, and the article obtained."

ILL-PAID SERVICES.—A bill for changing the time for the annual meeting of Congress is now under discussion in the United States Senate. It is proposed to commence the long session on the first Monday in October, instead of in December; the professed object being to get through with the business of the session before the Summer months. Mr. Mason objects to the change, and thus states his reasons:

I am utterly unprepared to meet at an earlier day than now fixed by law. I fear that the only effect of it would be to prolong the short session, without at all diminishing the duration of the long session. It is the theory of our Government—and the practice of it—that our labors here at Washington are not to interfere with our private business.

The compensation which is given to members of Congress, as every body knows, can not be increased. I think it would be idle to attempt it. Every body equally knows that what they now receive is not a remuneration for their services. Why, then, I respectfully ask, should we run any risk of prolonging the time of our services here? We all have our occupations, and we are all obliged to abandon them to a very great extent. Certainly, gentlemen who come here from a great distance have to abandon them almost altogether.

I fear, therefore, if we adopt an earlier day for our meeting at the long session, we shall remain here just as long as we should if we met on the first Monday of December; and we know (the practice of both Houses of Congress proves it) that all the business of the session, if we mean by business the legislation—the actual voting—is, either at the long or short session, crowded into the last two or three weeks.

The logic of this is, says the New York Sun, that though members of Congress do not receive sufficient remuneration for their services (?), and though the principal part of the work they perform is crowded into the last two or three weeks; yet members are so prodigal of their time, that they will, if they are allowed the opportunity, waste still more of it upon the country to their own personal loss! We submit, however, that the services of members are paid with profuse liberality; and that a majority do not consider that they are making ruinous sacrifices to a patriotic desire to serve their country, the long sessions are, we think, conclusive evidence. Mr. Mason might earn more money elsewhere, but his case, we fear, is one of the exceptions, not the rule.

The Baltimore Sun of the 16th has the following from its sagacious Washington correspondent "Ion:"

"I learn that one day last week seven hundred Germans, new immigrants, passed through Cincinnati on their way to Kansas. I am credibly informed that this is only one small party out of the many parties now on their way to Kansas and Nebraska, and that all these bodies, numerous in the aggregate, are but the advanced guard of an overwhelming foreign force.

When Col. Mennypenny was in Nebraska last year, he found there but three white men; soon there will be some hundreds of thousands, all anti-slavery men. It is time for the South to acknowledge that they never believed in the Nebraska bill as a benefit; and the North, now allecting to be so much agitated by the repeal of the Missouri Compromise, must acknowledge that the Nebraska bill is a bill for the enlargement of the area of abolitionism. All these settlers are to have the right of suffrage from the start. I have not heard positively who are to be the first governors of the twin territories.

"Many novel and startling events are passing around us, all tending to important results. Among them I notice the organization of a new political party, under Democratic and Whig auspices, which professes, as I learn, for I have not read their "bill of health," to come in upon principles of uncommon purity. Some fifty members of Congress have joined it. Many outsiders, of energy and influence, have become enrolled in it. If it is really a party based on principles of common sense and common honesty, it will deserve success. The country is prepared for such a political party. If, on the other hand, it is a sectional organization, it will perish almost at its birth. I learn, however, that its principles will be announced and its flag unfurled before the lapse of another month.

"The homestead bill will pass the Senate. The anti-Nebraska senators have determined to support it upon the ground that it is an antidote to the slavery clause of the Nebraska bill. It will give the country to free labor. A caucus was held by the Senators on the subject, at which it was agreed to take up the bill on Tuesday, or as soon as the vote on the vetoed Indigent Insane Bill can be taken, and keep it before the Senate till disposed of. Its passage will be forced on Saturday. Then both Houses will be ready to fix upon the third day of July for adjournment."

PATRICK HENRY'S SON.—The youngest son of Patrick Henry died not long ago, poor and alone, in a public house in Floyd county, Virginia. Recently the tavern keeper applied to the overseers of the poor for a special grant to indemnify him for boarding, funeral expenses, etc. This was refused on the ground that retrospective appropriations are unauthorized, and that it would be establishing improper precedent. I called to see the old man some months before he died: his given name was Nathaniel. He said he was young when his father died, but he remembered him perfectly, and was pleased to talk about him. His clothes were clean but not whole. There was evidently a struggle between his pride of ancestry and his present poverty. He has been teaching what is here called an old field school, for amusement, as he insinuated, but from necessity, as I knew. His health failing, he removed to a hotel in Jacksonville, and was kept by the host for a year or more, who presumed that some relatives or friends would defray his expenses. He died with dropsy of the chest, in a few moments after the operation of tapping had been performed by Dr. Stuart.

SEAMEN'S WAGES.—Seamen are becoming more scarce at New York, and much difficulty is now experienced in shipping crews. Several ships for New York have been detained a week or ten days. The wages to Liverpool remain as last quoted, but as high as $50 to $60 advance money has been paid. The Government is now paying $12 per month, with $30 bounty.

WEST POINT CADETS.—West Point, June 17. The annual examination of the United States corps of cadets is expected to close to-day, and the corps will encamp next week. The graduating class numbers forty-six. This class entered the institution four years ago, with one hundred and ten members. This reduction in the numbers of a class during that period is not unusual; indeed, it may be remarked that a greater proportion of the original members of this class graduate than of most classes.

THE CLERK'S WIFE.—A merchant's clerk, of the Rue Hautoville, recently married. His master had a niece of Spanish birth, an orphan. She is not pretty, though very sensible and well informed. At the balls last winter, little or no attention was paid to her; indeed she seemed to attend them rather as a whim than from any inclination or amusement, as she seldom or never danced. But if she did not dance, she noticed much and listened to more. The clerk soon observed that the lady was only invited to dance when no other partner could be obtained. She herself had already noticed the same fact. Being a gallant man, he acted accordingly. The incidents that led to the denouement may be easily devined. In six weeks after his first dance with the fair Spaniard, he obtained her permission to ask her uncle for her hand in marriage. He, astonished, gave his clerk's proposal a very cool reception, and then had a long interview with his niece. Finally, however, all was arranged, and the lovers were married on a Tuesday. The Thursday after, at breakfast, Adeline said to her husband, who exhibited considerable chagrin at being compelled to return to the duties of his office thus early in the honeymoon—

"Very well, don't go there; go there no more!"

"My love, it is very easy to say so, but—"

"Easy to say, and easy to do, both. I have a million and a half. Nobody knows it but my uncle. I always made a point of forgeting it myself, because I wished to choose a really disinterested husband. There need be no more of it, if you do not wish it. Yet is, husband, that you neglect

A SINGULAR PERSONAGE.—"Rhoderick," the Baltimore correspondent of the Washington Star, gives the following account of a very singular personage:

There resides in Baltimore county, not far from our city, a very singular and extraordinary personage, who thus far has passed through life unobtrusively. His history yet remains to be written, and few, if any there is that could do it justice. He has lived the life almost of a hermit, seldom appearing outside the walls of his hermitage, except when special occasions require. There is a marked singularity in his dress, general appearance and manner. Though upon the turning point of fifty, he had remained a bachelor. Humble in his profession—being simply a repairer of clocks—he is proud, and looks down upon those of high rank and wealth with a degree of contempt. He is lord of his own castle, and inhabits it solus—has no friends, no companions, and wants none. He eschews women, considering them a useless expense, and a source of multifarious vexation. Wealth, to his philosophy, is an absorbing evil, and money in any shape, except so far as it contributes to higher enjoyments, mere dross.

This singular person has existed in the same hut, same locality, for many years, and still his nearest neighbors know him not. He spends only so much of his time at physical labor (mending clocks) as will procure a plain, scanty living, and obtain other requisites to mental enjoyment. He visits Baltimore about twelve times a year on foot, and then so arranging in point of time, that his entrance and exit are made in the night. His passion is books and culture. Though in seeming poverty, he has a well selected library of several hundred volumes, containing all the classics, besides other works. His visits to Baltimore are generally of a literary character, always taking home books of a rare quality.

To see him, the beholder would suppose he belonged to the ignorant, unlettered division of human nature. In this, however, the few who were fortunate enough to form his acquaintance, found themselves mistaken. Contrary to all expectations, he proved a scholar of superior finish, versed in the classics thoroughly, and master of Latin, Greek, French, German, Italian, Spanish, Hebrew, and many other languages, all acquired without a tutor. He is also familiar with the various sciences, accomplished in manner, address, etc. He converses freely, fluently, and sensibly, upon the most abstruse and complicated subjects; is well posted in politics, and knows the history of the past and current events accurately. He delights particularly in Oriental literature, and possesses a fund of information thereto. He professes alliance with no religion, and yet observes a code of scrupulous morality.

His best costume is extremely antiquated, parts of it having been in use probably twenty years, and all together, if put up at auction, would not command ten dimes. The casual observer would suppose him a poor mendicant, and feel inclined to extend the hand of charity to yet he is surmised to be comfortable in the world's lore, and proves himself enviably rich in all that appertains to a refined and highly cultivated intellect. His name I do not feel at liberty to mention at present. I have given you the outlines of a reality, which, up to this period, has probably never been thought of beyond the ordinary routine of life. The "Learned Blacksmith," John McDonogh, Peter the Hermit, and Stephen Girard, were not more peculiar than the hero of this brief epistle.

Within the past year he has mastered the the arts of stenography and phonography, and reads and writes them with ease.

REORGANIZATION OF THE NAVY.—We give this morning a highly important bill for the reorganization of the United States Navy, reported in the House of Representatives on Saturday, by Mr. Bocock, the able Chairman of the Naval Committee of that body, an early copy having been placed in our possession. The bill differs in detail, though not in principle, from that reported some time ago by Mr. Mallory in the Senate, and we understand is the result of a conference between the Committees of the two Houses and the Secretary of the Navy, held in the early portion of the session. From the cursory examination which we have been enabled to make, it appears to go very much in detail upon all the subjects connected with a thorough re-organization of the broken down and dilapidated institution.

The principal features of Mr. Bocock's bill are the establishment of a higher grade of officers than captains, namely, "flag officers;" a reduction in the whole number of officers, so as to leave as few idlers in the service as possible; a retired list; a board of reform; increased pay for sea service; stringent rules to prevent as far as possible continued leave of absence; promotion not to be based exclusively upon date of commission, but also upon general qualifications; and provisions for the meritorious discharge of seamen and inducements held out to them to re-enlist. The question of assimilated rank between officers of the navy and army is settled—a Judge Advocate is also provided. It is further provided that there shall be an increase of seamen and marines to the number of three thousand, whose pay is greatly increased, and inducements to good conduct and re-enlistments are made.

We learn that there is no doubt that the House of Representatives will concur in the proposition for a recess which has passed the Senate. The Homestead bill is to be made a party measure in the Senate, and will be passed as soon after the defeat of the Insane Land bill as convenient. There is a host of aspirants to the offices in the two new Territories, but the nominations will doubtless be withheld until certain administration schemes, including the Gadsden treaty, we presume, are quietly arranged. [N. Y. Herald.

LIEBIG.—Mr. Kinney, late Chargé d'Affaires to Turin, writes home from Genoa to his Newark Daily as follows:

"We have had recently an interesting visit from Prof. Liebig, the eminent German naturalist, who fills the Chemical Chair in the University at Munich, and whose works on agricultural chemistry have placed his name among those of the benefactors who have taught mankind how to make two blades grow where but one grew before. He received every practicable attention from our savants and the public authorities At Turin the patriot King did himself the honor to confer upon him the Cross of the Order of St. Maurice and Lazarus, which the Professor, in consideration of the delicate and respectful manner in which it was tendered, did not hesitate to accept; thus conferring upon the royal donor more than he gave—a title to notice in the memoirs of science. While here he expressed a desire to visit the United States, where he knew that his 'labors were fully appreciated,' at least by 'fellow-laborers.' Among these, the name of Professor Mapes, of New-Jersey, was mentioned complimentarily.

"It is worthy of mention, in this connection, that a Chemical Professor at Parma has recently succeeded in producing gas for illumination from various kinds of wool, which is said to be cheaper and purer than any now in use."

AN IMMENSE CYLINDER.—On Friday, at New York, 22 persons sat down to a lunch inside of the cylinder of the steamboat Metropolis, now being finished at the docks of the Novelty Works, for the Fall River Line. This enormous cylinder is 104 inches in diameter, working with 12 feet stroke. It is 13 feet and 8 inches in length, and 34,000 lbs. in weight. A horse and carriage passed through the cylinder several times without difficulty, and it is said it looked large enough for an omnibus to pass through. After the dinner was over 101 men stood in the cylinder without difficulty, and it could have held several more.

MELANCHOLY ACCIDENT.—We are pained to learn that a young son of Col. A. J. Donelson, Jr., of this parish, a lad about ten years of age, met with a serious accident on Wednesday evening last, by having a leg caught in the gearing of a corn mill and most shockingly mutilated, so much so that amputation, in all probability, will have to be resorted to. We sincerely condole with the afflicted parents in the maiming of a son, on whom they had centred bright hopes and anticipations of future usefulness. [Thibodaux Minerva.

The figured heads of the Territory of Florida, stolen, it is alleged, in 1839, by a Col. Armstrong, are turning up at last. Last year one of them was forwarded to Washington, and the fraud having been forgotten there, was paid, with interest, amounting to $2000. Subsequently two more have been sent, and an investigation ensuing, the bonds were found to be of the number stolen, and means are now being taken to recover the amount already paid, and arrest those who have knowingly engaged in perpetrating the cheat.

A BALLOON ACCIDENT IN AUSTRIA.—Mr. Godard, the aeronaut, was sent for to Vienna to make an ascension in honor of the marriage of the Emperor of Austria. On the day appointed for his aerial excursion, the weather was stormy and just at the hour fixed for the departure an absolute tempest of wind broke over the city, and raged so violently that the authorities asked him to postpone his ascension until the next day. Mr. Godard having consulted three gentlemen who were in the car with him, and having obtained their consent, determined not to disappoint the thousands of spectators assembled, and in consequence gave the word to let go. The balloon rose with extraordinary rapidity, and in less than five minutes was out of sight. Then leaving behind it towns, hills, valleys and rivers, it passed over Pressburg and the Carpathian mountains. After being in the air very nearly an hour, Mr. Godard attempted to effect his descent in a wooden island of the Danube; but the wind was so violent that the grappling irons broke away from the ground, and caught in one of the arms of an aged oak. Mr. Godard, however, so contrived matters that he got his three companions to the ground in safety, and then managed to bring down the balloon, though not without its being rent in four places by the branches of the tree. The travelers were then obliged to remain for the night in the car, sheltered to some extent from the severity of the weather. The balloon had passed over 30 French leagues (73 English miles) in 55 minutes. [Galignani's Messenger.

THE ENGLISH AT A TURKISH HAREM.—A correspondent of the London Times, writing from Constantinople under date of May —, says:

Visits to the Sweet Waters of Europe are now at an end, and the fashionables of the Turkish world will soon have to resort to the Sweet Waters of Asia at some distance up the Bosphorus, nearly opposite the Bentek. An amusing scene took place on Friday at the former spot. A gallant English gentleman was determined to address a few words to some fair inmate of the harem. He asked a friend to write down for him some complimentary phrases in the Turkish tongue, such as "You are very pretty," "I love you," and so on. Armed with this document, he visited the Sweet Waters, and, selecting the prettiest face he could find, he leaned in at the carriage window, and proceeded to favor the lady with the contents of the paper, which he drew from his waistcoat pocket. A shrill shriek from the eunuchs betrayed their horror at this audacity. They rushed up and attempted to drag him away. He resisted, and one of the guardians drew his sabre. Our countryman did the same, and the eunuchs fled in dismay. The lady within highly enjoyed the scene, and seemed much pleased at the discomfiture of her tyrants. In fact, the fair creatures are much more independent than of yore; the summary proceedings of former husbands are now impossible; and the ladies have no longer before their eyes the traditional terrors of the sack and the Bosphorus.

A REASONING FOX.—A certain hunter, who was one morning keeping watch in the forest, observed a fox cautiously making his approach towards the stump of an old tree. When sufficiently near, he took a high and determined jump on to the top of it; and, after looking around awhile, hopped to the ground again. After Reynard had repeated this knightly exercise several times, he went his way; but presently he returned to the spot, bearing a pretty large and heavy piece of dry oak in his mouth; and thus burdened, and it would seem for the purpose of testing his vaulting power, he renewed his leaps on to the stump. After a time, however, and when he found that, weighty an he was, he could make the ascent with facility, he desisted from further efforts, dropped the piece of wood from his mouth, and coiling himself upon the top of the stump, remained motionless as if dead. At the approach of evening, an old sow and her progeny, five or six in number, issued from a neighboring thicket, and, pursuing their usual track, passed near the stump in question. Two of her sucklings fell a little behind the rest, and just as they neared his ambush, Reynard, with the rapidity of thought, darted down from his perch upon one of them, and in the twinkling of an eye bore it in triumph on to the fastness he had so providently prepared before-hand. Confounded at the shrieks of her offspring, the old sow returned in fury to the spot, and, until late in the night, made repeatedly desperate attempts to storm the murderer's stronghold; but the fox took the matter very coolly, and devoured the pig under the very nose of its mother; which at length, with the greatest reluctance, and without being able to revenge herself on her crafty adversary, was forced to beat a retreat. [Lloyd's Scandinavian Researches.

UTILITY OF TEA.—In the life of most persons a period arrives when the stomach no longer digests enough of the ordinary elements of food to make up for the natural daily waste of the bodily substance. The size and weight of the body, therefore, begins to diminish more or less perceptibly. At this period tea comes in as a medicine to arrest the waste, to keep the body from wasting away so fast, and thus enable the less energetic powers of digestion still to supply as much as is needed to repair the wear and tear of the solid tissues. No wonder, therefore, that tea should be a favorite, on the one hand, with the poor, whose supply of substantial food is scanty, and, on the other, with the aged and infirm, especially of the feebler sex, whose powers of digestion and whose bodily substances have together begun to fail. Nor is it surprising that the aged female, who has barely enough of weakly income to buy what are called the common necessaries of life, should yet spend a portion of her small gains in purchasing her ounce of tea. She can live quite as well on less common food when she takes her tea along with it; while she feels lighter, at the same time more cheerful, and fitter for her work, because of the indulgence. [Chemistry of Common Life.

A PERILOUS AERONAUTIC FEAT.—The ascent of Mr. Wise in his balloon, from the yard of the Crystal Palace, at New York, on the 9th inst., was very interesting. There was a great gathering on the occasion, of course. The inflation of the balloon took place in the Palace enclosure, outside the edifice, and was watched with much interest by the multitude. Punctually at the hour, the ropes were loosed and Mr. Wise soared away toward the clouds. A brisk western breeze was blowing, and he was borne rapidly toward the east. The remainder of his adventures the Tribune gives in his own words, from which it appears that he had a narrow escape; but he returned to the Palace in due season. The last that we have heard from the balloon was by way of telegraph, saying that it was seen at half-past 4 P. M. off Bridgeport, scudding rapidly eastward. Of course all who saw it believed Mr. Wise to be in it, and fears were expressed that he would be lost in the Sound or carried out to the ocean. But he says that he threw out his grapple, finding the balloon unmanageable, and he made a plunge of at least forty feet into the salt meadow, knocking out one of his teeth and slightly bruising his jaw. The balloon d

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

For the Methodist.—By Bayard Taylor.

I lie in the Summer meadows,
In the meadows all alone,
With the infinite sky above me,
And the sun on his mid-day throne.

The smell of the flowering grasses
Is sweeter than any rose,
And a million happy insects
Sing in the warm repose.

The mother lark that is brooding
Feels the sun on her wings,
And the deeps of the noonday glitter
With swarms of fairy things.

From the billowy green beneath me
To the fathomless blue above,
The creatures of God are happy
In the warmth of their Summer love.

The infinite bliss of Nature
I feel in every vein;
The light and the life of Summer
Blossom in heart and brain.

But darker than any shadow,
By thunder-clouds enferled,
The awful Truth arises,
That Death is in the world!

And the sky may beam as ever,
And never a cloud be curled,
And the sire be living odors;
But Death is in the world!

Out of the deeps of sunshine
The invisible bolt is hurled;
There's Life in the Summer meadows;
But Death is in the world!

[New York Tribune.

Thoughtless Extravagance.

This article, which we take from the Herald, applies to other latitudes besides New York:

We have on several occasions called attention to the rapid, thoughtless and fearful progress which the spirit of personal extravagance is making in this country—we mean more particularly extravagance in dress, living and amusements.

We have confessed our inability to solve the mystery as to where the funds have been found by many individuals whom we know to be at this moment under protest, or recently compromised. A few days ago, happening to visit a fashionable maison des modes up town, the proprietor had occasion to speak of her inability to furnish ready money sufficient to liquidate the duties upon her newly arrived goods now in port. We expressed surprise at this, knowing that she enrolled upon her "golden tablet" the names of the beau monde and the most recherche. She then stated that it was with the utmost difficulty and sacrifice, both of time and personal feeling, that she could collect enough to pay her workwomen and the duties; that she was then owing money in Paris which she was unable to remit; that families, comprising from two to four grown-up daughters, besides the mother, were then owing her from twelve to twenty-four hundred dollars each, and that every application for an acquittance was met by a plump refusal on the part of the husband and tears from the wife, until at length she had positively refused to furnish more dresses until the existing debts were canceled.

This is not an isolated case—it is, we might almost say, universal in fashionable life.

Every evening party at a fashionable house requires from fifty to one hundred new dresses, and at a magnificent fête champêtre given last week in New Jersey, there were over two hundred new and magnificent dresses, costing from fifty to one thousand dollars each.

These are facts. They cannot be denied nor qualified. The graceful and lovely belles, so magnificently attired at these fashionable reunions, are, therefore, dressed not at the expense of their wealthy papas, but by the unpaid labor, the steaming sweat, the hard taxed eyesight, the midnight toil of the poor and wretched seamstresses and milliners; for these hard working and harder fated women are frequently obliged to go unpaid when their employers are unable to collect their debts. Think of this, ye giddy, frivolous, worthless belles! At the bootmaker's, the same story there; and so with the hatter, the tailor, and every other tradesman, the same. There is one system of plunder, an understood thing—fashionable and universal.

We do not altogether pity these people—the evil is universal, and by a concerted movement cash in hand could be required before goods are delivered or dresses cut. If this were carried out universally, there would be no fear of losing customers, for no better terms could be had elsewhere. In our business we tried it, and shall revolutionize the entire newspaper business in this city.

But the reaction is now upon us. Real estate is descending from its Pegasus, and one by one the necessaries of life are being reduced in price. Money is becoming daily more dear and more difficult to obtain. Many merchants and stock jobbers, living in large houses and driving fine equipages, are now trembling on the brink of a fearful precipice. Two per cent. a month is readily paid by these doomed men in the hope that some fortunate card will "turn up" to relieve them.

Let those to whom these remarks apply take warning, and, before it is too late, retrench their unjustifiable expenditures, place a limit to the excesses of their wives and daughters, and preserve their own reputation, their credit and their peace of mind.

Shipwreck of an American Crew upon a Desolate Island—Their Imprisonment among a Strange People.

About five months ago, there appeared in our columns an extract from the Valparaiso Herald, announcing the loss of the American brig Chatham. From Captain Snow, who commanded the brig, we learn the following particulars of her voyage and loss, and the present melancholy position of the crew upon a desolate island.

The Chatham sailed from San Francisco Sept. 12, 1852—her officers and crew numbering fourteen souls—bound on a trading voyage to the South Pacific Islands. After touching at the Society, Marquesas, and Chain Hervey Islands, and procuring a cargo of the productions of those islands, she sailed from Why lootackey Dec. 28, on her return voyage. About 4 A. M. Jan. 5, 1853, the brig struck on a reef, and soon became a total wreck. When day dawned, the crew found themselves thrown upon a small island, and among savages. At first they were apprehensive that they were at the mercy of a tribe of cannibals, but soon ascertained themselves to be objects of terror to the natives, who, until that moment, had never looked upon a white face. For a short time the natives regarded the whites as superior beings, and showed them much deference; but they soon became accustomed to their presence, and treated them with indifference. On board the brig Capt. Snow had a large number of hogs and chickens, a great portion of which he succeeded in landing, but the natives exhibited the greatest aversion to them, and destroyed the whole—thus depriving the unfortunate sailors of all animal food, except shell-fish, the island affording none other. Capt. Snow describes these people as a peculiar race, differing entirely from the inhabitants of the neighboring islands. As an evidence of their kindness of heart, he relates that whenever himself or any of his people were sick, or met with any accident, the natives would gather around the sufferer and manifest the deepest grief. Yet they seldom allowed the whites to follow their own inclination, and even denied them the privilege of wearing any garments whatever, destroying every thing of the kind—rendering their situation any thing but agreeable, within eight degrees of the Equator, without any covering for their heads and bodies. The various anecdotes of Capt. Snow, illustrating the character of the people, would fill a volume. The island is a lagoon island, being about twenty-five miles long and fifteen miles wide, extending from N. N. W. to S. S. E., and is peopled by about 2500 savages. Capt. Snow supposes its position to be in latitude 8 deg. 48 min. South, and longitude 157 deg. 10 min West. Upon the standard charts, the nearest land to this point is the Penrhyn Islands, distant about sixty miles South by East.

As soon as the natives would permit him, Capt. Snow set about constructing a boat of such materials as his wrecked vessel afforded. After six weeks of unremitting toil, in the burning sun, he completed a crazy thing, hardly worthy of the name of boat, and with three men, put to sea in her, hoping to reach some one of the Society Islands, or fall in with some vessel. But his boat proved so leaky that he was compelled to return, and remained six weeks repairing. March 22, 1853, his boat was again ready, and once more put to sea. On the fourth day following, made and landed on Humphrey's Island. He was well received by the missionaries there, and also by Mr. Williams, agent for Hart & Bros., who carry on an extensive pearl fishery there. Mr Williams was very kind to Capt Snow and his companions, though the Captain thinks much more might have been done for men situated as himself and friends were. As a vessel was daily expected to arrive to fill with shells already collected, Capt Snow determined to wait her arrival for an opportunity to leave the island, rather than proceed in his frail boat. After waiting more than a month, he determined to trust himself again to the boat, and sail for the Navigators. Two of his men refused to go, and himself and second mate concluded to proceed at any rate, and while engaged procuring food for the voyage, his boat was destroyed by one Dr. Berk, who had gone as a passenger with Capt. Snow. His was thus compelled to wait for Hart's vessel, which arrived about the middle of August. After considerable delay, Capt. Hart, of the brig Caroline Hart, the vessel before alluded to, consented to carry Capt. Snow and Dr. Berk to Valparaiso, where they arrived after a passage of forty-two days. He immediately applied to the U. S. Consul for assistance, which was meagerly extended. The Consul commenced making arrangements to send for the remainer of the crew of the Chatham, and had proceeded so far as to charter a vessel and appoint a captain for her.

Capt. Snow left Valparaiso for this place on account of his family affairs, under the supposition that his unfortunate friends would soon be relieved. But, to his astonishment and sorrow, he lately learned that after his departure from Valparaiso the preparations were dropped and the project given up, in consequence of which his companions, twelve in number, are left to eke out a miserable existence on that barren island, among a savage people—and he demands of his Government the adoption of some measure to relieve them, if living, or at least to ascertain their fate. A majority of the unfortunates have families at home dependent upon them for support, who call upon the generosity of the Government of the United States to restore to them their husbands and fathers. Something should be done, and the Government has sufficient means at its disposal for its relief. Capt. Snow has a large family to support in San Francisco, and to his deep regret finds himself unable to do any thing towards the relief of his shipwrecked companions, among whom is his own brother. The case is one which demands the humane exertions of the federal authorities in this city.

P. S. Since the above was written, we see it reported that the whale-ship Enterprise, which arrived at New Bedford on the 5th of April, touched at the island above-mentioned, and took off four of the crew of the Chatham, but the other six still remain in the hands of the natives, who refuse to let them go. [San Francisco paper.

The Perils of Gold Mining.

An intelligent correspondent of the Williamsburg Times, writing from Forest Creek, Australia, narrates the following incidents illustrative of the dangers which beset the Australian miner:

"Perhaps no death is more terrible than that which awaits the digger; the heavy yellow dust with its tempting look, keeps the miner burrowing in the earth, with thousands of tons suspended over his head, and by a tenure less reliable than that which upheld the sword of Damocles. An acquaintance of mine—Nutter, from the State of Maine—persisted in taking out a rich pillar from a very dangerous hole, and succeeded; but he was not fairly on the ground again, when fifteen or twenty yards sank down with a dead heavy crash. Little stones accidentally falling, and hard lumps of dirt have killed those in holes, and great care is necessary to guard against these evils.

"At Ballarat, where the holes are very deep, accidents are common—one occurring there lately. A man digging found the bottom growing soft, but paid little attention until his legs sunk in so that he could not get them out. He shouted for his mates to let the rope down, and he fastened it around his waist, but they could not pull him up; they procured assistance and twisted off the crank of the windlass; they then seized the rope in their hands, but it was of no avail—the water bubbled up around the man in the hole, the quick sand rushed in, buried him to his waist and neck, stifled his cries, and rose thirty feet above his head. To dig him out was useless, in fact next to impossible. The rope was sent and its end pushed beneath the quicksand. In another instance, a man driving sixty feet under ground loosened a large stone, and found water trickle through were it had been, but not dreaming of danger from water, he struck his pick in, when the water burst through with great force; he had the presence of mind to drop his pick and turn round; the water drove him violently into the main hole, and being a swimmer he kept upright in the hole until he was drawn up, when carelessly getting out he slipped and fell, losing his life by the fall. But notwithstanding the many accidents that occur, perhaps they are not greater for the persons employed than in any other business or trade in life. There are numbers at the mines who would not go to the bottom of some of the holes for all the gold in Australia, but the great majority would gladly place their lives against a fortune—myself for one."

As to the productiveness, positively and relatively, as compared with California, he says:

"I would not yet wish to hazard an opinion of the Australian gold fields, but I am convinced that almost the whole soil is more or less filled with the precious metal, and that eventually companies, assisted by machinery, may do well, but the very general impression here is, that the richest gullies, flats, and hills have been worked. A miner, who has been some time on the diggins, tells me that nearly every creek and gulley in the colony has been prospected—that during the last six months more than forty parties of Californians have been constantly on the search, and that the conclusion of the Californians is, that more extensive fields exist in Australia.

It is a fact, that the Californians are dissatisfied, and are leaving in great numbers, and so are the Americans generally, all dissatisfied with the Government. It cannot be denied that California is preferable to Australia—wages are better there, and the yield of gold greater, compared with the numbers digging—to say nothing of being in a decent country."

Consumption Baffled.—Since the days of Esculapius, medical men have striven in vain to conquer that arch enemy of mankind—consumption. Dr. Ayer, of Lowell, Mass., has, we have every reason to believe, succeeded in attaining this object nearer than any predecessor or contemporary. His cable his remedy "Ayer's Cherry Pectoral," by which name it has been favorably known for many years in all parts of the world. It is recommended by numerous eminent persons as the best remedy for diseases of the throat and lungs extant. Dr. Ayer received a letter from Hon. Daniel Webster, in which that statesman speaks of the Pectoral in the highest terms, and mentions that he is personally knowing to the usefulness of this article in both America and Europe. [New York Sunday Times.

An Interesting Incident.—A correspondent of the Greenfield Republic relates the following interesting instance of maternal affection in animals:

A few days since, Mr. Joel Rice, of Conway, discovered on a tree what he supposed to be a crow's nest. But on examination he found, instead of a brood of unfledged corn-pullers, a litter of flying squirrels. Not a little pleased with his booty, he thought it a fine opportunity to secure an acceptable present for his children. Having descended from the tree, he stood at the foot, contemplating his prize, when the old one made her appearance. A mother's temerity, when her offspring are in danger, knows no limits, she jumped upon his hat, crawled down to his hand, seized one of her young ones, and endeavored to take it away. For a moment Mr. R resisted her claim—yet only for a moment. Sympathy for a parent's agony made an appeal, and was successful, his better feelings triumphed, and the dam gathering into her furry folds a little one, sought a new home for her family. After short time she returned, and then again, until she had taken them all away.

Consumption.—Dr. Wood, of Philadelphia, argues the protective and curative value of cod liver oil, from the fact that the obituary tables give a much diminished number of deaths from consumption since it came into general use. "Probably," he says, "we have cured one in eight cases of consumption by its use."

Wild Elephants.

A person who has never seen a wild elephant can form no idea of his real character, either mentally or physically. The unwieldy and sleepy-looking beast, who, penned up in his cage at a menagerie, receives a sixpence in his trunk, and turns around with difficulty to deposit it in a box; whose mental powers seem to be concentrated in the idea of receiving buns, tossed into a gaping mouth by children's hands; this very beast may have come from a warlike stock. His sire may have been the terror of a district, a pitiless highwayman, whose soul thirsted for blood; who, lying in wait in some thick bush, would rush upon the unwary passer-by, and know no pleasure greater than the act of crushing his victim to a shapeless mass beneath his feet.

I have even heard people exclaim, upon hearing anecdotes of elephant-hunting: "Poor things!" Poor things, indeed! I should like to see the very person who thus expresses his pity going at his best pace with a savage elephant after him; give him a town to run upon if he likes, and see the elephant gaining a foot in every yard of the chase, fire in his eyes, fury in his headlong charge; and would not the flying gentleman, who lately exclaimed "Poor thing!" be thankful to the lucky bullet that would save him from destruction? There are no animals more misunderstood than elephants; they are naturally savage, wary and revengeful, displaying as great courage when in their wild state as any animal known. The fact of their great natural sagacity renders them more dangerous as foes. Even when tamed, there are many that are not safe for a stranger to approach, and they are then only kept in awe by the sharp driving hook of the mahout.

Elephants are gregarious, and the average number in a herd is about eight, although they frequently form bodies of fifty, and even eighty, in one troop. Each herd consists of a very large proportion of females, and they are constantly met without a single bull in their number. I have seen some small herds formed exclusively of bulls, but this is very rare. The bull is much larger than the female, and is generally more savage. His habits frequently induce him to prefer solitude to a gregarious life. He then becomes doubly vicious. He seldom strays many miles from one locality, which he haunts for many years. He becomes what is termed a "rogue." He then waylays the natives, and, in fact, becomes a scourge to the neighborhood, attacking the inoffensive without the slightest provocation, carrying destruction into the natives' paddy-fields, and perfectly regardless of night-fires, or the usual precautions for scaring wild beasts.

The daring pluck of these "rogues" is only equaled by their extreme cunning. Endowed with that wonderful power of scent peculiar to elephants, he travels in the day-time down the wind; thus, nothing can follow upon his track without his knowledge. He winds his enemy as the cautious hunter advances noiselessly upon his track, and he stands with ears thrown forward, tail erect, trunk thrown high in the air, with its distended tip pointed to the spot from which he winds the silent but approaching danger. Perfectly motionless does he stand, like a statue in ebony, the very essence of attention, every nerve of scent and hearing stretched to its creaking point; not a muscle moves, not a sound of a rustling branch against his rough sides; he is a mute figure of wild and fierce eagerness. Meanwhile the wary tracker stoops to the ground, and with a practiced eye pierces through the tangled brushwood in search of his colossal feet. Still farther and farther he silently creeps forward, when suddenly a crash bursts through the jungle; the moment has arrived for the ambushed charge, and the elephant lie upon him. [Baker's Rifle and Hound in Ceylon.

Treatment of Emigrants in Liverpool.

A Liverpool correspondent of the American and Foreign Emigrant Protective and Employment Society of Philadelphia, gives the following account of the condition of emigrants on the eve of their embarkation:

"Of all the crowd who throng our port seeking ships to convey them across the Atlantic, none are so destitute and helpless, or so cruelly treated, as those who comm with passage certificates in their hands, purchased and sent them by their friends in America. The majority are females and children, following their husbands, parents, or other relatives to the land of promise. They arrive with nothing but a few shillings in their pockets, and their passage certificates; sometimes, perhaps, with additional funds remitted by their friends to defray their traveling expenses from the American seaport to their new homes in the interior of the country. This, if known, is generally filched from them by the merciless harpies by whom they are surrounded. As there is no commission to be got for booking these pre-paid passengers, all that the runners can get by them is by inducing them to lay out the few shillings they may have at shops, to which they take them, where every thing is sold at an extravagant price, the runner sharing the overcharge.

"From 15 to 20 per cent. is usually paid by the first-class dealers on sales thus effected. The keepers of lodging-houses next come in for their share of these pitiful spoils—a set of perfectly devilized men, who drag the poor creatures into small cellars, filthy, damp, dark dens, without fire or light at night, where they are detained sometimes for a week or ten days, if it does not suit the purpose of these wretches to put them board ship sooner; thence, they are hurried on board, fleeced of every penny, without the means often of buying a bundle of clean straw for their beds. Can we wonder that disease and death should seize them on the passage?

"That more do not die would appear to be a standing miracle; it can only be explained by a reference to the remarkable physical stamina and powers of endurance which these poor creatures are blessed with.

"Such is the lot of thousands of poor emigrants, as I can testify from personal knowledge, and as every one else will testify who has the same opportunities of observation."

Opening of the Ganges Canal in India.—The Ganges Canal, the greatest public work as yet constructed by the English in India, was opened by the Lieutenant Governor of Agra on the 8th of April. The opening, as described by the local papers—English clergymen reading a form of prayers for the occasion, Brahmins throwing flowers into the stream, an imposing display of troops, a general distribution of sweetmeats, missionaries preaching to the crowd, racing in sacks, and the like—formed a melange that could only have been presented in British India. Though the great trunk of the canal has been thus formally opened, the branches required for the distribution of the water will not be fully complete for some years. By the time they are so, the work will have cost a million and a half; and it is thought that the direct net return will be at the rate of about 7 per cent on the outlay, and the indirect return arising from the increase of cultivation and land revenue is estimated at about the same sum.

The results of the canal, in preventing the recurrence of the famines that have invariably followed the failure of the monsoons in the districts it traverses, and in creating numerous lines of easy and economical transit connected with the great rivers of the Doab, are incalculable. The total length of channel navigable throughout, including the trunk and terminable lines into the great branches, is very nearly 800 miles. The principal engineering work is an aqueduct over the Solani river, having a watery way of 750 feet. This work cost £300,000, or about nine times as much as Telford's aqueduct over the Dee, at Pont-y-Cysyllt, which is half as long again, and nearly three times as high, but with a much narrower channel, and there can be little doubt that had Telford's mode of construction been adopted by the military officer who constructed the work, the cost would have been very much less than it has been.

The American Nation.—The Westminster Review, after comparing the census of Great Britain and the United States, says the whole civilized world owe respect and gratitude to the United States for what they are doing in education. "As for what the American nation is to become at its present rate of progress, it is really an overwhelming idea. There may be a Democratic Republic of 100,000,000 of citizens at the end of this century."

The injunction, never to fill a fluid lamp when lighted, or when there is a light in the room, should be dinned into the ears of all persons who use camphine or burning fluid, until the habit becomes a second nature. If this rule be followed, nine out of ten of the camphine accidents would be avoided.

The Inquisitive Yankee.

A gentleman riding in an Eastern railroad car, which was rather sparsely supplied with passengers, observed in the seat before him, a lean, slab-sided Yankee, every feature of whose face seemed to ask a question; and a little circumstance soon proved that he possessed a most "inquiring mind." Before him, occupying the entire seat, sat a lady dressed in deep black; and after shifting his position several times, and manœuvering to get an opportunity to look in her face, he at length caught her eye. He nodded familiarly to her, and asked her, with a nasal twang utterly inscrible of imitation,

"In affliction?"

"Yes, sir," responded the lady.

"Pa-rents?—father or mother?"

"No, sir," said the lady.

"Child, perhaps?—a boy or gal?"

"No, sir, not a child," was the response. "I have no children."

"Husband then, 'xpect?"

"Yes," was the curt answer.

"Hum: cholery?—a tradin' man, mebbe?"

"My husband was a seafaring man, the captain of a vessel; he did'nt die of cholera; he was drowned."

"Oh, drowned, eh?" pursued the inquisitor, hesitating for a brief instant. "Save his chist!" he asked.

"Yes; the vessel was saved, and my husband's effects," said the widow.

"Was they?" asked the Yankee, as his eyes brightened up; "pious man?" he continued.

"He was; a member of the Methodist Church."

The next question was a little delayed; but it came;

"Don't you think you got gre-a-t cause to be thankful that he was a pious man; and saved his chist?"

"I do," said the widow abruptly, and turned her head to look out of the window. The indefatigable 'pump' changed his position, held the window by his 'glittering eye,' once more, and propounded one more query, in a little lower tone, with his head slightly inclined forward over the back of the seat: "Was you cale'latin' to get married agin?"

"Sir!" said the widow indignantly, "you are impertinent!" And she left her seat and took another on the other side of the car.

"Pears to be a little huffy!" said the inoffensive bore, turning to our narrator, behind him: "she need'nt be mad; I didn't want to hurt her feelin's. What did they make you pay for that umberel you've got in your hend? It's a real pooty one!"

Anecdote of two Parrots.—A curious old story is told in Captain Brown's book, without any clue to its date; its ludicrous tendency being the temptation to copy it here:

A tradesmen, who had a shop in the Old Bailey, opposite the prison, kept two parrots, a green and gray. The green parrot was taught to speak when there was a knock at the street door; the gray whenever the bell rung; but they only knew two short phrases of English. The house in which they lived had an old-fashioned projecting front, so that the first floor could not be seen from the pavement on the same side of the way: and, on one occasion, they were left outside the window by themselves, when some one knocked at the street door.

"Who's there?" said the green parrot.

"The man with the loether," was the reply. To which the bird answered—

"Oh! oh!"

The door not being opened, the stranger knocked a second time.

"Who's there?" said green poll.

"Who's there?" exclaimed the man; "why don't you come down?"

"Oh! oh!" repeated the parrot.

This so enraged the stranger, that he rung the bell furiously.

"Go to the gate," cried a new voice, which belonged to the gray parrot.

"To the gate?" said the man, who saw no such entrence, and who thought the servants were bantering him. "What gate," he asked, stepping back to view the premises.

"New-gate!" responded the gray, just as the angry applicant discovered who had been answering his summons.

A Female Warrior.—A foreign correspondent gives the following account of the progress of "Woman's Rights" in Turkey:

"Please tell my friend, Miss Lucy Stone, that I saw in the streets of Constantinople, in yellow slippers, and riding straddle on a horse, Kara Fatma-Haccum, a noble and rich lady of Marach, who solicited and obtained a command among the Turkish volunteer forces. She has under her orders a battalion of five hundred wicked looking Asiatics, equipped by herself. She is about fifty years old, goes veiled in the ordinary manner, but shows her face freely in spite of her veil. One sees by the expression of her countenance that she is made of the right stuff. She will do something."

Valuable Land for Sale.

FIFTEEN HUNDRED AND SEVENTY-FIVE ACRES in the western part of Alabama, fourteen miles from the Bigbee river and eight from the M. & O Railroad. Most of the land is very rich, with good buildings on each, comprising dwellings, negro cabins; and also a superior horse-power Sawmill. On the east is a good neighborhood, and on the west an extensive range for stock—800 acres in cultivation, and well watered.

A more desirable place can seldom be found where land is rich.

Terms easy. For further information, apply to

JAS B. RAMSEY.

June 17, 1854 tf Daleville, Lauderdale co, Miss.

Pensacola House.

MRS. SIMMO has opened the above-named House, and is prepared to accommodate boarders and transient customers. Every attention will be given to make all comfortable who may favor her with their patronage.

The Pensacola House is situated on Government st., one door above the Florida House, commanding a view of the Bay, and receiving the breeze unobstructed.

Pensacola, Fa., June 24, 1854. tf

To Booksellers, Agents, and Peddlers.

BURNETT & BOSTWICK, Publishers,

15 Camp Street, 15

Have just issued from their press the following valuable works:

VOYAGE OF THE U. S. EXPLORING SQUADRON, commanded by Capt. Charles Wilkes of the U. S. N., together with Explorations and Discoveries made by Admiral D'Urville, Capt. Ross and other Navigators and Travelers, and an account of the Expedition to the Dead Sea under Lieut. Lynch, with numerous illustrations.

LIFE OF JOHN C. CALHOUN.

LIFE OF JAMES K. POLK, with a history of his Administration.

THE HEROINES OF HISTORY.

HEROINES OF THE CRUSADES.

PANORAMA OF NATIONS.

THE GREAT CITIES OF THE WORLD.

LIVES OF JOHN AND CHARLES WESLEY.

WILLIS'S WORKS—seven volumes.

THE MIRROR OF THE SOUL.

FARM AND FIRESIDE.

RURAL HOMES, &c &c.

For the sale of the above and many other works, which are all very valuable and popular, we desire to establish an agency in every county and parish in the South; and therefore offer unparalled inducements to country dealers, agents and peddlers.

A Catalogue of all our publications furnished on application, post paid, to

BURNETT & BOSTWICK, Publishers,

may 27 6m 15 Camp street, New Orleans.

THE BRITISH QUARTERLIES,

AND

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.

LEONARD SCOTT & CO., No. 54 Gold street, New York, continue to publish the following British Periodicals, viz:

THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW, (Conservative.)

THE EDINBURGH REVIEW, (Whig.)

THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW, (Free Church.)

THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW, (Liberal.)

AND

BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE, (Tory.)

—TERMS—

For any one of the four Reviews	$3 00 per annum
For any two " "	6 00 "
For any three " "	7 00 "
For all our of the Reviews,	8 00 "
For Blackwood's Magazine,	3 00 "
For Blackwood and the three Reviews	9 00 "
For Blackwood and the four Reviews	10 00 "

Payments to be made, in all cases, in advance. Money current in the State where issued will be received at par. Address, post paid, LEONARD SCOTT & CO.,

79 Fulton st., New York. Entrance 54 Gold st.

☞ Postage on Blackwood and the four Reviews, 72 cents a year. [Nov18-1y.]

ENERGETIC BUSINESS MEN

Can find profitable employment in selling

Goodrich's Last Great Work,

A HISTORY OF ALL NATIONS,

From the earliest period to the present time, or

UNIVERSAL HISTORY,

IN WHICH THE

History of every Nation, Ancient and Modern,

is separately given. By S. G. Goodrich, Consul to Paris, author of "Peter Parley's Tales," &c. 1227 royal octavo pages, illustrated by 70 maps and 700 engravings, bound in morocco.

☞ The work is not for sale in Book-Stores, but is sold only by Canvassing Agents, to whom the exclusive right of sale in their territory is given by the publishers.

Twelve Thousand Copies already Sold

by our Agents. Canvassers who obtain but one subscriber per day make good wages.

☞ An active, energetic Agent wanted in every unoccupied county in the United States and Canadas. For full particulars, &c., address

MILLER, ORTON & MULLIGAN,

Publishers, Auburn, N. Y.

LA GRANGE COLLEGE.

The next term of this Institution will commence on WEDNESDAY, July 19.

FACULTY:

R. H. Rivers, D. D., President and Professor of Mental and Moral Science and Belles Lettras.

O. P. Casey, A. M., Professor of Ancient Languages.

S. P. Rice, A. M., Professor of Pure Mathematics.

Rev. B. F. Ross, A. M., Prof. of Mixed Mathematics.

Thos. P. Hatch, A. B., Professor of Natural Science.

Thos. Smith, A. B., Principal of Preparatory Department.

EXPENSES:

Tuition per term of five months	$25 00
Board (washing included)	50 00
Room rent and servant's hire	3 00
Chemical fee (senior year)	5 00

In the Department of Mathematics, Professor Rice will give instructions in Practical Engineering, without extra charge.

Important additions have recently been made to the Laboratory and the means of illustrating the different Departments of Natural History, and in all departments of the College, no pains will be spared to provide the best facilities for a thorough and practical education. The plan of endowment has been favorably received, and we confidently expect its speedy accomplishment.

The foundations of a new and large college building will soon be laid, and we intend to make LaGrange College, in every respect, inferior to no institution in the West.

THOS. P HATCH,

my20 2m Secretary of the Faculty.

Education.

A young man who will graduate at Randolph, Macon College, Virginia, next June, would like to enter upon the pleasant task of instructing youth, as soon thereafter as possible. He intends making teaching a lifetime business, hence Trustees of Academies would do well to procure his services, as they can be permanently secured by a first rate salary. He intends doing his duty in his profession, and will be satisfied with nothing short of good pay for his services. Certificates of character and scholarship will be sent to those desiring to procure a teacher, which cannot fail to give satisfaction. Terms and location, including its salubrity and condition of society, must accompany all communications to J. P. B., Randolph, Macon College P. O., Virginia. ap22 2m*

Dr. J. T. Kennon,

Castilian Spring,

Holmes County, Mississippi,

Is now prepared to offer good accommodations to invalids who may desire to visit Castilian Spring, or place themselves under his care for treatment. This is one of the most desirable retreats for invalids in the South, located in an elevated healthy region of country, with abundance of fine Freestone water. The mineral water is composed very strongly of Iron, Sulphur, Magnesia and Soda, and contains largely of Carbonic Acid Gas.

The diseases which it has cured are Dyspepsia, Dropsy, General Debility, Affections of the Kidneys, Bladder, and the various functional and organic derangements of the Womb. This water is especially efficacious in Diseases of Females.

Board, per week—$7.

References—Ministers of Miss. Conference.

Rev. J. B. Walker, } New Orleans.
Rev. H. N. McTyiere, }

march 4 6m

JEFFERSON BOOK STORE.

W. FLEMMING, BOOLSELLER and STATIGNER, corner of Jackson and Tchoupitoulas streets, Fourth District, New Orleans, would respectfully call the attention of Country Merchants, Colleges, Academies, Public Schools, etc., to my

LARGE STOCK OF SCHOOL BOOKS,

Consisting in part of—

SPELLING BOOKS, READING BOOKS, DICTIONARIES, Grammars, Rhetoric, Composition, Chemistry, Botany, Mineralogy, Geology, Natural History, Astronomy, Drawing, Book-keeping, Geography, Biography, Natural Philosophy, Elocution, Logic, History, Arithmetic, History, Geometry, Surveying, Mensuration, French Grammars, Dictionaries, Readers, etc.

SPANISH, GERMAN AND ITALIAN GRAMMARS, Dictionaries, Readers, etc.

GREEK AND LATIN BOOKS of all descriptions.

MISCELLANEOUS AND STANDARD WORKS; RELIGIOUS AND THEOLOGICAL WORKS, all denominations, which I offers to sell at much lower prices than heretofore sold in the South.

FANCY EMBOSSED NOTE PAPER AND ENVELOPES;

LETTER, CAP AND RECORD PAPER, of all qualities, Ruled and Plain.

BLANK BOOKS, of all descriptions and sizes;

CHEAP PUBLICATIONS, MAGAZINES AND NEWSPAPERS;

CHRISTMAS AND NEW YEAR'S PRESENTS;

ANNUALS for 1854, of all descriptions and styles of binding;

ALBUMS, FANCY PORTFOLIOS, WORK-BOXES, WRITING DESKS, PORT MONNAIES, CARD CASES, MUSIC, etc.

For sale, on reasonable terms, by

WILLIAM FLEMING,

feb25 1y Bookseller and Stationer.

☞ All orders promptly attended to.

OCEAN SPRINGS.

The undersigned, having been appointed as agent for the sale of lots at Ocean Springs, has, under the authority of the proprietors at the place, had the whole property resurveyed and a map made upon a large scale; also, lithograph plans in pamphlet form, for distribution to persons wishing to purchase. These two will enable any one to see the location and qualities of any particular lot, or they will be shown them on the spot, either by one of the owners, or the subscriber.

The advantages of this watering place cannot be known, or fully appreciated, except by a visit to the place, and this is respectfully solicited from all those having any idea of locating on the Lake shore. The land on the Bay consists of the finest bluffs, with large native oak trees, between here and Mobile; some twenty or twenty-five feet above the level of the lake, with ravines between each bluff, and which serve as a drain to them and to all the land in the rear back to old Fort Bayou, upon which the two springs are situated, say about three-quarters of a mile from the Bay. The whole of the land between the Bay and the bayou is better drained than any other place upon the Lake. The soil is good, and produces (with little aid, and which is at hand in the bottoms,) excellent corn and vegetables. The absence of sand, so common at the watering places, affords a fine opportunity for good drives.

The Bay affords the best opportunity for sailing with safety, of any place upon the coast. Abundance of fish and oysters can be obtained at all times, and in the winter, ducks in any quantity. The bathing is also very superior.

The superior virtues of the two springs (sulphur and chalybeate) have not only been proven by the analysis of some of our first chemists, but their medicinal qualities have been fully demonstrated in the cure of several well-known citizens of this and other States.

A hotel of the first class will be kept open summer and winter, and in addition to which an infirmary will be established from the first of May next, near the springs, under the management of two of the most respectable physicians of this city.

Persons wishing to purchase any of this property are invited to call on the undersigned and inspect the large plan and lithographs, and for full particulars.

J. O. PIERSON, Real Estate Broker,

mh11 6m 7 Commercial Place.

WHOLESALE DRY GOODS TRADE.

SPRING IMPORTATIONS, 1854.

JOSEPH H. PALMER & CO. have in store and are receiving regularly from the European and American markets their usual supplies of seasonable Goods, viz:

PRINTED GOODS, comprising Calicoes of various styles and qualities; Lawns, Jaconets, Organdies, Barages, &c.

LINEN GOODS—Irish Linens of every grade. Linen Drills, Linen Sheetings, Table Linens, Brown Linens, Grass Linens, Brown Hollands, Brown and Bleached Duck, Planters' Linens, Farmers' Drills, Linen and Lawn Handkerchiefs, every quality.

SILK GOODS, embracing plain and figured Silks, Plaid Silks, Foulards, Sattins, Velvets, Florences, Shawls, Handkerchiefs, Sewings, &c.

WOOLEN and WORSTED GOODS, comprising De Laines, Barages, Merinos, Alpacas, Bombazines, Canton Cloths, &c.

COTTON GOODS, consisting in part of Brown and Bleached Cotton Shirtings and Sheetings, of every quality and width; Cottonades, Camlets, Chambrays, Ginghams, Checks, Stripes, Denims, &c., at extremely low prices by the piece and package only.

JOSEPH H. PALMER & CO.,

Importers and Wholesale Dealers,

feb18 47 Camp st.

PHILADELPHIA SADDLERY AND TRUNK WAREHOUSE.

S. ROBB & Co.,

No. 4 Magazine street, one door from Canal street,

New Orleans.

The subscribers invite Planters and Dealers in Saddlery etc., to call and examine their stock.

They are constantly receiving Goods from the Manufactory in Philadelphia, and direct from England, and are prepared to offer liberal inducements to purchasers.

Their stock in store is large and well assorted, and is comprised as follows:

Saddles, Bridles and Martingales in great variety; Coach, Gig, Buggy, Dearborn, Stage, Wagon, Dray, Cart and Plough Harness; Horse and Mule Collars, Hames and Blind Bridles; Trace Chains; Medical Bags; Saddlery Hardware; Leather of all descriptions; Coach Furniture and Trimmings; Trunk Trimmings; Saddlers, Coach and Trunkmakers' Tools; Oil, Varnish; India Rubber and Patent stitched Leather Gin and Mill Bands; India Rubber Goods; Traveling and Packing Trunks, Valises, Leather and Carpet Traveling Bags, &c.

mh6'52—1y

Bells! Bells!! Bells!!!

For Churches, Academies, Factories, Steamboats, Plantations, etc., made, and a large assortment kept constantly on hand by the Subscribers, at their old established and enlarged Foundry, which has been in operation for Thirty Years, and whose patterns, and process of manufacture are so perfected, that their bells have a world-wide celebrity for volume of sound and quality of tone. The present Proprietors have recently succeeded in applying the process of loam moulding in Iron Cases to Bell Casting—which secures a perfect casting and even temper; and as an evidence of the unimpaired excellence of their Bells, they have just received—Jan. 1854—the FIRST PREMIUM (A Silver Medal) of the World's Fair in New York, over all others, several from this Country and Europe being in competition; and which is the 18th Medal, besides many Diplomas, that have been awarded them. They have patterns for, and keep on hand, Bells of a variety of tones of the same weight, and they also furnish to order Chimes of any number of bells, or key, and can refer to several of their make throughout the States and Canada. Their Hangings, comprising many recent and valuable improvements, consist of Cast Iron Yoke, with moveable arms, and which may be turned upon the Ball; Spring acting on the Clapper, prolonging the sound. Iron Frame, Tolling Hammer, Counterpoise, Stop, etc. For steamboats Steamships, etc., their improved Revolving Yoke, or Fancy Hangings in Brass or Bronze of any design furnished. We can supply whole sets, or parts, of our improved Hangings, to rehang Bells of other construction, upon proper specifications being given. Old Bells taken in exchange.

Surveyors' Instruments of all descriptions made and kept on hand.

Being in immediate connection with the principal routes, in all directions, either Railroad, Canal or River orders can be executed with dispatch, which, either personally or by communication, are respectfully solicited.

A. MENEELY'S SONS,

mh11 West Troy, Albany Co., N. Y.

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL,

FOR THE CURE OF

COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, BRONCHITIS, WHOO

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Publishing Committee Louisiana Conference, { J. C. KEENER, L. PARKER, J. B. WALKER.

H. N. McTYEIRE, EDITOR.

{ J. HAMILTON, D. D., T. W. DORMAN, W. MURRAH. } Publishing Committee Alabama Conference.

VOL. IV. NO. 23. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, JULY 8, 1854. WHOLE NO. 179.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

"WHEN THIS OLD COAT WAS NEW."

IN IMITATION—BY W. E. M. L.

When this old coat was new,
It was a goodly dress;
All lined through and through,
Cut rounding down the breast:
The buttons were of brass,
The cloth Kentucky blue:
Oh, those were golden days
When this old coat was new.

When this old coat was new—
'Tis since a hundred year,
The old folks did eschew
The gaudy philactere:
Simplicity decays—
(Believe me, this is true,)
But was not in those days
When this old coat was new.

Our fathers were not learn'd
In seminaries then;
Their noble fame was earn'd
As self-instructed men.
They sought not worldly praise;
Their wants were small and few;
Oh, those were blessed days
When this old coat was new.

But times have sadly chang'd
Since this old coat was new:
Our pastors seem estrang'd,
And most the people, too.
There's a room to mend their ways,
But none dare tell them so;
This was not in those days
When this old coat was new.

"Old fogy," they will call
The one that dares to speak,
Or croaker, worse than all,
That only lives to squeak.
If one objections raise,
He must recant or rue;
This was not in those days
When this old coat was new.

"But we are richer grown
Since this old coat was new;
It will not suit the town,
Nor flourish in a pew;
The old coat would disgrace
The improvements we pursue:"
But would not in those days
When this old coat was new.

A philosophic age—
We must reflect the hue—
To change, is all the rage,
The old coat for the new:
Perhaps 'tis best always
To leap before we view,
But was not in those days
When this old coat was new.

We never will disown
Those heroes of the past,
Who, by their coats were known,
While sense of honor lasts:
Though we discard their ways,
To them we will be true;—
Brave vet'rans of those days
When this old coat was new.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

NOTES OF A RAMBLER.

COLUMBIA, S. C., June 20.

MR. EDITOR—Suppose we lock arms and rambulate about the streets of this city and it such places as attract a stranger's attention. This is a prosperous, improving place; tains about 8000 inhabitants. Three railds center here. The streets are beautily shaded with water-oaks—a row on each and one in the middle. It is, emphatically a city of oaks. An umbrella is hardly cessary the warmest day. Sheded streets atly add to the beauty and loveliness of a. Strange that southern cities are so eless about this matter—take so little pains providing shade trees to improve, adorn beautify their streets. Here is "Sydney k," which contains the water-works of the . The water, from several fine springs, collected in a basin and forced, by steam, ough pipes to the top of a hill 125 feet h—the highest point in the city. There a reservoir receives it, from which it is ributed throughout the city by means of es ruening under the ground. Few cities, size, are as well supplied with pure waas Columbia. This park is a handsome e. Shaded bowers surround these springs, eath which crowds assemble, late in the ieg, and refresh themselves by drinking pure, sparkling water which bubbles up heir feet. Close by a fountain plays, sending its gushing streams high up in the air, ch, dividing into millions of drops, fall to earth like so many diamonds sparkling in joyous sunshine. It is an ornament to place.

This is the Gunnery. During the late xcion excitement in the State, thousands of s were manufactured here. Every preparion was made for the looked-for emergen. The Arsenal stands close by. We enter enclosure. A beautiful green lawn spreads in front. There are two large brick ildings. A polite Cadet conducts us through rooms containing the arms—muskets, pisswords, etc. We ascend the tower—a view—the city lies spread out below us, really looks as if it was built in a solid est of oaks. Church steeples tower high ove the trees, and look like so many silent gers pointing heavenward. Yonder is the er slowly threading its crooked channel. ers is the railroad, along which a train of e is puffing. On a high hill several miles are the buildings of the "Female High hool." Far, far away the green hills gradily rise one above the other until the last e appears, behind which the blue sky seems sink. The drum beats—the cadets all appear on the parade ground dressed in full uniform. A beautiful sight. How skillfully ey manage their muskets, and with what ce, regularity and precision they go through e various military evolutions.

We will now descend and visit the Lunatic ylum. Here it is. Three squares are appropriated to its use. A high brick wall surounds it. Here, in front, is a flower garden tefully laid off and arranged. The main ilding is very large, four stories high. On its frontispiece we read, "Established, 1822." There are about 200 within its walls,

> "Whose wretched brains have given way,
> And they become wrecks, at random driven,
> Without one glimpse of reason or of Heaven."

As we are not allowed to see those who are confined within their cells, we will ascend to the top of the house and see those who are not confined. There is the back yard, well shaded, over which they are scattered, variously engaged. There is one rolling over in the grass making a mournful noise, and another sitting and singing—

> "When I can read my title clear," etc.

Some poet says:

> "There is a pleasure in being mad
> Which none but madmen know."

Is this true? Perhaps so. But Heaven save me and mine from such pleasure!

We will now turn our footsteps from this sad scene to the "State University." A pleasant walk along a shaded street brings us to it. The Campus embraces four squares, which is surrounded with a brick wall. We enter. The buildings—professors' houses, school rooms, society rooms, library room, etc. are arranged in two large rows, with the President's house at the head. The intermediate space is planted with oaks and elm trees, beneath which the student finds a shady retreat. We enter the College Library. The accomplished Librarian politely shows us through. The library contains about 35,000 volumes; cost about $90,000. We are shown some rare literary curiosities—several books printed in the 14th century; one of these, "The History of the Property of Things," common size, printed at Nuremberg, Germany, 1483; has sold, at the time, for 53 pounds and 11 shillings. Another, "The Work of Albertus Magnus," has wooden backs and the old fashioned Monkish clasps. These books are in a fine state of preservation. The paper is finer and stronger than that contained in books now. Here are several other curiosities. "Capt. Smith's History of Virginia," printed in 1632; "Shaw's Illuminated Ornaments, selected from the Manuscripts of the Middle Ages." This contains some of the most splendid engravings I ever saw. "Engraving of seven Cherokee Indian Kings sent to England in 1730 to make a treaty with the King." "Audubon's Birds of America," cost $925—a magnificent work. While looking on this massive pile of books we feel how true it is, that > "The past but lives in words: a thousand ages

> Were blank, if books had not evok'd their ghosts,
> And kept the pale, embodied shades to warn us
> From fleshless lips."

Here the student can

> "Turn back the tide of ages to its head,
> And hoard the wisdom of the honor'd dead."

We would gladly tarry here longer, but must not. We now turn our course to one of the many Flower Gardens here. Columbia is a city of flowers as well of oaks. Much taste is displayed by its wealthy citizens in adorning and beautifying their yards and gardens. We enter this one; it looks like an earthly paradise; the walks are walled in with hedges of the mock-orange, trimmed in almost every shape. Beautiful arches are formed, and door-ways are cut through these solid walls of trees. As we wander along these walks we find ourselves, ever and anon, beneath vine-covered bowers, where we may repose and give loose reins to our excited, wandering minds. If I was a poet, I am certain I could write better poetry, seated beneath one of these bowers, than any where else. Shaded bowers, surrounded with rich shrubbery and fragrant, blushing flowers, act like a charm on a sensitive, poetic mind. Here are two small, beautifully constructed buildings, intended to represent Indian Wigwams. One is made of bark, and covered inside with moss; the other is made of small sticks, cut short and variously arranged, and the roof inside is ceiled with sea-shells of every size and color. It cost several hundred dollars. We now enter the "Green-house." What a beautiful sight meets the eye. Here are tropical fruits, such as "the fragrant orange with bright, golden rind"—the juicy lemon—the delicious banana, etc. Also a great variety of the rarest, richest flowers, collected from almost every portion of the globe.

> "Here opening roses breathing sweets diffuse,
> And soft carnation shower their balmy dews;
> Here lilies smile in virgin robes of white,
> The thin nudness of superficial light;
> And varied tulips show an dazzling gay,
> Blushing in bright diversities of day."

And here, in one corner, is

> "A violet by a mossy stone,
> Half hidden from the eye;
> Fair as a star, when only one
> Is shining in the sky."

We could spend a whole day examining these flowers, and be as much delighted when we ceased as when we commenced. How loveable and attractive are flowers.

> "Who does not love a flower!
>
> "Its hues are taken from the light,
> Which summer's sun flings pure and bright.
> In scattered and prismatic hues,
> That shine and smile in dropping dews;
> Its fragrance from the sweetest air—
> Its form from all that's light and fair!—
> Who does not love a flower!"

How instructive are flowers.

> "Ye are the Scriptures of the earth,
> Sweet flowers, fair and frail:
> A Sermon speaks in every bud
> That woos the summer gale."

How lovely, sweet and simple are flowers.

> "Yes, lovely flower, I find in thee
> Wild sweetness which no words express,
> And charms in thy simplicity
> That dwell not in the pride of dress."

How universal are flowers.

> "Oh! the flowers look upward in every place
> Through this beautiful world of ours,
> And dear as a smile on an old friend's face,
> Is the smile of the bright—bright flowers!"
>
> "In Eastern lands they talk in flowers,
> And they tell in a garland their loves and cares;
> Each blossom that blooms in their garden bowers,
> On its bloom a mystic language bears."

Beautiful, charming language this! May this not be the language of Heaven! At least, may we not entertain the fond, delightful thought, that the rarest, sweetest, richest flowers carpet the far-spreading fields of Paradise, and all speak a language, burdened with love and joy, understood by the bright Angels who wander among them? Are not flowers the most lovely objects on earth?—The only remaining relics of the beauty and loveliness of the "Garden of Eden," along whose shaded walks and beneath whose flower-decked bowers Adam and Eve walked and reposed in all the glory of their Godlike perfections? And shall these flowers fade away in Heaven? Oh, are there no flowers in Heaven? Oh, yes!

> "There everlasting Spring abides,
> And never withering flowers."

Blessed thought! A bright, balmy, delightful spring, which will know no end, and flowers that will bloom for ever, and shed their fragrance over the plains of Heaven! This feature of Heaven, aside from all others, makes it vastly attractive.

Excuse me, Mr. Editor, for detaining you so long in this flower garden. I have been so charmed that I forget how rapidly time sped away.

We will now turn away from this delightful spot, cheered with the bright hope of reaching, ere long, a more delightful spot than this, from which we will never depart.

An interesting revival is in progress in one of the Methodist Churches here. It is now church time; we will attend; the singing is charming; a well-trained choir occupies the middle of the church and leads the singing, the congregation uniting with them. Dr. Cross, known as "Nimrod," occupies the pulpit. He is slenderly built—has a small but expressive face—wears spectacles—sports a heavy pair of whiskers. Combs his hair, which is long, straight back, without parting. I am sure, from his general appearance, Bascom's man would never snap at him for a Methodist preacher. His style is smooth and flowing—his logic is clear, strong and convincing—his voice is sweet, musical and persuasive—his gestures are few and rapid—his manner, as a whole, is rather theatrical. He is, undoubtedly, a close thinker and a hard student. He is preparing a volume for the press, which will soon appear. Success to the meeting. Good by, Mr. Editor.

RAMBLER.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

BISHOP IVES, THAT BOOK, ETC.

MR. EDITOR:—In an article in your last, upon Bishop Ives' Book, you express the wish that some one would write a book upon "the trials of a mind in its progress from Methodism to High-churchism," and also express the belief that it would be a work of surpassing interest. In this opinion I concur, from various considerations—especially if the author would introduce in their order, the various elements of conviction and illumination.

I have seen—not a book—but a letter, from one who went, not from Methodism, but perhaps from Presbyterianism, to Low-churchism, and that was so full of interest, that one from a pilgrim in another direction would be profoundly attractive: for if such things are found in the green tree, what would there be in the dry? Speaking upon this point brings to mind a statement made to me during my sojourn at Columbus. It is the knowledge of many of your readers that the late Martin P. Parks, one of the rectors of Trinity Church, New York, who died last year, had made that journey, having formerly been a member of the Virginia Conference. The statement was, that a brother of his who lives in Virginia, and who corresponded with him to the time of his death, gives it as his opinion that had Mr. Parks lived a little longer, and the way been unobstructed, he would have returned to our Church again. This I think more than probable, though the embarrassments, both subjective and objective, that beset a man who has made one of those false moves publicly, are inconceivable to those who have not passed through them. It costs inconceivably more to retrace an erroneous step, than to take it. But Mr. P. had been a converted man, and had felt the joys of salvation; he knew, therefore, that the teachings of High-churchism upon these subjects were unqualifiedly false. It is very probable, too, that he saw such a lamentable want of spiritual character and a knowledge of Divine things in most of his clerical associates, as went far to open his eyes in spite of the influence of position and the force of circumstances. Indeed, I wonder how he could reconcile it to his conscience to remain so long out of the path of Christian usefulness; for we think it more than probable that he never saw a single soul brought to Christ, during the whole period of his exile from the Church. Fancies—progressive churchianity—and rustling robes, may amuse one and keep the mind employed for a season, but an approach to the closing scene will be apt, with such a man, to place these things in their true light. Mr. P. earnestly requested that not one word should be said of him or his life, in connection with his funeral services. The best part of his life appeared, no doubt, such an utter failure in respect to all the great objects of the Christian ministry, and his false step so fatal, that while he could not live to retrieve it, he could not consent that it should be held up to the world in commendation. Who can tell the emotions of an honest, enlightened mind under such circumstances!

Analgous to this were the feelings of a lady who died in C., in T., some years since. Her convictions and preferences were all in favor of the Methodist Church; but by the force of circumstances and inveigling, she was induced to enter the Episcopal Church. After having been a member of it for some time, in a state of mind better imagined than described—she sickened and was near death; the Bishop came—prayer-book in hand,—but the lady declined seeing him! She requested that a local minister residing in the neighborhood might be sent for, and when this was declined, she desired her mother to sing her "one of those good old Methodist hymns," to comfort her dying child, and upon the consolation that afforded her, she yielded up here spirit.

Similar to this latter, was a more recent case reported to me upon authority which I cannot doubt. A lady, whose whole religious training had been Methodistic, but who, in an hour of weakness, yielded to a web of circumstances which the unsuspecting often allow the managing to weave around them, and joined "the Church." Years rolled away—such years as one who had enjoyed and been trained upon New Testament teaching and principles, might be expected to spend under the fostering influence of the forms of "the Church," and preaching destitute of a warming evangelism. The joys and hopes of a former happy experience had died out—anguid devotions passed into an utter absence of all sense of Divine favor. In this condition, sickness—the precursor of death—overtook her. Die thus she could not; and her heart shrank from the thought of looking for spiritual aid from her then religious teacher. So, calling to her a pious young woman then in the family, she requested that she would kneel by her bed-side and join her in prayer for mercy. When asked if she would not have her pastor called in, she replied, "No, M., let us pray for ourselves." In this struggle she continued for hours, until peace was again restored to her soul. Environed by these chilling influences, she seemed doomed to spend the remainder of her life under the shadows of a false position. But subsequent occurrences I must not narrate. One false step in a matter so important as that of religion, often brings a life of bitter repentance—and it is to be feared, not unfrequently costs the authors their souls. In these great matters every one must decide for himself; for there are those whose zealous church-man-ship seems to run so high that they would almost rather that you go to hell with them, than go to Heaven through another Church! I could narrate other cases that have come within my own personal knowledge, equally instructive—in which these coerced into "the Church" by persecutions more dangerous to the soul's peace and its principles than the block and the stake, watch for and improve every opportunity of stealing away to the church of their choice—or when positively forbidden this, sit at their windows and weep, while they listen to the songs of Zion coming up from the old Church. But I must forbear. Enough has been written to show, that if "Jordan is a hard road to travel," there is such a road.

June 26, 1854. WATCHMAN.

DR. DUFF ON AMERICA.

This zealous and eloquent minister, after a well improved visit to the United States, has returned and reported, by request, to his Church—the Free Church of Scotland. Dr. Duff came to stir up the Churches here, and as he says, "to be edified." Both ends have been accomplished. He takes back a good report—characterized by large, generalizing, Catholic views. We present some items from his address—four hours long in delivery—before the Assembly of the Free Church of Scotland, in Edinburg, May 26, 1854.—[ED.

Now, there are many points regarding the States, which, as a Christian Church, we cannot but feel deeply interested in, and I will rapidly allude to a few, though time and strength will compel me to be brief, and to omit even a notice of many altogether. In the first place, one cannot but be astonished at the multitudes who arrive constantly there from other lands. How are they disposed of? I fear we don't sufficiently sympathize with our brethren across the Atlantic in regard to this matter. In New York alone, no fewer than about 1000 arrive daily; at Boston, 17,000 to 20,00 a year; at Philadelphia much about the same number. Altogether, about half a million must arrive every year from the Eastern world. We hear of emigration from England, Scotland, and Ireland, but we don't think of other countries who had a large share. As a matter of curiosity, I made some inquiry on this point; and I find that last year there were from England, 30,000; Ireland, 157,000; Scotland, 8,000; Germany, 147,000 (there is always a large number from Germany;) France, 6000; Russia contributes her 112; together with Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Holland, Belgium, Switzerland, Italy, Spain, Portugal, Turkey, Sardinia—in short, every country in Europe; some in Asia and Africa; many from South America. After enumerating the precise numbers from each country, Dr. Duff proceeded—What is to be done with these immense heterogenous multitudes! How a city like New York is able to withstand this constant influx, it is difficult to say; and were it not for the Anglo-Saxon energy, characteristic of its people, it could not withstand such a continual pressure. It is true, great numbers proceed to the West, but the worst are left behind, as a residuum of poverty, vice, and crime; and it must require a vast digestive power to swallow, assimilate, and dispose of these vast multitudes. In Staten Island they have an establishment for really destitute emigrants and their children—the average number maintained and taught there being almost 3000. I visited this institution, and naturally inquired how many Scotch were in it. Well, at that time, in the juvenile department of 700, there was just one single representative for Scotland. (Applause.) This was a little girl, who had been only three weeks there; and I begged that she might be pointed out to me, just as a curiosity—(laughter)—"And who," I asked, anticipating the answer, "give you most trouble here?" "O, you need scarcely ask," was the reply—"the Irish." Not the Presbyterians from Ulster, however—(applause)—but the crime and destitution are where Popery is—that is the testimony of the United States.

CHURCHES.

With regard, then, to the means employed for encountering and melting down this prodigious host into sober and homogeneous Americanism, there is no time to go into details. I have here statistics of the Churches, which do exert a weighty influence; but time will not admit of my entering into particulars. Altogether, there are 36,000 churches—a church for every 500 or 600 of the inhabitants of the United States; and the bulk of these churches are in the hands of evangelical Christians. (Applause.) The Methodists are the most numerous, having about 12,000 churches; and, like the Methodists in England, they are good scriptural Christians. The Baptists come next in point of numbers, having about 8000 churches. They are sound in faith, however much they may differ from others in the matter of baptism by dipping. Then comes the Presbyterians, who have 5000 churches—I mean the different sections put together. It is a matter of delightful hopefulness for the States, that the great bulk of the churches are in the hands of persons substantially sound in the faith. Coming down to infidel or other sects, they are very small alongside of these great bodies.

SCHOOLS.

Next, we may glance at their schools. First of all, it may be known, that in all the Northern States, what are called public or common schools, have been got up at the public expense. They voluntarily tax themselves for these, and children are taught there gratuitously. Connected with each circuit of schools in the great towns, there is a free academy for higher education to the elite of the schools. The system differs in different States; but the general Government has determined, with reference to the new Western States, that due provision shall be made for a proper system of education being there established; and accordingly, in every new State they set apart millions of acres, to be devoted some day to education, especially of a collegiate or academical kind. In every district of sixteen miles square they additionally set apart one square mile, or the sixteenth part, as a local fund for common education, when that district is planted with human beings. In the Northern States, in particular, the proportional number in attendance is somewhat beyond what is to be found even in Prussia. Why, it is astonishing to see the edifices they get up there for educational purposes. They say they will have nothing to do with small, paltry, close, confined, ill-ventilated school-houses. Their common school-houses in New York and elsewhere are like palaces, three or four stories high; and they get some 1500 or two thousand children to attend. They are really furnished up and replenished most tastefully and handsomely, and the rooms are remarkably healthy and airy. Go into one of these crowded rooms, containing 500 children, and as far as fresh air is concerned, you may almost as well go into the airiest drawing-room or saloon in Edinburg. And the training of the children in these schools is admirable. Why, every little boy in any one of them has the idea that he will some day be the President of the United States; and why should he not endeavor to become a great man? The whole training is well fitted to develope, not only the mental faculties, but to inculcate the duties of citizenship. There is an energy and vigor, and an apparently precocious thoughtfulness and free out-spokenness, in even a boy of the age of twelve, that makes him appear already a little man. They must be debaters; and even the political questions of the day are often debated under the management of the schoolmasters. This is the training to which these children are, to a great extent, undergoing for American citizenship. As to another part—the Christian part of it—how is this managed? It differs exceedingly in different States and districts; and it would require a whole night to go into the discriminating differences, and I can scarcely attempt to scratch even the surface.

POPERY AND PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

But here let me advert to the interference of Popery with the common school system. The Americans, some twenty or thirty years ago, thought of Popery that it was an effete, antiquated thing, come over from the old world, and would soon be dissolved and disappear in their free land. It had been found, however, a tougher thing than that, and a harder bone to be digested. They gradually began to find out that, for the Papists began to play a strange game, under the pretence of liberty of conscience, right of citizenship, and all that nomenclature which Papists know so well how to employ when it suits their purpose. (Hear, hear.) But liberty of conscience coming out of Popery is like the icebergs of the North Pole coming out of the heat of the solar beams, or the flowers, and fruits, and stately palm-trees of the tropics springing out of the ices of the North Pole. (Applause.) The one is as true as the other. The American citizens, however, believed them at first. Practically they said, We won't interfere with another man's conscience, and so on. And by and by the Papists take them in and say, These schools interfere with our consciences; and they did it so slyly, that some of the Directors and Board of Management of these schools so far conceded the point before they were fully aware what they were doing. And I had the curiosity to bring over two old school-books to exemplify the kind of thing they did deliberately before people came to be aware of it. In one of these school-books there was a section upon Martin Luther; and they said, There are things there that are distressing to our consciences; but the book is stereotyped, and great numbers have been thrown off; What shall we do? It would be a terrible loss to sacrifice the thousands of printed volumes and the stereotypes. O, but you can blot out the thing of which we conscientiously complain. Now, just look at the way they have blotted or blackened the obnoxious pages or paragraphs of the book (holding up a school-book with the page blackened with ink, amid the laughter of the Assembly.) The next chapter he exhibited was a long one, and two opposite pages of it are of such an odious kind to the Papists, that they have pasted them all together, so as to form one thick leaf (holding up the pasted leaf, to the amusement of the Assembly.) That was on account of the allusions to Cranmer. Then there is the famous speech of Chatham on the American war, in which allusion is made to the Popish atrocities. That sentence is blotted in the same manner. In the poetry, too, the same system is adopted. In Goldsmith's Travoller there is a couplet blotted out (holding up the book amidst renewed laughter.) People at last began to say, "Our children bring home black-patched books;" and they thought that looked rather odd; but, not to break up the stereotype, in the next edition they simply broke up that part of it which contained these sections; so the next edition comes out with a white blank leaf, or white blank spots here and there, in this way. [Here the reverend Doctor held up another specimen with the pages blank, amidst cheers and roars of laughter.] So that with this blank leaf or spot it was not so odious to the eye as the black patch, as you might think some one had stuck in the page, did the paging not show the real state of matters.

Well, all this was going on, and American citizens began to think there was something under this; and by and by the Papists began to speak of the use of the Bible in the schools as an offense to their consciences. We have no objection to the Bible. You may read it as much as you like, of course. It is the interpretation you put upon it that we object to. Well, so far to meet the humor of the Papists about this, they entered into this arrangement, that henceforth, at the opening of the school, a chapter of the Bible should be simply, but solemnly, and reverently read, without note or comment, by the master or mistress, and the Lord's Prayer rehearsed to them; so that it was agreed there could be no reasonable objection, since the Bible is not a sectarian work or Protestant work, but a Christian work, designed for the instruction of the world. I allude to these things because it was in this stealthy manner the Papists came to unmask what was really a religious system, and evacuate it of its more special religious instruction. Still, the Papists would not be satisfied till the Bible was banished altogether. When it came to that, in some cases the thing was done; but being left by the State to the local boards to do as they thought proper, they generally said, you Universalists, Unitarians, Baptists, Methodists, Episcopalians, Presbyterians, and all other sects, you all believe in the Bible, and nobody can object to the Bible being read in the school without note or comment. And, in fact, nobody did object but the Papists. Even the infidels and atheists did not usually at least object to it, as they thought it would teach their children good morals. But nothing satisfies the Papists but the Bible must be banished altogether. The Americans, as a body, could not stand that. They said, "If you are so much against the Bible, it must be because the Bible is against you, and we cannot stand that." (Hear, hear.) Even the great statesman Webster comes forward to defend the Bible as a part of unsectarian instruction to be established in the schools. Then he lays it down as a principle that Christianity is an integral, component part of the American Constitution. This flows through the State; and now it is growing up to be the dominant dogma. We do not ask foreigners to come to us,—they pitch themselves on us whether we will or no; but if they come and submit to our laws and become American citizens, they are welcome; if otherwise, we must see to it that they shall not be allowed to subvert those free institutions, set up at the cost of our fathers' blood, and under which we have so flourished. * * * * * *

A TRANSFORMATIVE PROCESS.

There is a strange transformative process going on yonder. For the first generation you have all the old medley of tongues—quite a Babel of them—with the ten thousand varying habits and prejudices of their different sects and nations; there they get up their own newspapers, get up their own journals, their own discussions, their own Bible, through a whole variety of tongues. Ah! but the children—they mingle with other children, and the children all hope one day to be magistrates, governors and presidents of the United States. "What! am we to be shut out?" "Yes, unless you learn the English language—unless you come to the common school, and there read what we learn on history, the principles of our Constitution, on true, Christian morality." Well, it is perfectly astonishing with what power and rapidity this process is telling; how it is melting, and fusing, and moulding down these strange heterogenous masses. Generally the great bulk of them are moulded down in the second or third generation, and all the Babel of tongues disappear; and if not thoroughly Christianized, they are undone with regard to Germna Pantheisms, and Irish Pecperics, and such like, and therefore open to something better. Then the Papists found they could not drive the Bible out of the schools—and I am happy to say it is but from a very small fraction of the schools the Bible has been excluded. And now, almost everywhere they try to make up for the deficiency of religious instruction in the schools, by insisting on parents being more diligent—by insisting on Subbath-schools becoming more vigorous, and productive of spiritual fruits, and parents helping to educate them, so that they might make up by Sabbath-school instruction and parental instruction for that which most of them would like to see given in the common school; but to the comparative exclusion of which they had submitted for the present under very peculiar and exigent circumstances. And then, in numbers of instances, private and parochial schools are voluntarily established and supported, in which an out and out religious education is given. I have no doubt, from what I have seen, that the great bulk of the Christian people of the United States are determined the Bible shall never be shut out from their schools; and that the rising tendency is, to require not only that it shall be read, but also to have it fully explained and enforced as to its great leading truths. That is the disposition chiefly developed. The Papists next turned round, saying—since you won't drive the Bible out of your schools, give us a share of the public money, and we shall set up schools for ourselves. * * * The reply was, that they might get back the share they had themselves contributed, but that was so small, that in the common school system they actually got each twelve dollars for one. It was found, moreover, that in the taxes for pauperism, the Papists generally got back ten or twelve times what they contributed, besides supplying their jails. They said, "You are rather a costly set. It is rather bad to ask us to pay you for making us pay ten times more for keeping you from starvation, and for putting you in jail." (Laughter.) No, the Americans have resisted that, and I believe they will resist the Popish application utterly. Would that Britain could take a lesson in this respect from America!—(applause)—then our Maynooths would be down to-morrow, and cast at once and forever to the bottom of the sea. (Hear, hear.) We have many lessons to learn in these matters yet.

KNOW NOTHINGS.

Why, I may mention in passing, as a singular characteristic of America, that in New York there has sprung up a new sect lately. It calls itself the "Know Nothings." What the whole of their object may be, nobody well knows; but the result of their establishment proves this, that this class are striving very much to counteract the insidious underworkings of Popery. (Hear, hear.) And they show it in many ways. They go quietly to elections—nobody knows about them; and of late it has been found that an aim under Popish influence in getting into power and authority. Not long ago (just to show the working of the thing), a man in New York began to preach openly in the streets and elsewhere against Papacy, and some of the Papists, just as in Ireland and other places, began to hoot and pelt the man with mud. When this was heard of, in due time a great number of these "Know Nothing" got into the crowd, so that for every Papist there was a "Know Nothing."—Well, the Protestant man went on expounding Popery, while the Papists, as usual, began to hoot. Suddenly, every Papist got a firm thwack on the side of the head with the most thorough American gravity—(great laughter)—coupled with such words as these: "Sir, this is a free country; every man is entitled to speak; and, sir, when the man is done, if you want to answer him, we will see to it that you get justice." Well, if it had been only one or two who behaved in this manner, they would soon have been overpowered, but the Papists, seeing the apparent ubiquitousness of these "Know Nothings," were glad to give in. (Cheers.) They tried it again and again, however, but always with the same result so that ere long full liberty of speech was established in the free city of New York. I do not know whether we could imitate this or not at home—(laughter)—but, at all events, the plan has proved quite successful over the water. (Hear, hear.) Now, with reference to Popery in America, the general conclusion is, that in America it is undoubtedly to find its grave—(applause)—its influence is unmistakeably on the decline, its power is melting away.

ROMANTIC INCIDENT—THE LOST HAND.—A paper printed at Elizabethtown, New Jersey, gave an account last fall of a gravious misfortune to a young girl 13 years old, named Meta Taylor. She was running to cross the railroad track, when she stumbled and fell. Just at that moment the cars of the New Brunswick road came up, and the locomotive cut off her left hand, which lay over the rail. In the confusion of the moment the hand was not picked up; and finally, when it was looked for, it could not be found. It was feared some animal had carried it off, and this thought was very distressing to the mother of the girl, as well as to Meta herself. Last week the lost hand was recovered as follows:

A young man from Elizabethtown happened to call on a friend of his at a boarding house in Eighth street, New York. On the shelf in the room he saw a glass jar, with a pretty little hand suspended in it, preserved in spirits. It had a ring on the third finger, and was in every respect a lady-like looking hand. He thought at once of the lost hand in Elizabethtown, but he did not suspect that this was the one. On asking his friend whose hand it was, he was told that it came from the Medical College, as his room-mate was a medical student. The young man thought no more of the matter until he got home, when he mentioned what he had seen.

His sister told him that Meta Taylor's lost hand a ring on the third finger, which she described. This ring was exactly like that on the hand in the jar. The sequel may be told in a few words.

Meta Taylor came over to New York along with her mother and the young man alluded to. Proceeding at once to the house on Eighth street she recognized the preserved hand in the jar as her long lost member. The student gave it up very cheerfully, assuring the young girl that he bought it of a person who supplied bodies to the Medical College. It is suspected, however, that he stole the hand himself, as he was known to have been down at New Brunswick about the time the hand was cut off, and was probably a passenger in the cars that very day.

FREAKS OF TELEGRAPH REPORTING.—The intensely condensed dispatches of the telegraphic reporters for the press frequently lead to the most amusing mistakes. By the last California steamer, the "lightning line" put us in possession of the following item:

"The news from the mines is encouraging. There has been a slight fall of snow at Jamalgan."

It will scarcely be believed that the above is nothing more nor less than a tolerable free translation of the subjoined paragraph, which appears in the San Francisco Chronicle:

"The Grand Jury of the United States District Court have found true bills against Walker, Nasso and Jernigan."

The reporter at New Orleans must be a bright youth. (Washington Star.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Christian Advocate.

Terms: $2 50 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:

SATURDAY, JULY 8, 1854.

Oh, for more such.—Rev. D. C. B. Connorly, of Pickens Ct., Ala. Con., has obtained and forwarded to the Advocate since Conference, fifty new subscribers, and collected in forty-three old ones—cash.

Rev. E. W. Griswold, of Farmerville Ct., La. Con., since Conference, has obtained forty-three new subscribers—cash.

Rev. H. B. Kemp, local preacher, Bastrop, La., has sent fifteen new subscribers, cash, since Conference.

Brethren, remember these Resolutions at last Annual Conferences: the traveling preachers to obtain twenty new subscribers, the local preachers ten.

"Shepherd of the Valley."—The publication at St. Louis of this weekly paper has been suspended. The publisher in his valedictory says it did not pay. He was losing money, and hence was compelled to suspend its publication. The Shepherd was an organ of the Catholic faith, and we notice its discontinuance because it had obtained some notoriety for the boldness with which it enunciated its views in regard to religious toleration.

Central Texan.—Such is the title of a weekly newspaper, just out, in Anderson, Texas, published and edited by J. D. & R. A. Vanhorn. The Texan is an interesting and workman-like sheet, well located. The enterprise must do well, and we enter an exchange with pleasure.

The German Appeal.—The attention of those addressed is invoked to the letter of the Rev. J. M. Hofer. He enjoys the utmost confidence of his brethren here, who know his life and work. His cause is good. Receive him—help him. Never was there a better prospect in the South-west for promoting Evangelical Christianity among the Germans—a people fast increasing, in numbers, wealth, social, moral and political influence. What the Churches have bestowed this way, has been judiciously and economically administered.

Magazines.—The National Magazine holds on its way and leads.

Godey—for June—is on hand. In this number the editor has sought to improve on his previous efforts, in his embellishments, and he has succeeded. The line engraving of Noah, is of superior merit.

Quarterlies.—The North British Review for May, is on our table. The first article and most interesting—"Plurality of Worlds," we shall republish, in part, at as early a day as possible. The Earth is not the only inhabited sphere. By the way, this commences a new volume for the North British. The other Reviews and Blackwood, begin a new volume in July. The time for subscription is favorable. See advertisement.

Harper for July.—One of his best specimens. We have a copy through McGinnis & Carver, 36 Camp street.

Methodist Quarterly—for July.—As the Editor, Dr. McClintock, is away to Germany, we shall not dip into it greedily.

Rev. John Lane.—On Sabbath last, 18th ult., says the Lake Providence Herald, this venerable and distinguished man of God, preached the funeral sermon of the late Rev. Benjamin A. Haughton.

The sermon of Mr. Lane was well timed and highly appropriate. It could not have been more so. He is now sixty-six years of age; has been preaching the Gospel of glad tidings forty-one years, and has served in five general conferences. He has preached over a thousand funeral sermons, and has celebrated the rights of matrimony more frequently perhaps than any other clergyman in the South-west. Mr. Lane has been a citizen of the city of Vicksburg over thirty years, and enjoys the confidence of every man, woman and child in his large and influential district.

Dr. Summers.—The friends of Dr. Thomas O. Summers belonging to the Trinity Church, Charleston, S. C., have presented him with an elegant gold watch, as an expression of grateful esteem for his occasional services in their Church.

Change in Sacramento.—Rev. J. L. Shuck has determined to settle in Sacramento City, California, and labor there with the Chinese. He will attempt at once to have a meeting house erected.

Stewart, in a note in his hand book on Wesleyan Methodists, states that Methodism has been shorn of nearly one hundred thousand of its members in the struggle for reform in its government and administration.

Episcopal College in California.—Mr. Thos. Larkin, of San Francisco, has made a donation to Bishop Kip of six hundred and forty acres of land for an Episcopal College. The Bishop has selected a site for it in the Sonoma Valley, thirty miles from San Francisco, and an application is to be made to the Legislature for a charter of the proposed institution, under the name of the "Trinity College of Larkin." It is anticipated that it will be liberally encouraged by donations

THE SOUTH-MOVING LINE.

SOUTHERN AID SOCIETY.

We have regarded the enterprise of establishing a Church at Corpus Christi with favor, and promoted it as we could. The difficulties of accomplishing it were counted beforehand by those who started it—the Texas Conference. They are great, but not uncommon. Methodism has obtained a footing in many places under similar discouragements. The Minister appointed to this task appears to be equal to it in endurance, perseverance and zeal. His colaborers of the Conference are not unfamiliar or unsuccessful in the hardest pioneer work. They are the "Texas Rangers" of the Church, South.

A point of operation thus early and firmly established at Corpus Christi, will command the important valley of the Nueces as it opens up. It is an important post for the evangelical army of occupation under our Lord Jesus Christ. It is part of a system of approaches upon the Mexican frontier that the Churches of the United States ought to be maturing.

The M. E. Church, South, we hope, will especially have this in care. She is now the strongest of any in the South and West of Texas. This is the moving line—the Southern line, that it behooves her to follow up. The Northern line may remain where it is. The work there, if not done by us, will be done by others. We are satisfied if it remain stationary. But this Southern line should be continually moving down. This is the last pointed out to the M. E. Church, South, for possession. The Isthmus of Panama must be reached, and then Cape Horn. Here is work and outlet and destiny for the far-seeing directory of our Missionary Society. It is home work, Southern work—the work of evangelizing Central and South America. China is important, and Africa—but America more so.

Before many years, we hope to see strong Missionary posts established all along the Rio Grande valley. As yet, Brownsville stands alone. If the Texas Conference furnishes the men and does the prospecting, she ought not to be left alone to bear the burden.

We began this article to bring before our readers again, and to solicit their speedy and large aid in behalf of this Corpus Christi Church. A merchant of this city (a local preacher) having visited the place and given help, received this letter from the pastor, which has been handed us for any use we might deem expedient:

Corpus Christi, Texas,
April 3, 1854.

Dear Brother: Through the kind and tender mercies of our Heavenly Father I am still here and enjoying good health, struggling with the adversities that surround me. I have been in expectation of hearing from you or Bro. Rice, but am almost led to fear that you are both either sick or dead, or have forgotten Corpus Christi. Capt. Arnet of the Barber forwarded to me by the schooner William, the lumber to complete the church in Corpus; but its arrival found me far behind the necessary amount of funds to meet the demand, and I am in serious fear that I shall be compelled to sell a part of the lumber. The church wall has stood exposed more than four months without a cover. It is true, the material is such as not to be damaged by the weather; yet it looks discouraging to see the wall of a house designed for the worship of God, standing so long without a roof.

I received from New York $150, $50 of which was from Mr. Phelps, and $100 from the Southern Aid Society. The army family have been very kind and liberal, considering they are but temporarily located here. I am fully persuaded that if all the good people could see or realize the situation of this town and country, in a moral point of view, they would assist us.

I will be pleased to hear from you often. Tell Bro. Rice I am inexpressibly anxious to hear from him, and would rejoice to see him.

We are still gaining in numbers in Corpus, and immigrants are coming into the valley of the Nueces river, with some considerable capital. One has recently come with one thousand head of cattle, and another with a considerable number of slaves.

Please pray for us and talk for us, for, I can assure you, a Missionary here needs help and encouragement.

If you think the annexed sheet worth an insertion, please hand it to the editor of the N. O. Christian Advocate.

Your brother in Christ,
H. S. Lafferty,
Missionary Corpus Christi, Texas.
Rev. R. W. Rayne.

One exception we would make to the course of Bro. Lafferty—consenting to receive $100 from the Southern Aid Society. We are not posted up with documentary evidence as to this Society, but know something of it. One of its Agents was in Alabama and Georgia lately, and may be there now collecting funds. It is located in New York, and under the control of ——— who knows! We have a distrust of these irresponsible Associations. This one especially wears a face offensively patronizing to the South. A Society in New York for Southern Aid. Verily! And what are their principles, religious and civil? Of course, where they give money, they claim the power of dictation. We like it not. This is the first, last and only case we have heard of in which a Methodist Church in the South, has consented to receive any alms from this Society; and we hope it will be returned, and that promptly. Already this single case has been trumpeted through the land—made the basis of appeal at the South for funds to be disbursed in New York, and doubtless this $100 has yielded thousands already. We hope it will be returned, and public notice made to that effect.

With the embarrassment of our lone Brother, acting without counsel, we sympathise. His Conference will hardly approve this step, though one can readily account for it under burden, and the sooner the enterprise is relieved of it, the sooner will it succeed.

We shall be happy to act as Agent for this cause, acknowledging in our columns, and forwarding any sums donated. Let us have the money to refund this $100 and build the Church. Send it on without delay. It is wanted.

AN AMERICAN DIPLOMA.

"A protest has been made against the recognition of degrees from American "Universities" conferred upon persons in Great Britain. At a meeting of the Established Church Synod of Angus and Mearns, upon an Intimation that the minister of Fordoun was now designated Dr. Buchan, Mr. Whyte, of Fettercairn, objected to that style being accorded him—urging that, as a Church Court, they had no right nor power to acknowledge a title having a foreign origin. No decision was come to, it being stated that the subject was likely to come before the Assembly."

This item, with various comments, has gone the round of the American press. Jonathan's literary mettle has shown itself in some of them. Jonathan thinks his degrees, like every thing else emanating from his American workshops, as good as any body else's.

English merit in some cases has obtained from American Universities a recognition, in this way, which party and social prejudices denied it at home. Perhaps the matter has been overdone. It ought to be known, however, that the D. D., or any other degree, has not been unasked or given every time it was asked. An English "Church Court," jealous of the domestic monopoly, may rule them out, but they are in demand. One of the rarest, unique-est applications in this line of things is now on our table. We shall lay it up in our cabinet of literary curiosities, labeled—"An English application for an American Diploma." Any wonder that the accommodating Americans, under stress of such applications, backed by such endorsements, have shown a tendency to glut the market.

Here is the letter entire; names of places and persons omitted:—

———, South Wales.
8 March, 1854.

Mr. R——,

My Dear Sir: I have taken the liberty of requesting the favor of yr. assistance, in order to procure an American diploma.

Such a diploma, of what degree I leave with you, would greatly assist me in the literary department in which I am engaged in connexion with —— Church, of this country.

Already I have published several small works, for the young, one of which I enclose.

Should any reference be required, whether lay or clerical, I shall be most happy in furnishing the same.

Should you, sir, be able to procure for me the favor requested in this communication, you will thereby greatly oblige—

My dear sir,
Yours truly,
(Profession and Residence stated in full.)

P. S.—The Bearer of this note, Captain N———, has kindly engaged to forward this to you and to bring me any reply.

On the other half of sheet is the endorsement:

"The present applicant, Rev. ———, is favorably known to me, and I do most cheerfully recommend him, both as regards his literary and moral character, as worthy of the distinction he seeks.

Consular Agent of U. S. A.
———, April 8, 1854."

This latter, as the former latter, bears every mark of national individuality and authenticity. The book referred to is a clever, primer affair.

The way it was: Capt. N——, the bearer, commands a fine ship trading to this port. He is one of the best of that brave, generous sort that live on decks. The spirit of railroads in the South seeds him to Wales for iron. While there, being "some" in his way, the applicant makes his acquaintance and turns it to account for an "American Diploma." Asks to be referred to a "party" here to put him through. Why, of course, Capt. N. bethinks him of Capt. R., who lives here, a noble soul in his way—the official inspector of hulls! The most natural thing in the world, this reference!

Capt. R. entered our sanctum a few days ago, looking not as genial as common. There was something on his mind. He was serious as death. "What, has a ship foundered at sea—without insurance! Any leaky hulls—rotten bottoms?" None of these.

Pulling out the document—"Look here, Parson, I've got something here—strange—don't understand it—what does this fellow want? Not in my line, no how. Read that and tell me what you think of it."

The Captain says if the fellow wanted his timbers inspected, or any thing so, he is his man. But a diploma—what's that? And how the fellow expects him to get him a diploma!

A more capital farce has not transpired. It is broad—yet as long as it is broad. All the parties in cold, sober earnest!

We give this instance of application—opportune just as is, to vindicate the American diploma as not obtruded upon the upturned noses. It is not going a begging.

The form of it may be serviceable. Doubtless the applicant acted advisedly as to the best plan for putting the matter through.

The Methodist Episcopal Church, North, comprises a membership of 740,606, and its contributions for Missionary purposes in 1852, amounted to $210,447.

Lake Providence, La.—The Herald says:

Our Methodist friends, in this place, are making arrangements to repair their Church. The foundation and walls of the building are good, and all that is necessary to render the house comfortable and handsome, is the expenditure of about twelve or fifteen hundred dollars. With a gentleman of Mr. Harps' energy and business habits, the work will be accomplished in the shortest possible time.

SISTERS OF CHARITY.

The City Hospital of Mobile, Alabama, have been, like many others, under the control of Sisters of Charity. Reports have often been told of their partiality to patients ascertained to be Papists, and neglect of Protestants mutilating and destroying Bibles left for their use—refusing to send for Protestant ministers when requested by sick and dying persons, and urging upon them their priests because theirs was the only true Religion!

Two months ago complaints were formally made by an Alderman before the Governors, who, on a full investigation that ended last week, sustained the charge that the Sisters had made their management of the Hospital "subservient to and instrumental in the propagation of sectarian principles."

The resignation of the Sisters was accepted, and the management of the Hospital otherwise provided for.

ROOM FOR IMPROVEMENT.

A member of the Providence Conference recently made a visit to New Jersey. He gives the following account of a Sabbath in Newark, and the condition of the Church there:

On the Sabbath I was at Newark, N. J., by invitation. In the morning I preached at the Central Church for Bro. Dunn. This is a fine Gothic church, the best in the city, which is saying much; for Newark abounds in fine churches. And I opine that there are also five men belonging to it; for one brother was introduced to me who had given $10,000 toward the structure. The congregation, also, was one upon which to feast one's eyes—it was one of the finest upon which it has ever been my pleasure to gaze. In the afternoon and evening, I was at the Halsey street Church for Bro. Vansant. This is one of the largest churches in the United States, and for elegance, simplicity, size and commodiousness, it is a model of its kind. Halsey Street is the mother church of the Methodist churches in that city, of which there are now eight—a worthy mother of many fair daughters. And yet our brethren in Newark are now building a church which is to surpass all the others. It is Gothic, and the chapel alone has already cost them $17,000, the church to be finished in corresponding style. And yet, this church is to be free! It is situated on Broad St., which is one of the finest avenues in the United States, and of which it will be one of the most attractive ornaments. Newark is a most beautiful city, although, it being mostly new, it is yet in an unfinished state. It must probably be esteemed the center of Methodism for the Middle States. The religious enterprise of our friends here exceeds almost every thing that can be found elsewhere. [Zion's Herald.

Methodism is stronger relatively in Newark than in any other city of any considerable size in the country; and to the observing mind the reason is obvious. It has strided and kept pace with the wants of the community, in church accommodations. This is true not only in reference to the capacity of her churches, but in reference to the style of their architecture. Her judicious and liberal members have wisely judged that the maintenance of Methodism in its purity and vigor did not require the erection of unsightly, uncouth buildings—in out-of-way streets and lanes—to be kept dingy, dirty and uninviting—but that her doctrines were worthy of the very best edifices that could be had. Consequently they have spared neither pains nor expense, as the above extract will indicate. "But it required wealth to do all this," says the reader. True, it did; and the judicious and tasteful outlay of their means was the very thing—instrumentally—that secured it, by attracting and attaching men of judgment, taste and means to them; the very class of men who, under a different prevailing taste, would have been repelled from the church—as they have been in a hundred instances—and Methodism been compelled to remain in the suburbs, or in some inaccessible lane.

Other things being equal, or nearly so, men will follow their tastes, and those of their families, in matters of religion. The advance of other churches, or the declension of Methodism in some of its distinguishing characteristics, have well-nigh annihilated the perceptible difference between us and them—thus rendering it impracticable for our church to rely upon a former obviously superior spiritual elevation, to secure adherents, do its work, and counteract fictitious advantages; it must, therefore, adapt its prudential and economical arrangements substantially to the prevailing taste of the times, or it must wane away.

A house for God should be a thing of praise itself—a perpetual anthem—continually eloquent of Him, to show it is sacred. No man can have a more utter abhorrence than we have of that heathenish extravagance that marks many of the churches of the day, especially in Northern cities. Still, there is no religion in smoky, dirty, uncouth slovenliness. It is unworthy of religion and God, and a thing for which men ought to pray to be forgiven.

CHEAP PERIODICALS.

Methodist Episcopal Book Concern.—Cheap Periodicals.—In consequence of the reduced price of the periodicals, the loss during the past year upon them was about $6,000. There were then 177,400 subscribers to the various periodicals, but it was necessary that a greater number should be had. During the year there were published over 12,000,000 tracts, and of bound volumes 2,961,215, which was equal to 9,878 per day, 987 per hour, 164 per minute, or 2 44-60 per second. The profits of the Book Concern for the year notwithstanding the enhanced salaries paid to operatives in consequence of the increased expenses of living, after paying the salaries of the seven bishops, were about $53,000. It is worthy of notice, that the loss for the year upon their periodicals is about $6,000, and this notwithstanding their various subscription lists contain the immense number 177,000 subscribers! The loss is attributed to the reduction in price. [Methodist Protestant.

THE RISING GENERATION.

[The following article was prepared for last week, but overlooked.—Ed.]

Sabbath School Celebration.—The eighth anniversary of the New Orleans District Sabbath School Union, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was celebrated Sabbath evening, 24th ult., at the McGehee Church, Carondelet street. The Union extends over the city of New Orleans and the towns of Algiers, Gretna, Bonligny and Carrollton. It embraces twelve schools, in four of which the German language is exclusively used. It numbers 45 officers, 129 teachers, and 1026 scholars; and is doing much good to the children of the places over which its jurisdiction extends. The officers and teachers display a laudable zeal in its cause, and do all in their power to increase its usefulness and extend its influence.

At the hour appointed, 4 o'clock P. M., the different schools could be seen in processions, with beautiful banners, coming from various directions towards the church, and caused the neighborhood to look quite gay and animated. The Church, although very large, was crowded almost to suffocation with neatly dressed little girls and smart little boys, and such of their parents and friends as were fortunate enough to find seats. The banners contained very appropriate devices, and were placed in conspicuous positions on the stage which had been erected in front of the pulpit. On one of them we read, in the German language, the following singularly appropriate quotation from the Holy Book:

"Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me; for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven."

The scene presented in the Church was one of the most delightful we ever witnessed.

The assembly was called to order by some prelatory remarks from W. H. Foster, Esq., the worthy President of the Union, who superintended all the arrangements and exercises.

The Editor of the Bulletin, on the next day, held the following language in his paper:

Methodist Church, Carondelet street, was yesterday crowded to overflowing by children and adults, for the purpose of Sabbath School Celebration. The church presented a scene of great interest, and we envy not the head or heart of him who could look upon it without emotion. There must have been nearly fifteen hundred children present, of all ages, from infancy upwards. The union embraces twelve schools, eight English and four German. Many little pieces were very prettily recited by the children, and anon the whole would join with the greatest emotion in a hymn of praise that made the welkin ring. These Sabbath Schools are doing much for the good of this city, silently, it is true, but effectively. The Methodists are an eminently practical working people. They take hold of things in earnest. They scour the outskirts of the city. They plunge into the swamp. They explore the highways and byways. They rake the gutters of moral filth, and whenever they find a straggling little orchin, they by right hold of him, scrub him, comb him down, wake him up, and push him right into the temple! Soon he is a merry boy, clothed and in his right mind; and directly he is a man, an honest man, whose word is as good as his note, whose vote cannot be purchased, who can be relied on in any emergency, that requires the exhibition of the noblest characteristics of humanity. In this way they are saving hundreds from vice, crime and the penitentiary, in this city; hundreds that but for them, would go to swell the black, seething tide of degradation and ignorance that is hurrying so many young vagrants to premature and unhonored graves among us. The Methodist of New Orleans are creating for themselves a monument whose base rests on the lowly places of earth, and whose apex penetrates the serene heavens, and is lost amid the radiating effulgence of the celestial city.

The occasion passed off well, with fine moral effect. The schools are prosperous.

TEMPERANCE CONVENTION AND RESOLUTIONS.

The State Temperance Convention of Alabama met early in last month, in Montgomery. R. H. Powell, Esq., was Chairman. The Convention presented a strong array of influential citizens, and their platform is distinct, judicious and solid. A similar law in Louisiana is now working, and killing off grog-shops capitally.

We give the important item in the proceedings of the Convention just held at Montgomery. We invite the attention of our readers, without distinction, to its simple, republican, and conservative declaration. They desire no legislation inconsistent with the Bill of Rights, but in the name of humanity, they demand that something should be done to arrest the terrible evil pervading every department of civil and social life. The social and intellectual caste of the body thus addressing the people, should silence the unjust suspicion of contemplated intolerance, at least, and award a liberal measure of disinterestedness.

The following preamble and resolutions were submitted and adopted:

Whereas, the present License System of ——, Alabama, established, maintained and administered by law, is adverse to the best interests of this State, and in direct hostility to the great object that every intelligent, judicious, government should seek to promote; and whereas, the firm and deliberate judgment of a large number of our thoughtful citizens, irrespective of parties, sects and churches, has been openly and earnestly expressed against this system as it is now sanctioned and executed; and whereas, this system in its practical working allows none of our citizens to exercise their civil rights to arrest the dreadful evils which flow from it. Be it therefore Resolved by this Convention—

1st. That if the State of Alabama think it expedient and right to allow a License System to stand upon her Statute Book, we claim at the hands of her general assembly such a modification of the present system as shall be more in accordance with the individual and local interests of her citizens.

2d. That by the foregoing Resolution we wish it to be distinctly understood, that we do not sanction this opinion that a License System allowing the sale of intoxicating drinks as a common beverage in any form is in itself morally right and proper.

3d. That this Convention hereby pledges itself to use all justifiable means to secure such a change in the present License System of Alabama as shall embody,

1st. The full recognition of the principle as presented in the Preamble and Resolutions of the Convention in Montgomery, that the allowance of the retail trade in intoxicating drinks is a question to be decided by the people, who are immediately and directly affected by its operations.

2d. The incorporation into our State License System of the principle that all our communities shall have the right to select the retailer of intoxicating drinks by requiring him to obtain a recommendation therefor from a majority of the voters and heads of families in the city, ward, town, village or election precinct in which such applicant proposes to sell intoxicating drinks; and that on no other condition said license shall be granted.

3d. That we hereby solmenly pledge ourselves to support no man for the office of Governor of Alabama at the next election, Senator or Representatives to the next General Assembly at its next session (1855-6) who shall not satisfy us fully as to his firm and inflexible devotion to the principles involved in the proposed change of the License System of our State and his hearty willingness to unite with the friends of Temperance in the necessary means to be used for the accomplishment of the object contemplated.

LETTER FROM REV. W. H. SEAT

Gonzales, Texas, June 26, 1854.

Mr. Editor:—Please change my Advocate from San Antonio to Gonzales, Texas. I have been compelled to give up my charge on account of ill health. It may be that my health will so far improve as to enable me to take light work next year. I cannot tell as yet. It has improved since I left my work.

San Antonio is a very interesting and important field of labor. The population amounts to some seven or eight thousand, from one-third to one-half Mexicans, the remainder nearly equally divided between Americans and Germans. The Mexicans and Germans are mostly Roman Catholics. Ours is the leading Protestant denomination. During my stay there of three months, there were six conversions and seventeen accessions to the Church, mostly on probation, and a flourishing Sabbath School of some seventy scholars, established in the Methodist Church. My sojourn there was very pleasant, with the exception of family and personal affliction. I have never felt, I believe, quite so much interest in any other field of labor as in San Antonio. But my health completely failing, for the time being, at least, I was compelled to abandon it.

Your Brother in the Gospel,
Wm. H. Seat.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

THE GERMANS IN MOBILE.

As it may not generally be known to the friends of Missions abroad, that a Missionary Church for the German Mission in Mobile was built this spring, allow me to make known this fact through the Advocate.

About nine years ago the Alabama Conference established a Mission among the Germans in Mobile. This Mission had a fair beginning, and prospered well the first two years. But for some years past it struggled between life and death for the want of a suitable house of worship. To obviate this difficulty, the Churches in Mobile, at their Quarterly Conferences last winter, Brother Garrett, P. Elder, at their head, made an effort to procure a lot of ground, and resolved to build a church upon it. All hands willing, the building was put under contract. Mr. Rolwood, of Mobile, agreed to put it up for $2300. There was no trifling about it; six weeks after the contract was agreed to, the house stood, finished and ready for dedication.

Accordingly, on the 4th of June, the house was dedicated to the service of God by Rev. T. W. Dorman, in presence of a large assembly. Bro. Neely preached a very appropriate sermon for the occasion on the words: "Now, therefore, are we all present before God to hear all things that are commanded thee of God;" Acts 10, 33. A collection was taken up, which amounted to $258.

And now has this little flock got a home at last; the Mission is now more firmly established, and will no doubt prosper and grow under the labors of a pious Missionary. The house is in size 30 by 45 feet, fronting on St. Francis street. It is built of wood in plain Gothic style; the steeple being in good proportion with the building, makes a very good show.

The day of the dedication was a real holyday to us in a two-fold sense. In the first place, it happened to fall on a Sunday very sacred to the Germans on account of its being kept in commemoration of the great day of Pentecost. In the second, we were now permitted to see with our eyes a church accomplished.

Bro. Pauley and the writer, in connection with the Missionary Bro. Mäuss, labored one week in the new house, and, we trust, not without profit to the Mission. On Sunday the 11th, we administered the Sacrament of Baptism to several children, as also the Lord's Supper to about twenty communicants. The blessing of God attended the whole. Two joined the Church on probation, and the little flock was more firmly knit together in love to each other.

But now we come to the most important part of our report. There is resting a debt of $1000 on this greatly needed Missionary church, which, according to promise, must speedily be liquidated. There was collected in Mobile and New Orleans all at this time that could be. We are obliged to try the Missionary feelings again of our brethren and friends in the Alabama Conference. This pleasant part of Missionary work falls again to the lot of your humble Brother.

It is my design to make a visit to the western part of the State as soon as the time of Camp-meeting commences. The recollection of the liberality of our dear brethren and friends in Russell and Macon counties, as also in Columbus, Ga., keeps up our little courage, for we anticipate to find as much of the Missionary spirit in the western part of the Conference as we found in the eastern part. At any rate, we expect no failure at our contemplated trip. Would our precious time admit, we would most gladly accept the invitation already received to Salem Camp-meeting in September next.

Now, dear brethren, you would confer a great favor on your humble Brother in the labor of love, if you would make me acquainted with the time of your Camp-meetings or Missionary meetings. I purpose, God willing, to start to Alabama towards the middle of August next. May God through Christ our Lord, order and overrule all things to the good of His cause and the glory of His adorable name.

John M. Hofer.

New Orleans, June 18th, 1854.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

IS IT RIGHT? IS IT FAIR?

Bro. McT.—I seldom trouble you or the public with any thing from my humble pen; but the above questions have forced themselves upon my mind, and I think demand the serious consideration of the Methodist people. They have reference to the practice which is too generally obtaining, viz: that any and every body can occupy our pulpits—friends or foes. And in proposing these questions, I have more direct reference to those Ministers occupying our pulpits who, while they receive this courtesy, openly denounce us as a sect, merely; not a Church, nor a branch of the Church, having no duly authorized Ministry, nor sacraments.

The time has been when an Episcopalian Bishop would scorn to company with us at all, or to occupy our houses of worship. But in these latter days they are exceedingly friendly, paying special attention to Methodist Ministers whenever they meet them, and very careful to visit Methodist families, leaving here and there "Tracts for the People" or some other such work for them to read.

Now, for one, I think the time has come either for us to deny them the use of our churches, or for them to reciprocate in the matter. How very strange and anti-Protestant has been their course toward all others. And yet they must receive all attention and courtesy. I believe in the doctrine that we should render good for evil; but I am unwilling to cherish a viper in my own bosom if I know it.

The Presbyterians may have an assembly meeting, the Baptists their conventions and associations, the Methodists their conferences, and on all such occasions the churches of these denominations are tendered for the accompancy of their brethren. But the Episcopal churches, with those of the old Mother harlots, are closed against us all. Does the savor of "Protestant" Christianity? Notwithstanding, I see from an article in your paper, that the Ministers attending the late Episcopal Convention of the diocese of Mississippi, at Jackson, were invited to occupy the Methodist and Presbyterian churches of that city; and all over the country it is seemingly considered quite a compliment that the Right Reverencey, the Bishop, should condescend to preach in a Methodist meeting-house. Now I repeat, it is time for them to reciprocate. It is not right—it is not fair, that we should receive a man into our houses and treat him kindly for the mean privilege of being told that we are not in the Church—that we are unbaptized—have no right to minister the sacrament. Still we are called "my dear brethren," and recognized as a sect of outdoor lobby member of the Church. Such cant is ridiculous, absurd; and the time has come for Methodists to say so.

Respectfully, H. P. S.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

TENSAS CHURCH,

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

But very few years ago, a traveler passing up that portion of the Tensas river which divides the parish of Tensas from Catahoula would see nothing but Nature in her native wildness, with hither and there, perhaps a squatter's cabin. But now the face of the country is changed. Fine plantations skirt the river, and every where we behold marks of wealth, taste and improvement.

Lately, a very neat and tasty church has been built there by the Methodists, as also by others who are not members of any church. I cannot give you the exact size of the building; it is large enough for the neighborhood, and it is the neatest house of worship that I have ever seen in a country place. The aisles are carpeted, the pulpit is very tastefully and conveniently trimmed, and the altar will correspond. The ladies contributed much with the "material aid" of young geothen—towards giving the church that finish which we always liked to see in the house for the worship of God. A very elegant Bible and hymn-book were presented by one lady, and an equally elegant sacramental service was presented by another.

A few Sabbaths ago, the church was dedicated to the service of Almighty God by Rev. W. H. Watkins, of Natchez, Miss. I did not have the pleasure of hearing Bro. Watkins preach on that occasion; we had to be in Natchez filling his place—very sorry for it—but we have been informed by good judges that it was an excellent and edifying discourse on the Christian religion—a very appropriate theme for the occasion. We hope it left an impress on the minds of the hearers that never will be eradicated.

Last Saturday and Sabbath our second Quarterly Meeting was held there. Rev. Mr. Thompson, our P. E., was with us. It was a time of greater interest than these people have seen for a long time. The congregation throughout manifested much feeling. Five white, and about a dozen colored joined the Church. The membership were much revived.

It is always pleasing to contemplate improvements, but the pleasure is heightened immensurably when these improvements are connected with the Gospel of our Lord and Saviour. Without religion, the towering forest might be cut down; beautiful mansions might be reared, surrounded by the beauties of Nature and of Art; wealth might be obtained; and luxury, with pomp and circumstance, might be there; but man—immortal man—will arise from the enjoyment of these, sick at heart, and crave something higher and holier. It is a good omen when we see a community, while they improve in other things, building houses of worship of the right sort. Not only do we there behold marks of improvement in reference to the things of Time, but also in reference to the eternity whither we are hastening. The man who built the church will soon pass away, but the church will stand, and their children will worship in the house which they have raised. The doctrines preached in the church will forever stand—Christ and Him crucified. And we trust that this will be the firm foundation on which all, who have in any way contributed to the building of Tensas church, will build their hopes of eternal life, that they may be fearless and secure when "The cloud-cap'd towers, the gorgeous palaces,

The solemn temples, the great globe itself,
Yea, and all that is inhabit, shall dissolve;
And, like the baseless fabric of a vision,
Leave not a wreck behind."

Itinerant

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted by the Methodist Sunday School at Clayton, Morengo county, Ala., on the occasion of the death of its Superintendent, W. C. THOMPSON.

WHEREAS, Divine Providence having been pleased to deprive us, by death, of our beloved Superintendent on the 3d May ult., and this School being moved by feelings of affectionate regard for the memory of the deceased, and by a sense of bereavement on this melancholy occasion; Therefore,

Resolved, That while we bow in submission to the Divine Will, we can not withhold the expression of sincere sorrow for the loss of him who so endeared himself to us all by his beautiful exhibition of pure benevolence, seeking the welfare of those associated with, and of those committed to his care.

Resolved, That we will cherish his memory and that we will endeavor to make him our exemplar in uniform courtesy, earnest zeal will for all manifested by word and act, and his eminent piety.

Resolved, That by his death, at the early age of 28, we are all solemnly admonished to prepare for that summons of which he was ever mindful, and for which he was ready.

Resolved, That we sincerely sympathise with the bereaved companion of the deceased in her unspeakable affliction, and that she be furnished with a copy of these resolutions.

Resolved, That we will wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days.

Resolved, That these resolutions be published in the N. O. Christian Advocate.

June 17. A. E. EDGERWATH, Prin.

GENERAL MINUTES.—This annual publication of the Church for the years 1853–1854, has been sent to us. It contains the annual statistical exhibit of Southern Methodism which indicates a gratifying prosperity in the various departments of Church enterprise comprised within its objects. In looking over its pages we find many reasons for thanking God for the results of the past year; and for encouragement in the year's work yet to be finished. But it contains the sad record of the departure out of this life of forty-two faithful and beloved brethren, who, having finished their course, have entered into the joy of the Lord.

We find the following as the numerical position of the Church:

Traveling ministers, 1803. An increase of 37 over the preceding year.

Local ministers, 4,328. A decrease for the year of 127.

White members, 415,297. Increase over the last year, 22,439.

Colored members, 154,264. Increase for the year, 7,135.

Indian members, 3,691. Increase, 647.

Total increase of membership of the Church, 30,401.

The total amount raised for missions was $83,031. The Minutes also show a decided improvement in the amounts collected for the superannuated and deficient preachers. The foregoing statistical facts indicate a steady progress in the Church.

NOTICES.

Special Notice.

It was announced by our predecessor—the Rev. D. Early—that a considerable amount of out-standing claims, against ministers and others, within the limits of the Southern Church, had been transferred to him under the New York adjustment. Their accounts, notes, etc., being now in our possession, we take this method of saying to all concerned, that we are most anxious to have them closed up at the earliest possible day. With a view to the accomplishment of this very desirable object, we take the liberty of suggesting to those who may be involved in these liabilities, the propriety of communicating with us at once, in relation to the final settlement of these claims, without waiting to be directly and officially called on by us for that purpose. And as we shall need, in the course of a few months at most, all the funds that may be realized on these accounts, we would, therefore, respectfully solicit remittances at the earliest convenience of those against whom these claims exist. Our address, for the time being, is Louisville, Ky.

STEVENSON & OWEN, Agents.

June 22, 1854.

Special Notice.

All orders for Books and communications relating to the business of our Agency and Publishing House, should be addressed, for the present, and until further notice is given, to the undersigned, at Louisville, Ky. Orders out of the mountains, can be forwarded, as heretofore arrangements are made, to Bishop Joshua Early, Richmond, Va. Every effort on the part will be made to commence operations in this city at the earliest possible day. In the meanwhile, however, an ample supply of our publications will be kept on hand by the house of McFerrin & Hunter, with whom we have made an arrangement by which all orders will be filled at our usual rates.

STEVENSON & OWEN.

Nashville, Tenn., June 7, 1854.

Notice.

In consequence of my detention at the General Conference, and my necessary absence since its adjournment, on a trip to Mississippi, the July number of the Quarterly Review will not appear at its usual time. Its issues will be prompt thereafter. Having been reappointed its editor, and being determined that it shall meet the expectations of friends, I would hereby entreat our brethren in the ministry and the laity, to send us new subscribers, to make collections of the old, and to promote its circulation, as the only Journal of the kind belonging to the M. E. Church, South.

DAVID S. DOGGETT.

June 3, 1854.

Commencement Exercises of Emory College.

Sunday, July 16th. Commencement Sermon by Rev. T. Cross, D. D.

Monday. Meeting of Board of Trustees at 9 A. M. Sophomore prize Declamation at night.

Tuesday. Junior Exhibition. Address on conferring prizes to Sophomore declaimers. The proposed Methodist Educational Convention at night.

Wednesday. Commencement day. Address before Literary Societies in the afternoon, by the President of the College.

GUSTAVUS J. ORR,

General Intelligence.

INTERMENTS.—The following is a report of the number of interments in all the cemeteries of the city for the week ending at 6 o'clock on Sunday morning, July 2:

Protestant, Girod street	11	Catholic No. 1	17
Odd Fellows' Rest	4	Catholic No. 2	16
Cypress Grove, No. 1	8	St. Vincent de Paul	68
" " " 2	45	Lafayette, 4th District	8
Charity Hospital	38	Hebrew, Lafayette	2
St. Patrick's	54
Total			329

The great increase over the last report, when there was only 170, is to be attributed, in a great measure, to the heat of the weather, more than one hundred deaths having occurred from sun-stroke alone.

CHARITY HOSPITAL.—The weekly report of the Charity Hospital from Saturday, June 24, at 5 o'clock P. M., to Saturday, July 1, at 5 P. M., shows: Admissions, 237; discharges, 138; deaths, 48. The number of patients remaining, 480. Twenty of the deaths were from sunstroke, resulting from the excessive heat of Wednesday and Thursday last.

U. S. CIRCUIT COURT.

REPORT OF THE GRAND JURY.—The Grand Jury came into Court on Saturday morning, and submitted the following report of their arduous labors:

To the Honorable Judge John A. Campbell, U. S. Circuit Court, Eastern District of Louisiana:

The Grand Jury beg leave to report to your Honor that, in the discharge of the duty confided to them by the Court, they have cited from among their fellow-citizens a number of persons as witnesses to testify and to procure from them, if possible, evidence in relation to the current rumor, in this city of an expedition said to be on foot, the tendency and purpose of which would be to violate the neutrality laws of the United States.

Among other witnesses cited were several whose names figured most prominently with the rumored expedition, and from the refusal of some of them to testify, (as is shown in the Court,) no the ground that they could not do so without criminating themselves under the ruling of the Court, the obvious inference left on the minds of the Grand Jury was, that these rumors were not altogether without foundation, and from collateral evidence, brought to their notice in the course of the investigation, they are further left to infer that meetings have been frequently held on the subject of Cuban affairs, and that what is called "Cuban bonds" have been issued; that funds have been collected, either by contributions, sale of these bonds, or promises to pay, to a very considerable amount which was, or would be hereafter, at the disposal of whomsoever might be chosen to the command of an expedition purporting to be in aid of the cause of Cuban revolutionists; but, from a strict and searching investigation, (examination) of the witnesses through the District Attorney, the Grand Jury have been unable to elicit any facts upon which to found an indictment against one.

Although the Grand Jury strongly incline to the opinion that these assertions and collections of funds have for its (their) end, the organization of an expedition, either for the purpose of assisting in a Cuban revolution, or of making a demonstration upon that Island; yet the plea whatever it be, seems altogether in the prospective; and hence, as we seem to be a great deal has been said and written about the extensive and formidable preparation on foot for the purpose of revolutionizing Cuba, we believe it to have been very much overrated and magnified, nothing having been brought to our notice

That there are a large number of citizens of the United States whose feelings and sympathies are decidedly enlisted in behalf of what is termed the Creole, or native, population of the Island of Cuba therefrom no question, and that there has been means contributed, either by themselves or their friends in the United States, for the purpose of ameliorating their condition, or for getting up an excitement in this country, in view of procuring the aid and sympathy of our citizens, we confidently believe, but that it has succeeded to the extent of furnishing the means necessary to the raising of men, arms and ammunition, with which to make a hostile movement towards that Island, they have no evidence; indeed, they very much doubt the ability of the friends of this cause to command means to organize and equip any military expedition equal to the task of invading it with any prospect of success. Nor do they believe any such expedition, even if organized, could elude the vigilance of our Government officers, or of our law-abiding citizens; believing, as we do (that) they will not look with indifference upon any attempt to infringe the laws of our Government more particularly the Constitution of the United States; but, looking to that instrument as the grand link which binds this nation, North and South, as one people—as the very work or palladium of their safety—upon the observance of which the future prosperity and progress of this great nation depends. They will rally in behalf of the Constitution and the country; and, with the strong arm of the law on the one hand, and the moral sentiment of the masses on the other, visit upon every offender the just and merited punishment due such crimes and misdemeanors.

The Grand Jury, therefore, deem it inexpedient to prosecute the investigation of witnesses any further for the present, but will continue to make diligent inquiry in relation to this subject, or any other matter that may be brought to their notice, from time to time, as your Honor may see fit to direct.

ALF. PENN, Foreman.

The Judge expressed his gratitude at the efforts made by the jury to ascertain the exact state of the reputed expedition against Cuba, and, after some further remarks, stated that he felt it to be his duty to require General Quitman, Mr. Trasher and Dr. Saunders—the three witnesses who had refused to answer, on the grounds of self-crimination—to enter into bonds with the United States for their good behavior. General Waul, counsel for the witnesses, objected to this as entirely at variance with the rights and privileges guaranteed by the Constitution and laws of the country. The Judge, however, persisted that he was legally justified in exacting bonds from the witnesses, but at the request of General Waul left the matter open for argument at 6 o'clock.

At the appointed time the parties were all in Court, when the question was fully argued by General Waul and the Court, which ended by the Judge stating that he felt bound to require the witnesses to furnish recognizance in the sum of $3000 each, as a pledge that for the space of nine months next ensuing they will obey the laws of the United States, and especially the neutrality laws of 1818, and that, not as punishment for any imputed offence, but merely as a surety that the laws of the country will not be violated.

General Quitman arose and informed the Court that if without proof he must be suspected of an intent to violate the laws, he would decline to furnish the required recognizances. Mr. Trasher and Dr. Saunders also gave the Court similar assurances.

The Court then told the witnesses that they must consider themselves under the custody of the United States Marshal, who has kept them close prisoners in the City Hotel on their parole up to this time. Of course an application will be made to-day for a habeas corpus in one of our local tribunals.

RIOTOUS.—On Monday night a disturbance of rather a serious nature occurred on board the ship Clara Wheeler, in the Third District, which vessel had just arrived from Liverpool with a load of Irish emigrants. It got rumored among the Irish laborers on the Levee, it is said, that the crew of the vessel, composed principally of negroes, had during the voyage taken improper liberties with the female portion of the passengers. A large mob assembled and attacked the vessel, threatening with vengeance both the officers and crew. They took possession of the vessel and drove the officers and negroes off, who narrowly escaped with their lives. The Chief of Police, with a posse of his officers, repaired to the spot and soon put a stop to the riotous proceedings, by arresting the negroes and confining them in the lock up. In the morning, however, another demonstration was made against the vessel for the purpose of destroying it and lynching the officers, but the police soon dispersed the mob, restored quiet, and placed a strong force there to keep order.

CHINESE EMIGRATION TO CALIFORNIA.—The Alta Californian has an article on Chinese emigration to California, which shows that our western shores are likely to be thronged with the satellites of the Brother of the Sun. Such is represented to be the demand for the emigrant ships that all the old vessels that have been condemned as unseaworthy are bought up at enormous prices, and temporarily fitted for passenger uses. Thousands and thousands are arriving continually, and the cry is still they come.

Mr. George W. Aspinwall died near Germantown, Pennsylvania, recently. He was on the steamer San Francisco, bound to South America for the benefit of his health, when she was wrecked, and was taken by the bark Kilby to Boston. He has since then been to Cuba and Europe, but failing to regain his health, returned with appropriate remarks. The Big Names and Comprehensive Mottoes.

Some of our exchanges have very large names and mottoes that go a great ways. We give a few of them:

"South-west Independent." "A journal for the encouragement of Education, Agriculture, Internal Improvements, Fine Arts, Sciences, Religion, Political Reformation, and the Interests of every body."

"The Arkansas Whig." "Devoted to Politics, Foreign and Domestic News, Education, Literature, Miscellanies, the Markets and General Intelligence." He should have added, etc., etc., etc., and we doubt not would, but the line was already filled out.

"Iberville Gazette." "Devoted to Politics, Agriculture, Sciences, and the General News of the Day."

"The True Democrat." "Devoted to Democracy, Foreign and Domestic News, Internal Improvements, Literature, Agriculture, Commerce, Education, Sciences, etc." This one found room for one etc.

"Miner's Express." "For Truth, we sink our shaft. We drift upon the vein of principles."

"Arkansas State Gazette and Democrat." "Truth is in no danger from Error, so long as Reason is left free to combat it."

"Southern Advocate." "In Principle just, in Politics conservative, in conduct Independent."

"The Southern Shield." "The People's safety is the sovereign law."

"The National Patriot." "Devoted to the maintenance of American Principles, without Sectarianism in Politics or Religion. Motto—No Kings, no Popes, but an enlightened People."

"The Daily Constitutionalist," (Jacksonville, Illinois.) "Devoted to the dissemination of Useful Information, Temperance, News, Politics, and to the interests of Jacksonville."

"The Democratic Flag." "Truth fears nothing but Concealment," (alluding to the Know-Nothings, no doubt.)

"The Golden Era." "The proceeds of this paper are devoted to the spread of Liberal Principles." Of course it must be patronized. Does Barnum take three copies?

"Two etcs. "Bienville Times." "An Independent Family Newspaper. Devoted to General and Miscellaneous Intelligence, Literature, Science, Education, Religion, Temperance Agriculture, Domestic Economy, etc., etc." What do the etcs. stand for?

"The Lancasterian." "The grant of exclusive principles to some is repugnant to our whole system, the interest of which is to make firm the equal rights of all."

"The Merchants' Journal." "Devoted to Literature, Science, Arts, Reviews, Education, News, Morals, Health, Humor, Amusement, Drama, etc., etc."

The Celebration.

The celebration on Tuesday last was pretty much of a military one throughout, but of course none the worse for that. The sound of cannon, at an early hour in Lafayette Square, brought crowds of the people to witness the somewhat unusual spectacle of a tented field, with all the appendages and attendant circumstances of a military array in the midst of the city. This encampment was formed by Washington Artillery and the National Guards, under the supervision of Brig. Gen E. L. Tracey and Col. Henry Forno, and it was universally admitted that all the arrangements were in true military style. The Louisiana Greys, under command of Capt. Cavanaugh, paraded upon the Square early in the morning, presenting their usual fine appearance and excellent discipline. At 7 o'clock Governor Hébert reviewed Companies A, B and C of the National Guards Company D of this fine young battalion was not prepared to turn out, but was represented by its officers, Capt. Salomon and Lieuts. Moore and Laucke. We shall not soon forget the splendid appearance of these companies, nor our astonishment at the rapidity with which they had acquired proficiency in military evolutions. Company C in particular, which has been organized but two weeks, surprised every body by the promptness and accuracy with which it executed orders. This company is under the command of Capt. Chas. O Dreux, a young man well and favorably known in this city. He is a graduate of the military academy at Frankfort, Kentucky, and the manner in which he has drilled his company in so short a time shows that his education is highly creditable to that institution. The companies B, commanded by Capt. J. A. Jaquess, and A, commanded by Lieut. Smith, were, we believe, in no particular, unless in numbers, inferior to any that turned out in any part of the city.

Captain Jaquess performed the duties of officer of the day, from reveille until 1 o'clock. Lieut. Hannister, of the Washington Artillery, acting as officer of the guard; from 1 until the companies were dismissed, Captain Dreux became officer of the day, assisted by Lieutenants Mark Moore and Oscar Howell, the latter of Company B. Adjutant Chas. Forno, son of Col. Henry Forno, showed himself a "chip of the old block" by the manner in which he executed his difficult and responsible duties. In fact we have never known a set of young officers conduct themselves in a manner more worthy the reputation of experienced soldiers.

At 12 o'clock a splendid collation was given by Gen. Tracey, in the large tent which had been prepared for the occasion, and here we found assembled a considerable crowd of notables, whose names are too numerous to mention. Speeches and toasts, wine and eatables were freely given and taken, and every thing went off in fine style.

Two o'clock was the hour fixed upon for attacking the ample lunch spread out by Col. Dick Nash, but a sudden storm of wind and rain upset his arrangements and spoiled the dinner at the same time. Many persons present were unfeeling enough to make light of this misfortune and treat it as a good joke, but those who had lived on short allowance for a day or two for the purpose of being in good condition for the occasion, felt it to be a very serious matter. At 5 o'clock another collation, comprising innumerable delicacies, was spread for such ladies as chose to grace the scene with their presence.

The Louisiana Legion and Washington Regiment were reviewed in Congo Square by the Governor and his staff. It is not necessary to inform any body in this city that they are composed of soldiers of the finest kind. The Horse Guards, Col. Wood commanding, were also reviewed by the Governor, and presented an exceedingly fine appearance in their new and costly uniform. They numbered rather smaller than usual, in consequence of sickness and unavoidable absence of members. The Guards are very popular, and we learn that no less than ten petitions for membership were presented during the day. At about 11 o'clock they regaled something like 200 guests at 52 Carondelet street, with lunch, wines, etc., upon an extensive and liberal scale. His Excellency the Governor, and staff, Generals Lewis, Palfrey, Cronan and staff, the veteran General Lacoste, the field, staff and line officers of the Legion and 2d Brigade, together with many of our most prominent citizens were present upon this occasion and seemed to enjoy it exceedingly. A beautiful flag was presented to the troops on Rampart street, and was given received with appropriate remarks. The Texas Items.

By the steamship Louisiana, which arrived here yesterday morning, we have late dates from Galveston and Houston:

At Galveston, the Civilian, of the 30th, says the mercury went up to 93 degrees in the shade the day before.

The Trinity continued full, even to overflowing in some places, as reported by the telegraph.

Until recently the weather has been quite rainy in the interior; but at last date the atmosphere was extremely dry and warm.

We hear of no damage to the crops, but apprehend some, unless the rains abate.

The Lavaca Commercial, of the 28th, says:

The prospect for fine crops of corn and cotton was never more flattering than at the present time. The corn crop this year will be much larger than that of last year.

We were visited by another terrible gale last evening from the south-east. The wind commenced blowing last evening, and continued all night, accompanied by heavy falls of rain. The tide is very high; several bath houses have been washed away, and some little damage has been done to the wharves. The steamer that was due yesterday has not yet arrived, and some fears are entertained for her safety. She may get in to-day.

The Houston Star, of the 28th, says:

The corn crop of Texas, from the increase of land in cultivation, and the extraordinary heavy yield now promised, will probably exceed that of any other year by at least 50 per cent.

The incessant rains that have visited all parts of the State cannot prove otherwise than seriously detrimental to the cotton crop. The complaint is general that there is not enough dry weather to work out the weeds.

Gov. Pease has offered a reward of $250 for the arrest and delivery to the sheriff of Harris county, of Justus Odum, the murderer of Peter Sauer. In addition to the above, the citizens of Harris county have contributed $100, which will be promptly paid over, on the lodging of Odum in the jail of that county.

The Houston Star announces the resignation of Hon. C. W. Buckley, Judge of the Seventh Judicial District, to take effect on the third Monday in September next. The Star says Judge B. has resigned thus early to enable the Governor to order an election at the usual time, the first Monday in August.

The Star of the 28th ult. says: John Curtis and Joseph Wilks got into a quarrel at Riordan's corner on Monday night, and the latter was stabbed in the abdomen with a knife, supposed to be in the hands of Wilks. No person saw the stab inflicted. Curtis died this morning. Wilks was committed to jail.

The proceedings of the Educational Convention in Huntsville are published in the Presbyterian. They recommend a change in the Constitution, enabling the counties to sell their school lands for school purposes on a long credit. The plan, we believe, is much like that recommended by us some time since, and which has succeeded so well in Wisconsin. They estimate the children of the State, between six and sixteen years of age, as follows: Males, 12,762; females, 12,702—making a total of 25,564 pupils. This number is obtained by adding fifty per cent. to the census of 1850; but they think the increase has been at least one hundred per cent., which would make the whole number, at this time, 28,332 children. Supposing their education costs the State $10 per annum, the whole cost will be $283,320.

The Houston Morning Star, of the 28th ult., says the Brazos river was hailing at last accounts. It had overflowed the banks at several points, doing considerable damage. Some of the bottom fields were submerged and the crops destroyed.

The Galveston News understands that Shultz has made a full confession, not only of the murder of Bateman and Dett, but also of a long catalogue of other murders and crimes during a period of many years. We have not as yet been put in possession of full details, though we hope soon to be. We can only say now that he confesses to having killed an old pensioner in Knoxville, Tennessee, before he came to Texas. He does not remember his name, but says he had just received his pension, and upon the strength of it, he drank a little too much. He adds that when he was on his way home that night, he waylaid and shot him, and then placed his body under a projecting rock—that some school children found the body the next day. That suspicion attached to himself—that he was taken up, tried, and acquitted.

He says he belonged to the "Murrell Gang," and recites many robberies and crimes of which he was guilty, while in that connection. He finally came to Texas in 1835, for greater security. He confesses to having shot Colonel Teel in his tent, in the fall of 1836. Many of our old citizens will well remember that event. The night was one of the most stormy on record, and the darkness was so great, that nothing could be seen but the flash of the gun. Suspicion attached, he says, to several persons, but not to himself.

Louisiana Items.

In our last issue, says the Thibodaux Minerva, of the 1st inst., we mentioned that several sporadic cases of cholera had appeared in different parts of the country. It has now become our painful duty to state that it is beginning to assume an epidemic form on the plantation of Messrs. Pugh & Darden, a short distance above this place. The number of deaths up to yesterday at noon was fifteen. The disease is confined exclusively among the blacks.

Mr. Sylvain Baudoin died from suffocation, at his residence on the Lafourche, on Wednesday, the 27th ult.

Mr. John H. Field, late sheriff of Terrebonne Parish, died on the 25th ult. He was a very kind-hearted man, and at the same time possessed of great resolution and courage.

The thermometer at Thibodaux during the whole week ending the 1st inst., from 90 to 98 degrees.

We learn that Capt. Ferdinand M. Streck, the veteran steamboatman, died at his residence at Donaldsonville on Thursday morning last, 29th ultimo.

ENGLAND'S WAR VIEWS.—A letter from London states that the Government of Great Britain, though reluctant to begin the war, and not seriously decided upon carrying it on with the necessary energy, so long as the Czar may be made to believe that he has no allies, and accordingly no chances of success, has determined to employ all the elements at its disposition at the moment when Austria shall have disappointed the expectations based on her friendly assurances. The war until now has been only a cessation of peace. The whole solicitude of the Western allies has been, until within a short time, to secure the Austrian alliance, in order to escape thoroughly, as they hope, the real war. Nothing, however, has been left undone to act instantaneously, and with the utmost vigor, upon the failure of exertions in that direction. It also stated that Kossuth has the direct assurance of the Sultan; "and indirect notifications of the British Cabinet, that his presence in Constantinople, and especially on the frontiers of Transylvania, will be desired at the shortest possible notice, upon any fresh attempt on the part of Austria to evade her promise to regard the march of the Russians towards the Danube as a casus belli for herself." He is, of course, at the disposition of the allies for such ends, although he will not blind himself to inactivity, should the contingency of his being called upon not present itself to England.

AWFUL RAVAGES OF THE CHOLERA IN JAMAICA. We have files of the Kingston Morning Journal with dates to the 12th inst.

Cholera is making sad havoc among the people residing in the district of Everton in St. Thomas, in the vale. Thirty-eight cases had occurred at that place, out of which twenty-nine proved fatal. The disease has also appeared at Worthy Park Estate, in St. John, but in a mitigated form. Fifty-four cases had occurred, out of which five persons died. At St. Ann's Bay, up to the 28th ult, seventy persons out of a small population had died, and many more were ill. The disease is said to be more rapid in its effects this visitation than it was in 1850; four to five hours seem to be the time that the patient lasts.

"Sir," said one of two antagonists, with great dignity, to the other, during a dispute which had not been confined to words, "you have called me a scoundrel and a liar, you have spit in my face, you have struck me twice; I hope you will not carry this any further, for if you do you will rouse the sleeping lion in my breast, and I cannot tell what may be the conse-

GREENWELL SPRINGS.—In addition to the number of things which are destined to make Baton Rouge a great city and pleasant place of resort, the Greenwell Springs, a few miles distant, are attracting a good deal of attention. The following, which we take from the Gazette, in relation to them, is quite true:

"The distance of the Springs from the Amite river is not more than a "stone's throw." This river furnishes one of the best fishing grounds in Louisiana when not swollen and rendered turbid by the heavy rains. Game is also abundant in the vicinity. These are important considerations to those who are desirous of visiting some "watering-place," for the double purpose of recruiting their health and enjoying the agreeable pastime of hunting and angling.

"From Baton Rouge to the Springs the distance is not more than two hours' comfortable drive over the best road in the Parish; so that a party wishing to visit Greenwell and return on the same day, can do so, with the greatest ease."

PINE WOODS PASTURE AND SOUTHERN COWS. Hundreds of cows that range in the pine woods of the Southern States do not give a quart of milk a-day, and we have often seen the milking of a cow in a pint cup without filling it. The animals are generally poor, small, scragged creatures, and their calves look like foals of the mother of the woolly horse. It is a common thing that planters with large herds have to buy butter and go without milk. The deficiency is generally charged to the climate. This is not the cause. The truth is to be found in the fact that the natural grass of the extensive plantations of all the Southern States is almost entirely destitute of phosphate of lime, without which the cow cannot produce abundant milk; her calf cannot grow rapidly, for it gets no bone material.

Don't say, "What fools; why don't they add phosphates to their soil if it is destitute of that important ingredient of fertility?" Look in the glass—see yourself. Look at your own pastures. They may not be as bad; they may be made better. [New York Tribune.

LUCKY MISTAKE.—A few years since two prominent gentlemen of this State had a newspaper quarrel, which became so personal that one of them, Mr. A., wrote to the other, Mr. B., that he would be in Columbus on a certain day, and would expect to meet B. there. Mr. B. replied that he would be on hand. When the day arrived the challenger was in Columbus, Mississippi, and the challenged in Columbus, Georgia. This rencontre mistake was so ridiculous that their friends afterwards interposed, and the matter was settled and hushed up. [Alabama Gazette.

NOT TO BE FOOLED.—One of the dog poisoners related to us an incident yesterday, says the Cincinnati Atlas, which occurred on the evening previous, near the corner of Sixth and Plum streets. The poisoner threw down a piece of meat; the dog smelt it, turned it over and over with his paw, and, shaking his head, walked away and left it. In a few minutes after, a small "bow wow" came along and took it in his mouth. The large dog ran towards him and barked and made a terrible fuss, but the little cur swallowed the meat, and in a few minutes lay dead in the streets. The large dog was of the Newfoundland species, and valued by his owners as being worth $75.

The following is an amusing household dialogue which is worth printing: "The baby is sick, my dear." "Well, give it castor oil. Dennis, get me that castor oil." "It's all gone, sir devil a drop is left." "Gone! why, we have not yet opened the bottle." "Surs you have had it every day, and I've seen you use it myself upon your salad." "Why, you scoundrel! you don't mean to say that I've been eating castor oil every day during the salad season?" "Sure you have, sir." "Did you not see the bottle was labeled 'Castor Oil?'" "Sure, and I did, sir; and didn't I put it in the 'castor' every day?"

TRANSPARENCY OF THE OCEAN.—In the course of some remarks made by Commander Glynn, of the Navy, at the recent meeting of the American Scientific Association, in Washington, some interesting facts in relation to the transparency of the ocean was stated. Commander Glynn said that the chief requisite in making observations of this transparency was a perfectly smooth, glassy sea. During a cruise of four years he had succeeded in making only sixteen observations worth saving. His method of experimenting was to lower a white dinner plate horizontally in the water as far as the eye could follow it. He found that the farther he was from points where earthy matter was washed into the ocean in large quantities, the clearer the water was. Thus off Cape Horn, where perpetual storms stir up the dirt from the regions around the Pole, he could see only to the depth of ten fathoms, while on the west side of the Pacific, where the ocean is stillest, he could see the plate twenty-five fathoms below the surface, which distance he concluded to be the maximum of visibility. These high and low points of visibility corresponded with the highest and lowest points of the water's temperature.

A PREACHING MONKEY.—There is a curious animal, a native of South America, which is called the preaching monkey. The appearance of this monkey is at once grotesque and forbidding. It has a dark, thick beard, three inches long, hanging down from the chin. This gives it the mock air of a Capuchin friar, from which it has acquired the name of the preaching monkey. They are generally found in groups of twenty or thirty, except at their morning and evening meetings, when they assemble in vast multitudes. At these times, one of them, who appears, by common consent, to be the leader or president, mounts to the top of the highest tree which is near, and the rest take their places below.

While Mr. Clay was standing upon the deck of the Georgia, previous to her departure, a man stepped up to him and, seizing his hand, began to shake it so vigorously as to give this venerable Senator pain. "Sir," said Mr. Clay, very blandly, "if you will allow me to shake hands with you, I will do it gently."

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

SATURDAY MORNING, July 8, 1854.

We have had another quiet week in nearly every branch of our market, with but few changes to notice in prices of the leading articles. Flour has been rather lower, and Corn mostly higher. Freights have been more abundant, and have generally further declined. Exchanges have continued very dull.

COTTON—The Cotton market opened on Saturday with a good demand, and about 4000 bales were disposed of partly at easier prices. On Monday, however, factors were asking an advance, and business was consequently checked to some extent, but the transactions embraced fully 3500 bales. Tuesday was very generally observed as a holiday, but one or two changed hands, the sales of that and the following day reaching about 4500 bales, at steady prices. On Thursday the market was quiet, and barely 2000 bales changed hands, and yesterday 1500 bales were taken, making a total for the week of 10,500 bales.

NEW ORLEANS CLASSIFICATION.

Inferior	5⅝@5¾	Middling Fair	9⅜@10¼
Ordinary	6@6¾	Fair	10¾@11
Middling	7¼@8¾	Good Fair	Nominal
Good Middling	8¾@9¼	Good and Fine	—@—

COTTON AND TOBACCO STATEMENT.

	Cotton—bales.	Tobacco—hhd
Stock on hand Sept	20,672	20,646
Received since	1,411,951	42,784
" yesterday	68—1,412,019	80—42,864
	1,422,591	723-9
Exported in date	1,271,054	29,971
" yesterday	4,184—1,276,038	123—30,094
Stock on hand not cleared	146,553	42,215

TOBACCO—The recent heavy transactions in the Tobacco market have reduced the stock on sale to a comparatively small amount, and the business of the past week has been on a more limited scale. The transactions embrace about 1100 hhds, including the following particulars: 12 hhds at 5½, 50 Light Kentucky at 5½; 65 Clarksville A and B, at 6¾; 70 hhds at 6c, 270 A. and B. at 5½c round, 225 at 5½c round, 93 at 7½c, and yesterday 18 hhds at 4¾; 50 at 5 5-10; 3 at 5¾ and 27 at 6¾; and 93 of which 68 at 5 20-100, 5 at 5½, 9 at 6¾, and 14 at 6¾ ₱ lb.

Wm quote as follows:

Factory logs	4¾@4¾	Fair	6 @6¾
Planters do	4¾@5¼	Fine	6¾@7½
Leaf Interior Com.	5¼@5¾	Choice & Select'ns	7¾@8¼

SUGAR—The receipts of Sugar have been moderate, and with a fair demand prevailing during the greater part of the week, the rates have improved. The sales of the week, including 800 hhds yesterday, embrace 1600 hhds, the market closing at the following range of prices:

Inferior to Common	4¼@3	Prime and Choice	4¾@5¼
Fair to Fully Fair	5¼@5¾	Clarified and Refined	4¾@7

Week's receipts, 1914 hhds—Exports, 479 hhds.

dull most of the week, and with small receipts, the sales have been limited to some 700 or 800 bbls at 7@7¼ for Fermenting, and 9¼@11¢ ₱ gallon.

Week's receipts, 1294 bbls—Exports, 798.

FLOUR—The Flour market has presented a very dull appearance throughout the past week, and prices have shown a drooping tendency. The sales, up to Thursday evening, were limited to some 3000 bbls, mostly in small lots, at $6 25@6 50 for Superfine and $6 62½@6 68 for Fancy to Choice Extra brands. Yesterday the market was still heavier, and 500 bbls sold on the Levee at $6 12½ ₱ barrel.

Week's receipts, 6047 bbls—Exports, 1080 bbls.

CORN—The receipts of Corn has been light, and prices have steadily tended upward during the week. The sales up to yesterday morning embraced about 15,000 sacks, the later transactions being at 58@60¢ for Yellow and Mixed, and 62@65¢ ₱ bushel for White. Yesterday's sales embraced 200 sacks inferior at 56, 300 White and Mixed at 63 and 715 White at 65¢ ₱ bushel.

Week's receipts, 13,216 sacks—Exports, 17,426 sacks.

OATS—With a pretty good supply in the market the sales of this article for the past week embrace 12,000 or 20,000 sacks at 34½@35½ ₱ bushel for St. Louis.

Week's receipts, 17,373 sacks—Exports, 4015 sacks.

WHEAT—We have noticed sales of some 6000 sacks of Wheat since our last report at $1 27@1 28¢ ₱ bushel, and 2400 prime at $1 35.

BRAN AND HAY—Bran has sold slowly at 95@$1 ₱ 100 lbs. Of Hay, some 1600 bales have been disposed of at $18@$19 for Ordinary to Good Northern, and $20@$23 ₱ ton for Western.

PORK—The Pork market has continued without activity, but prices have generally been firmer. The principal sales reported have been 300 bbls uninspected Mess at $11, 500 inspected at $11 25, 75 do at $11 50, and 60 M. O. at $10 75 ₱ bbl, and yesterday 300 uninspected Mess at $11, and 400 inspected at $11 50 ₱ barrel.

Week's receipts, 519 bbls—Exports, 402 bbls.

BACON—We have no change of moment to report in this article for the past week. The sales embrace some 250 or 300 casks at 5¼@5¾¢ for Good to Prime Ribbed Sides, 5½@6¢ for Clear, and 4¾@5¢ ₱ lb for Shoulders. Hams have continued to sell at 6¾@7½¢ for Plain and Bagged, and 9@10¢ ₱ lb for Extra and Choice Sugar Cured.

Week's receipts, 127 casks—Exports, 143 casks.

CHEEN MEATS—A lot of 60,000 lbs bulk Shoulders was sold on Wednesday at 5¾¢ ₱ lb.

LARD—The market for Lard has been very quiet during the week. The principal sale was 200 bbls No. 1 at about 8¾¢ ₱ lb.

Week's receipts, 147 bbls—Exports, 446 bbls.

BEEF—We continue to quote Mess Beef at $14@$14 75, and Prime at $10 50@$11 ₱ bbl.

Week's receipts, 79 bbls—Exports, 21 bbls.

BUTTER AND CHEESE—Butter has sold slowly at 12@15¢, and Cheese at 9@10½¢ ₱ lb.

RICE—We quote fresh Carolina at 5¢ ₱ lb, with no transactions of any moment.

WHISKY—The supply continues light and prices firm. The sales of the week embrace some 500 bbls at 25½@26¢ for Rectified; 27 for Rew, and 28@30¢ ₱ gallon for Extra, according to brands.

Week's receipts, 517 bbls—Exports, 314 bbls.

DAGGING AND ROPE—We quote Kentucky Bagging at 14½@15¾¢, with only small transactions, and India at 12½@13¼¢, the sales of the latter including 40 bales at 12½¢ cash, and 50 at 13½¢, equal to cash. Of Rope, we have noticed sales of 275 coils at 8¾¢, 300 at 8¾¢, cash, and 175 at 8¢, also cash.

GUNNY BAGS—The asking rates for bales have been 11@12¢, with no further important sales.

COFFEE—The Coffee market has been quiet, and the week's sales are limited to some 3500 bags Rio at 9@9¼¢ ₱ lb, of which 500 were sold yesterday at these rates.

SALT—We hear of further sales from warehouse of some 8000 sacks Liverpool Coarse at $1 25 ₱ sack, and 1500 Key West at $1 15 ₱ 140 lbs.

CANDLES—We have noticed only a few small sales of Star Candles during the week at 22¢ ₱ lb.

TALLOW—We quote city rendered at 10¢ ₱ lb.

LIME—The rate for Thomaston from second hands has been $2 25 ₱ bbl, and Western $1 75.

SPIRITS TURPENTINE—A lot of 40 bbls Spirits Turpentine sold at 45¢ ₱ gallon.

FREIGHTS—There has been a good demand for shipping, but generally at lower rates during the week. The engagements comprise seven or eight ships for Liverpool at ⅝d for Cotton, 60s for Tobacco, and 14½d for Wheat, one for Havre at 1 5-16c, one for Genoa and one for Marseilles at 1⅛¢ for Cotton, one for Antwerp at 60s for Tobacco, and two for Boston at ⅝¢.

EXCHANGE—The Exchange market has continued dull, without any change of consequence in the rates. We quote:

Sterling	108¼@109
France	5f. 15 [illegible] 25 ₱ dollar
New York Sixty-day Bills	2@2½ ₱ ct. disc.
Sight Checks on New York	par@¼ ₱ ct. disc.

New Orleans Wholesale Prices Current

CAREFULLY CORRECTED EVERY WEEK.

	From	To Bagging—
Kentucky, ₱ yd	14	15½
Tennessee	13½	14½
Carmen	—	—
Hale Rope, ₱ lb	8	9
Kentucky	—	—
Navy	—	—
Pilot	—	—
Cracker	—	—
Hay,

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Congressional.

Washington June 2 1854

SENATE.—Several House bills were passed unanimously.

Petitions were presented. Resolutions were next in order, and a great number presented. Among them several by Mr Bell, of Tennessee. Resolutions of the General Assembly of the State of Tennessee, in favor of the passage of a law suspending the duty on railroad iron for two years after the works shall have commenced operations. Resolutions of the same in favor of a grant of land and Government credit, to aid in the construction of a railroad to the Pacific, to begin at Memphis, in that State as a central point for said road. Memorial of [illegible] asking the passage of an act to reclaim the swamp lands in the east bank of the Mississippi river, and to [illegible] Mississippi, so as to keep that river within its shore, and thus to prevent the constant change that is occurring in the Mississippi between [illegible] the Ohio and Memphis. Resolutions of the same, in favor of the passage of a law granting a pension to the officers and privates who served in the war of 1812 with Great Britain and the various Indian wars. Resolutions of the same, in favor of the passage of a law that will secure to the militia or minute men called into the service of the United States for north Mexican war, payment for horses or other property lost in that service. A memorial from the citizens of the city of New Orleans, in favor of the passage of a law [illegible] the prospects. What is [illegible] paying the reduction of [illegible] duties on railroad iron, which was [illegible] passed, which was approved [illegible] to-day.

Mr [illegible] spoke at length in explanation. He said, in substance, that the Committee of [illegible] which would have been [illegible] see [illegible] Congress [illegible] meeting of Congress [illegible] Monday next, [illegible] voted down.

Mr Benjamin [illegible] on amendment [illegible] which would have been [illegible] voted down.

[illegible] Mr Bell [illegible] Government [illegible] tion of a railroad to the Pacific [illegible] Memphis, in that State as a central point for said road. Memorial [illegible] the passage of an act to reclaim the swamp lands in the east bank of the Mississippi river, and to [illegible] Mississippi, so as to keep that river within its shore, and thus to prevent the constant change that is occurring in the Mississippi between [illegible] to authorize the Ohio and Memphis [illegible] of the same, in fact [illegible] the passage of a law granting a pension to the officers and privates who served in the war of 1812 with Great Britain and the various Indian wars. [illegible] same, in fact [illegible] passage of an act [illegible] service of the United States [illegible]

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCA

Publishing Committee Louisiana Conference, { J. C. KEENER, L. PARKER, J. B. WALKER.

H. N. McTYEIRE, Editor.

J. HAMILTON, D. D., T. W. DORMAN, W. MURRAH. } Publishing Committee Alabama Conference.

VOL. IV. NO. 24. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, JULY 15, 1854. WHOLE NO. 180.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

PROHIBITION OF THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

We promised in a former article to show that it is within the province of Government to prohibit the Liquor traffic. A republican will not controvert the position that Government derives its just powers from the consent of the governed; therefore, if a majority of the voters of any of the sovereign States desire the prohibition of the liquor traffic, the representatives of those voters not only have the right, but are in duty bound to suppress the traffic.

But it is contended by some that there are Constitutional restrictions in the way of State legislation. If there be, it is an easy task to point to the Article of the Constitution that forbids it. This, so far as we are advised, has never been done; hence we infer it is not there. Several of the States have already prohibited the traffic, and we have heard of no able and learned jurist pronouncing the law unconstitutional. We wish to hear no more about the Constitution forbidding, unless the fact can be proved. We cordially invite any one to prove it; and until it be proved, we shall take it for granted that there are no constitutional restrictions in the way of a prohibitory law. We think it has been proved beyond controversy, in a former article, that no one has a moral right to engage in the traffic. Now, if no one has a moral right to retail ardent spirits, and if there are no constitutional restrictions in the way of State legislation, what other reasonable objection can be urged against it? It is conceded by some that this is a moral question, and that it should be left to the operation of moral forces. We reply, that polygamy is a question of morals, yet it is prohibited by law, as all will admit, for the best of reasons. But some may still contend that the evils of intemperance can be mitigated, if not entirely remedied, by moral sunsion; hence it is unnecessary to invoke the aid of the law. Let the history of the Temperance cause for the past twenty years answer that argument. The apostles of Temperance have been in the field, pleading their cause with the most thrilling eloquence; the alarm has been sounded upon the house-top, and in every nook, corner and dale of our country. Still the fiery flood sweeps with unpitying fury over the whole face of the earth, submerging all that is pure, and lovely, and of good report, in its burning waves; and in its track are seen the mangled forms of its victims, while the sighing wind bears on its wings the sighs and groans of distressed orphanage and helpless widowhood, and the parched earth drinks up their flowing tears.

Why, then, should we sit down and wait for moral sunsion to do what it has failed to do after a trial of so many years, when we have the means in our hands of effecting the object immediately?

The only question that admits of reasonable doubt, is one of expediency. Some are disposed to question the good policy of a prohibitory law. We think, however, a careful analysis of the subject may satisfy the most skeptical of its good effects.

If the law will in any degree lessen the evils of intemperance, every good man must surely give it his support. That the Maine liquor law has greatly lessened the evils of intemperance, where it has been in operation, is a fact too well known to need proof. If the law, then, has lessened the evils of drunkenness without inflicting greater ones upon the people in their stead, we can not see, for the life of us, why it should be denounced as the most preposterous, utopian idea of the age. Let its opponents show us, if there be some secret, lurking evil in it that has escaped the observation of their less sagacious fellow-countrymen.

To an impartial looker-on, there is nothing so very horrible in the destruction of cross-road groceries. We can not see that it will cause the widow and the orphan to have less bread, or that it will increase their troubles and trials in any way. We can not see who will be injured by it, unless it be the few that are engaged in the noble work of retailing poison, poverty, death, and every species of crime with which our sin-cursed earth is afflicted. These are noble fellows, to be sure, to claim their rights under the law; and our legislators are very considerate indeed, in not suffering the glorious privileges which were bequeathed them by our ancestors, to be invaded.

The question for a legislator's consideration is this: shall the wishes of the small per centage of his constituents, who are engaged in the traffic, be consulted, in preference to the larger, wiser and better portion who favor a prohibitory law? Can there be a doubt as to the course he should pursue? "But," it may be said, "law is designed to protect minorities in their rights." That is a principle of law to which we subscribe as heartily as any one; but until it be proved that the minority on this question have rights which would be infringed by a prohibitory law, we shall deny its applicability. We contend the dealers in ardent spirits have no right to engage in a business attended with so much evil; but, on the contrary, they are infringing upon the clearly-defined rights of their fellow-beings.

The retail shop is a public nuisance—the nursery of vice, and a blight upon every thing that is good and praiseworthy. Yet, according to the present law of Alabama, any loafer may stick down a grocery at your door in opposition to the wishes of four-fifths of the voters of the beat; and this is called Republicanism! We contend that we have a right to claim protection of the law against this monstrous, legalized system of pauper-making, especially do we claim exemption from taxes for the support of the system.

The legislator that is indifferent to the claims and the rights of his constituents, is unworthy of the confidence of a free, enlightened people.

Our law-makers should be wise, free and independent—men who act from disinterested motives, and who are not afraid to do their duty and risk the consequences.

The legislator that is less than this, may do to follow a mule, or keep bar on a steamboat; but he is not fit to make laws for freemen.

P. G. W. Ellis.

Helicon, Ala., June 27.

INCIDENTS IN THE LIFE OF BASCOM

SPECIAL PROVIDENCE.

It was Bascom's habit, after having traveled, preached and led his classes, to wander in the woods, book in hand, and thus improve his intervals for intellectual improvement. Here is an interesting paragraph relating to these evening indulgences:—

On one of these occasions, having finished the regular work of the day, and partaken of his frugal repast with the hospitable family where he sojourned, he took his book—Beattie on Truth—and sought the woods. Soon he entered a sweet, wild valley that nestled down between two lofty mountains which rose on either side as if to guard his sacred retreat; he followed up the lovely dell until his eye rested on a large spreading thorn tree, which, in addition to its own dense foliage, was all interwoven and mantled over with the thousand tendrils and broad leaves of a luxuriant grape vine, presenting a shade of inviting coolness, and a swarded carpet of refreshing green. Thither he went, and delighted, cast himself upon this cool lap of Nature, to enjoy, undisturbed, its delicious luxury.

But scarcely had he opened the volume in his hand when a sense of inquietude came over him, and he could not compose his mind to read. In vain he attempted to reason himself into composure; in vain he assured himself that a more charming spot could not be found in the wide forest than that he then occupied; his restlessness but increased until it rose to nervous excitement, and self-reproachingly he rose up and walked from the spot. Just as he did so, the friend with whom he carried, starting on a gunning expedition, approached him, and they met a few paces from the tree. At this conjuncture, the practiced eye of the hunter discovered what Bascom's had failed to detect—in a moment his piece was leveled, the sharp crack of the rifle rang up the valley, and as its echo came back from the adjacent hills, a huge ferocious panther dropped from its concealment among the vine-covered boughs of the thorn-tree, and fell dead on the very spot from which Bascom had but a moment before arisen, under the promptness of that strange restlessness. Shuddering at the hair-breadth escape he had passed, and overwhelmed with a sense of gratitude to God, he humbly acknowledged that it was the Lord's doing, and marvelous in his eyes! And, not long before his death, he expressed to the writer a most firm conviction that the mysterious and apparently causeless inquietude which drove him from beneath the tree, perhaps at the moment when the ferocious beast was about to pounce upon him, was the work of a special providence of God.

A COUNTRY APPOINTMENT.

Occasionally he met an adventure in itinerant life that would not now-a-days be very highly relished by our young itinerants. Here is a description of one of his appointments, followed by an incident of rather a startling character:—

Far back from the river in a sequestered dell under the mountain spurs, Bascom had a regular preaching place. The inhabitants were not huddled together in dense settlements, but scattered at wide intervals among the fastnesses and valleys of the mountains. When preaching day arrived, the mountaineers might be seen gathering in from different localities at distances varying from two to ten miles, and by modes of conveyance sufficiently unique to excite the attention of the uninitiated. Here might be seen approaching the rustic place of worship, a man on horseback, carrying his wife behind him on the same horse; there you might see a female, dressed in neat homespun, mounted on an indifferent horse, around the neck of which hung a bell, the clatter of which was temporarily hushed by the wisp of leaves—behind her rides a child, while she carries another on her lap;—her husband, in a blue hunting shirt, with pouch and gun, leads the way down the steep winding path, two or three larger children, with sun-bleached hair and sun-browned faces, following behind as a rear guard: a group of five or ten, comprehending the meeting-goers from one glen or gorge, might be seen approaching on foot, in Indian file, through the mountain passes, to the rustic temple; and though a stranger would judge that half a score of souls could not be mustered at one place, and especially on a call of religious duty, when the appointed time arrived, they came pouring in from their invisible habitations like the clansmen of some Highland chief at the well known signal for a grand rally. And he who expected to find these people barbarously ignorant of the value of truth and the benefits of preaching, would find his mistake. These mountain Christians were people of one book, and however little they knew of Grecian and Roman classics, few people were better acquainted with the doctrines of the Bible, and few better prepared to detect errors in the great elements of theology than they. If a preacher advanced any thing novel, even hypothetically, it was well to be prepared for defending it, for he was sure to be called on for such defense by the first old lady in whose company he happened to fall.

* * * *

A BEAR HUNT.

His biographer tells the following:

On one of Bascom's periodical visits to this place, the preacher had arrived, most of the congregation had assembled, and many were exchanging salutations about the door, others were still dropping in, and the preacher with his saddle-bags on his arm, was conversing with a brother from another neighborhood about making an appointment at a new place, when the report of a gun was heard but a short distance from the place. This was too common an occurrence to excite much interest, until a shout and then the yelp of a dog were heard in the direction from which the report proceeded, and the next minute a bear was seen running by the place of meeting, pursued by a dog. Instantly two or three rifles were discharged after him, but he was too distant for the balls to take effect. Two or three other dogs joined in the pursuit, and directly nearly every male on the ground followed in the chase. The preacher, seeing his congregation gone, dropped his whip and saddle-bags where he stood, and being exceedingly swift on foot, he was soon ahead of all his people, and but little in rear of the dogs. The woods were dense, and in a very short time, bear, dogs and preacher were out of sight of the following crowd.

The latter pursued by the cry of the dogs and dripping of blood of the wounded bear, but every moment the sound became more faint and distant, and old bear-hunters began to fear that the fleetness of the preacher might bring him into serious peril should the bear make a stand against his pursuers, while at such a distance in advance of the company as to put him beyond the reach of immediate help. This fear came near to being realized; for the bear, unable to climb, by reason of the wound in his arm, and alike unable to elude his enemies by flight, planted himself against a tree and prepared to defend himself to the utmost. The dogs were instantly around him, and at once a furious fight began. Practical dogs will not close with a bear but by compulsion, or when they have a very decided advantage, but while some make a feint in front, the others snap him in the rear, and then fly off before he can turn on them, and so on alternating the attack as he changes front; but of the three dogs engaged in this conflict, one only had learned the necessity of these cautionary movements. When Bascom came up with the combatants—which was in a very few moments—the trained dog was playing around for an opportunity of a rear cut to his enemy, while the others were fiercely baying him in front, apparently debating the expediency of rushing upon his gnashing teeth and threatening claws. Bascom saw the posture of the parties, and cutting a stout bludgeon, instantly, but rashly, decided on intervention, if necessary. Advancing nearer, he encouraged the hesitating dogs to the onset, and they rushed on the foe; the third dog saw his opportunity to attack from behind, and for a few moments the fight was furious; but soon the bear gave one of the dogs such a blow as sent him away howling with pain, and deeply gashed: another he seized in his terrible embrace, and appeared as if he would crush every bone in his body in a moment. By this time Bascom had got within a few feet of the enemy, and raised his club to bring it down on the head of the foe with crushing energy. The bear had taken a sort of sitting half-erect posture, with his back against the tree, and as the club descended he managed to evade the force of the blow, and catching the bludgeon in his mouth, he struck his fangs through it and held it fast, still holding the dog in his agonizing hug. Unwilling to be thus foiled, Bascom, having drawn his knife to cut and trim his club, and having no time to return it to his pocket, still held it in his hand, now struck it into the bear's side; it was, however, too small to produce instant death, but greatly exasperated the wounded animal. Either probably regarding this as foul play, or thinking the preacher an enemy more worthy than the dogs to engage his powers—I am glad to say he did not live to tell which—brain dropped the dog from his embrace, and made a plunge at his new enemy. A few seconds before this the hunter, whose rifle had wounded the bear, having outrun his fellows, emerged from the thicket a few rods from the scene of action. At a glance he saw Bascom's danger—cast down his gun as he flew towards the spot with the speed that terror imparts, and drew from its sheath his long hunting knife. As the bear made a plunge that must have brought the preacher fully within his power, two of the dogs seized him behind and broke the force of the movement, but yet he caught the leg of Bascom's pantaloons in his teeth, and in spite of the efforts of the faithful dogs, would have drawn him within the grasp of his killing embrace, but that at this perilous conjuncture, the hunter plunged his long, keen blade to the very hilt into the heart of the furious beast, and with a groan he sank down dead, still holding the preacher's pantaloons between his clenched teeth.

The rest of the company came up—the adventure was talked over—comments were pleasantly made on the preacher's fleetness and courage—the bear was dragged back to the meeting-place, skinned and hung up—the congregation collected in the house, the new made young bear-fighter preached with uncommon life. An uncommonly interesting class-meeting followed, and a large proportion of the company dined together that day on the "preacher's bear." [Dr. Henkle.

We should like to continue these spirited extracts, but our space admonishes us to forbear. We may recur to the volume again.

A Goon Hint.—The celebrated John Angell James, in a communication to the British Banner, made the following sensible remark:

"Why should students, whatever their taste, capacity and aptitude, all be drilled after the same fashion, and kept four or five years dogging at the language, of which they are never likely to make any thing, and are thus, in some cases, prevented from becoming good preachers, by being made bad scholars. I do not write thus to depreciate sound learning, for I contend for this wherever it can be obtained, but to show that it is not in all cases necessary for great usefulness. It is an unquestionable fact, that many of our most popular and useful ministers in the present day, as well as in past times, have made no pretensions to scholarship."

The Bards.

BY THOMAS BUCHANAN READ.

When the sweet day in Glenco hath departed,
And twilight comes with dewy, downcast eyes,
The glowing spirits of the nobly-hearted
Like stars around me rise.

Spirits whose voices pour an endless measure,
Exhaustless as the fountain of glory are;
Until my trembling soul, o'erswept with pleasure,
Throbs like a flooded star.

Old Homer's song, in mighty modulations,
Comes surging, endless, up the oblivious main;
I hear the rivers from succeeding nations
Go answering down again.

Hear Virgil's stream in changeful currents striding,
And Dante sweeping round the ninth Palestine;
And Dryden's deep and solemn river rolling
Through groves of midnight pine.

I hear the Iron Norseman's numbers ringing
Through frost in Norsage like a herald's horn;
And, like a bell, hear glorious Chaucer singing
Away to England's morn.

In Rhenish halls I hear the minstrels lever
Wave wildly while they harp both trolling strings,
Till the young maiden's eyes, all beinisled, over
Like the wet cup overflow.

And hear from Scottic hill, the eagle quiet,
Tearing in fierceness music's ripened eyes,
As their imprisoned song in battle agitate
In the long rally days.

The world-wide Shakspeare—the imperial Emperor,
Whose shafts of song o'erleap the angel's scale;
While delicate, as from a silver censer,
Floats the sweet dreams of Keats!

Nor these alone; for through the growing present
Westward a starry, steep Parnassus lies;
Her glorious spirit, like the evening crescent,
Comes rounding up the skies.

I see the beauty which her light imparteth!
I hear the masters of our native song!
The gentle-hearted Allston, poet, artist!
And Dana wild and strong!

And he, whose soul like angel-harps combining,
Anthemed the solemn "Voices of the Night"
I see fair Zophiel's radiant spirit shining,
Pale, intellectual light!

And Bryant, in his own broad kingdom mildly
Walking by streams, through wood and summer fields;
And from hundred Whittier, who to wildly
The fiery fabliau wields!

These are the Bards, who, like our forests, lower,
Firm in their strength as are the mountain trees!
I were content could I but be a flower
Up at the feet of these!

THE HISTORICAL PORTRAIT GALLERY AT THE SYDENHAM PALACE.

[From the London Athenæum, June 10.]

A certain feeling of awe creeps over the mind of the spectator who stays even for a few minutes to muse in these long avenues of the "Pantheon of History." We can now in some degree imagine what a Roman patrician must have felt when he walked through the hall of his father, and saw the waxen images of his ancestors on either hand, smiling, as his fancy might conceive, at his virtues, or frowning at his vices; and we can now conceive the feelings with which an Egyptian monarch may have beheld those embalmed bodies of his predecessors, which had for a thousand years mocked at corruption and the worm. The unit man looks small amid this great multitude of the chosen sons of nature—of those who, being dead, are yet speaking to him from the tomb. We feel as if we were pacing some silent desert of a purgatorial region, surrounded by pale, voiceless faces which something tells us are but the mere vanguard of those shadowy legions which memory can so quickly summon up from their long sleep to re-people earth.

In this court the dead painters environ us, from saintly Giotto and Fra Angelico, to Raphael, beautiful as an angel, and Rubens, courteous and lordly as the kings whose courts he visited; the dead poets hem us in, from Dante, visionary and mournful, to Ariosto, gay and chivalrous; and the dead musicians gird us round, from Palestrina, with the high sad brow, to Mozart, lively as the Viennese who adopted him; and far without, in very distinct circles of a lower heaven, are crowding kings and warriors, from pious Louis to the thick-lipped Bourbon, from heroic Bayard to the mountebank Murat, and from the falcon-eyed De Foix to the ill-starred Lannes.

A few glances here, and all modern history rises before the eye in conflicting images that obliterate each other, and shift like the colors in a kaleidoscope. As we behold the Austrian beauty of the daughter of Maria Theresa, the French Revolution "rushes red on the sight," and as we turn to look at the calm austerity of the blind Milton, our own Civil War gives rise to thoughts of the black scaffold and the red ax, of the Whitehall window and the judgment seat at Westminster. Petrarch, dead in his study, recalls Tasso dying at Rome while the the laurel crown was even then wreathing for him in the Capitol; and Raphael, lying in state before his own picture of "The Transfiguration," reminds us of the sadder scene of Haydn, falling dead and mangled before the unfinished creation of his genius. Peace has come at last to these heroic souls, and, "after life's fitful fever they sleep well." Galileo has long ago risen from his knees before the Inquisition, and, in spite of Holy Office and red-legged Cardinals, the world still moves round the sun. Tasso has long since left the madman's narrow dungeon at Ferrara for the narrower grave, and Dante has ere this rejoined his Beatrice in Paradise. Posterity has paid Correggio what his cotemporaries refused, and Milton's poems are no longer despised.

It does the loiterer good to look around and remember how Time works its revenges, and how justice denied by one age is granted by another. Here is the proud Torregiano, who broke to pieces the statue he had wrought for the niggardly hidalgo that refused him his hire, and who died forgotten in a Spanish dungeon, now become a crowned king among men. Here is the still prouder Michael Angelo, his fellow-student, whose nose he broke by an angry blow as they were working together, modeling an antique statue in the princely garden of the Medici—that same Angelo whom a paltry noble compelled in his youth to mould a frail statue of snow in the courtyard that he might mock his useless labor from his palace window. Where is the sculptor now, and where the noble, in the memory of men? Here is the meek Racine, who slain by an angry look from that blubber-cheeked king whom nobody stays to look at, and near him is the satirical Boileau who recorded Louis's glory. We see again Beethoven in his old age, deaf to all the sounds he loved so much; Haydn, though blind, still groping over the keys of the organ; Buonarotti, when dim of sight, having the antique torso brought to him that he might feel it, though he could not see its beauty; and Milton, sightless, writing of the beauties from which he was ever shut out. The groupings of these casts in this manner supplies an artificial aid to the memory, and all the reading of a life unwinds itself as we gaze at face after face of these dead patriarchs of thought. These are the conquerors ever time and oblivion, (the past alone is indestructible and unreachable by destiny,) they whose names are immortal and imperishable, as long as the human race survives to extend their conquests and perpetuate their fame. Let us stop a moment before this cast of David—not King David, but the great artist-painter of the French Revolution, the butcher of the Convention, and the painter of Napoleon. His face is coarse and brutal, his mouth hideously distorted. He is just the man you can imagine shouting, to his colleagues, in the language of his own art, "We must grind some more red," as the tumbril jolted by, with the pikes clashing before it, amid the jeers of the "insultenses" and the hoarse yelling of the Marseillaise, while the poissardes who reeled after, tossing up their red caps to the cry of "Ca ira ca-ira, les aristocrats à la lanterne!" Not far off is Madame Dubarry, who once heard those cries that drowned her shrieks as she passed on to the place of death. The unblushing forehead of the quondam milliner—the wife of Le Roué, and the mistress of a king—the harlot in youth and saint in age—who escaped death when she was guilty, and suffered when she became innocent—is hard, round, small and prominent. Her small, port, grisette features, slender neck and full bust, are not very unlike those of Marie Antoinette, except that these little pouting lips have not the negro-like fullness of the Austrian race: and the gaze is more impudent and wanton, and less capable of being roused into the heroic. She is one neither able to dare nor to suffer.

The casts are divided into four sections: the English, the French, the German and the Italian. The first abounds chiefly with illustrious moderns; the French with the illuminati of the "Grand Monarque" and revolutionary periods, and with a fair sprinkling of the earlier kings; the German includes their chief poets and philosophers, and many of the more recent statesmen; and the Italian is rich in the old painters, and comprises a few poets and dramatists.

The ugliest of all ancient and modern great men seem Galileo, Socrates and Pitt; Machiavelli and Calhoun coming in a good second. Galileo, like Socrates, has a short, thick, fleshy nose, long upper lip, and prominent cheek bones. Socrates, not unlike a vulgar Silenus, was accustomed to say that his face, in spite of the apparent contradiction, was a great argument in favor of physiognomy, for that by nature he had all those bad passions that his features indicated, but wisdom had taught him to subdue them. Pitt has a bowsprit of a nose, a pert, hook-shaped appendage, on which his enemies used to say, "he dangled the Opposition," the most unpromising nose that genius ever blew. Machiavelli is a small, wizen, tight-skinned looking lassult, with the cold cunning ferocity of a wild cat hidden beneath the white-flecked skin of a priest. Calhoun is a gaunt, emaciated giant, like a consumptive backwoodsman, and his angular features seem worked by the external machinery of those whip-cord veins and that shrivelled cordage of muscles that hang like loose rigging about his hollow-eyed visage. The great Michael Angelo, too, in spite of his pure aspirations and noble extraction, appears scarcely more comely than the illustrious men here selected for their preëminence in ugliness. He has the heavy brow, coarse, blunt, almost savage face of a bullying stone-mason, and the protruding cheek-bones of a highland blacksmith, with the perceptive faculties swelling out in a bar above his deep eyes: in short, he presents the rough sketch of the noble face which we see realized in his friend and cotemporary, Sebastian del Piombo, whose front and beard are like the Phidian Jove, and who might have served Buonarotti as model for his Moses. In all the faces you may discern the truth of the remark made by that acute observer and good, pious visionary, Lavater, that the eye-brows of the English and the noses of the French are the chief features of their respective great men Henry the Fourth, Sully, Montaigne, are all remarkable for the bold, broad-ridged nose, with its dilatable nostrils; and Shakspeare, Bacon, Newton, have all the low, full, meditative eye-brows, the very reverse of the fantastic, high-arched, wandering ones of Francis the First. "Non cuique datum est habere nasum" (it is not given to every one to have a nose) says Lavater plaintively, forgetting that to some the gods grant too much nose, as he might have seen in a moment in the looking-glass.

The painters form here an interesting series: from the monastic, calm, pious contemplative faces of Fra Angelica and Masaccio, with whom painting was rather an aspiration and a religious duty than a trade, to the solemn, aristocratic Venetians, who became rich and ennobled by their art, and the great men who pursued art as a passion, like Michael Angelo, the Berserker, and Raphael, sweet-eyed and saintly, and so on to the full-blooded, vigorous Flemings, with whom Art was both a trade and a dignity but not a religion. How we group them together when we think of Titian visited by Michael Angelo, the friend of Raphael and Giulio Romano: or of Velasquez walking at night with Claude and Poussin on the rampart at Rome, while Guido was painting his "Aurora" in the same city, and Albano too was there not idle, or we see Rubens, a very king among painters, busy at his "Descent from the Cross," while robust Jordaens and Snyders, Brauwer and young Teniers are looking on. Here is Giotto, whom Cimabue took from tending sheep: and the Carracci, the sons of a poor tailor, like Andrea del Sarto; and here is the slow, sure-witted Domenichino, whom the savage cut-throat Spagnoletto persecuted to death; and Guido, the Carracci's pupil, who escaped with difficulty the same fate only to die more miserable than Correggio. We see here those enthusiasts to whom Art was all in all: who sat beside the galley slaves as they toiled, to watch the straining muscles, and who exposed themselves to the risk of shipwreck for the sake of a marine effect.

Among the great composers we see the usual peculiarity of the physiognomy, following the changes of a century. Palestrina is austere and calm; Cimarosa sensual and fat; Haydn has a little of the petit-maître about him; but the demoniac Beethoven, whom he prophesied would turn out a mere pianist, looks sublime, with his deep eyes, suffering face, and hair like a wild beast's mane.

There are several casts here of the Cæsar-like head of Napoleon, the very type of dominion and serene, cold, imperturbable wisdom; but Canova's and Thorwaldsen's busts, though both grand and calm, fall in point of actual portraiture when compared with the miniatures of Isabet, or the leonine faces that Delaroche and David have painted. In Isabet you trace the great Corsican, from the pale, cynical, melancholy young officer of artillery, and the grave, conscious dignity of the Consul, to the unhealthy and flabby features of the latter Emperor, when, as Lamartine says, his face appeared as if gilded by the life that tinged his blood, and when his head habitually hung down, like Wordsworth's, heavy with trance-like meditation and "le petit caporal" of the Santassins had become, in the soldier's language, "le pere pensif" of the Old Guard. Round this eagle cluster the eaglets. Here are all the Marshals, whom his keen eye detected, like Alexander, in every rank of life: Murat, the landlord's son; Junot and Ney, the poor privates; Bernadotte, the brave sergeant; Massena, the vintner's boy; and Kleber, the young architect. Here, too, is Hoche, the stable-boy, who once dared to laud in Ireland; Marceau, the renegade, and Desaix, whom Bonaparte wept for at Marengo; and Lannes, whose mind, he said, was continually growing, and who resembled an old Roman rather than a French Marshal. Of this invincible band few were native Frenchmen. Junot was a Swiss, Macdonald a Scotchman, and Kellermann, and Kleber were Germans. Here is Kleber who Napoleon said sometimes slept, but when he awoke it was the awakening of the lion, looking eager as if to fly up to pierce the battle-smoke, upraised like a Vulcan starting from his forge; Hoche, handsome as Murat, and less theatrical than that "King Francomi;" and Marceau, proud, beautiful, and cruel as a Catiline.

The poets muster strong, and elbow the very kings who let them starve. Here is that Corneille, whom Racine petitioned for so warmly; and who, nevertheless, died in poverty and neglect, while France was still reading the "Cid" with wonder and delight. Here is Tasso, sad-eyed, but calm; Ariosto, vivacious and wild; Dante, thin-cheeked and suffering; Metastasio, the boy who was found a poor improvisatore in the streets, now full-wigged and heavy-jowled; Petrarch, dignified and majestic; and Goldoni, intelligent and acute.

One may read a nation's history here in the faces of its kings. In crowned murderer and crowned adulterer you may trace every gradation of human criminality and human folly, from the lust and vanity of Francis the First to the blood-sucking fanaticism of Charles the Ninth—the infuted greed of Louis the Fourteenth, and the refined degradation of Louis Quinze. Here is Louis the Eleventh, his wrinkled face drawn down with superstitious terror, and wrung by fear rather than by repentance; Henry the Fourth, bold and sagacious, but unprincipled, valu and lewd; Charles the Ninth, a sort of royal pickpocket, with a hang-dog, Jack Sheppard face, more fit for the galley bench than the seat of state; Francis the First, headstrong and weak; Louis the Twelfth, ugly and heartless, in spite of Brantome's opinion, that he had "un visage doux et bon;" and Louis the Fifteenth, with his retreating forehead, fleshy jole and sensual under lip.

Behind these come a crowd of illustrious Frenchmen. Voltaire, the incarnation of a sneer, with his hollow piercing eye, projecting under lip and pointed chin; Descartes, wild, furrowed and haggard, the most imaginative looking of severe thinkers: who explained creation by the most absurd and poetical hypothesis, and convinced himself that there was a God by the most daring speculations. Here is Sully, the very model of a statesman; grave, wise and thoughtful, strangely contrasting with the fixed, stony faces and compressed lips of such modern diplomatists as Mantenfel and Von Stein.

On the antique oasis we have no room to speak. It is singular to observe that when the Greek strove to convey a low type of humanity, as in the Faun or Silenus, its face has European analogies. The Roman heads resemble ours in many respects; and the depraved women of the imperial times, as Faustina, Agrippina, etc., have the hard round forehead and small weak chin which became the marked feature of the Louis Quinze age, or may be traced in the sleepy-eyed, languid beauties of Lely and of Kneller. It is impossible to deny that every century seems to have impressed its peculiar crimes and virtues, and its hopes and struggles, on the faces of its great men. The Elizabethan face is finely oval; the eyes meditative, the forehead high and arched, and the chin firm and well rounded. The George the Second visage is fleshy and full, the chin small and fat, the lower jaw heavy, the neck thick, and the cheeks full and furrowed. The fifteenth century forehead is square; the seventeenth round; the thirteenth flat and wide; the eighteenth full and swelling over the eyes. We believe that in the present day a better type of physiognomy is beginning to appear: the face grows more oval, the forehead higher and fuller, the lips smaller and firmer, the nose nobler and straighter. Napoleon's was a model of a head; Byron, Shelley, Southey, Wordsworth and Keats were spiritual and handsome. Most of our living authors present much more of the Elizabethan type. Refinement of matters is already perceptible on the outlines of features. Club life may be as selfish as tavern life; but it is purer and healthier. There is more religion now and decorum, more earnestness and less materialism. A pure school of poetry has arisen, drawing its images direct from nature, and appealing to the common heart. A school of painting has sprung up side by side, originating from it, and likely to rival it in renown. With the peaked beard vanished chivalry; with the full bottomed wig, Renaissance poetry; and with a revival of a taste for Gothic Art is now coming back all that was worthy of preservation in the Middle Ages.

The Plurality of Worlds.

Sir David Brewster's reply to Prof. Whewell on the Plurality of Worlds has been published in London. A correspondent of the New York Tribune says: "It is more imaginative than scientific. The author is not merely a positive philosopher; he thinks that things may exist which do not furnish evidence for mathematical demonstration. Else, indeed, what is the use of the faculty of Belief?" Here is a suggestive paragraph:

"To assume that the inhabitants of the planets must necessarily be either men or any thing resembling them, is to have a low opinion of that infinite skill which has produced such a variety in the form and structure and functions of vegetable and animal life. In the various races of man which occupy our globe, there is not the same variety which is exhibited in the tribes that perish. Although the noble Anglo-Saxon stands in striking contrast with the Negro, and the lofty Patagonian with the diminutive Esquimaux, yet in their general form and structure they are essentially the same in their physical and in their mental powers. But when we look into the world of instinct and survey the infinitely varied forms which people the earth, the ocean and the air—when we range with the naturalist's eye from the element to the worm—from the leviathan to the infusoria—and from the eagle to the ephemeron—what beauty of form—what diversity of function—what variety of purpose is exhibited to our view! In all these forms of being, reason might have been given in place of instinct, and animals the most hostile to man, and the most alien to his habits, might have been his friend and his auxiliary, in place of his enemy and his prey.

"If we carry our scrutiny deeper into nature, and survey the infinity of regions of life which the microscope discloses, and if we consider what other breathing worlds lie far beyond even its reach, we may then comprehend the variety of intellectual life with which our own planets and those of other systems may be peopled. Is it necessary that an immortal soul should be hung upon a skeleton of bone, or imprisoned in a cage of cartilage and of skin? Must it see with two eyes, and hear with two ears, and touch with ten fingers, and rest on a duality of limbs?

"May it not reside in a Polyphemus with one eyeball, or in an Argus with a hundred? May it not reign in the giant forms of the Titans, and direct the hundred hands of Briareus? But setting aside the ungainly creations of mythology, how many probable forms are there of beauty, and activity, and strength, which even the painter, the sculptor and the poet could assign to the physical casket in which the diamond spirit may be inclosed; how many possible forms are there, beyond their invention, which eye hath not seen nor the heart of man conceived?"

The author of the essay has replied in a dialogue on the same subject, in which he says he does not deny the doctrine of a plurality of worlds, but only proposed to show that the notion had been taken up on insufficient grounds, and that the most recent astronomical discoveries point the other way.

Wild Man of Africa.—There is another inhabitant of the woods by the Gaboon River, more to be feared than the African lion; it is the wild man of the woods—not the ourang-outang, though an immense ape—always acting on the offensive and ready to attack man. The bones of his extremities are longer than those of an ordinary sized, full grown man. I have examined them here, and while contemplating the skull, the jaws, and their terrible apparatus, really experienced a sort of shuddering. The canine teeth are upwards of two inches long, and of proportionate bulk. There is a ridge running from the top of the nose backwards over the crown of the head; to this affixed a muscle, by which the living animal draws backwards and forwards a most frightful crest of stiff hairs; when enraged, or preparing to inflict injury, he erects them and draws the crest forwards over his large eyes, and utters most hideous yells at the same time.

Nothing seems to intimidate him. Sometimes he advances with boughs of trees broken off for the purpose of concealing his approach and attack, and suddenly grasps the legs of a human being, brings him instantly to the ground, breaks his bones by blows of his mighty arms and hands, and tears the flesh by his monstrous teeth. The native huntsman who goes in search or meets with him while pursuing less formidable animals, has learned that the safest way to engage is to act quite on the defensive; to let the monster draw near, when he will immediately seize the end of the muzzle of the gun, (ready cocked and presented,) between his teeth. Instantly it must be discharged; if the man either delays till the ape has compressed the barrel so as to close it, or fails to give a mortal wound, his doom is sealed.

The Power of Habit.

John B. Gough, in a lecture delivered at Exeter Hall, London, thus illustrates the power of habit. The report is from a London paper:

I remember riding from Buffalo to the Niagara Falls, and said to a gentleman, "What river is that sir?"

"That," he said, "is Niagara river."

"Well, it is a beautiful stream," said I; "bright and fair and glassy: how far off are the rapids?"

"Only a mile or two," was the reply.

"Is it possible that only a mile from us we shall find the water in the turbulence which it must show when near the Fall?"

"You will find it so, sir;" and so I found it; and that first sight of Niagara I shall never forget. Now, launch your bark on that Niagara river; it is bright, smooth, beautiful and glassy. There is a ripple at the prow; the silver wake you leave behind adds to your enjoyment. Down the stream you glide, oars, sails and helm in proper trim, and you set out on your pleasure excursion. Suddenly some one cries out from the bank, "Young men, ahoy!"

"What is it?"

"The rapids are below you."

"Ha! ha! we have heard of the rapids, but we are not such fools as to get there. If we go too fast, then we shall up with the helm and steer to the shore; we will lot the mast in the socket, hoist the sail, and speed to land. Then on, boys; don't be alarmed—there's no danger."

"Young men, ahoy there!"

"What is it?"

"The rapids are below you!"

"Ha! ha! we will laugh and quaff; all things delight us. What care we for the future? No man ever saw it. Sufficient for the day is the evil thereof. We will enjoy life while we may; will catch pleasure as it flies. This is enjoyment; time enough to steer out of danger when we are sailing swiftly with the current."

"Young men, ahoy!"

"What is it?"

"Beware! Beware! The rapids are below you!"

Now you see the water foaming all around. See how fast you pass that point! Up with the helm! Now turn! Pull hard! quick! quick! pull for your lives! pull till the blood starts from the nostrils, and the veins stand like whipcords upon the brow! Set the mast in the socket! hoist the sail! Ah! ah! it's too late! "Shrieking, cursing, howling, blaspheming; over they go."

Thousands go over the rapids every year, through the power of evil habit, crying all the while, "When I find out that it is injuring me I will give it up!"

In concluding, the speaker warned young men, in very impressive language, that they could not, even by penitence, amendment, and a long life of religion and usefulness, wash out the stain of early dissipation, nor always banish the accusing spectors that would rise even in their holiest moments.

Masonic Celebration at Alexandria.—On Saturday, the Masonic Fraternity of Rapides celebrated the anniversary of one of their Patron Saints, St. John the Baptist. The day was a fine one, and the celebration was one which cannot fail to reflect great credit on this ancient and popular Order. The procession was a large one, numbering upwards of sixty, which shows that the Order is in a very flourishing condition in that parish.

The exercises were held at the Methodist Church. Rev. A. D. McCoy officiated as chaplain on the occasion, reading the usual scriptural service, and offering up appropriate prayers. The choirs of both the Episcopal and Methodist Churches mingled their strains together on the occasion in singing songs to the Most High.

After this part of the ceremony was concluded, O. N. Ogden, Esq., a member of the Order, and a gentleman of the highest talent, was introduced to the audience, and delivered an eloquent address, suited to the occasion. Though we have not room for the whole of it, we cannot forego publishing the following portion, which the author has kindly furnished us, beautifully alluding to their late Grand Master, H. R. W. Hill:

"It is proper that, on this occasion, I should notice the lamented death of our late honored and most worshipful Grand Master, H. R. W. Hill. When but a few months ago the Angel of Death stood in our midst, dealing ruthlessly his pestiferous darts, he attained, in all his murderous triumphs, no more shining mark. Standing preëminent for a long series of years, among the intelligent commercial class, of which he was so distinguished an ornament, his mercantile honor was ever untarnished, and his personal integrity alike unimpeached and unimpeachable. Twice seriously embarrassed in the exigency of the times, by his heavy engagements for others, he on both occasions seemed to gather strength and credit from the very difficulties which beset him, and to rise on with fresh vigor from a pressure which, though it might overwhelm others, was powerless to ornish energies like his. He said well and truly, in his last will, that his charities had all been done in his life-time. Indeed, so large and generous, as well as judicious, were these, that it almost seemed as if Heaven had prospered him in his enterprises, and poured wealth with a liberal hand into his coffers, in order to make him an especial almoner of its bounty. Of his loss to the people of the wide region over which his business relations extended, this is not the

...ristian Advocate.

...per ...num, in advance.

...ORLEANS:

... JULY 15, 1854.

...ER INQUEST.—In giving the ver... Fillibuster inquest bef... week, we left the ... the U. S. Marshal's ... that on M... was issued from the U. S. ...anding ... hal to ..., Mr. ... and Dr. ...ail, for re... ...ve bond to ... in ... uba. At this ...the gentlem... security and were ... presenting a pro... against ... of the Court.

Alabama readers may feel ... following clip from Dr. Dar... ...onary Circular:—

E. D. Taylor writes from Cape Palmas, April 8, 1854. He had, at the time of writing, in addition to his pastoral work, a mission boys under his care, and we hope he is fully committed to his work."

THE NEW CERTIFICATE.—The Managers of the American Bible Society have prepared, with much care and pains, a new Certificate for Life Directors and Life Members. It contains a large steel engraving, representing the scene between the Saviour and the Jews, described in John 5:39. The high priest, and a group of his countrymen, expressing, in their countenances, scorn, hate, and ridicule, the effect of the picture, while Christ, ... and followers, are on the ... large scroll of the Scriptures lies between the parties, to which the ... is earnestly pointing, and telling the ... to "search the Scriptures," etc. It ... clearly to view the great source of an... for religious belief, as given by the Christianity himself.

...URCES.—The Montgomery ... Gazette saith—

"...work of the last number of the ...ery Mail was done on the Advertiser ...e steam power press—and most mis... done it was."

...ought not to have been—considering ...hanical facilities of the Advertiser, ...or ...h business qualities of Messrs. ... proprietors.

"...ths ago, thinking the ADVOCATE ... might need something in that line, ... politely shown through the publish... ...ment of the Advertiser ... am not mistaken, it has ... power press in the State, and ... most complete and extensive es... ...ments in the South. The engine is a ... thing, made there at home, by the ...ery iron works. We should like to ... as well fixed up here.

"...we must not leave these gentlemen ... our own and a sufficient apology ... "...rably done."—

"...was executed in a hurry, at night, in ...nce of our regular pressman, by one ... boys, who don't like to work at night, and who don't know much about the business ... The next number of the Mail will be printed on our press, and done up brown."

...ORTANT REVOLUTION FROM WEST TO EAST.

...TREATY WITH JAPAN.

...stream is setting the other way—from ... East, instead of from the East, West... much for the Californian acquisi... ... is only an earnest of the advan... yet to be derived, when the Isthmus routes are more perfect and the Pacific rail... is a fait accompli. American interests, and, what is more, American ideas will thus be advanced to a distinction and preference never to be enjoyed while the tide flows as of old. As it is and has been, every commercial and political event, the intelligence of which is received by others before reaching us, is prepossessed. Hence Commodore Perry was careful to send his late treaty the other way.

"We have said this inverted route of mails would give preference to American ideas. American people will hear first, think first and speak first on topics that now come to ... stamped with European opinion. A ... amount of opinion is formed by the press in ... try, and a vast amount of that press ... clipping and quotations. The foreign press comes to us with news of events, all moulded to their absolutisms and monopolies. The tale is told to suit them. Facts are emphasized according to their appreciations. Men and things are first presented us with their preface. Through laziness or ig... or to be in advance of contemporaries, the American press plunges into the mail bags, uses scissors vigorously, takes para... gly, furnished to hand, and ... in columns manufactured now with our imprint. Other papers copy, and in a few weeks ... transpire, and all men that figure ... fore American people as ... estimated by a Paris or ... Vienna journalist!

"... present position we ... leaving, ... much impressed with, these facts. A revolution in the mail routes would be the great... revolution of the nineteenth century.

"We note with a satisfaction these signs of the ... The treaty with Ja... brings ... ly out the tendencies and ... ...times the way.

"... Age, Capt. Porter, arrived at P... on the 16th ult. from Australia, in ... thirty ... days, notwithstanding she stopped six days at T... to ... supply of coal. She brought 170 passengers, $200,000 in treasure, and a large private mail to Adams & Co.

A bearer of despatches from Com. Perry, as well as Captain Porter, of the steamship Golden Age, goes to New York in the George Law, which sailed from Panama 1st instant. The former carries with him a treaty, concluded by Com. Perry with the Japanese Government, to the effect that two ports have ... thrown open—one the seaport of Jeddo; and also that 10,000 tons of coal have been placed immediately for the use of American commerce.

By our latest advices from the Pacific, received through the Eldorado, which reached here 7th inst., the intelligence from Honolulu is highly satisfactory, as indicative of the policy which is gradually opening the way for a general recognition of the importance of closer relations between the Sandwich Islands and the United States.

The United States sloop of war Saratoga arrived at Honolulu on the 29th April from Japan, and sailed for the United States, via Tahiti, on the 18th May.

The American brigantine Eudorus sailed from Honolulu on the 18th May for Japan and the adjacent seas. By her the first mail for Japan was dispatched to the American squadron in those waters.

The Alta Californian, 9th ult., gives us the first news of the Japan Treaty, and from it we take the account with livelier satisfaction than if from the London Times:—

By an arrival from the Sandwich Islands on Wednesday afternoon, we have news of a highly important character from Japan.

A slip from the Polynesian, announces the important fact, that a treaty has been entered into between the United States and Japan.

We have not, of course, seen the document now in transitu for the United States, but we understand that it opens to American citizens an American trade, the port of Samodi (the Odowari, perhaps, of the maps,) on the island of Niphon, some 40 or 50 miles west of the entrance of Yedo Bay, and the port of Chickadada, on the island of Yesso, in the district of Matamay, on the Straits of Sanga. The former was selected as the most convenient place for a depot, and arrangements were made with the Japanese for a supply of coal at that point. This is a place of considerable commercial importance, having a good harbor and a population of fifteen or twenty thousand. Its proximity to the manufacturing districts, which are not otherwise approachable by sea, render it an important position as a port for foreign trade. The vicinity of the latter place has been frequently visited by American whaleships, where they have had great difficulty in procuring supplies, on account of the restrictive policy of the Japanese.

We understand the treaty arranges for intercourse at both of these places; for the residence of American citizens there, and also for the residence of consuls, if, in future, either party should desire it. It also stipulates that Americans residing in or visiting these ports shall be free to visit the interior to the distance of ten or twelve miles without molestation.

It is said that the Japanese did not hesitate to enter into the most unqualified stipulations for the protection of seamen or others thrown on their shores; indeed they affirmed that it was already a part of the law of the Empire by special edict. They even insisted that the respective governments should pay the expenses of providing for the necessities of the citizens of the other, who might, by their misfortunes, need aid and comfort.

This disposition of the Japanese to treat with care and attention shipwrecked men, is quite contrary to the generally received opinion of the world in this respect; and in justice to the Japanese, it is but fair to state, that the restraint hitherto imposed upon American seamen, about which so much has been said and written, were rendered necessary by their over-becoming lawlessness.

So much for the treaty concluded between the United States and Japan. Its details can only be known after it is promulgated by the Government at Washington. It is not a commercial treaty, but one of Amity and Friendship, concluded in amity and friendship, and not an imposition of the strong upon the weak, whether they were willing or not.

It is the first international treaty ever made by the Empire of Japan, although repeated attempts have formerly been made to enter into relations with them of this character. The privileges enjoyed by the Dutch were a mere grant to a private company, having its principal foreign seat at Batavia.

REV. H. H. KAVANAUGH.—The Western Recorder, of Louisville, Ky., a Baptist paper, thus testifies of one of our new Bishops:—

"This able and eloquent Methodist minister, so well known and so much beloved and admired in Kentucky, has been elected and consecrated Bishop in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. If such an office, without Scriptural warrant and deriving life and being only from the Methodist Discipline, can be filled with Divine acceptance and for the advancement of vital goodness, we confidently predict it will be so filled by Bishop Kavanaugh. We have been accustomed to hear him preach from our boyhood; and few men have we ever heard with so much pleasure and profit. We have always regarded him as the strongest man in the Methodist pulpit of Kentucky, not excepting Bishop Bascom, who, out of the pulpit, as an orator sui generis, we admired above all men we ever heard, or whose orations we ever read. Bishop Kavanaugh is a Gospel preacher. Christ and his cross are prominent in all his sermons. He is a man of less sectarian bigotry than most of his brethren; indeed, he is always kind and courteous in his intercourse with ministers and individuals of other persuasions. He will elevate and adorn his new office."

APPOINTMENTS BY THE PRESIDENT—By and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Robert Dale Owen, Lewis Cass, Jr., John M. Daniel, Henry R. Jackson, Francis Scibels, Henry Bedinger, August Belmont, J. J. Selbes, John L. O'Sullivan, John W. Dana, James A. Bayles, Philo White, Charles Eames, James S. Green, to be ministers resident of the United States in the countries in which they are now charges d'affaires of the United States.

RE-BAPTISM IN MISSISSIPPI.

The work must all be done over again.

The work of re-baptism is going on bravely in Mississippi. The itinerary of the "Bishop of Mississippi," as delivered before his last Convention, and published in the Church Herald, goes to show the neglected and benighted Christians, (if they can be called Christians,) of all denominations in that State, that the time to favor them has come. A real Bishop—one of Apostolic degree—is out among them, doing what none other man or minister that has lived, and loved, and labored with them these many years, could do. He is baptising the old Christians over again. All the Methodists and Presbyterians of Mississippi are in the unbaptised state—they and their pastors:

Saturday, August 6—Visited a sick lady in Clinton, and administered to her the Sacrament of Baptism, according to the rites, and with the authority of the Church. In her infancy, she had received that Sacrament at the hands of a non-Episcopal minister but was justly dissatisfied with it.

Did ever Romish pretension run higher than that? We put the question—If a Romish Priest or Bishop, friar or monk, were to make a "visitation" through Mississippi, could he look upon the good work done there by various Christian Churches with less allowance, estimate it lower, and remark on it more invidiously, than this, new light, Bishop that has just taken the road! Is this the form of Protestant Christianity the people, the religious denominations of that State ask for?

Again:

Thursday, 5—I preached in Washington, in the Chapel of Jefferson College. I was assisted in the services by the Rev. Mr. Reigbley, the President of the Institution. Two persons were confirmed. In the afternoon, I baptized an infant in the neighborhood; and at night I baptized, in her own parlor, an aged member of our Communion, who, sixty years previous, had received the forms of that Sacrament from unauthorized hands, but who, now better instructed, humbly and faithfully desired the baptism of the Church.

The "Bispop of Mississippi" did not, like most new lights, begin at his own house, making his first converts there; but he is not without a witness in his family:

Sunday, 19—At night, I baptized, in my own parlor, my eldest sister, who was about to leave me the next morning. In her girlhood, she had received baptism at the hands of a good man, but one not duly commissioned to administer that Sacrament.

Well, ye Presbyterians of Mt. Hebron, rejoice—for you have cause to. You have been thinking, at Mt. Hebron there, that the services of the Church of our Lord Jesus Christ were held and witnessed. See how much you were mistaken! Your courtesy brought you the benefit:

Sunday, 12—I preached, by invitation, at "Mount Hebron," a Presbyterian place of worship, near Bovina. It was the first time that the services of the Church were ever witnessed in that immediate neighborhood. The congregation was as large as could have been expected from the unavoidable short notice that had been given. I was no little assisted in the services, by several members of the Church from Vicksburg, who had purposely come out to take part in that good work.

How much this service is entitled to an exclusive Church character appears on the face of it—so cumbersome and complicated that a special force had to be brought out to put it in motion. Very like Gospel simplicity! Amazingly primitive! The first preachers sent out of the Master, by two and two, could not have worked the service!

We are done with Bishop Green for the present—having shown his type and the type of that diocesan Churchianity, he, his clergy and organ, are trying to make take root in Mississippi soil. The distinction here given him may be considered out of proportion. But, as the representative of those the Christian people of these and those parts have known little of heretofore, except under another name, we have held up his principles and movements in their own light and directed attention to them. It will be for others to determine how far they promote the ends for which Christ died in bidding such men God-speed. The Church, indeed! Rather an organized and rampant schism.

Personally, he may be a good man. Such, on the most reliable representations, we believe him to be. The same representations put him down as a feeble preacher and a man of small though industrious capacity. This accords with the classification now generally obtaining. Men of the Hawks, and Tyng, and Milnor and Johns' stamp are an honor to the Protestant Episcopal Church of America, an ornament and a strength to our common Christianity. But there is another stripe whose bigotry stands them instead of higher powers. The lower they are in real ability, the higher they are in ecclesiastical assumption. These make your high-Churchmen, par excellence. Buckram supplies the place of brains. Without a pedestal of great mind and great heart, and great usefulness, to elevate their littleness they mount the steel of pretension.

The main trouble in dealing with such is to preserve a proper charity and watch against their insidious and small depredations. They have not the strength to remove foundations or any thing so; nevertheless, they are men of detail, and capable of damage in their way. "Of this sort are they which creep into houses and lead captive silly women." They cause a good deal of distress and commotion among a class of disciples found in every branch of the Church, who have no mind of their own—an unfortunate people, whom the Apostle has pointedly character ised as "Ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth." For these have a care.

FAILURES OF THE PAPAL PRESS.

There is a death-worm at the root of the Papal Press in this country. Its history is sickly, and its end tragical. Why is this so? Those who like to find out the causas rerum, may have philosophic engagement here. Are Romanists not a reading people? Or does that free discussion which journalism challonges and cannot escape, turn out injuriously? The advantages on their side are otherwise decided. Witness with what concert they act and speak, and how liberally funds are forthcoming for any enterprise dictated by the hierarchy. The recommendation of the Bishop goes a great ways, and yet their papers die out with the Episcopal or archiepiscopal seal at their heads.

The Catholic Messenger ran its brief career in this city. We chronicled its birth and death. The Southern Journal succeeded it, of which we gave notice—devoted to "Catholic principles." Lately that has ceased. Another agony is about to be begun in Louisiana, blessed by an archbishop and a bishop, and lower functionaries innumerable. A Prospectus is issued for "The Republican Omnibus and Catholic Herald," to be published at Plaquemine, La. It is hoped, at this third experiment in as many years, to put Papal principles through—in an "omnibus bill." It is evident they can not go alone. The Baton Rouge Comet thus pertinently notices it:—"The prospectus tells us that the Omnibus is not only to be a vehicle of news, and of political polemics, but also a medium of literary intelligence. That "the paper will be published in the French and English languages, and will be devoted particularly to the inculcation of the doctrines of the Catholic Church." We wish the Doctor all manner of success, for he is a gentleman and a scholar; but we do think he will have his hands full when he attempts to drive a "Republican Omnibus" with such antagonistical passengers on the inside as the Catholic Religion and Republican politics."

The Chicago Tribune says:—"Within the last few weeks three Roman Catholic papers have been forced to discontinue their publication, for want of sufficient support. The Shepherd of the Valley, published at St. Louis, led off in this series of failures; the Buffalo Sentinel followed, and the New York Budget came next. In all of these cases the complaint was the same—they were starved out. The editor of the Sentinel, which was the accredited organ of the Catholics in Buffalo, has published a statement showing that he lost $47 per week in publishing the paper. The reasons given for the discontinuance of the Shepherd, namely, that no one would take it, is, we think, highly creditable to the good taste of the Catholics of St. Louis." Its violent denunciations and opprobious epithets have done them much more injury than good.

"It seems that even the endorsement and official recommendation of the archbishop of the diocese, kept standing at the head of its columns, could not constrain the great body of the denomination which it professed to represent, to accept its doctrines and give it support."

The Crusader (Gavazzi's organ at N. York,) alluding to the significant fate of the Shepherd, adds:—"We learn that the same gloomy fate is threatening the existence of our contemporary, the New York Freeman's Journal, and Mr. Murphy, one of its proprietors and editors, has already withdrawn from the concern, in time to save his reputation and his purse.

"It appears that the Catholics in the United States are tired of supporting publications which make them and their religion so odious to all other denominations, and consider these inquisitorial papers more injurious to their cause."

GEMS OF THOUGHT FOR MINISTERS.

There may be priests in those religions which wait for the true sovereign Priest; there are none in that religion which has received and which believes in him. In this no one is priest, because every one is priest; it is remarkable, that in the Gospel it is only to Christians in general that this word is applied. [Vinet.

His (the Minister's) life is a life of consecration, without which it has no meaning. [Ib.

The Minister has pains of heart as little understood by the greater part of men, as the pastor's work is little appreciated. [Ib.

He alone who made the World, can make a Minister of the Gospel. [Newton.

It is the duty of every man, though drawn to the ministry by very lively convictions, to doubt his call when he sees that he is unacceptable. [Vinet.

Let God be called to our consultations, and never let Him be absent when the deliberations are going on. [Ib.

Prayer is necessary to keep us to the proper point of vision, which is always escaping from us. [Ib.

Prayer resembles certain isles of the ocean, the purity of which will allow no life to vermin. [Ib.

To my brother. It is out of place, in the relations of life, to consecrate ourselves to the ministry, and afterwards be at liberty to choose between the pastorate and the instruction of youth. [Ib.

The Minister is the depository of so great a thought, so great a responsibility, that gravity is but decency in his profession. [Ib.

For my young brother up the country. A man who is seen every where, can not inspire respect. The judgment we form of a Minister who goes much into society, is not very favorable. More than any other, the Minister should be select as to his associates. He must avoid, also, being seen without necessity in places even the most respectable, where the public come to divert themselves. [Ib.

It is remarkable, that the fear of prison and death has made fewer apostates than the love of money. [Ib.

Francis de Sales says, that in the whole course of his practice as a confessor, he had heard no one blame himself with avarice.

The family of a pastor may have friends, whom they may see frequently and familiarly, but it is not proper that they should see the world. The personal austerity of a pastor will not correct the impression which one will receive from the worldliness of his wife and children.

What is addressed to the ear, affects less readily the soul. [Horace.

Preaching has its place under the Gospel, but does not suffocate worship. Worship speaks to God, preaching speaks of Him. [Vinet.

I would rather hear the cure of souls objected against preaching, than preaching against the care of souls. I would rather one should say to me, "My sick, my poor, my scattered sheep require me, and forbid me to give my preaching all that attention which is desirable. [Ib.

METHODIST PRESS.

THE ASSISTANT TREASURY.—It is known that, in this city, is located a branch of our Missionary Treasury. The local and commercial convenience of this city offers facilities to those holding drafts of the Missionary Society of the M. E. Church, South, for having them cashed when they fall due, and without the discount generally suffered. But the Assistant Treasurer here has been able thus far to do very little for the accommodation of such, on account of the scarcity of funds in hand. This matter engaged the attention of the late General Conference. Rev. H. S. Thrall, writing to the Texas Banner, makes this item, which we hope will be noticed:—

"It is understood that the South-western Conferences are to have their drafts drawn on New Orleans, and are to report their Missionary money to the Treasurer there."

SECURING A POSITION.—A correspondent of the North-western Advocate brings forward a subject we have been thinking of editorializing on this good while. It is the policy that ought to be followed by our preachers and friends, of securing, at the earliest opportunity, eligible locations for church and parsonage, wherever they hold meetings. Build if you can at once; but secure the ground. Our people are generally first to enter a new field, but work without a conserving foresight. By and by others follow—society thickens, and the first is last. There are places, south and south-west, where twenty years ago Methodist Missionaries toiled. They might have domiciled the church and housed their labors then. They neglected this; and now not a Methodist church is there, or it is in a second or third rate position! It is time to act differently—to have the future in view; and this warning comes not too late for our good:

"Were you to travel through the country and see how this work is neglected, both your soul and your pen would immediately be stirred. Take an illustration or two: Here is a village which will soon be a city of no mean grade. The hard-toiling itinerant was here a long time in advance of all other ministers, as was generally the case through this country. The Methodist Society existed years before any other denomination came. The people felt their obligation and proposed again and again to give the ground for a church, and to help build it. And only two years ago, a non-professor gave a bond for a deed of two beautiful lots, if they would build within two years; and the specified time has but just expired, and now those lots are worth a thousand dollars, and others cannot be obtained in any suitable location. Only a few weeks since, a gentleman offered our people a good lot and a hundred dollars, but they did not start, and another denomination has taken that offer, and also all the heavy subscriptions which the people would have preferred to give the first moral cultivators of this ground. But the Papists, with Jesuitical vigilance, seized the most beautiful site, in the very heart of the town (not, however, until after we had rejected it as a free donation,) and they now have a papistic temple here, and a school, and are fixing "the mark of the beast" upon the people and upon the place as fast as possible; and neither our preachers here, nor our members, seem to be very much disturbed by these events. They take them quietly! and endure them with great patience and resignation, only saying, "we might have had a church here, but those families out on the prairie wished to have it there!" How long must such fooleries make our heritage to mourn? How long? At some time within a thousand years, other Rip Van-winkles may wake up, but it is very uncertain.

Take another case: We had the ground in advance, as usual, and our choice of the best sites as a donation, and the offer of liberal subscriptions from the public. We were urged to go on and build, and with but little effort the subscription was raised, the job let, and the lumber brought on to the ground. But did we get a church? O, no. Some suggested that we had better build of brick, the rest gave up themselves to sage babblings about it, and allowed the whole "to fall through." The contractor claims that he suffered damages in the sum of $150 or $160. Others also say that they suffered damages, etc. And now again we are thinking of building, but we can not get a lot, save one away out of town. Instead of taking the community as we might have done, and have secured to the place the settlement of many excellent Methodist families, who went elsewhere in quest of church privileges, almost every thing was lost. The people generally were disgusted with such a want of enterprise where it should have existed; and now, when called on to subscribe again, they make sarcastic allusions to past operations. These things are severely humiliating, and the more so, because they were totally unnecessary.

"In respect to lots in the most of instances, if the business were looked after in time, they might be secured without expense, or at most, for a mere trifle; lots which in a few years come to be worth hundreds, and in some instances, thousands of dollars. And when we have them, how strong the encouragement to build upon them. But when the best subscriptions must be taken to pay for them, it is some times found to be very discouraging, and often fatal to church enterprise."

PERSONS AND PROPAGANDAS:

The Editor of the Memphis Advocate makes a practical and profound reflection upon those Societies that Christians are too apt to glorify and rely upon to the neglect of individual usefulness. There is a tendency to place too much value on ecclesiastical propogandas and too little on the special providential missions of individuals. The comparative cost of the methods is illustrated by reference to the report of that noble institution, the A. B. C. F. M. Society, which, at an outlay of $172,000 annually, has in the field of Foreign Missions 58 preachers—American and native converts; and about 500 communicants. But the efficiency of operatives is more important. He speaks of the tendency of a certain class of Church organizations to blunt the sense of individual responsibility in regard to benevolent Christian effort. The zeal of the Missionary is damped, and his personal adaptedness to the work lost in a measure by waiting for the Board. He takes the character of an agent, and is prone to view his accountability in this light, and perform his duties in a perfunctory manner. We must have more guerrilla warfare with Satan.

In reading the remarks of our cotemporary, we could but think of Wesley in Moorfields and Kingswood, employed by no "Domestic Board;" of Elliott and Brainerd among the Indians, with no strong Associations backing them; of Judson in Burmah; of Roberts in China—the Baptist Missionary who is claimed by the leader of the Revolution as his spiritual father; yet Roberts is on his own hook. No "Board" owns him or supports him. We could not and would not recite these views if they did not recognize the worth and necessity of strong and formal Associations of Christian benevolence. These have their uses. But an army is not furnished with heavy ordnance alone. There must be picketing and skirmishing, and abundance of small arms and flying artillery:

"Now we make bold to say, in the blaze of the meridian light of the Nineteenth Century, with its three hundred or more benevolent societies, ... ing every night in the year, in every great city, with eloquent speeches and pompous anniversaries—we make bold to say, that for the six thousand past years of this world's history, wherein Almighty God has been working to save its millions of souls from perdition, only a minimum amount of good has been accomplished by these same societies auxiliary to the Gospel, in comparison with the vast amount resulting from God called and God inspired individual effort in preaching the Gospel and building up the Church. That is, we mean to say, that the men who have faithfully and unostentatiously in God's strength, pursued their special Divine call to preach Jesus; the men who have struggled against the world, the flesh, and the devil, to live like Jesus and to let his light shine through them upon the evil, dark world around them; the men who have operated as a diffusive leaven to shed Christian influence over ungodly society, have accomplished more for God, humanity and great eternity, than all the lauded associations combined, which have raised platforms, held conventions, and discharged copious floods of ephemeral oratory for the benefit of mankind in general, and no one real living soul in particular.

"How much have these associations accomplished in comparison with the resources of men and money which they have employed? They have done good, doubtless. But how much, is a question that should be settled, in order to estimate their relative value, and discover whether the Church may not be at fault in relying thus implicitly upon them in her aggressive movements. We refer our readers to a report, which we not... in the 'Editor's Table,' from ... which it will be seen that an amount of money, which might have supported nearly two hundred self-denying preachers of Christ, has gone through this channel of ... associated enterprise and secured the services of fifty-eight pastors, who have averaged not nine communicants apiece under their charge! We do not refer to this report denominationally, but as if it were, as it really is, a report in which as members of the catholic Church of Christ we are all interested. Let us not be misunderstood: we do not undervalue the good which has been done, but ask if another policy might not have led to more good? Suppose, for instance, these pastors had not waited for a call from a society, but gone out, prompted by God's Spirit and led by his Providence, the Church at large aiding by direct individual contributors to meet their necessities, might they not have done vastly more for the Church, with less noise and outlay and ostentation?

"Look, if you please, dear reader, at all the great enterprises in the past history of the Church, and mark how individual effort called out and upheld and led by God's Spirit and Providence, has been the secret of their wonderful success. How was groaning Israel delivered from its long dreary night of Egyptian bondage? By the divine legation of a Moses called out from the wilderness. How were the armies of Israel saved from a fearful threatened overthrow by the hosts of Philistia? By the sling of David hurling its pebble at the Divine behest. How, afterwards, were their lofty towers prostrated and their reveling lords mingled with their dust? Blind and captive Sampson bowed himself at the bidding of his God and upheaved their mighty pillars. How was Judea, sunk in spiritual ignorance, prepared for the reception of the Redeemer? By the solitary warning voice of rough John the Baptist, issuing from the wilderness as a lion from his lair. How was the gross and devilish idolatry which had overspread the Roman Empire, overthrown and substituted by the pure Gospel of Christ? By the resolute courage and unquenchable zeal of a poor persecuted and buffeted Jew of Tarsus, who went out alone in God's strength and at God's call. During his travels, Jerusalem was afflicted with a sore and heavy famine; how was it relieved! By Paul's individual efforts in raising contributions in the cities of Greece. How were the nations of Europe, whom the syren voice of the red harlot of Babylon had sung to an awful sleep, waked up to a sense of their true interests, as with tones of thunder? A lone monk, braving the frowns and bitter hostility of Pope and Emperor, and their myrmidons, lifted up his voice and sent out a sound, which they that heard felt to be full of Divinity, and obeying, rose up to assert their rights and give back their hearts to truth and faith in Christ."

Well, enough; but what would become of individual successes, if they were not conserved by Societies? These prolong and extend results that otherwise would be fitful, and give character to movements. What could one do in furnishing God's word to the world! The British and Foreign Bible Society the last year received, by ordinary and extraordinary contributions, £222,000, and issued in same time, broad cast over the face of the earth, 27,938,631 copies of God's word!

MISSIONARY REPORT

WALTON MISSION—FLORIDA.

To the Rev. H. N. McTYEIRE, Assistant Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

With gratitude to God I embrace the opportunity to inform you that I am ... by Rev. Anthony S. Dickinson, P. E. ... den district, to supply Walton Mission. I received eleven appointments, and ... them in time from Conference. The ... four organized Churches. I have ... teen appointments. I have organized ... very respectable Churches for this ... Five more, I think, will be organized ... year. I have dropped none, expelled ... received eighty-two. I have large ... tive congregations in general. There ... been many conversions.

A great revival is going on in the ... at this time in many places. The ... are improving. We will have a camp ... ing on the Mission this year, to begin ... 25th October, 18 miles south of ... Holmes' county, Florida, on the west ... Choc River, at Hewitt's Bluff.

I have enjoyed good health: am well ... ed with the country and people.

June 20, 1854. JAMES PA...

BOOK NOTICES.

TWENTY YEARS IN THE PHILIPPINES. ... lated from the French of ... P. ... roniere. Revised and extended by ... thor expressly for this edition. New ... 1854: Harper & Brothers, 12mo. ...

This is a lively narrative of a Fre... life in a part of the world about wh... elers have written little. The sketch... habits and customs of the people, the ... personal adventures, and various ... from his long residence, render his ... entertaining.

It is the life of a refined Robinson ... with a pretty wife for the man Fr... scores of obedient natives instead ... goats. The only unpleasant suggestion ... reading the book, is about its truth. ... months ago we published two tough ... out of it as reviewed by Blackwood ... this American republication:—one of a ... man (or alligater) killed by Gironiere, ... head weighed 450 pounds; another of ... that was tied up alive by the adventu... his natives, the head on one side of a ... and tail on the other! "Sum snake...

For sale by McGinnis & Carver.

TRAVELS IN ARMENIA: By Henry R. ... New York, 1854: Harper & Brothers, ... pp. 227.

The author spent a year in Er... (which by many is supposed to be the ... the terrestrial paradise) and on the f... of Russia, Turkey and Persia. Accu... scriptions and statistical information ... that region is now peculiarly grateful ... public mind. Several illustrations by ... and wood cuts.

For sale by McGinnis & Carver.

THE QUEENS OF SCOTLAND: By Agnes ... land. New York: Harper & Bros., ... 12mo. pp. 347.

This is the end of 4th vol. of this spr... series of Lives of Queens and Princesses ... noctod with the regal succession of Great ... tain. The other volumes have not ... hand—the polite publishers will please ... the fact. The burden of this volume ... subject of deep and never-failing—of sad ... romantic interest—Mary Stuart. It ... small treat to see one woman defended ... character of another. We have it here.

For sale by McGinnis & Carver.

REVIVAL INTELLIGENCE

COLUMBUS CT., ALA. CON.—We have ... closed our first protracted meeting on ... circuit, which was held at Fayette C. H. ... Lord's work has been considerably revi... From the commencement of the meeting ... til its close, the presence of the Lord ... felt. The meeting lasted nine days: the ... sult was thirty-four conversions and for... accessions to the Church; and some of ... bid fair to make working members, too. ... Church was greatly blessed. The young ... have commenced a prayer meeting. ... "The Young Men's prayer meeting." ... that they may always remain steadfast ... immoveable. The Lord has been good to ... therefore will we sing praises unto Him ... long as we live.

July 7. JNO. W. CO...

GLENNVILLE CT., ALA. CON.—For ... twenty days we have been engaged in a ...

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

ly and unusually interesting revival in the village of Glennville—the most prominent appointment on this circuit. Up to the last night, at which time we closed until the next Sabbath, we have had some 35 conversions and 41 accessions to the M. E. Church. A most solemn and serious feeling is now prevailing in this community upon the subject of religion. The students of the Female College in this place, under the presidency of Rev. D. L. T. Douglass, A. M., have shared largely of the benefits of the revival. We were assisted by Bros. Crowell, Owens, Burnett, Douglass, Jordan and Dawson, local preachers, and D. B. Leyns and J. Williamson, of the Ala. Conference—all of whom labored with efficiency and success. We have a colored Church in the village, of which the preacher in charge of the circuit is pastor and we have had some seasons of refreshing in this portion of our work; and some 8 or 10 accessions to the Church. We pray, and look for greater displays of God's saving power. J. W. SHOWES.

June 30. [S. C. Adv.

OBITUARY:

"In the midst of life we are in death." Ever and anon Earth mourns, while Heaven becomes vocal in praises at the reception of a trophy of the Cross,

Our beloved Christian Sister, ELIZABETH AMANDA, daughter of James Wordlaw, and consort of Rev. A. C. Ramsey, has passed the dark gate-way of death to mansions of blissful immortality.

She was born, 1805, in South Carolina; joined the Church in 1835; and died the 3d of June, 1854, at Oak Hill, Wilcox county, Alabama.

As the trying hour of her dissolution approached, she experienced increased measures of the all-sustaining grace of God. During her last sickness, until she became speechless, she enjoyed a fullness of the ecstatic love of Jesus—no cloud overshadowing her sun-lit vision. While prayer was offered, she heartily responded—audibly prnised God, and said yes,

"Lot music charm me last on earth,
And greet me first in Heaven," as the song was sung of which these lines are a part. When delivering her dying charge to her dear children and friends, and bidding adieu to earth, she did not forget her servants; they were pathetically entreated to serve God—be good—and meet her in Heaven.

JOHN D. WORRELL.

DIED—Suddenly, in this place, on the 3d of May, WILLIAM DOWSING, Esq., in the 70th year of his age.

Bro. D. was one of our oldest settlers, and among the fathers of the Church in this section of country. He became a resident of Columbus in 1821, and was the first in forming here the Methodist Society of which he has been so long a zealous, spiritual and useful member. He was born in Lunenburg co., Virginia, but removed with his father to the wilds of Georgia in early youth. There he joined the M. E. Church when about sixteen years of age, and continued steadfast and faithful unto death—being for more than fifty years an exemplary and efficient class-leader. Bro. D.'s sterling integrity and practical sense was appreciated wherever he lived by his fellow-citizens, and most of his life he was in some public station in the service of his country. He was repeatedly called by the people into their service in the legislative councils of both Georgia and Mississippi—was an Elector in the Presidential canvass of 1838, and held successively offices of State, federal and county appointment.

Universally beloved and esteemed, he has left his sweetest savor in the Church of his fathers. Though suddenly culled, the messenger found him ready—his lamp "trimmed and burning;" and the parting rays will long reflect the radiance of a well-spent life.

"Soldier of Christ, well done!
Rest from thy loved employ!
The battle fought—the victory won—
Enter thy Master's joy."

Columbus, Mi., June, 1854. H.

DIED—Near Columbus, Mississippi, on the 4th June, Miss LOUISA C. LAWRENCE, in the 24th year of her ago.

Sister L. became a member of the M. E. Church in 1842, and though so young, walked worthy her vocation 'till called to her reward. She had been a sufferer for about a year; and though so protracted, she never murmured; indeed, her whole thought under her afflictive dispensation was, "these light afflictions which are but for a moment, worketh out for her a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory!"

Perfectly aware of her approaching dissolution, she spent her time in prayer and praise, and earnestly exhorted her afflicted friends to meet her in that "house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens," and which, by faith, she saw her sure inheritance. Her death-bed was, indeed, a privileged place—a place "quite on the verge of Heaven." She exhorted her heart-stricken mother to weep not nor repine at parting here, as they would soon be reunited where parting is no more. Calm, collected and triumphant, she met the "King of Terrors," and joyfully exclaimed as her feet entered "the dark waters," "Oh death, where is thy sting!" Thus was exhaled one of the loveliest and purest of spirits "made perfect through suffering," for an Angel's place at God's right hand. H.

Columbus, Mi., June, 1854.

DIED—At his residence in Scott county, Miss., on the 15th June, 1854, Rev. JOHN ROBERTSON, in the 49th year of his age.

Bro. Robertson has approved himself among (his labors being confined principally to a circuit) as a good, zealous and efficient local preacher, and in all the relations of life an exemplary Christian and man of God; in Scripture language, "he was a good man, and of the Holy Ghost and of faith." Bro. Robertson was taken away from us in the midst of his usefulness; and possessing as he did the confidence of all who knew him, died universally regretted. "But while we mingle our tears with those of the bereaved ones, we are consoled with the reflection, that he is gone to the kingdom of our God, where he will rest from his labors, and where his works will follow him."

"Thus are the watchmen falling from the walls of Zion; but "the Lord creates, converts, and uses them; while He is doing so, they are indispensable, but when He takes them away, He carries on the work better than before." EDWIN MORTIMER.

Hillsboro' Ct., Miss. Con.

Departed this life, in Union parish, La., on the 16th May, 1854, JOHN G. CLEMENS, in the 44th year of his age.

As a Christian, he was exemplary and sincerely devoted to God and His cause. Although Bro. Clemens never applied for a license to preach, we have heard him unfold the plan of salvation through Jesus Christ, with ability and power. His instructions and example will not soon be forgotten by those on whom they were brought to bear. As a Christian, a neighbor, a friend and citizen, his place cannot easily be supplied. His last hours were in keeping with his life, peaceful and resigned to the will of God.

"Great is the loss that we sustain,
But hope in Heaven to meet again."

Farmerville Ct. G. W. EVANS.

Mrs. ——— THOMPSON, wife of Mr. James H. Thompson, of Lowndes county, Miss., departed this life June 4th, 1854.

Mrs. T. was born in Northampton county, N. C., March 18th, 1813. She embraced religion when young, and remained pious and consistent member of the M. E. Church 'till her departure from the Church militant to the Church triumphant. I have been acquainted with her several years, and always regarded her a pattern of Christian meekness.

She was generally frail and delicate, and did not seem to enjoy good health; but she was always patient and resigned; and strove to discharge her duties, as a wife and a mother, with Christian fidelity. Her Bible was her solace and her comfort in her last sickness; and when she became delirious, she would repeat passages of Scripture, and verses of hymns, which had been her favorites when in health. She often testified during her sickness how sweet and consoling the promises of God's word were to her soul. She expressed to her husband her readiness and willingness to depart whenever the Lord should call her.

She has left an afflicted husband, and interesting family of children—mostly daughters—to mourn her loss; but they sorrow not as those who have no hope. She sleeps in Jesus; and when the Lord shall come the second time, she, doubtless, will have a part in the first resurrection, and find a brighter mansion where "the wicked cease from troubling, and the weary are at rest"

GEO. SHEFFER.

Columbus, Miss., June 30.

DIED—In this city, July 7, GEORGE C., infant son of Capt. George C., sen., and Frances Louisa Henderson—aged five months and three days.

NOTICES.

Camp-meeting.

There will be a Camp-meeting at the Crescent camp-ground, four miles from this place, to commence on Friday the 25th of August.

S. ARMSTRONG, P. E.

Auburn, Ala., July 6, 1854.

Commencement Exercises of Emory College.

Sunday, July 16th. Commencement Sermon by Rev. T. Cross, D. D.

Monday. Meeting of Board of Trustees at 9 A. M. Sophomore prize Declamation at night.

Tuesday. Junior Exhibition. Address on presenting prizes to Sophomore declaimers. The proposed Methodist Educational Convention at night.

Wednesday. Commencement day. Address before Literary Societies in the afternoon, by the President of the College.

GUSTAVUS J. ORR,
Sec. Board Trustees.

Oxford, Ga.

Special Notice.

It was announced by our predecessor—the Rev. Dr. Early—that a considerable amount of out-standing claims, against ministers and others, within the limits of the Southern Church, had been transferred to him under the New York adjustment. Their accounts, notes, etc., being now in our possession, we take this method of saying to all concerned, that we are most anxious to have them closed up at the earliest possible day. With a view to the accomplishment of this very desirable object, we take the liberty of suggesting to those who may be involved in these liabilities, the propriety of communicating with us at once, in relation to the final settlement of these claims, without waiting to be directly and officially called on by us for that purpose. And as we shall need, in the course of a few months at most, all the funds that may be realized on these accounts, we would, therefore, respectfully solicit remittances at the earliest convenience of those against whom these claims exist. Our address, for the time being, is Louisville, Ky.

STEVENSON & OWEN, Agents.

June 22, 1854.

Special Notice.

All orders for Books and communications relating to the business of our Agency and Publishing House, should be addressed, for the present, and until further notice is given, to the undersigned, at Louisville, Ky. Orders east of the mountains, can be forwarded, until other arrangements are made, to Bishop John Early, Richmond, Va. Every effort on our part will be made to commence operations in this city at the earliest possible day. In the meanwhile, however, an ample supply of our publications will be kept on hand by the house of McFerrin & Hunter, with whom we have made an arrangement by which all orders will be filled at our usual rates.

STEVENSON & OWEN.

Nashville, Tenn., June 7, 1854.

Notice.

In consequence of my detention at the General Conference, and my necessary absence since its adjournment, on a trip to Mississippi, the July number of the Quarterly Review will not appear at its usual time. Its issues will be prompt thereafter. Having been reappointed its editor, and being determined that it shall meet the expectations of its friends, I would hereby entreat our brethren in the ministry and the laity, to send us new subscribers, to make collections of the old, and to promote its circulation, as the only journal of the kind belonging to the M. E. Church, South. DAVID S. DOGGETT.

June 3, 1854.

List of Remittances

Received at the Office of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, from 23d June to 12th July, inclusive.

C—O. Carraway, $4; J. B. Clarke, $3; N. A. Cravens, $5; T. Cook, $1 50.

D—L. F. Dewdle, $1; S. J. Davies, $1 50; Z. Dowling, $3; J. T. Dew, $5.

E—L. Ercanbrack, $5.

G—C. R. Godfrey, $7 50; T. G. Gilmore, $2; R. C. Goodzien, $13 50.

H—W. B. Hines, $2; R. J. Holmes, $1 50.

J—R. E. Johnson, $1; R. F. Jones, $2.

M.—J. W. McCann, $3; L. B. McDonald, $2; W. P. Miller, $2; W. McArthur, $2.

N—J. E. Newman, $5.

P—E. Phillips, $2.

R—G. W. Rogers, $1 50; U. Riley, $5; J. J. Ridgway, $2.

S—Mrs. S. B. Starr, $1 50; W. A. Smith, $5.

T—Mrs. C. Tolson, $1 50.

U—W. Urry, $1 50.

V—G. T. Vickers, $5.

W—B. J. Woodward, $7 50; W. Williams, $3; F. Walker, $2; D. L. Watkins, $10; Miss H. Ward, $1 50.

General Intelligence.

The Railroad Bonds.

In the Lower Board of the City Council on Tuesday night last the Finance Committee reported a resolution instructing the Mayor not to make any issue of City Bonds in behalf of the New Orleans and Pontchartrain Railroad Company until all the stockholders of the existing road should consent to relinquish its earnings in the construction of the Mobile Road. A letter from the City Attorney accompanied this report, stating in effect that without the unanimous consent of the stockholders no transfer of any of their rights or privileges can be made, and that without such consent the new stockholders and the city will not stand upon that equal footing with the old which is guaranteed to them by the ordinance.

INTERMENTS.—The following is a report of the number of interments in all the cemeteries of the city for the week ending at 6 o'clock on Sunday morning, July 9:

Protestant, Girod street.. 6	Catholic No 1 10
Odd Fellows' Rest.	Catholic No 2.....26
Cypress Grove, No 1..... 9	St. Vincent de Paul.....30
" 2..... 24	Lafayette, 8th District....31
Charity Hospital 24	Hebrew, Lafayette.....1
St. Patrick's.....30
Total.....	191

Last week we had to report 320 deaths, of which 114 were from sun-stroke—this week there were but 11 from this cause.

The Legislature of Connecticut has passed a law forbidding the passage of wild beasts through the State at any time except in the night, and then one must proceed in advance, warning the people of their danger. The Hartford Times warns the people that they may hear, in the deep quiet of the night, a bellow, "Ho! beware, ye sleepers; get out o' the way—the tall giraffe is on the road, about five miles back!"

The Democrat (Aberdeen) says four negroes and a mule were killed, a few days since near that place, by the falling in of an excavation while working on the railroad.

A census of the city of Dubuque, Iowa, just taken, shows it to have a population of 6715. When the census of 1850 was taken, the total of Dubuque was 3108. The town has thus more than doubled its population in four years.

ONE OF THE WATCHMEN.—Pat. Clairy was appointed last Thursday on the night watch by the Police Board. The first thing he did after mounting the cap and rattle was to steal Tim McCarty's silver watch. Pat. was arrested, disgraced from his newly gained honors, and yesterday after an examination before the Recorder was committed for trial before the First District Court.

FAME OF THE FILIBUSTERS.—We learn from Para, Brazil, that on the 20th of May the city of Para had been thrown into great excitement by the announcement that a party of filibustering Yankees were about to visit the Amazon. This announcement was made through the New York papers, which proclaimed that a large company was organized, and a large steamer was ready to visit the Amazon and force the Government to open the river to the free navigation of the world. The foreign residents, and even many Brazilians, rejoiced at this intelligence. Measures, however, were immediately taken by the Government to put the mouth of the river in a state of defence. Six small vessels of war and a steamer of about 700 tons were immediately sent for, and shortly after arrived from Rio: the forts were overhauled, and put in order for active operations; the barracks were filled with troops, and every thing was prepared to defend the entrance of the great river from the Yankee filibustering expedition.

COLT'S NEW ARMORY.—The Hartford (Ct.) Times says that the trenches for Colt's new armory, on the South Meadow, are now nearly on the ground. It is to be a gigantic building, or rather two parallel buildings, each 500 feet in length, with a structure for offices in the centre.

On the night of the 27th of June, an emigrant woman, on a steamer at St. Louis, while walking the deck, wailing and watching for her husband, who was ashore on a spree, fell overboard, and, with an infant child, which she carried in her arms, was drowned. The husband raved like a madman, and tried to jump in the river, on hearing of his loss.

It having been reported that the Catholics at Cincinnati would carry objectionable flags in the procession on the Fourth, and trouble being apprehended, Archbishop Purcell published a card assuring his fellow-citizens of every denomination that it was not the intention of the Catholics to carry any objectionable flag, sign or emblem, and that they would not attach a cross to the American flag.

EXPLOSION OF A POWDER MAGAZINE.—During the firing of artillery at Aurora, Indiana, on the occasion of a railroad celebration, on the 27th ult., the powder magazine exploded, killing three men.

A RICH OLD CODGER.—Uncle Sam paid Santa Anna seven million dollars the other day on account of a farm he purchased from Mexico, and has still twenty-one millions left in hard cash in his breeches pocket. What will Uncle Sam's poor relations on the other side of the water say to this?

GREAT FATALITY.—From the 22d to the 30th ult., there were 38 deaths from cholera in the little town of Shepardville, Ky., and not a single case was cured or even checked.

DEATH OF A FRENCH ADMIRAL.—By the arrival of the Philadelphia from Havana, we learn that the French Admiral, Viscount Duquesne, commanding the French West India squadron, died at Havana on the 3d, of scarlet fever, and was buried with great pomp on the 4th inst.

FIRST DISTRICT COURT.

GRAND JURY REPORT.—To the Honorable Jno. B. Robertson, Judge of the First District Court:

The undersigned, comprising the Grand Jury of this city and the parish of Orleans, beg leave to submit the following report:

The many cases of crime that exist, we find, have been presented by our predecessors, and regret that the result of our investigations has shown but little amendment—the chief among these we find to be intemperance, and the unprecedented number of cabarets where liquor is sold to slaves. These latter establishments, with which our city abounds, are the fruitful source of the murders committed in our midst, and for their suppression we know of no means likely to effect so desirable an object as the passage of a prohibitory law. The matter having been brought before the Common Council, we laid the passage of the ordinance with pleasure which compels them to close at 9 o'clock P. M.—this being an important step towards their eventual suppression.

Your Honor having called our attention to the sale of lottery tickets, this jury have given the subject their careful attention. The vendors pretend to no secrecy; on the contrary, display their tickets openly to the public, thereby tempting the honest laborer and mechanic to invest their hard earnings in schemes without even the probability of gain. This we consider encourages a spirit of gambling, and to the detriment of good morals. The detection of parties engaged in this, must devolve, necessarily, on the police, whose duty it is to arrest all so acting in violation of law.

Our predecessors having reported on the inefficiency of the police, we feel glad, for the credit of our city, to be able to report an improvement in that department. We must, however, deprecate the practice of appointing partisans to office, and until the established and men selected for their capacity and worth identified with and feeling an interest in the prosperity and good government of the city, any attempt at the compiling a reform, we fear, will be useless.

As much valuable time of your honorable court is consumed in the investigation of petty cases, which could be disposed of by the Recorders, we think it would be advisable to invest them with authority by law to do so. The passage of such a bill by the Legislature, could not be otherwise than beneficial to the public.

On the 5th inst. the jury proceeded to the examination of the Prisons and other public buildings. The police stations and lock ups we found in very bad order, and in a filthy and disgusting condition. The cells of the First District lock-up are entirely loosened and hardly fit for the habitation of beasts. We would recommend its removal to some place where prisoners can be kept in accordance with the dictates of humanity, decency and justice. The lock-up of the Third District is an exception, being in excellent order.

We next visited the Workhouse. The general good order and cleanliness throughout reflects credit upon the present superintendent. There are at present 234 prisoners confined, including whites and blacks. No complaint of either food or beds. The sheds of the workmen were found in very bad order, and too small for the purposes for which they were intended. We recommend immediate repairing to be made; also an enlargement of the same.

The Parish Prison, under the superintendence of Captain Samuel Powers, we found in good order, reflecting much credit on that officer. A reference to his books shows a smaller number of prisoners at this time confined there than at any period for the past fifteen years. This fact we attribute to the zeal and diligence of Attorney General J. E. Moreau and District Attorney H. S. Thomas, in bringing them to trial rather than to any diminution of crime. There are at present 152 prisoners, a majority of whom have been duly sentenced, while others, at their own requests [illegible], but their trials postponed till the Fall term. No complaint was made in regard to provisions. Our predecessors having reported an insufficiency of blankets during the cold weather, and the requisite number not having been as yet furnished, we would recommend that attention be given to the matter before the return of cold weather.

In the lunatic department every thing was in good order, and no want of attention to the unfortunate inmates was apparent to the jury.

In the Boys' House of Refuge we found 128 boys. The accommodations are entirely too limited for so great a number, there being upwards of 105 boys sleeping in one room, with dimensions hardly sufficient to accommodate comfortably one-half that number. The building, though in good order, is too small for the purpose. Many of the boys are sent there for a home, being young, with evil habits. They might be made useful to society were it not that they are compelled by the present state of the House, to associate with those hardened in vice. This jury would recommend a larger building to be secured, but by all means a separate line of the convicts from the victims.

The Girls' House of Refuge we found in good order in every particular. We found 56 inmates from 6 to 16 years of age, apparently in good health, and contented with their situation. The girls are instructed in all the branches of a common education, and engaged in various kinds of work. Our predecessors having recommended this institution, and also that of the Boys' Refuge, to the fostering care of our city authorities, we cannot omit to add our own, in the hope that they will be the means of reclaiming many that now throng our streets.

In the Charity Hospital we found 540 inmates under treatment. Too much praise cannot be bestowed upon this noble institution. Its fame is too well known throughout the South-west to require any commendation from this jury. The management being to the satisfaction of all who visit it. The building is now undergoing repairs, superintended by Mr J. M. Howell.

We visited three orphan asylums. The first was the St. Mary's Orphan Boys' Asylum. It contained 230 boys, from two to twelve years of age and is conducted by a Board of Trustees and faithful managers. The building now in course of erection will amply accommodate the present number, but until it is completed the boys must suffer greatly from the ice-crowded condition of the old building. This institution is in need of means to complete their new building, and appeal to a generous community for that assistance. The streets and gutters around the Asylum are in a very filthy condition, emitting an unpleasant odor, prejudicial to the health of the inmates. The Street Commissioner's attention is called to the matter.

The Peydras Female Orphan Asylum, in the First District, we found in good order and under good management. It contains 130 orphans, from one to fourteen years of age, a few of whom are blind. The children are apparently happy and well provided for.

The "Female Orphan Asylum" on Camp street we next visited. This excellent institution is under the charge of Sister Regis, and contains 300 inmates, from two months to four years of age. The practical benefits of this institution are too well known to require comments by this jury.

The condition of the Court-House and its offices have been the subject of special report by former Grand Juries. Our attention having been called especially to its present condition, we must reiterate the necessity of some provision being made to improve both; your Honor cannot be insensible to the importance of securing fire-proof buildings for the public records of our parish, and avoid the incalculable amount of delay, inconvenience and expense to the community, which their destruction by fire would occasion. We deem this matter of the highest importance, and hope speedy attention will be given to it by those having authority to act in the premises.

We proceeded to the examination of the ferry fronting Jackson Square, Second District, and found the landing or wharves in a condition requiring immediate repair. The attention of the proper authorities is called to the matter in order that human life may not endangered by further neglect.

In conclusion we would tender to your Honor our thanks for the uniform courtesy and assistance you have extended to us; also to the District Attorney, Sheriff and other officers of the court for their kindness while prosecuting our duties.

Respectfully submitted,
J. H. SHEPPARD, Foreman.

STATE OF OUR NEGOTIATIONS WITH SPAIN.—It is said that important intelligence has reached the State Department from Madrid and Paris. A dispatch to the New York Tribune says:

"In spite of all his efforts and all diplomatic seductions, Mr. Soulé has not succeeded either in restoring an entente cordiale with Spain, or in doing any thing toward the purchase of Cuba, the Queen of the Antilles. The obstinacy which the Spanish Government manifests in the settlement of the Cuban difficulty is to be attributed to two causes: First, they are confident of the support of France and England in case of emergency. Secondly, they do not believe the U. S. Government is in earnest.

No treaty has yet been concluded between France, England and Spain on this subject; but the preliminary steps for such a treaty were made some time ago, and only failed of consummation because England gave notice that she should insist upon the insertion of a clause in regard to slavery in Cuba, which was so obnoxious to the Spanish Government that the negotiation was suspended.

Since then Spain has offered France ten thousand men to supply the place of the ten thousand French soldiers in Rome, to permit the latter to join the army in Turkey, on condition that she will pledge her support against the U. States in case of a war. Louis Napoleon refused the proposition, because alone he could not enter into a war with the United States.

MISSISSIPPI AND RED RIVER RAILROAD.—The ceremony of breaking ground on the Mississippi, Ouachita and Red River Railroad, was to have been celebrated at Camden, Arkansas, on the 6th inst., Governor Conway, Hon. Albert Pike, and many other well-known gentlemen were expected to be present, and address the people. The orator of the occasion was Hon. William T. Haskell, formerly of Tennessee.

MARSHAL ST. ARNAUD.—The tongue of scandal is making itself busy with the fair fame of Marshal St. Arnaud, the illustrious commander-in-chief of the allied forces in the East. It is said that, when a captain, he was detected in peculation of the funds of the company, but was saved from disgrace by the kindness of his commanding officer, General Rulhieres. As a token of his gratitude, St. Arnaud, who is now Marshal of France, has caused his former benefactor to be cashiered from the service. Gen. Rulhieres has made a publication on the subject, of which the following is an extract: "In 1837, General Rulhieres refused to break the sword of the Captain Leroy de St. Arnaud, unwilling to dishonor him; in 1851, the Minister of war, Leroy de St. Arnaud, unable to dishonor General Rulhieres, has broken his sword."

Fatal Collision at Sea—Great Loss of Life.

The New York Herald, of the 6th instant, learns the full particulars of the loss of the ships Trade Wind and Olympus. On the night of the 20th of June, at about 11 o'clock, the ship Trade Wind came in contact with the ship Olympus in latitude 41 50, and longitude 57 20, and so violent was the collision, that both vessels sunk beneath the waves within an hour after.

The Trade Wind was a fine three-deck vessel, built by the late Jacob Bell, of New York, for the Southern trade, and was on a voyage from Mobile to Liverpool. She was 2018 tons burthen, about three years old, valued at $100,000, and is insured in Wall street. Her freight is valued at $50,000, and the cargo at about $250,000, the latter being insured principally in England. She was owned by W. Platt & Son, of Philadelphia, and Booth & Edgar, and others, of New York.

She was commanded by Captain Smith, and had on board at the time of the accident seventeen passengers, and a crew numbering thirty-four. The weather was very thick, the wind was blowing quite hard, and the night was very dark, when the collision took place.

The other vessel, the Olympus, was commanded by Capt. Wallace, and sailed from Liverpool on the 21th of May, for Boston, having in all fifty-three souls on board—forty of them passengers, and the rest of them the crew. She was loaded with iron and general hardware. The vessels struck each other in the bows, staving in the Trade Wind, and sinking her within an hour after the shock. The Olympus went down in about half an hour before the Trade Wind.

Ten of the crew of the Olympus, the captain, and thirty-seven of the passengers were saved; the captain of the Trade Wind, sixteen of her crew, and all her passengers. This shows the loss of the Olympus to be three passengers and three of the crew. Eighteen of the Trade Wind's crew perished.

Names of the Passengers saved from the Trade Wind.—Mrs. Frank Smith and two children, Mr. David T. Newlan, Mr. Alexander Ewing, lady and daughter, Mr. John S. Gildsleeve, Mrs. John Gildsleeve, four children and servant, Miss C. D. Chamberlain, and Miss Alice Dodson.

Names of the Crew lost from the Trade Wind.—Thomas Pierce, carpenter; John Assow, first steward; John Acnow, second cook; John Mitchell, James Bowen, Thomas Hill, Joseph Addison, John Martin, Michael Walsh, Charles Town, Jeremiah McCarty, all seamen; Richard Bingham, James Brady, Manuel Lewis, and Luke O'Toole, boys.

Names of the Crew Saved.—Capt. F. Smith, Edward W. F. Smith, first officer; James Caw, second officer; Charles E. Meeney, third officer; Matthew Buck, boatswain; Ann Connor, stewardess; Samuel Acnow, second steward; John Allen, cook; Peter Williams, James Wheelan, Thomas Harrison, James Moore, John Baker, James Boyce, Adam Hooper, Charles Wilson, John McIlvain, Wm. Daniels, Thomas Doran, George Smith, John Scob, James Drummond, Thomas Nowlan, James Powers, and John Brown.

The saved from each ship were taken off by the Belgian bark Stadt Antwerpian, which arrived off Block Island on the 4th inst. Captains Wallace and Smith hired a fishing smack, and getting on board the steamer Bay State, arrived in New York on Tuesday evening.

The Olympus was built in Kennebunk, in 1850, and was 734 tons register; was worth about $50,000; the cargo $200,000 and the freight $15,000. The Olympus was insured at the Eastward, where it is presumed the cargo, or a portion of it, is also insured.

The following are the particulars of the catastrophe, by Capt. Smith of the Trade Wind:

When the collision occurred, the wind was blowing fresh from the southwest by south, with equally squally weather. Night, cloudy and excessively dark. The Trade Wind was under easy sail, steering east by south. We had a pure bowsprit light burning, and were keeping a good look-out fore and aft. A few minutes before striking, we saw the Olympus's light, one point on the weather bow, S. S. E. from us, leaving the wind three points abaft the beam, with yards squared and spanker furled; mizzen topsail on the cap. We put the helm up, and swung the ship off to E. N. E., bringing the Olympus' light broad aff on the weather bow, but before we could discover whether the ships were approaching each other, the Olympus' light disappeared. Yet in the darkness, we thought we could make out the sail, passing along to windward of us, standing to westward. After an interval of five minutes, her light again suddenly appeared close to us on our weather bow, and almost at the same instant, we could make out the ship with her head to northward, standing square across our course. Our helm was put hard up promptly, but we could not get our long ship off fast enough, both ships being too far off to deaden way by bracing yards. Our halyards and sheets, etc., were let go as soon as possible, but in vain. The Trade Wind was going at an immense speed, and the Olympus was under a press of canvass, forging ahead directly across our bow. She was struck between her main and foremast with an effect that can only be conceived. Our starboard bow was stove in, the outwater and stem were crushed, bowsprit and foremast were broken, and the ship was wrecked from atom to stern with the shock. The wood-ends opened, as I suppose, from keel to deck. The main and mizzenmast of the Olympus were struck with such force as to knock them clear of the ship altogether. She then swung round fore and aft along our port side, swinging her bow over our quarter boat, crushing it to atoms, after which she dropped astern clear of us, when I found the captain, officers, and crew, and some of the passengers, on board the Trade Wind, having jumped on board at the collision. Finding the Trade Wind full of water in a short time, with foremast hanging to the rigging, we cut away to clear the wreck forward, and have the anchors off the bow to lighten her forward. The launch and the two small boats we had left were now got aft, ready for launching over the stern. Provisions and water were also prepared, so as to be conveniently removed if we found it needful to leave the ship. But as our cargo was composed of 4657 bales of cotton, we hoped she would float for some time. The sea was running very heavy, though the wind moderated fast. The ship gradually settled as the cotton became soaked, so that we waited anxiously for daylight. When the day broke we found the Olympus still afloat, four or five miles to the eastward, and as she showed a side high out of water, Captain Wallace was permitted to take our small gig, with as many of his men as would accompany him, to ascertain the condition of the ship, and endeavor to save his passengers with his own boats if the vessel was likely to go down.

About 4 o'clock, A. M., we launched our large boat, and placed all our passengers in her, except Mr. P. T. Newlin, with the first and second officers in charge, and dropped her astern, out of the vortex around the ship, which threatened her destruction every moment. This was done with the view of loading from the ship by means of the quarter boat; but, unfortunately, just as the quarter boat was launched, three or four frightened creatures leaped into her, and capsized her. We found it impossible to right her in the heavy sea around the water-logged ship. In this state of affairs it became evident that, if the launch was permitted to return to the ship, she would be swamped, and founder alongside, by the mad efforts of the frightened crew to be first into her, and all hands would inevitably perish. I was therefore compelled to order her off, and leave us to our fate. It was a melancholy command, but one I deemed of imperative necessity. At this time the boatswain and many good swimmers plunged overboard, and swam to the boat, where they were gladly received. The rest followed the captain to the mizzen top, as the sea had taken possession of the upper deck. The launch, with twenty-eight of the crew, and five or six of that of the Olympus, pulled off in the direction of the Olympus. Before reaching her, however, she went down, but not until Captain Wallace had succeeded in getting every one from on board. She sank at 6 A. M. The launch then turned towards our ship, but while on her way, discovered a sail to the South, and gave chase in hopes of saving themselves, and obtaining assistance for those left behind. At half-past six they lost sight of the Trade Wind. After the boat had left, about twenty-five men with myself had taken refuge in the mizzen top. Soon afterwards we discovered a sail to the southward, standing by the wind to the northward.

The colors were set at the mizen sky-sail masthead, union down, to attract attention. In the mean time the work of destruction went rapidly on in the ship's hull. The upper deck burst and commenced breaking up, the cotton to float out; the spare spars, skylights, hatches, companion ways, etc., were carried off, whirling and turning over, while within the vortex surrounding the ship, to the distance of some fifty yards, but making fine rafts after getting beyond the circle. The ship settled with every sea that swept her, till about 6½ A. M., while I was on the mizzen topsail yard, and most of my companions were on the top, she made her final plunge, sinking very fast; carrying all down with her to some depth, when we immediately rose again to the surface, surrounded by the planking of the deck and a few bales of cotton. The expert swimmers immediately pulled with me, and under my orders collected all the floating planks and spars at hand, and formed rafts, on which we divided ourselves to the number of sixteen men, while others took to the foremast, which had remained by the ship until she sank, and was still afloat. The rest sank to rise no more, as the foremast must have proved but a temporary refuge, as the descending ship must have drawn it down as she settled, as some of the rigging was attached to it. After recovering our strength (much exhausted by our almost superhuman efforts in forming our rafts in the very heavy sea running at the time,) we took occasion to improve and add to them from time to time, out of the mass of wrecked stuff around us, until about 4½ P. M., or after ten hours' exposure to our perilous and exposed situation, we were mercifully rescued by the boats of the Belgian bark Stadt Antwerpen, Capt. Wyterhoven, the sail before mentioned. When we arrived on board, we found one boat, and those of the Olympus had reached the bark about 9 A. M., and had since been making praiseworthy efforts to reach and rescue us, but with no sanguine hopes of finding survivors among the floating wreck. Upon mustering, we found 44 of 62 from the Trade Wind, and 52 of 58 from the Olympus, making 96 saved out of 120.

Arrival of the Daniel Webster.

The detention of the Webster was caused by the failure of the Star of the West in making her usual connection at San Juan on the morning of the 30th ult. The Star of the West was grounded by the Jamaica pilot in the harbor of Kingston for over three and a half days, which put her behind her time, not arriving at San Juan until the evening of the 3d July, not having sustained any damage. The same evening at nine o'clock both ships left the harbor, the Star with 250 passengers and eleven hundred thousand dollars in treasure for New York, and the Webster for New Orleans.

Everything was quiet at Greytown, the only vessels in harbor were the Royal Mail Steamer Taviot, Capt. Sawyer, and the British schooner Hermuda, Capt. Jolly, carrying one gun smallships; crews all well. The Cyane had not yet arrived. The revolutionary party in Nicaragua are still besieging Grenada; the place, it is thought, will hold out but a short time longer. One of the new boats, the I. Ogden, intended to ply on the river San Juan, had arrived. The health of the Isthmus was good, and the river in the finest boating order.

Arrival of the Baltic.

[By Telegraph.]

NEW YORK, July 8.—The Baltic's advices state that the raising of the siege at Silistria has been fully confirmed.

Omer Pacha was advancing, at the latest accounts, upon the Danube, with his whole force. The Anglo-French army had reached Pruvadi. (Pravadi?)

The German States have accepted the note of Austria and Prussia.

The Bank of France has declared a dividend of 112 francs for the half year.

The Government of Brazil has officially declared the neutrality of that empire during the existing war.

It was reported that the Emperor of Russia had replied favorably to the demands of Austria, and consented to evacuate the Principalities. He was already withdrawing his forces beyond the Pruth.

STILL LATER.

It is now stated that the official reply of the Emperor of Russia to Austria would not be sent until the 21st of July.

The Austrians were to occupy the Principalities as the Russian forces should retire.

The Russians had seized and imprisoned two new York correspondents.

MONTGOMERY, July 10.—The decision of the Supreme Court, in affirming that of the Court of Chancery, in the case of St. John Powers & Co., against the Bank of St. Mary's, declares that John G. Winter and Joseph S. Winter are liable individually for the full amount of the notes of the bank which they issued and put in circulation in Alabama, and that the firm of J. S. Winter & Co. is equally liable. The decision also declares that the extension by the bank, on the eve of J. S. Winter's insolvency, of his indebtedness to it, was a fraud on its creditors.

Louisiana Items.

Just as we were going to press, says the Harrisonburg Independent of the 5th inst., we learned that a fatal rencounter took place yesterday, at a barbecue at Monteroy on Black River, in Concordia Parish, between Mr. Henry Tressler and Mr. W. J. Glasscock, which resulted in the death of the latter. We know nothing of the particulars.

The Harrisonburg Independent of the 5th inst. says: "The planters have had two weeks of fine weather in which to rid their crops of grass. The crops are growing finely, and are doing as well as could, under the circumstances, be expected. We have had no rain for a week or ten days, and a shower would be very acceptable about this time."

The Mayor of Alexandria, Louisiana, Mr. James Murray, was killed on the 4th inst. by a pistol shot. The circumstances are as follows: A difficulty occurred at the barbecue ground between George Hill and John C. Culbertson. Hill was trying to make Culbertson behave himself, he (Hill) being an officer to keep order. Culbertson drew a pistol, when the Mayor interfered, commanding the peace, and ordered him to put up his arms. Culbertson turned, placed his pistol to the Mayor's abdomen, and fired, inflicting a mortal wound. He then tried to escape, but was promptly arrested by the sheriff and others, and is now in jail. It was with great difficulty that the officers kept the Mayor's friends from lynching him.

The Vidalia (Concordia) Intelligencer of the 7th inst. says: "All good planters have succeeded, during the late scorching weather, in getting the grass under. The cotton looks fine, as out of blossom, and the formation of bolls seems good and promising. The crop is, however, backward, owing to the lateness of the spring, and the remainder of the season must be very favorable to secure a crop even equal to that of last year."

A letter from Black River, published in the Concordia Intelligencer, says: "There is some sickness in the country, and a few deaths, mostly upon Little River, in Catahoula Parish. The cholera broke out there on the steamboat Anazon, and some eight or ten persons died. The crew left the boat precipitately, and made their way down to Trinity, and a few went across to Natchez."

The Alexandria Democrat, of the 5th inst., says: "The river at this point still continues very high, but has for some days past been at a stand, and is now slightly on the decline. The weather has been dry and excessively warm, the thermometer having within the past ten days repeatedly marked 96 in the shade. This state of the weather, succeeding the recent heavy and almost continued rains, has, we are informed, very materially brightened the prospects of our cotton planters. Cane is also represented as being very promising throughout the parish.

The Shreveport (La.) Democrat, of the 6th inst., says: "The beautiful weather that we have enjoyed for the last two weeks has added materially to the prospects of a bountiful crop of both cotton and corn. We don't think we ever saw warmer—hotter is the better word—weather, that we have had for the last ten days, the thermometer ranging from 90 to 100 in the shade.

Red River was falling at Shreveport on the 6th inst., and all dangers of an overflow had ceased.

PRICE OF SILVER.—The directors of the Mint at Philadelphia have issued a circular announcing that, from and after the 1st of July, the price to be paid for silver purchased at the Mint will be $1 22½ per ounce of standard fineness, (nine-tenths) as determined by assay at the Mint. The price heretofore paid has been $1 21 per ounce.

From the West India Islands.

We have received files of Kingston, Jamaica, papers to the 29th of the 8th.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

...D ACCIDENT.

...SQUEHANNA, RAIL-
...LIZE.—[Ink of the most
...which ever occurred in our
...day afternoon, near the
...re and Susquehanna Rail-

...ay morning a large number of
...repaired to Rider's Grove, 9 miles
...ailroad, to spend the day. The ac-
...rred about one mile this side of the ...n the upward train for New York
...o trains containing a portion of
...on their way to the city.
...e of the ... t was a curve of the
...ween the Relay House
...Rider's Grove.
...Three t... ...ll of ladies and gentlemen,
...th children, ... the city during the day, ...
...to in the celebration ... turning, one
...of t... n left for Balti... at two o'clock;
...a... ...ried at five, ... third; with
...which the accident occ... ...bout fifteen
...minutes later.
...minutes p... yesterday after-
...ccon... ...k left Calvert Sta-
...tin... ...ager cars and
...car... the exception of the last
...car were ... engers. Mr. William
...Scott ... accompanied by Mr. Hol-
...ton... ...rs of the road, who were
...despa... ...a Grove to assist in the ar-
...rangements for the safe return of the excur-
...sionists. On arriving at the Relay House the ...train, according to orders, proceeded to
...the Green Spring switch, where the ...conductors were that it should wait until the ...express train or trains passed. The express
...train from York, due early in the day, which ...had been thrown out of time, was waiting at
...the Relay, and after it had passed down towards
...Baltimore, waited for the excursion train, of ...about sixteen cars, crowded to excess, which ...passed down without giving any information to
...the conductor that two other trains were coming,
...which unfortunately proved to be the case.
...The road being now supposed to be clear, the ...York train again took the main track, and pro-
...ceeded on, and had scarcely got fully under ...way when, about three-quarters of a mile from
...the Relay, and about a mile from Rider's, a ter-
...rible crash, accompanied by a rush of steam,
...brought all who were uninjured to their feet,
...and on escaping from the wrecked cars a most
...heart-rending ... presented itself, that it were
...impossible to describe in all its horrors.
...The ... attached to the excursion train
...consisting ... the cars; that attached to
...train was in front, and literally
...its way into the cars loaded with pas-
...sengers in front.
...Half a dozen cars were crushed and ...reduced to atoms, and a large number of their
...shattered inmates either killed upon the spot or
...dreadfully injured. The scene is described as ...appalling to the last degree. Several of those ...killed ... ...ld were so caught in the wreck
...of the broken cars that they could not be re-
...leased without considerable time.
...Crow-bars were brought into requi-
...sition, and those alive and unhurt made super-
...human efforts for their relief. The cry for ...water ... the sufferers was continual, and ser-
...vants ... persons were engaged constantly in supply-
...ing them. It was not, however, until the loco-
...motive attached to the excursion train had been ...detached ... the crippled mass, that the dead and
...wounded were got out. A large number of those ...who escaped walked to town, while others came
...in as ... ...iever vehicles could be obtained.
...Part ... the forepart car was filled with ...the dead, dying and wounded, all wedged to-
...gether in one mass with the fragments of the car,
...and the seats, so compact that it required a half
...hour's time and the use of axes to rescue the ...unfortunate victims.
...A number of females and children
...were taken out from among the dead, scarcely
...breathing, through the floor of the car
...could be seen the protruding limbs of some who
...had apparently struck dead.
...Among the dead in the centre of this car was ...Mrs. Roberson, named in the list below, a young
...and beautiful woman, and Henry Clay Jeffers,
...the son of Madison Jeffers, a bright and beauti-
...ful boy; the bodies of whom were so wedged
...among the fragments of the two cars, which had
...been ... through each other like a telescope,
...that it was impossible to extricate them without
...hauling off the fragments of the upper car by
...the locomotive, which was also necessary to re-
...lease the large number of unfortunate creatures
...who still remained wedged between the forward
...cars; some still alive and others dead. In re-
...moving the ... Mrs. Roberson's body was lit-
...erally torn to pieces, but in the effort to recover
...those in whom life still remained, it became ...necessary to disregard the dead.
...On all the platforms of the wrecked cars the ...destruction of life and limb was immense, and
...the cars being so closely wedged together it was
...utterly impossible for more than an hour to ...relieve any of them, although the screams of the ...sufferers caused the most superhuman exertions
...for their rescue.
...On the platform at the head of the excursion
...train four men were caught by the forepart of
...the engine; two of them were instantly killed,
...and the other two were fast by their limbs, suf...fering the most excruciating agony, and almost
...roasted by the smoke-pipe of the locomotive.
...They ... related from exhaustion before they ...could ... rescued, requiring more than an hour
...of incessant labor, and one of them subsequently
...died.
...Two ... those were instantly killed also on the ...front platform of the York train, one of whom
...was Benjamin Merryman, the baggage-master,
...who met death standing manfully at his post at
...his brake, endeavoring to check the destruction.
...The accident occurred at 20 minutes past five ...o'clock, and it was half-past seven o'clock before
...the last body was taken from the wreck. The ...dead, the dying and the wounded, were strewn
...about on the grass, some of the bodies horribly
...mangled, while the broken limbs and deep
...gashes in the bodies of the wounded rendered
...it certain that many were injured beyond re-
...covery.
...A powerfully built man, one of the men con...nected with the engine, was drawn out from the ...ruins at 8 o'clock, with severe bodily injury,
...but the moment he was relieved from the pres-
...sure he became insensible, and in his dying ag-
...onies his body fairly bounced from the earth.
...Messengers were sent to the city, immediate...ly after the accident, for relief, and a number
...of physicians, whose names we did not ascer-
...tain, were soon on the ground, as also were a
...number from the vicinity, who labored unre-
...mittingly to relieve the sufferings of the unfor-
...tunate creatures strewn about.
...The trains from the city did not, however,
...reach the scene of the accident until after 8
...o'clock in the evening, at which time there were
...about 3000 awaiting conveyance home, all the ...excursionists having arrived from the scene of
...their festivities to the scene of death.
...The principal portion of the sufferers were in ...the excursion trains; although several of those ...in the accommodation train were also killed and
...wounded. Several persons, among them Mr.
...Emanuel Stockett, saved themselves, on hearing
...the whistle blow, by leaping from the cars to
...the ground, while going at full speed. Those ...who escaped in this way, received, so far as we ...could learn, but little damage.
...The bodies of the dead were all placed in one
...car, and piled upon one another, presenting a
...ghastly spectacle. Most of them had been in...stantly killed by the crash, some of them being
...horribly crushed and mutilated in a manner to
...harrow the beholder of the spectacle. The ...dead were made as easy as possible, and, in ...most of the cases, their friends were at the de-
...pot, and had them immediately removed.

HYDROPHOBIA CURED BY VINEGAR.—A letter from Venice says: "Were you here, you would be much pleased with the discovery made at Udine, the capital of Friuli, a small province be-longing to this republic. The discovery is this: A poor man, lying under the frightful tortures of the hydrophobia, was cured by draughts of vinegar, given him by mistake instead of an-other potion. A physician of Padua, called Count Heoniss, got intelligence of this event at Udine, and tried the same remedy upon a patient that was brought to Padua hospital, adminis-tering to him a pound of vinegar in the morning, another at noon, and a third at sunset, and the man was speedily and perfectly cured."

Bishop Burnet, once preaching before Charles II, was much warmed by his subject, and, uttering a religious truth in a very earnest manner, with great vehemence struck his clenched hand upon the desk, and cried out:

"Who dares deny this?"

"Faith," observed the King, in a key not quite so loud as the preacher, "no body, I should think, that is within reach of that great fist of yours."

A TRAGIC BEAR-FIGHT.

We translate from the Quebec Canadien the following account of a fearful encounter with a bear, in which the unfortunate hunter lost his life:

A most painful occurrence has just spread a sort of panic in the parish of St. Raymond. A man has been torn to pieces by a bear. This animal, on the night of Sunday, the 28th of May, had killed and carried off a cow belonging to a man of the name of Michel Cantin. On the morrow an experienced hunter in that region, named James Cantin, whose aim for forty years had brought down bears, moose, and other large game of the forest without number, prepared means to put an end to the ferocious brute. It was sundown before these were completed, and he had not time to go for his son to assist him in the hunt. The bear came, according to cus-tom, to feed upon the prey he had secreted; and the inhabitants of the village heard the firing of a gun. Fifteen minutes later, another gun was heard, the report sounding as if near the woods; and, as the night was closing, a third report was heard coming from within the forest; then all was silent.

The people gathered together to meet the hunter on his way home, and hear from his own lips the story of his encounter with the bear. But the night has begun, and he does not come. The hopes of his friends turn to fear, and they resolve to fly to his assistance. They start with lanterns and proceed to the edge of the forest, where their cries and the discharge of fire-arms remain unanswered. They enter the wood and scour it in various directions, but without see-ing or hearing any thing. Then they turn homeward, sad and dispirited, to resume the search at dawn, the next day.

More than forty persons, who had been sum-moned in the course of the night, met at day break on the morrow, at the spot whence the report of the hunter's first shot had proceeded. A bloody track led them on through the forest; and many who were following it came to the bear, which they found lying dead in a clump of bushes near a swamp. But no hunter was to be found! They continued on their way, still keeping to the traces of blood on the ground, which extended beyond the spot where lay the animal, until in the midst of a dense thicket they stumbled upon the unfortunate Cantin. The soil trampled and torn up; the bushes broken and down-trodden; the trunks of the trees hard by, the leaves on the bushes, and the face of the earth, gory with the blood that had been shed; and the mutilated limbs of the de-ceased; every thing told of a long and desperate conflict, waged hand-to-hand between the unfor-tunate hunter and his terrible adversary.

From all that could be gathered on the sub-ject, it is surmised that the horrible tragedy took place in the following manner: Cantin's first shot had wounded the bear severely, and driven him to the woods. The hunter followed in pursuit, and fired a second time, but from the rear, as in the first instance. Still, this could not have been a mortal wound. Then, it is sup-posed, that the bear, finding he was being fol-lowed up closely, and urged on by fear and rage, plunged deeper into the forest, where, at length, he laid down to recruit his strength, or perhaps to die after the custom of his species, the members of which usually seek some retired spot to breathe their last. Accordingly, the monster selected the densest thicket to be found in the woods.

Animated by that noble ambition of the hun-ter who thinks he is sure of his game, and is desirous of adding another to his numerous ex-ploits, Cantin persevered in the chase, notwith-standing the increasing darkness around him

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Publishing Committee Louisiana Conference { J. C. KEENER, L. PARKER, J. B. WALKER

H. N. McTYEIRE, Editor.

J. HAMILTON, D. D. / T. W. DORMAN / W. MURRAH } Publishing Committee Alabama Conference.

VOL. IV. NO. 25. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, JULY 22, 1854. WHOLE NO. 181.

REPORTS

ADOPTED BY THE GENERAL CONFERENCE OF 1854

The Committee appointed to consider the Educational interests of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, present the following report:

The Committee are deeply impressed with the momentous importance of the subject committed to their examination. They are fully persuaded that nothing except the direct means of salvation, more urgently demands the profound attention and fostering care of the Church, than the diffusion of a sound and faithful education throughout every department of our widely-extended work. They feel its connection with religion in the early and future generations of Methodism so vital at the present period of its history, that we should prove recreant to our most solemn obligations if we were not fully awake to its importance, and actively engaged in its promotion. Although they would not presume to urge upon the question of this kind before so enlightened a body, they ask the liberty of stating some of the grounds upon which this conviction rests. The first is found in the wants which religion and education reciprocally satisfy. The Gospel, considered in itself, meets all the necessities of our moral nature; education meets all the necessities of our intellectuals. Both of the agencies are indispensable to the development of their respective departments of our constitution, and both must be conjoined to perfect one, or several objects. To separate the gospel from education, is to allow the vast capabilities of the mind to lie dormant or to display themselves fitfully and imperfectly; to separate education from the gospel, is to give dominance to the most destructive of all elements, the vicious propensities of human nature, and to subordinate to their control the most powerful of all instrumentalities, a cultivated intellect. To unite them in just proportions is to achieve the highest ends of our common humanity.

Another reason to sustain this conviction is the fact, as we believe, that the gospel is more appreciated and influential upon those who conceive of it most clearly. Those in whom its soul-saving truths are associated with solid learning. It is undoubtedly adapted to all men, "for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." But its unfathomable resources and its sublime doctrines are, all the better estimated and applied in proportion as they are analyzed, as an enlightened mind comprehends their grandeur and their relations. So that properly viewed, a well-balanced education is really subservient to piety, because it is consecrated in the understanding.

Again, a sound education always augments the capacity for usefulness. While it imparts more enlarged and accurate views of the necessities of mankind, it comprehends with equal perspicuity the means and contrivances for meeting them. It is thus that by the religious and intellectual training of the child the Church prepares them for their varied and responsible relations to society at large, and especially to this great country, to which as a Christian denomination we owe the debt of the most exalted citizenship which it is in our power to confer.

Besides, it is our bounden duty to provide for the millions of youth whom God in his wonderful providence has placed under our immediate influence. No Church in these Southern and South-western States has so fearful a charge committed to it as ours, and great will be our guilt if we neglect or abuse it. These youth will constitute a large portion of the population of the land, whose habits of thought and action in a few years will mould and fashion for virtue and happiness, and thus to elevate the platform, or to what the coming age shall reach a higher destiny than the preceding.

Moreover, the present and prospective interests of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, require the adoption of an aggressive and vigorous plans of education. The desire of improvement arises by the spirit of the times and by the progress of society in its arts and refinements of the age, will, of necessity, induce the families of our Zion to secure for their children a corresponding cultivation. If we withhold it they will seek it beyond our pale; and though we be ever so loyal to their exhumation, though we be ever so zealous in works of piety, those who ought to constitute our future membership will be lost to us for ever, and our increase will be inversely as that of the population of the country. Hence it is our true policy to secure to ourselves and to our communion the children of our people, and a due proportion of those of our fellow-citizens; a policy which other denominations, and particularly the Roman Catholics, employ with astonishing sagacity and success, for silent processes of education, upon the young are more effectual on a large scale, and in ultimate results than the most strenuous appliances upon adults. In addition to this, it is undeniable that intelligence connected with piety, adds moral weight to any Church in an age and a country in which claims to acceptance are daily measured more by merit than by fictitious circumstances.

The Committee would suggest another general consideration on this subject. Upon our recognized plan of receiving Ministers into our Church, the diffusion of education among our youth is the only available method. Let us bring our pulpits with competent men who shall not in advance of the age, will at least be parallel to it. From these men, legitimately spread throughout our borders, will emanate practices bringing with them the average intellectual culture of the community in which they emerge. In order to elevate the masses, therefore, it is certainly also the intellectual character of our preaching.

Having thus very briefly stated the general principles involved in the great question of education and the relation it sustains to the prosperity of the Church, we proceed to the consideration of those various agencies and their power to afford the gratifying pleasure to affirm that their inquiries into the actual condition of education under our patronage has led to the most gratifying conclusions. They elicited information which has filled them with the most agreeable surprise. Although confessedly, much remains to be accomplished, never in the history of Southern Methodism have more strenuous efforts been made or more triumphantly, to educate our youth. Seminaries outstripped every noble competitor in the noble race, though later than some of them in the start. Institutions of every grade, and for both sexes, have risen up and are flourishing in almost every part of our territory, from Virginia to California. Some of these have been long and well established, imparting the most approved scholarship to their pupils, others are rapidly gaining strength and sending forth their alumni to fill and adorn their places in society; while a goodly number, are, at this very time, in process of preparation to supply the wants of destitute localities.

The Committee would call special attention to a fact ascertained by their investigations which will meet with a grateful response in this entire body. Nearly all our literary institutions have been annually blessed with gracious revivals of religion, evincing the manifestation of God upon our children, and sanctifying the very fountains of learning. Thousands of the rising generation are converted to God in the halls of science and literature, and issue from these hallowed retreats to occupy posts of usefulness and honor. Vast numbers of qualified teachers imbued with the spirit of Christianity and light-converted in our views go forth to multiply the blessings of a sacrificial education, and to increase the patronage of our favored institutions. Many of our best educated young men are preparing our efforts with tenfold interest by entering into our ministry and becoming its bright ornaments.

For the satisfaction of the General Conference, we here present a rapid statistical sketch of the literary institutions under the patronage of our Church, so far as they have been reported to us. It would be tedious and unnecessary to give minute details. We will merely enumerate several of their principal features preliminary of our final notice.

1. Kentucky Conference. No male college, but has a charter to be one at Mt. Sterling. Louisville Seminary at Science Hall with 200 pupils, and Lexington Female High School 60 pupils.

2. Western Virginia Conference. One school, Marshall Academy, with 40 pupils.

3. Mississippi Conference. Rayney High School, male and female, 2 classes.

4. St. Louis Conference. Arcadia High School, 150 pupils, Independence Academy, 100 pupils, Chaperon High School, 120, and Cave Spring Academy, 100; total 370.

5. Louisville Conference. High School at Hardinsburg, male; 10 females in Female High School same place, about 60 pupils. Cedar Grove Female High School, about 50. Burkestown Female Institute, about 50 scholars. Atkinson Female High School, Bowlingville, 150 pupils. Cedar Grove, 50 students.

6. Holston Conference. Emory & Henry college, in operation 10 years, annual attendance of at 175; number of alumni 105. Holston Female College, Asheville, N. C., furnishing number of pupils not stated; a school at Strawberry Plains, numbers not reported.

7. Virginia Conference. Randolph Macon College, about 120 in annual attendance; endowment started. Temple Institute at Buckingham, very flourishing, about 120 pupils. A female college on a large scale to be opened next Fall, in Murfreesboro', N. C.

8. Tennessee Conference. Cherokee College, in operation 10 years, 120 students, or fewer; number of alumni and increasing. Tennessee Female Institute at Athens, Ala. Two pupils. Penn. Com. Temple College at Columbia, Tenn., with 150 pupils. Clarke Ville Female Academy, Clarksville, Tenn., 175 pupils. Soule Female College, Murfreesboro, Tenn., 150 pupils. Bascom Female College, Hunsville, Ala., 80 students. Washington Male Institute, 9 miles from Nashville, has 80 boys and young men. The Spring Hill Male High School opened a year ago, has 100 pupils. Three other Male High Schools will soon be in operation in this Conference.

9. Indiana Mission Conference. There are three male Academies. Chickasaw, 125 students. Choctaw 25, and Fort Coffee 30; two seminaries, Academies. Bloomfield 30 students, and New Hope 30; and two mixed, that is, embracing males and females, Sarepta, 60 pupils, with 4 teachers, and Asbury Manual Labor Schools, Creek, 100 pupils. Total pupils 325. The schools are in fine condition.

10. Arkansas Conference. Cane Hill Collegiate Institute, Batesville, 50 pupils, and Elm Spring Male and Female Seminary, in northwest Arkansas, about 50 pupils.

11. North Carolina Conference. Greensboro' Female College, averaging about 100 pupils. Building. The N. C. Conference has joint control of R. H. College, with Virginia Conference.

12. Memphis Conference. Andrew College, Trenton, 100 male, over 100 students. The Memphis Conference Female Institute, Jackson, Tenn., 60 pupils. Marshall Female Institute, Miss., about 100 pupils. Franklin Female College, Holly Springs, Miss., including a Branch at Byhalia, 250 pupils. Bascom Institute, Granada, Miss., with 150 pupils. Mendon Female Institute, with 150 pupils. Memphis Conference Institute, Carroll

13. Georgia Conference. Cokesbury [illegible] endowment $150,000, averages [illegible] students. Carolina Female Institute, [illegible] averaging about 125. Wesleyan [illegible] with endowment [illegible] pupils. Female College in Sparta, [illegible] will soon be in operation.

14. South Carolina Conference. Cokesbury Male and Female Institute, [illegible] pupils. Female Academy, [illegible] Newberry Male and Female Academy, [illegible] pupils. Female Academy, [illegible] pupils. Female Academy, [illegible] pupils.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Christian Advocate.

Terms: $1 00 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:
SATURDAY, JULY 22, 1854.

In vain.—Several orders have been received at this depository (1) for books. The Agents will take notice, and those ordering, be patient. For the present, as in the past, McGinnis & Carver are our stand-bys, and to them we commend you.

Requiem.—In the decadence and demise of the Roman Catholic prim, we included the Southern Journal of this city. It was only a case of coup de soleil, not death. The Journal reappeared in our office on Monday—early in the morning. Another instance of burying alive. Excuse us, neighbor. Really!——

Obituaries and a communication from M., will appear next week.

We are obliged to a friend for a copy of Sermon at the Commencement of Oak Bowery College, by the Rev. Dr. Means.

A VISIT TO THE HOSPITALS.

As many lying reports are gone abroad about the prevalence of Yellow Fever and Cholera here, not a little to the commercial injury of the city, and the anxiety of numerous friends and relatives abroad, we report, after personal inquiry into the matter.

In private practice we saw this week one clearly marked case of yellow fever—a patient of Dr. Austin:—the Captain of a ship which left Havana 1st inst. He was taken on the 16th, and is now nearly well. This is the only case we have ascertained in private practice. On Thursday last we visited the Charity Hospital, where disease of all kinds has a thoroughfare. Here the health of the city makes its worst showing. Dr. Choppin, the surgeon, and Dr. Baldwin, the treasurer, both resident and highly intelligent officers of the Hospital, assured us there had been but one case of yellow fever there this summer. He arrived here six weeks ago from Rio Janerio: reported that there was no fever in Rio when he left, and none on the ship: died of black vomit last week. There was, on Thursday, no case in the hospital.

Arriving at the gate of the hospital about 9 A. M., a sick cart was in waiting, and soon two children were taken out in a litter—one about twelve years old, the other four: both clearly marked cases of Cholera, and the younger in articulo mortis. This looked like a bad coincidence. They made the only two cases of that disease in the hospital. The cartman who brought them in, informed us that they were only three months in this country. He had taken them out of a house on Melpomene Canal, where twenty-eight human beings were lodging in two small rooms. Thus crowded, feeding imprudently, and disordered by long voyage—no wonder! Foreigners have large ideas of room: habits and high rents compact them like pigs in a pen. Not uncommon is it, in passing a shanty so thickly inhabited that the children have to spend most of the day on the pavement, to see a chip hanging out with a piece of paper inscribed in indifferent English—"A room to rent."

On this week of last year there were 204 deaths by yellow fever: admitted into this hospital 631 cases: there are not over 500 now in it—all told. At least four-fifths of all who receive charity in this noble institution are foreigners. It is in the finest condition of neatness and order. The physicians and nurses seem to have hardly enough to keep their hands in.

Passing on to Maison de Sainté, under the medical care of Dr. Stone, we found a still cleaner bill of health. Here are the class of patients better to do in the world, where, on entering, if for the first floor, deposit $50; for the second $30. The resident physician was sitting in his arm chair, discussing the morning papers—nothing to do. A "Sister," in clean, white hood, was dusting about the lower rooms—all empty. Not a case of yellow fever there this summer: now, very few patients.

We know not what a day may bring forth; but at mid up to this time, New Orleans may be considered healthy: to use the language of the doctors—distressingly healthy. The people of Northern cities would do well to come here for wholesomeness.

John B. Craighead, a highly respectable citizen of Nashville, Tenn., who has, for several years, spent most of his time in Louisiana, died in that city on the 30th ult.

Celebration.—Rev. J. Pipes, Mansfield, La., writes:—

"On the Fourth we had a celebration of the first anniversary of the Mansfield Temperance Aid Society. A large concourse of people met at the Methodist church at 10 o'clock. Mr. H. Graves delivered a stirring and patriotic Oration, which was followed by a Temperance Lecture by Hon. J. B. Elam: when the whole congregation was invited to partake of a Barbecue prepared by the friends of Temperance. The day passed off pleasantly, and we have no doubt will be promotive of the cause of Temperance."

Rev. F. M. Haygood was recently put on trial, found guilty of heresy, and expelled from the Baptist Church, in Marietta, Ga., because he would neither assert nor deny that "God foreknew all things." The Reverend gentlemen said, in his defense, that he could find no passage in Scripture which taught the doctrine; and he had no opinion, therefore, on the subject.

REST: MONDAYISH FEELINGS.

Our clerical readers need no explanation of "Mondayish feelings." The preacher's work day is others' rest day. "The priests in the temple, profane the Sabbath, and are blameless"—so said the Lord of the Sabbath. This special dispensation applies to them in their official work—"in the temple." To them it is a holy day, but for physical and mental recreation, do they not require a rest day, too? The highest medical authorities so teach. Monday is their rest day. And in this climate and weather, the work of a Sabbath school in morning, and two sermons and a sacrament service during the Sabbath, do almost consecrate some other day of the seven to rest.

So much for the general subject; but in the very pleasant memory of the event, we were about to tell how we worked off our last Mondayish feelings. A pleasant rest day we had on the Gulf. No line of steamers are superior to those which wait on the pleasure of travelers between this city and Mobile, and minister to the numerous and elegant summer villas on the Coast between. The steamer detailed to the latter service is the Creole. Passengers are its daily cargo. A boat is somewhat like a house of entertainment, only more so, in making the comfort of all dependent on the courtesies of one presiding genius known on land as "mine host." On the Creole he is known as Mr. Chapman. With all the goers and comers, a throng, gay, grave and various, he is brought into contact; and though it be only en passant, yet so favorable is the impression of it, we envy him the number, not of his acquaintances, but his friends.

Steaming off from the "Lake end" at 9 A. M., on we go through the Rigolets and under the guns of Fort Pike. How a railroad track is to be got over here, the engineers must find out. We should hate to have it to find out, but hope it may be done, for we want to see the New Orleans and Mobile Railroad.

About 3 P. M., a sail scene off Pass Christian—a yacht race, not a horse race; though the betting that goes on is not of a more moral sort;—the end to be achieved is more plausible—finding out the best models and management of water craft. Eight small boats were contending for the prize. On the wharf stood a crowd of the "great unwashed and uncombed." From the puffing that goes before and after these regattas, we had supposed them something. It is a pin-hook and mill-pond business, got up with the silver cup, etc., to fill the hotel and patronise the bar! An honest reporter of the Delta alludes to the catch-penny and child's play, called Regattas, at these watering places that make so large a display on paper:—

I should like to see some of these amateur sailors under way with a cracking breeze of eight or ten miles, and with none but themselves to manage their crafts. If they wish to be entitled to the distinction of amateur sailors, why do they not, where they make up their regattas, man and manage their own yachts from among themselves, instead of depending upon fishermen and outside-sailors? How many are there among all our yachting gentlemen who would undertake to sail one of their own crafts from Pass Christian to the Light-Ship, with a double-reefed breeze dead ahead, and a fair prospect of its increasing before they reached there? To our mind, the pleasure of yachting consists in managing your own boat, so as to know exactly what she will do in all weathers, to feel just as safe in her on all occasions as if you were perched on the rock of Gibraltar, to be satisfied that you can sail her a little better than any one else, because you have studied all her nice points. In England, it is one of the favorite amusements of gentlemen, including the highest and wealthiest peers of the realm, who however manage their own yachts. Almost to the day of his death, the old Marquis of Anglesea, maugre his wooden leg to supply that which he lost at Waterloo, might be seen exercising his own yacht, and surpassing all the amateur sailors in his seamanship. Here, our young men are quite content with the honor and pride of owning a fast vessel, without essaying to exhibit themselves as successful sailors.

So we notched down one more humbug,

A stop at the several points was made a few minutes, distributing ice and passengers, and giving out a boon which all seemed to crave as the highest—a morning paper. The public and private wharfs, enlivened with bouquets of children and groups of families and visitors, enjoying the delicious Gulf breeze; occasional strains of music, and the white cottages seen through the luxuriant shrubbery on shore, made up an evening scene of surpassing loveliness that greeted us along.

Ocean Springs is the terminus. Here we enjoy the full richness of the sun-setting. An unusual putting off and taking on occurs. What jugs are those—large ones carefully stoppered? Coffee-houses and doggeries are forbid here. Then what is in those jugs they are bringing abroad? The mineral waters, to be sure, invalids are taking away for themselves and sick friends at home. The bell rings. The Creole glides back at eight knots an hour, while we sleep at the rate of sixteen. By sun-rise we are at home.

THE NEW ORLEANS MEDICAL AND SURGICAL JOURNAL.

Upon our table is the July number of this journal, edited by Dr. B. Dowler, issued bimonthly. It is the organ of the Profession in the South, as, also, a credit to it. The editor recognizes the utility of "psychological medicine"—in incurable illness the only remedy; in curable ones often paramount. A readable article—(it is not for any but the doctors to pronounce on merits)—is contributed by Dr. M. M. Dowler, a brother of the editor and successful city practitioner, "On the reputed causes of Yellow Fever," etc. He rejects the cryptogamic and contagion theories; quarantines are useless. This is Dr. Dowler's conclusion—gloomy, indeed, but about as satisfactory, in point of science, as any that has been offered:

"We have no right, from any thing that is known, or from any thing that is likely to be discovered, to rank yellow fever as one of the avoidable causes of mortality. Its epidemic appearance must be contemplated, in the present resources of human knowledge, as merely an ultimate fact—an accumulative manifestation of the general scheme by which all that is vital shall throw off vitality, and as little capable of explanation as are first principles or self-evident truths. Why matter constantly gravitates toward the center, and why the yellow fever inconstantly makes its appearance in certain cities are, for all that has been determined, equally inexplicable. Epidemics have existed in all ages, and no human agency has ever stayed their march, limited their boundaries, nor shortened their duration."

The "Sanitary Commission" of our Council can put that in their pipes. The editor hits the "Types, etc.," a few stunning blows, and gives us this sound moral sentiment: "In vain may philosophy call to its aid physiology, comparative anatomy, geology, paleontology, ethnology, archæology, monuments and manuscripts, in order to account for man's origin. He who will not accept the Mosaic history, abandons the last plank, and must sink in hopeless uncertainty."

L'EGLISE PROTESTANTE FRANCAISE.

For a copy of the Journal of the Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Louisiana, we are indebted to the courtesy of the Secretary, Rev. Mr. Preston. The Convention was the sixteenth, and held in May last. The annual summary shows 812 baptisms, 154 confirmations, 660 funerals, 1 Church consecrated, 726 S. S. scholars, 65 S. S. teachers. Collections for Church objects, $17,844.

The Journal is neatly arranged and full, and we see the Convention fund charged with $121 60 for its printing. This is an outlay well made.

Bishop Polk is a solid man, and speaks before his Convention in a modest and dignified manner. The following item is from his Annual Address:

On turning to the history of the Diocese since it was organized in 1841, at which time I took charge of it as its first Bishop, it will be perceived there were at that time four organized congregations: Trinity Church, Natchitoches; Grace Church, St. Francisville; St. Paul's and Christ Churches, New Orleans. Of these, the three last only had church edifices. Our list of clergy, embracing parish ministers and teachers of youth, amounted to six. Communicants in all these, parishes to 238. The population of the Diocese amounted to about 500,000.

We have, after the lapse of thirteen years, 32 organized parishes, in which have been built and consecrated or are now near ready for consecration, 20 church edifices, and of the remaining 12, several are taking active measures to build. Besides these 32 organized congregations, composed chiefly of white persons, we have 23 others, in different parts of the Diocese, composed of the slaves on as many plantations; making in the aggregate 55. For the construction of their church edifices, there has been collected and expended, in the aggregate, about $350,000.

Our list of clergy, exclusive of the three taken off by the late epidemic, has increased from 6 to 23. Our communicants from 238 to 1,421.

Bishop Polk has been a large sugar planter on Lafourche, which perhaps has trammeled him somewhat with its business cares and one or two hundred negroes. We understand he has sold out lately, and will probably fix the Episcopal residence in this city: and now we may look for increased activity in his Diocese.

The main point in the Journal we designed to bring to the notice of our readers, is the prospects and success of this Church's enterprise for the benefit of the French population of New Orleans, of which the name heads this article. It seems to be slow work under any auspices. Romanism in faith is not so much a bar to their successful evangelization as Romanism in habit. The over-vivacity of the French character is shading into the fixed and more serious American phase. Accustomed to associate piety with ascetism and priest-craft and ecclesiastical domination, the reaction of the French mind against it is less felt as they are brought into contact with a healthier form of it. Their assumption of a superior civilization over Anglo-Saxons is so far subsiding as to allow them to accept a religious idea and practice from that quarter. Business, society, politics and common schools are bringing about a communion. All these changes are in favor of evangelical reform among them. We hope soon to see here a strong French Protestant Church.

Little as yet has been accomplished. The Methodists about 1844 employed a Missionary here for preaching to the French. He was recommended for that work to the delegates at General Conference in New York, and was accordingly brought out and stationed. He did nothing—was altogether unsuited to the work—rather an imposition than otherwise. Addressing polite and fastidious Gallic ears in a patois dialect, was turning the message, even of a preacher, into ridicule. After awhile our French Missionary went over to the Episcopalians, who tried to turn him to better account in gathering and ministering to an American congregation. He did little or nothing in that line, and a few years ago left these parts. As Webster said of the loss and gain between North and South, over the Compromise—so in this transaction. Our Episcopal friends gained all that the Methodists lost—nothing. Thus ended the first and last formal attempt of the Methodist Church to do something for the French in New Orleans: failed in the mission and lost our man.

A few years since Rev. Mr. Williamson began L'Eglise Protestante Française, in the old and French settled portion of the city. We learn that he was once a Methodist minister, but have no fault to find with him for that. If, under happier auspices for this important work, he succeeds, we shall rejoice at his success. The auspices may prove better—thus far they have. The Episcopal Church commands strong and peculiar influences. Mr. Williamson is no botch at the language—likely a Frenchman by birth. He seems to us a proper man—a very proper. Earnest, evangelical and eloquent; if he fails, we shall feel despairing for the present. But he has not failed. The following is his report before the Convention, as extracted from this Journal of its proceedings. It shows discouragements, but that something is to be hoped for:—

The church has been greatly improved through the liberality of one of our wealthy citizens; and I believe that we are now doing better and better.

As usual, many of our flock have removed, and others are about to remove to other parts of the Union. Only a few were carried off by the awful visitation of last summer.

None but those who are aware of the habits of the residents of the Second District in general, and of the French population in particular, can form an adequate idea of the manifold and peculiar trials and difficulties that will ever attend a field like this, until a due respect for the Sabbath, instilled into the peoples' minds, by law as well as by example, will cause our merchants, shopkeepers, clerks, mechanics and apprentices to sacrifice the counting-room, the store and the workshop for the house of God.

Fifty families at least, professedly belonging to our Church, beside strangers, who do not make themselves known to the Pastor; but, on account of that deplorable habit alluded to, that of considering the Sabbath as the most profitable day for business, we can hardly expect more than one at a time, of each family, to attend Divine service; so that our congregation is three or four times larger than it appears to be.

On the whole, I am happy to say, that I believe the French Protestant Church of New Orleans, is yearly and steadily improving, and that if the Vestry will only do their duty, as I trust they will, our pecuniary resources will soon increase.

Baptisms	4
Burials	4
Confirmed	8
Communicants	8
Candidates	5

C. H. Williamson, Rector.

CLASS-MEETING IN CAMP.

"We have permission," says the London Watchman, 21st ult., "to confide to our readers a private letter from a British soldier, who writes from the Asiatic shore of the Bosphorus, but is by this time probably somewhere between Varna and Schumla. It will, as the gallant writer says, tell one thing which the papers don't—that there were nineteen Wesleyan soldiers in the camp at Scutari, who met in Class, held prayer-meetings on two other week-evenings, and had a Preacher of their own on the Lord's Day."

Methodism is a good form of Christianity to travel with; portable and adaptable to the rudest inconveniences of place and circumstance.

This soldier must have been well trained at the home altar. The letter is to his parents, and dated "Camp Scutari, near Constantinople, May 25th." We extract a portion of it. The Church training is seen to powerful advantage which gathers its members out of such a host to "speak often one to another," and with fervor and simplicity and system to keep up worship. O, for such fruits every where! Then will be fulfilled the character of Methodism—"Christianity in earnest;" and its mission—"To spread Scriptural holiness:"

* * * "Dear parents, you see that by degrees we are nearing the seat of war, and perhaps before you receive this, shall be engaged with the enemy. It is a great thing to be able to look upon such a position with composure, and it must be comforting to you to know that I am enabled to do so. I am in the uninterrupted enjoyment of that greatest of all blessings, namely, peace with God. It remains unruffled in the present impending conflagration; my own humble opinion of which is, that it will yet redound to the glory of God. I think that this is just the opening of the time when pure and undefiled religion will spread upon the ruins of Popish superstition and Mahommedan delusion, and therefore I feel it to be an honor to make one in the number of fighting the battle of the Lord; and trusting in His strength and in the power of His might, I put myself into His care and keeping, and trust in His mercy, convinced that, whether living or dying, I am the Lord's. You can not conceive how much my mind is elevated many times when I consider that in England I have a praying father and mother who are continually bearing me up at the throne of grace. Oh, it is soul-cheering to consider that, if all others who have promised to perform such, forget, my parents don't. Oh, continue fervently and continually to bear me up there.

"There are a great many regiments of the British army here at present; it would be quite useless for me to enumerate them, and of no benefit to you, and besides the papers acquaint you with all these things; however, the papers won't tell you that among the number there are nineteen pious soldiers, who have their stated hours for mutual prayer, exhortations and praise; and therefore this will be something cheering and comforting to you, to know that such is the case. Since we have arrived at Constantinople we have searched for each other, and there are under my superintendence eighteen Wesleyan soldiers. We were acquainted some of us at Chobham, and thereby we found each other out, and have here formed ourselves into a Class, and keep up the whole Methodistic economy, save the money, and we meet in Class every Tuesday, and for prayer upon Thursdays and Saturdays, and for preaching every Sunday afternoon in a quiet sequestered place, in the middle of a large burying ground, which extends about seven miles in length, and we find of a truth that God is not confined to time nor place, but is every where present to bless and to do good. We have some sweet seasons of refreshment from His presence, and to His name we ascribe all the glory."

Putnam Monthly for July is on our table, through McGinnis & Carver.

ITEMS ABOUT COLLEGES.

The able Report of the Education Committee of General Conference will commend itself to all. It is a sound and full and "by authority" exhibit of the practical relations of our Church to Education.

LaGrange College, Ala., has adopted the plan of endowment by scholarships. It is proposed to sell one thousand, for $100 each, for a term of twenty years, to take effect when 750 scholarships have been obtained. Any itinerant preacher selling twenty-five, is entitled to one scholarship. As President Rivers has said, so it is—"We do not beg, but offer bargains. One thousand dollars of tuition for one hundred of money."

Emory and Henry College presents, in our advertising columns, a tempting and solid offer for an education. Our late personal acquaintance with President Wiley, did greatly heighten our estimate of the excellent Institution over which he presides.

One of the ripest scholars and best instructors of the South is Dr. Ellison, who devotes himself to this favorite work on the healthful and refined Chunnenugge Ridge, Ala. See the advertisement for times and terms.

The people of East Alabama are favored. The late Commencement at Oak Bowery, Chambers county, is represented to have been very successful; the Address by Col. T. Lomax.

Prof. John J. Darby, of Culloden, Ga., has accepted the Presidency of the Auburn (Ala) Masonic Female College,

At the late Commencement of the University of Georgia, G. A. Bull, of LaGrange, Ga., stood first among those who received the first honors of the graduating class; and N. W. Long, of Uchee, Ala., first among the second honors. W. J. Gorham, of Hamilton, Ga., and J. C. Henderson, of Texas, are also honorably mentioned.

The Catalogue of Wesleyan Female College at Macon, Ga., has just been received. Some time ago, Bishop Andrew expressed the fear that Southern women were fast becoming better educated than Southern men. This catalogue gives some support to this apprehension. Since 1840 this Institution has graduated two hundred and thirty-six young ladies; and there are one hundred and forty undergraduates now in the college.

The late annual commencement of the University of Virginia, was rendered attractive by the presence of John Mitchell. His address is said to have been one of marked originality, and was received with much applause.

Mr. Alfred Taylor Bledsoe, Professor of Mathematics in Oxford University in Mississippi, was chosen to fill the Professorship made vacant by the death of Prof. Courtney. He is a graduate of West Point.

How potently those who control the education of a country ultimately control the strong features of its character, is seen in the remark of the President of Princeton College, Rev. John McLean, D. D., in his address on his recent inauguration at its last commencement, that it had educated more than 600 clergymen, and more than 200 Judges, Statesmen and National Congressmen.

The Commencement exercises of Centenary Institute are noticed in another column.

William and Mary College.—At the recent Commencement of this venerable institution the degree of D. D. was conferred on Rev. Charles Minnegerode and Rev. George D. Armstrong, both of Norfolk; that of LL. D. on Littleton Waller Tazewell, and ex-President Tyler. Bishop Johns having resigned the Presidency of the College, Prof. Benj. T. Ewell was elected to fill the vacancy.

The Methodists of Jackson, Miss., through Rev. E. R. Strickland, have purchased that eligible and commodious property recently owned by Gen. Freeman, for $12,000; and intend opening the Exercises of the Female College already in operation there, on the first Monday in October next. Jackson has character for health, cheap and good living, and a cultivated, moral society. These buildings and grounds are spacious, and we announce the enterprise so well begun and located, with lively gratification.

Revival Intelligence.

Eufaula, Ala. Con.

The Methodist Church in Eufaula has been blessed during the last month with a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. The ministry were greatly blessed in their labors, and the members slightly revived; but we fear they greatly quenched the Spirit as to praying and shouting, and such other duties as the Lord enjoins upon them at such times; hence, after two weeks of great promise, the work has declined and souls cease to be converted. The number of accessions has been sixteen, all adult persons and mostly married. We trust the Lord has not yet finished his work in this place, but shall still look for greater blessings.

F. M. Grace.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

EPISCOPAL VISITATION.

I see it stated in the plan of Episcopal Visitation for this year, that the Colored Missions in South Carolina are to receive some special attention. This is well; but are there not many important missions among the colored people in several other conferences where a visit from a Bishop would be highly appreciated, and greatly promote the work? Now, that we have seven Bishops, we would be particularly glad to see one for an Annual Conference in Alagama.

July, 1854.

There were 761 deaths in New York city for the week ending on the 8th inst., of which number 98 were from cholera, 74 from cholera infantum, 11 from cholera morbus, 34 from diarrhœa, 20 from dysentery, 10 from inflammation of the bowels, and 88 from convulsions.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

THE CASE NOT TO BE DISPOSED OF IN THAT WAY.

Ma. Editor,—The following is from an able and candid article in the N. Y. Herald, copied into the N. Y. Observer, touching the recent painful defection of a distinguished Minister. The press, both religious and secular, in this region, has been silent upon this case, to a marvel; thus presenting a striking contrast to the course generally pursued in other parts of the country: and, considering the strong temptation there is to publish every thing in which the public takes so deep an interest, its course has been most praiseworthy. But as the members of his congregation have brought the subject before the public, it will be no offense against propriety to call attention to their treatment of the case. The offense was one which, under the circumstances, stirred the whole community; and yet not an exultant note has been heard from any quarter, except perhaps from the very dregs of society, and a few from one of the ministers of "the Church" in Mobile, whose former life—if the history of the bishops of his Church do not—ought to keep him quiet:—

In addition to this, many items of history might be adduced, corroborating the pretty general conclusion of our citizens, that with Dr. Hamilton the pulpit was chosen for the advantageous prosecution of studies which he enjoyed, and as the best forum for the display (which he loved) of his own peculiar talents. The conviction has, through all times past, forced itself upon the great majority of intelligent persons who have been thrown into his society, that there was no well balanced mind there; while charity throws the mantle of innate moral obliquity or more temporary insanity over his memory.

A Citizen of Mobile.

The above furnishes a pregnant illustration of the difficulties and absurdities in which the Calvinism of our religious friends involve them. To save the doctrine of "the perseverance of the saints," more than an insinuation is thrown out, that the pulpit was chosen by Dr. H. as a theater for display, and not in the fear of God—thus making him an unprincipled hypocrite for thirty years past! This is utterly unwarranted. The Doctor solemnly asseverated to those to whom he made his confession, that he had not been a hypocrite in this particular, but had preached to them honestly throughout. To his confession, and other statements connected therewith, all credit was given. And why not in this case; ah, why not! If there was any truth in him, he had formerly, at least, a sense of his responsibility as a minister and pastor. We heard him declare so in the most solemn manner. No, Mr. "Citizen," that solution will not do. But here is another: "the conviction has, through all time past, forced itself upon the great majority of intelligent persons who have been thrown into his society, that there was no well-balanced mind there." This relieves the Doctor from a measure of moral obliquity, but where does it place the intelligent Church, congregation and session which have so devotedly sustained him for twenty years! Did they see that he had no "well-balanced" mind? They must have done so, if such a conviction was forced upon a majority of all intelligent persons thrown in his company. And could they know that he was an unbalanced, and so an unsafe man, and then cling so firmly to him? Could they do this for the sake of mere talent? Were they prepared thus to waive the demands of principle and the fear of God, for the sake of the gain that popular gifts would bring? If so, Dr. H. is not the only party upon whom popular condemnation ought to fall. If so, it is but a righteous retribution that has come upon them. No, "Citizen," we can not accept such a statement as this; the Government Street Church will not thank you for such an exposition as this. But is the statement true? We affirm not. The Doctor had eccentricities, but they were those of manners and habits, not of mind, and were quite limited in their number and range; and especially did they not appear to any extent in his public services. He had logic, taste, judgment, pathos, eloquence, and erudition; in short, he had a well-endowed, well-stored, and not unbalanced mind. A stand can not be made here against a fast-coming inference.

There is no position that can be taken touching the case which does not sadly impeach either the intelligence or integrity of the Government Street Church, but that which admits that Dr. H. has been a man of undoubted Christian experience. This is the true ground. No man could have preached as he did on some occasions—no man could speak on the subject of a change of heart—of the power and work of the Spirit—the nature and results of the new birth, as he did, who had not been taught of God. There was that about his language and treatment of these subjects, which every man who has the fruit of the Spirit himself, recognized as unmistakeably from God. A brother minister who was much with him during the scenes of the epidemic last year, has stated to me since, that no man could have talked to the sick and dying as he did, who had not felt the power of Christ on his heart. The same spiritual discernment that enabled Christian men to detect in him the evidences of an acquaintance with Divine things, taught every such man who has been thrown much in the Doctor's company for the last ten or twelve years, that he has not been much under the influence of religion in that time. Like many others, he "cast off" his "first faith:" 1 Tim. 5:12, and did not "hold the beginning of" his confidence "steadfast unto the end:" Heb. 3:14, but "being led away with the error of the wicked," he fell "from his steadfastness:" 2 Pet. 3:17. So, though the case is melancholy in the extreme, this is not the first instance of falling "from grace:" Gal. 5:4, for many others "who were once enlightened, and" had "tasted the heavenly gift," and "been made partakers of the Holy Ghost, and have tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come," still "have fallen away:" Heb. 6:4-6. Let every minister, then, like Paul, keep his body under, "lest that by any means when" he has "preached to others," he himself "should be a cast-away:" 1 Cor. 9:27. We venture the assertion, that neither Dr. Hamilton himself nor intelligent Christians in Newark, will say that he had never known Christ.

We have no feeling to express here towards the Government Street Church but that of sympathy; we all suffer too much by the unhappy event to do aught but mourn. But we must protest against the fallacious attempts to sustain a favorite doctrine by such desperate expedients.

A Sufferer.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

CENTENARY INSTITUTE, ALABAMA.

The Annual Examination at this Institution commenced on Friday the 30th of June and closed the following Wednesday.

During the past year the school has labored under some disadvantages. At the last session of the Alabama Confidence the Rev. J. Y. Ramsey was taken from it and placed again in the regular pastoral work; and early in the Spring the bad health of Mr. Bruce rendered him entirely unable to perform the duties of his station. Thus the male department was deprived of its two principal teachers, and their place had to be supplied in the middle of the scholastic year. There was nevertheless, a larger attendance of pupils in both departments of the school than in any previous year since its organization; and notwithstanding the disadvantages just referred to, the examinations, particularly in the male department, were highly satisfactory, affording gratifying evidence of a real knowledge of the subjects of their study. There were twelve in the graduating class; and it was pleasing to know that they would leave the institution, not only well instructed in the usual literary and scientific studies of a female seminary, but likewise well instructed "in the evidences of the Divine origin of Christianity."

The Annual Address was delivered by W. A. Chambers, of Columbus, Ga., and was highly excellent, appropriate, and worthy of the high commendations bestowed upon it.

Heretofore the two schools have been under the care of the same Principal; in future they will have different Principals. The Rev. E. D. Pitts was elected by the Board of Trustees as Principal of the male department, and those who know him well, anticipate the most favorable results from his election. We believe they will not be disappointed.

Dr. Mitchel, as Principal of the female department, will hereafter give it his undivided attention; and to all who know him, this will be regarded as a sufficient pledge of its future prosperity.

As both schools are now thoroughly organized, may we not hope that the future of Centenary Institute will be even more prosperous than the past. That it will be so, is absolutely certain, if the Methodists of South Alabama do their duty. My brethren, you have children to educate, and for their moral and religious training God holds you responsible—so does the Church at whose altar you worship. It is a responsibility from which you can not escape. When you send your children from home, it is your duty to be especially careful, and make it a matter of conscience to send them where their moral and religious culture will be most surely attended to. When you do this, and only then can you hope that your children will be saved from the proselyting zeal of modern skepticism on the one hand, and Romanism and high-Churchism on the other. When you do this, "your heart will not condemn you," and you will "have confidence toward God," that when you go to your home in Heaven, your children will live to bless the Church at whose altars they and you have been converted to God.

J. E. Newman.

July 7, 1854.

Picking up stray Arrows.—Every once a while, said a faithful missionary, I find a arrow which had been sent by our mighty and of which I was not aware at the time, but thanks be to God, now and then I find them and the wounded ones, who are not enough to see me too, though they have a long run, and hoped to get over their trouble. Blessed be God, the light finally reached through wounds which no physician Christ could heal.

Progress of the Evangelical Sects during the last half Century.—It is a prevalent opinion that their increase has not kept pace with the ratio of growth in the rapidly multiplying population. Statistics, however, prove the falsity of this opinion. For during the last fifty years, says a writer on religious statistics, in the Morning Star, May 3, the number of members of the Evangelical Churches in the United States, has increased from four hundred thousand to three millions and a half, being an increase of nine fold, while our population has increased only four fold.

Religious Progress.—This trait in the Gospel—its character as a principle of eternal and indefinite growth, and of limitless advancement—needs to be pondered. Our weakness is now indeed not so much with the influence of this Religion on the community as on the individual heart and character. But the individual elevated, uplifts necessarily the family and state and age of which it forms a part, and in which he is a new and vital element. There is much in the present condition of the Churches, and much in the present aspect of the world, that makes this progressive energy of Christianity a lesson needing now to be especially urged on the teachers, and heeded by the disciples of this faith. [Dr. Williams.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Missionary Reports.

GERMAN MISSION.

To the Rev. H. N. McTyeire, Assistant Treasurer of the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Dear Brother—Having for a long time moved on as it were in silence, we wish now to report again of the work of God in our German missions in New Orleans.

Up to the present time they are in a prospering and healthy condition. We are not pressing as fast in numbers as we most ardently desire, but we are gaining the more in interest and stability.

The first mission is doing well, under the labors of Bro. Pauley. The temporary building which we put up three years ago is entirely too small to hold the congregation. The Society numbers about eighty members, and while they are doing well spiritually, they are also improving temporally. The Sunday school connected with this mission is a most interesting of all the others. There are from seventy to eighty children attending. The officers and teachers are a devoted band of Christians. Debts, there are none on this mission; but now, more than ever, do we want that large brick missionary church. We lose year after year, nay, month after month, in spiritual labor, for the want of a large and commodious church. If last summer had not struck such a heavy blow among us we should before this time have made advancing with the building.

But the greatest difficulty that presents itself is, we must have at least $15,000 to the $7,000 the mission is in possession of. We cannot build any thing in the shape of a church, which the present necessity of the work requires. We have talked of building a frame house large enough to hold the congregation for several years to come, to obviate the great need for the present, but we can not build any thing church-like for less than $5,000, and then it would not be a house the work demands now.

The second mission (my own field of labor) is still moving onward in a sweet and harmonious way. The number in society is about the same; it is almost impossible to increase the number, as we have to lose constantly by removals. We are closely watched here by Roman Catholics and Lutherans. For this reason the great many of our German friends are afraid to come to our meetings. Right opposite our chapel the devil has posted a strong band; his guardsmen are of the most faithful kind—red-nosed and sore-eyed, half and half-bloated drunkards; some, I am told, are wards and schoolmasters in their church: the guard-house is a thoroughgoing doggery. Of late we have been so much disturbed in our meetings, morning and evening, that it is almost impossible to hold a meeting at all; yet, in spite of all this, some are coming to seek the truth as it is in Jesus. Our Sunday school is doing well; forty children attend it, and officers and teachers are zealously engaged in cultivating this garden of Christ.

Here, also, we must do something in the way of church-building. We have now the experience of six years before us, to confirm us in our opinion, that we must move up four or five squares, and build a better house. Those that have more experience in church-building than your humble reporter has, know that a great deal of our success, in carrying on the work of God in cities, depends on the proper location of a church; and nowhere more so than in this city. But we need about $3,000, to enable us to build a house large and good enough for this part of the city. The value of the present lot and house will enable us to buy another lot—lots we have none.

The third mission, which is located in Carrollton, six miles above the city, is at this time doing quite well. It has always been a hard field to cultivate, and for several years it has baffled all our endeavors to make it more fruitful. The change of preachers last conference has had a good effect. The Brother Charles Herwig is a local preacher, employed by the P. Elder to fill this work. The congregation has increased some; also the Sunday school has increased from twelve to twenty-five children; they are taught by Christian teachers.

Here we have a lot of ground, which was donated to the mission by the late Col. Prestor, but are in danger of losing it by the growing up of levees on that side of the river.

However, we do not lose much; the real value of the lot is not more than about $100, and the house that stands on it is threatening to fall in; and then it is entirely out of place, way on the outskirts of the town. We must have another meeting-house here, also, and that very soon, but we must, in the first place, have money to $1,600.

The fourth mission has not been prospering so well as we anticipated. Here we have a good and commodious house—indeed, it is the best we have in the city. However, we must attribute this to the strong opposition we have to contend with here. Within hearing is a Lutheran church, of the orthodox stamp; on the other end of the block is a free Rationalist church, of undoubted character!—Catholicism, and the Devil in the harness. Bro. Busmann, the missionary, has been laboring diligently; but, on account of these opposing elements, has not been able to make much impression on the people. We will wait and pray for better times. The Sunday school is doing well; there are from thirty-five to forty children attending. We have a debt on this church lot of $500, which must soon be canceled.

And now, dear Christians, what shall we do in this our present state of need? Where shall we get $20,000? This sum we must have to enable us to put our German missions in a more successful and increasing state! This is a very important field of missionary labor; indeed, I know of none more important in the whole South. We must have better churches in New Orleans, if we are to accomplish any thing more than in the slow process of time just.

It is true, your humble writer has been invited, at the last session of our conference, to travel within its bounds and collect money for the erection of chapels in New Orleans, but I do not see how I can do it. Take charge of a very interesting mission, and then go off and leave it, to travel at large! This will not work well. I am willing to do any work the Church see fit to employ me in, so that is for Christ and his glorious cause; but it is not to travel about for the purpose of collecting funds for church-building, it should, at least for one year, be my only appointment. The one is, in my humble estimation, just as important as the other. We must have proper houses to worship in, and to invite our countrymen into. There is a kind of sacredness connected with the church-like form of a house in the mind of a German; being raised up in a large church, under the sound of bell-ringing, and the peals of an organ, he is more easily drawn into a church where he sees, at least, a steeple, even if there is no tolling of one or two bells, or the music of a well-tuned organ.

The time has come when the Church must take more efficient measures to carry on this great and important work. It is a charge which Christ has, in a more particular manner, given to the Methodist Church, no matter North or South. My heart rejoiced to learn that the German Missions were fully represented before the last General Conference, and that this portion of missionary work receives greater attention upon the part of the Church. For those many years has my heart sighed and longed for this time; and now that it has come, I feel more than ever willing to prosecute with vigor and engage more zealously in this glorious work.

But my report is long enough. Oh! may the whole Church pray—"Thy kingdom come;" and may Christ Jesus reign until all his enemies are laid at his feet.

Yours, in Christ, affectionately,

John M. Hofer, Missionary.

New Orleans, July 14, 1854.

GLEANINGS FROM THE CONVERSATION OF REV. JOHN NEWTON.

If two angels were sent down from Heaven to execute the Divine command, and one was appointed to conduct an empire, and the other to sweep the street, they would feel no inclination to change employments.

I should have thought mewere very idle people; but they work while they whet their scythes. So devotedness to God, whether it mowe or whets the scythe, still goes on with the work.

A Christian should never plead spiritual duty for being an idler or a sloven. If he be but a shoe-black, he should be the best in the parish.

My principal method for defeating error and heresy, is by establishing the truth. One proposes to fill a barrel with tares; now, if I can fill it first with wheat, I may defy his attempts.

A Christian in the world is like a man transacting his affairs in the rain. He will not suddenly leave his business because it rains; but the moment that business is done, he is off—as is said in the Acts of the Apostles, "being let go, they went to their own company."

Many have puzzled themselves about the origin of evil. I am content to observe that there is evil, and that there is a way of escape from it; and with this I begin and end.

Seldom will Satan come to the Christian, at first, with gross temptation. A green log and a candle may safely be left together. But bring a few shavings, and then some small sticks, and then some larger, and soon you may bring the green log into ashes.

Christ has taken our nature into Heaven to represent us. He has left us on earth with His nature to represent Him.

I would not give a straw for that assurance which sin will not damp. If David had come from his adultery, talking of his assurance at that time, I should have despised his speech.

For an old Christian to say to a young one, "stand in my evidence," is like a man who has with difficulty climbed by a ladder to the top of a house, crying to one at the bottom, "this is the place for a prospect—come up at a step."

A wise man looks upon men as he does on horses—all their comparisons of title, wealth and place, he considers but a harness.

Some Christians, at first glance, seem of a superior order, when they are not. They want one quality. As a florist's exhibition the other day, a certain flower was determined to bear the bells; but it was found to be an artificial flower. There is a certain quality, called growth, which it had not.

Price of Books among the Ancients.—What an immense reduction has been made in the price of books by the invention of the art of printing. It is recorded of Plato, that although his paternal inheritance was small, he bought three books of Philolaus the Pythagorean, for ten thousand denarii, nearly $1500. We are also informed that Arietotle bought a few books belonging to Speucippue the philosopher, for three Attic talents, a sum equivalent to about $2800. St. Jerome also ruined himself by purchasing the works of Origen.

Notices.

Camp-meeting.

There will be a Camp-meeting at the Crescent camp-ground, four miles from this place, to commence on Friday the 25th of August.

S. Armstrong, P. E.

Auburn, Ala., July 6, 1854.

Special Notice.

All orders for Books and communications relating to the business of our Agency and Publishing House, should be addressed, for the present, and until further notice is given, to the undersigned, at Louisville, Ky. Orders east of the mountains, can be forwarded, until other arrangements are made, to Bishop John Early, Richmond, Va. Every effort on our part will be made to commence operations in this city at the earliest possible day. In the meanwhile, however, an ample supply of our publications will be kept on hand by the house of McFerrin & Hunter, with whom we have made an arrangement by which all orders will be filled at our usual rates.

Stevenson & Owen.

Nashville, Tenn., June 7, 1854.

Notice.

In consequence of my detention at the General Conference, and my necessary absence since its adjournment, on a trip to Mississippi, the July number of the Quarterly Review will not appear at its usual time. Its issues will be prompt thereafter. Having been reappointed its editor, and being determined that it shall meet the expectations of its friends, I would hereby entreat our brethren in the ministry and the laity, to send us new subscribers, to make collections of the old, and to promote its circulation, as the only journal of the kind belonging to the M. E. Church, South.

David S. Doggett.

June 3, 1854.

General Intelligence.

Charity Hospital.—The following is the weekly report of this institution for the week ending at 5 o'clock on Saturday evening, July 15: Admissions, 196; discharges, 183; deaths, 15. Total remaining, 561. The above report shows the city to be in an excellent sanitary condition. The previous week there were 37 deaths.

Interments.—The following is a report of the number of interments in all the cemeteries of the city for the week ending at 6 o'clock on Sunday morning, July 16:

Protestant, Girod street	9	Catholic No. 1	8
Odd Fellows' Resl.		Catholic No. 2	16
Cypress Grove, No 1	4	St. Vincent de Paul	26
" " 2	13	Lafayette, 4th District	23
Charity Hospital	11	Hebrew, Lafayette	1
St. Patrick's	15
Total			129

This shows a very marked decrease from the report of last week, and proves New Orleans to be by far the healthiest city in the Union. The last report gave us 191, and the week preceding that there were 320.

Health of Northern Cities.—The following is a comparative view of the mortality in the four principal Atlantic cities for the week ending on the 8th inst. The deaths from cholera, compared with the previous week, show an increase of 20 in New York, 10 in Philadelphia, and 8 in Boston. The mortality among children is still unusually large. In New York, out of 761 deaths, 433 were children under ten years of age; in Philadelphia, 215 were under ten years; in Baltimore, 127; and in Boston, 42 under ten years:

	New York.	Philada.	Baltimore.	Boston.
Cholera	98	22	1	24
Cholera infantum	74	51	30	0
Cholera morbus	11	6	2	1
Convulsions	88	24	7	3
Consumption	52	30	12	10
Diarrhœa	34	0	2	2
Dysentery	20	10	13	5
Inflammations	29	36	16	10
Marasmus	35	22	6	2
Other diseases	320	150	112	74
Total	761	353	204	137
Previous week	547	268	168	86

The McDonogh Bequest.—The City Council of Baltimore has passed another ordinance (the third, we believe,) for the "appointment of agents to represent the city of Baltimore in the execution of the will of the late John McDonogh, of New Orleans, deceased." It provides for the appointment of three agents, as other city officers are appointed, two of whom shall be citizens of New Orleans and one a citizen of Baltimore, who shall proceed to New Orleans and represent the interest of the Mayor and City Council of Baltimore in all things that pertain to the general estate of the late John McDonogh, and act for and manage, conduct and administer the affairs of said estate jointly with the three commissioners or agents appointed by the city of New Orleans. They are required to give $25,000 bonds to the Mayor and City Council of Baltimore for the faithful performance of their duties; the agent selected from Baltimore to receive a salary of $3000 per annum, the two selected from New Orleans $1250 per annum each. It requires the signature of the Mayor to become a law, the other two ordinances having failed to receive his Honor's approval.

Indian Relics.—While repairing the sidewalk the other day, says the Ottowa (Ia.) Free Trader, Mr. D. Walker found the skull of an Indian, an extraordinarily large one, and an earthen pot capable of containing five or six quarts. These vessels are found in the graves of Indians, and there is no tradition of what race used them. The Indians in this country, when the whites first settled here, knew nothing of this earthenware, nor could they tell any thing about it Mutinies.—Seven of the sailors on board the ship Tartar, bound from Philadelphia to New York, mutinied on Wednesday, the 5th inst. They struck the captain, cutting his head quite badly, and refused to do duty. In the afternoon Lieut. Jones, of the cutter Forward, boarded the vessel at the mouth of the Christina, put the mutineers in irons and took them to Wilmington. On their way to the hall, three of them managed to escape, leaving but four in the custody of the officers. They had a hearing before Judge Hall, and were committed to prison to await a trial. They are said to be desperate fellows; two of them, after they were ironed, leaped off the vessel, when one of them narrowly escaped drowning.

Three Men Killed by Lightning.—On Sunday, July 2d, about 2½ P. M., at the residence of Mr. J. W. Swan, in Newton county, Ga., Dr. J. W. Hitch, William Wilson and Isaac Christian, Jr., were instantly killed by a stroke of lightning. The electricity first struck a small shade tree that stood near the piazza where they were sitting, and then passed under the house and through the floor, shivering it in a very slight manner, and then the ceiling, and lastly the chimney was slightly injured.

A villain named Fink committed an outrageous crime upon a young woman in Albuquerque, New Mexico, on the 31st of May. The citizens being greatly incensed, arrested the wretch and hung him instanter.

Advices from Bordeaux confirm the unfavorable account given of the vines in that district, and state that the disease seems to be spreading among many other kinds of vegetation, including garden flowers, such as rosee, etc. From Portugal, also, the accounts are equally discouraging.

A proposal is increasing in public favor in England to invite the Emperor of France and the most distinguished French citizens to an "international festival in celebration of the union between France and England." The corporations of the chief cities of England are taking steps in the matter, and the project has the countenance of the Government.

An ingenious ——— an claims to have discovered a method of steering balloons, but up to last accounts from Paris his invention had not been tested. Should this be true, balloons will yet become of invaluable service, particularly in cases of shipwreck. For instance, a balloon, with steering apparatus, could have taken off and placed in safety all on board the disabled steamer San Francisco, many days before they were relieved.

The Sunday law against liquor sellers has been strictly enforced at Reading, Pa.

Rebreading Preachers.—A Baptist preacher, at Marietta, Georgia, has been found guilty of heresy, and expelled from the communion, because he would neither assent nor deny that "God foreknew all things." He alleged in defence that he could find no passage in Scripture which taught the doctrine, and he had no opinion, therefore, on the subject.

The friends of Senator Bright's bill, to pay the creditors of the Republic of Texas eight and a half millions of dollars, expect to get it up in the Senate about the middle of this week and pass it promptly. It will meet unexpected opposition, and probably fail, in the House. [New York Times, 10th inst.

The secret of Dante's struggle through life was in the reckless sarcasm of his answer to the Prince of Verona, who asked him how he could account for the fact that in the household of princes the court fool was in greater favor than the philosopher. "Similarity of mind," said the fierce genius; "all over the world it is the source of friendship."

From the Japan Expedition.

Correspondence of the Newark Daily Advertiser.

U. S. Ship Powhatan,
Yokohama, Japan Bay, March 31, 1854.

The treaty, about which the Government has gone to so much trouble and expense, is at last signed. It was accomplished to-day; the Commodore went ashore this morning, and returned a few moments ago, with the important documents, encased in a handsome lacquered box, "signed, sealed, and delivered." The ports conceded are Simodi, a town on the Island of Niphon; Hokotadie, on the Island of Matsmi, which, I believe, is some 500 miles to the northward, and on the coast of the Island of Jesso; and Napa Keang, on the Island of Loocho, which I described in my last letter. This, you see, more has been accomplished than any one believed possible, and we have commanded more respect and been treated with more courtesy by these exclusive and half civilized people than those of any other nation who have visited here.

Great praise is due, and I have no doubt will be accorded, to Commodore Perry, for the able manner in which he has conducted this negotiation. He has given this people a correct idea of the power and wealth of our country, and stamped an impression on their minds that "we are the greatest people on the face of the earth."

The ports mentioned are large commercial towns, said to possess fine harbors for shipping, and will be fitted up for the American trade as soon as possible. Napa Keang we have visited, and the Vandalia and Southampton have been down to survey the harbor of Simodi, and reported favorably. In fact, it is believed that the treaty would have been signed sooner, but the Commodore waited for the return of these vessels. We expect to visit that port in this ship, in the course of a week or so, and after remaining there some time, proceed to the port of Hokotadie.

The telegraph and a small locomotive have been in full operation on shore, for the past two or three weeks, and, as you may imagine, are viewed with the greatest astonishment and wonder. The latter runs on a circular railroad, about half a mile in circumference. It has a tender and car attached, and several of the Japanese dignitaries have been treated to a ride.

The telegraph is about a mile and a half in length, and is looked upon as a greater curiosity than the railroad. They have a kind of indistinct idea of the nature and working of the locomotive, but the telegraph is entirely beyond their comprehension. They can look and oversee the mode of operation at either end of the line, and are aware that messages can be transmitted in an instant of time, but the why, and wherefore, is an enigma which they cannot solve. I understand that the Emperor has chosen six young men of rank, attachés of the Court of Yedo, to learn telegraphing, but whether they will be able to acquire the art, or if so, in what time, is a matter of much speculation—knowing nothing of the rules or principles of chemistry, it will be to them a task of great difficulty. In case it is true, one or both of the telegraph operators (Mr. Draper and Mr. Williams) will stay out here, which I believe they are both willing to do. Neither the telegraph nor railroad will be of any use, unless some one stop here, but it is said the Commodore will not give his consent, unless the request comes direct from the Emperor.

Yedo, the Capital, we have not seen yet; and I begin to think we never will. The Commodore may take the Mississippi and go up there, but there is hardly any chance of the squadron going.

I have nothing to add about the country or people more than you already know from my last letter; the common class are a miserable set of beings, ground down by oppression and tyranny, and living in constant fear of their rulers. The lightest offence is punished with death. I offered one of the soldiers the other day a navy button, but he dared not receive it, making signs that if he did so his neck would be in danger. Thank God! I live in a free country, where the laws are just to all, and every one his own master.

About our coming home I can say nothing definite, but I think that a year from this will find us on our way.

I forgot to mention that the Commodore gave a grand dinner to the Japanese Princes and Commissioners, on the 27th inst., which was a splendid affair. The ship was decorated off with flags—two long tables were spread on the quarter-deck, at which were the officers of the squadron and Japanese of corresponding rank. At the Commodore's table in the cabin were the Princes and Captains of the different ships composing our squadron. I enclose you the names of those who were present:

Five Commissioners.—Prince Hyashi, member of the Council, (Daigakuno Kami;) Ido, Prince of Tsus-sima; Izawa, Prince of Mimasaki; Udono, Prince and member of Board of Revenue, (nimbu-sbiyoyu;) Prince Matsusaki, Michitaro.

Members of Council.—Abe, Prince of Ishi; Makino, Prince of Bizin; Matsudaira, Prince of Idzumi; Matsudaira, Prince of Iga; Kuzhei, Prince of Yamato; Naito, Prince of Ki.

Yours, etc., J. A. H., Jr.

From Texas.

The steamship Perseverance, Capt. Thompson, arrived on Sunday last from the Brazos via Galveston, bringing dates from the latter place to the 14th, and Brownsville papers to the 8th instant.

The Seguin Mercury says a petition is being circulated in that place, having for its object the removal of Gen. Persifor F. Smith, and the appointment of Gen. Harney in his place. The Mercury says:

"It is now a notorious fact that citizens on the frontier are deserting their homes, and coming in as far as San Antonio for protection from the savages; and, it may be, some other men in command would be able to do some thing for our suffering frontier."

The resignation of Judge Towns, of the First Judicial District, has been received at the Executive Department, and an election for a new judge been ordered.

The body of a man, supposed to have been murdered, was found floating in a creek near Austin.

The crops are still spoken of as promising throughout the State.

The Indians are again becoming troublesome on the western frontier. The mail rider between Laredo and Rio Grande City had been killed.

The Brownsville Flag of the 8th says:

We learn from Mr. Prinm, just in from the arroyo Colorado, that the settlers out there are in great apprehension of an attack from the Indians. A few days since a party of four men, near Las Norias, discovered in the vicinity of that place a large company of Indians making their way into the settlements. These men immediately fled, and at Carrisitos reported the fact to Senor Cabasos, the owner of the ranch, who promptly spread the alarm to the neighboring ranches, and soon the alarm became general.

These Indians, it has been ascertained, crossed the Rio Grande from Mexico, at a point above Rio Grande City, where, having stolen a few animals, they took the old Reynosa Road to the interior, and were making their way into the settlements. It is thought the stock farms of La Jarita or Las Animas are the points for which they are making. Plunder is the object of these savages, and they will not fail to make their descent where they may find the greatest inducement for the accomplishment of this object. The troops at Las Animas should guard well the animals forming the teams which bring them supplies, lest the wily savage by taking them may leave their post without the necessary provisions. We do not wish to disparage these troops—they will doubtless do all they can—but it must be remembered they are infantry, and what can men on foot do in chasing the Indians?

The best possible idea of a prairie may be obtained by imagining a rich, smooth, luxuriant and highly cultivated English meadow expanded beyond the line of vision, without trees, without fences, unobstructed by any object that rises above the surface of the soft and gentle waving verdure. Instead of a wilderness, they present the appearance of a sort of Titanic culture; as if the Gods themselves had rolled out these infinite lawns whereon the children of the assembled universe might have ample room to run and play.

The best definition we have seen lately is one by the New York Mirror, which declares that Jullien is Barnum set to music! Capitol.

TELEGRAPHIC.

New York, July 19.—The Cunard steamer Niagara arrived yesterday at Halifax to the 8th inst., one week later than the accounts by the Asia. Her commercial advices report a declining market for Breadstuffs, Flour having fallen 6d 9d. per barrel, Corn one shilling per quarter, and Wheat, 3d. per 70 pounds. Ohio Flour closed at 30s. 6d. to 35s. per barrel. The money market was stringent, and Consols were quoted at 92¾ to 93. [Our dispatch containing the report of the Liverpool Cotton Market has not come to hand. Eds.]

General News.

The Czar's Reply.—The reply of the Emperor of Russia to the demands embraced in the Austrian note is couched in courteous terms, but refusing to evacuate the Principalities, except on condition that the allies evacuate Turkey, and declaring his determination to retain Moldavia.

Russian Defeat.—Another battle has taken place in Wallachia, which resulted in the defeat of the Russians with the loss of two thousand men.

Austrians in Wallachia.

The latest advices from Wallachia announce the entrance of the Austrian forces into that principality.

The Baltic Fleet.

At the latest accounts from the Baltic, Admiral Napier had brought his fleet opposite Cronstadt, and some firing had taken place between the ships and the shore.

Insurrection in Spain.

Advices from Madrid announce that a battle had been fought between the Government troops and the insurgents in that city, in which the latter maintained their ground.

Alabama River.

Montgomery, Ala., July 20.—The Alabama has risen two feet within the last 24 hours, and there is now plenty of water in the river.

Later from California.

ARRIVAL OF STEAMSHIP UNITED STATES.

The steamship United States, Capt. Schenck, arrived at her wharf yesterday afternoon. She sailed from Aspinwall at 4 o'clock on the 15th inst., and made the run in four days and twenty-three hours, bringing San Francisco dates to the 1st of July.

The Illinois was to sail the next day after the United States with 400 passengers and $1,175,000 treasure. The North Star sailed the same day as the United States with 300 passengers.

From the Panama Star we extract the following item of interest:

On Monday night our city was thrown into a state of the greatest consternation by the strange sensation of an earthquake being felt, after most of the inhabitants had retired to rest. Just fifteen minutes past midnight, two shocks, with barely a second's interval, shook every house in the city, and so severe were they that there were few people asleep who were not awakened by the movement of their beds. The shocks lasted about twenty seconds. Some people were so terrified that they rushed into the streets, expecting momentarily to see their dwellings thrown down.

The night was beautifully clear and still, and barely a cloud was to be seen in the sky. The earthquake was succeeded by lightning and thunder, which continued throughout the night.

The worst harm experienced by the shock was the alarm it created, and we have reason to be thankful that it was no worse. This is the only earthquake experienced in Panama since the year 1844.

The San Francisco Herald, of the 1st inst., has the following items of general news:

On the 30th ult., Wm. B. Sheppard, convicted of the murder of a man named Day, was sentenced by Judge Lake, of the Fourth Judicial District Court, to be hanged on the 29th of July.

The man Foley, who killed Dunn, proprietor of the Pacific Police Gazette, plead guilty to the charge of manslaughter, and was sentenced to three years' imprisonment in the penitentiary.

Outrageous.—Last night, as our Marine Reporter and Express Messenger was returning home from the office, on horseback, near Union street, on Stockton, he was knocked from his horse by a glass bottle thrown at him from a drunken crowd at a French house in that vicinity—cutting a very severe gash over the eye, and horribly mangling his face. He lay senseless in the street for some time, and, from the appearance of his person, it is supposed the scoundrels must have beaten him while he was prostrate and senseless in the street. No clue as yet has been obtained of the perpetrators of this scandalous outrage.

Murder in Columbia.—The Columbia Clipper says: A miner of Yankee Hill by the name of John L. Mahon, formerly of Van Buren county, Arkansas, came to town on the 17th inst., and after being at the fandango and other places of amusement, brought up at the Exchange, where he got into a difficulty with Ten-Pin Jack and some others. The proprietors had them put out of the house, when the row again commenced, and some one of the party stabbed Mahon very severely. The cut was as much as three inches in length and very deep. A surgeon was called and his wound dressed, which was considered mortal. He survived until Monday morning, when death put an end to his sufferings.

Yield of the Mines.—From the 1st of June, 1853, to the 1st of June, 1854, says the Empire County Argus, the yield of gold was probably larger than in any previous year; yet with the immense amount of gold taken, the average would not be $4 per day to the man engaged in the mines. Out of this sum must be paid all the ordinary and extraordinary expenses of the miner. Improbable as this may seem at the first thought, the actual facts would bring the figure still lower. At a low estimate, there are 100,000 men engaged in mining, and to make the average we allow, there must be $120,000,000 taken out.

Miner Robbery.—A miner named Myere came down to this city night before last, and took lodgings at the Niantic Hotel. On retiring for the night, he neglected to fasten his door, but placed his pantaloons, with his money in them for safety, under his head. In the morning when he awoke, he discovered that all his money, which amounted to a considerable sum, as he came down from the mines for the purpose of returning to the States, was stolen. His pantaloons were found lying under the bed empty.

Highway Robbery.—The Marysville Herald of yesterday states, that on the afternoon of Monday, June 12, Robert Treseaner was robbed on the top of Goodyear Hill by a party of three Mexicans, of fifty-three ounces of gold dust. The robbery was perpetrated by lassoing Mr. T., and jerked him from his mule. After which he was securely bound, and deliberately robbed Fatal Accident at Nevada.—Two men, one named Wm. Holmes, from Guernsey county, Ohio, the other an Irishman, name not known, were killed instantly on Thursday last, at American Hill, near Nevada, by a bank caving in on them, where they were sluicing down the hill.

New Steamer.—The splendid steamship Polynesian, Capt. Rogers, arrived yesterday in 133 days from Philadelphia, which speaks well for her sailing qualities, considering the heavy weather she had during the passage.

Shooting.—On Wednesday last, says the Placer Herald, two persons on Rattlesnake Bar, named Davidson and Kennedy, were about to "drown out" two miners, Cummings and Parsons, by letting water on to their claim. Cummings told them if they did he would strike them with a pick-handle. Davidson drew his pistol and fired at him twice; the second shot taking effect in his arm, he started to run, when Kennedy struck him with a stick; Davidson also pursued, firing another shot with his pistol, the ball lodging in Cummings, near the sacrum. Dr. Thomas was called to extract the ball. Owing to its position, it could not be taken out. He is in a critical situation. Davidson and Kennedy were examined by Justice Frey, of Rattlesnake, who committed them to the county jail, for trial at the next term of the Court.

The Nevada Mines.—The subjoined items are compiled from the Telegraph. In Grass Valley miners have been more than ordinarily successful—as an evidence: Messrs. Wells, Fargo & Co. bought on Saturday evening fourteen thousand dollars worth of dust, in small parcels. A new hotel has been opened in the flourishing mining town of Forest City, which cost $10,000. A new town called Mobile has been laid out; about a mile and a half southwest of Iowa Hill and a small mill, stores and dwellings are to be immediately erected. The Drakeville company took out over $1800 the past week. The quartz leads at Ilouston Hill and Osborn Hill yield from $70 to $100 per ton.

Yankee Jim's.—We find it stated in the Union that prospects recently obtained have given an impetus to mining and trade at this place and in its vicinity. The Independent Company at Forest Hill is succeeding well with their tunnel. They washed out on Saturday last, in eight hours, eighty ounces. From two pans of earth was recently taken forty-two ounces of gold, and a single person washed out in one day $1000. Miners are making from eight to ten dollars per day to the hand. Yankee Jim's is the depot at which miners in every direction for miles around receive their supplies, and pack mules are there kept for the purpose of conveying them

Progress of Crescent City.—The Herald states that Crescent City is rapidly improving. Fourteen months ago there was but one log-cabin standing on the present site of Crescent City: now there are nearly three hundred splendid and substantial houses, with a population of between eight hundred and a thousand inhabitants. The city has sprung up as if by magic, and reminds us of San Francisco and other cities in the good old days of '49 and '50. If her citizens only pursue the right course in regard to the various improvements now talked of to extend her trade, they will have as large a city, with two or three exceptions, as any other in California.

Capt. Aubrey's Second Expedition.—Capt. Aubrey, whose adventurous trip across the Continent last year excited so much interest, leaves this city to-day on a second tour of observation and exploration. He takes with him a force of fifty-two men, eleven of whom were with him on his last trip—all well armed, with provisions for seventy-five days. He takes with him a few wagons, which it is his intention to carry through to Albuquerque, as he is confident he can do without difficulty. His object is to mark out a wagon road by which future immigrants may greatly shorten the traveled distance from New Mexico and Texas to California.

Brutal.—Yesterday afternoon a special police officer was going along Powell street, and hearing cries of distress issuing from a house, went in and ascending to the upper story, found a woman in a state of nudity lying on the floor, with her hands and feet tied together, and a man standing over her with a whip in his hand, which he was applying to the prostrate woman in a most savage manner. The officer endeavored to arrest him, but was attacked with a knife and compelled to vacate the premises. Having obtained assistance, he returned, but no traces either of the man or woman could be discerned.

From Washington Territory.

We have files of the Pioneer and Democrat, published at Olympia on Puget Sound, to June 17.

Bright Future for the Sound.—The Pioneer, in a long article upon the excellence of Puget Sound as a harbor, says: "The true value of Puget Sound, otherwise than merely as a great commercial mart for shipping to seek shelter or for repairs, can be readily understood when it is known that the pine and cedar along its shores is of a quality unsurpassed on the Pacific and inexhaustible in quantity; that the most desirable water power—falls and streams are within its reach, on which sawmills and other machinery are constantly being erected, which, in connection with our coal mines, on the very shores of the Sound, and the undeveloped fisheries of its waters, must, at no distant day, attract hither the capitalist and collier of the Alleghanies, and the fishing smacks of the hardy and enterprising sons of New England—those of Nantucket, New Bedford Cape Cod, etc, and then will the true value of Puget Sound to the Western world be properly felt and duly appreciated."

Proposed Rendezvous of the Whaling Fleet on Puget Sound.—The Pioneer publishes a forcible letter from Gov. Stevens to Hon. Joseph Grinnell and others in New Bedford, engaged in the whale fishery, urging them to select some port on the Sound as a rendezvous for American whale fishermen, locate the adjacent lands, and create a depot for the entire business. He dwells forcibly upon the capacity, safety and facility of access of the series of harbors upon Puget Sound—their close neighborhood to the best whaling grounds in the Pacific; the splendid timber suitable for the finest spars for vessels; the fisheries of cod, halibut, and other valuable species; the facility of obtaining fresh provisions at moderate prices; and concludes by predicting that such a depot, once established, would speedily become a rendezvous for seamen, and a place at which provisions of all kinds would seek a market. The investment would find an enormous return in the increased value of the property, and the Territory be in proportion benefited by the introduction of this new resource and by the creation within herself of a maritime class of population.

The Hudson Bay Company to be Wound up.—In accordance with instructions from the United States Secretary of State, Gov. Stevens has addressed the Hudson Bay Company, taking the ground that "their right to trade with the Indians in Washington Territory in not recognized, and will not longer be allowed," and granting them until the 1st of July next to wind up their affairs.

From Oregon Territory.

Convention Defeated.—The Oregon Statesman of June 20 gives the following as the correct tabis of majorities as far as heard from, in the various counties, for and against a Convention to form a State Constitution, and apply for admittance into the Union.

For Convention.—Clatsop 41, Polk 84, Tillamook 16, Linn 205, Lane 650, Umpqua 93, Douglas 200. Total 1289.

Against Convention.—Washington 513, Wasco 26, Clackamas 170, Marion 393, Yamhill 13, Benton 29. Total 1144.

The Statesman says the above returns are official, with the exception of Linne and Douglas counties, which are stated from the most reliable information yet obtained. Jackson and Coose not yet heard from.

In the Umpqua Gazette of the 16th we find the returns from Coose county 38 majority for Convention, and in the Yreka Herald of the 17th, those from Jackson county 708 majority against a Convention. Adding these to the majorities above, and the full returns from the Territory will show an aggregate majority of 137 for convention, and 147 against—leaving a net majority of 520 against the measure. It is therefore defeated.

Interesting from Salt Lakes.

The Los Angeloe Star of the 27th of April has the following:

We have had an interview with Mr. S. N. Carvalho, artist attached to Col. Fremont's late exploring expedition. This gentleman arrived here on the 14th inst. from Salt Lake, where he was left by the expedition on account of illhealth. He states that by invitation he accompanied Gov. Brigham Young and a large party from Great Salt Lake City, on the 6th of May, for Walker's Camp, on Chiloken Creek; that there a formal treaty of peace was entered into by Walker and Kanoseche with Gov. Young, the nature of which was that on no occasion whatever were the Indians to make an attack either on Americans or Mormons, and that they would use all their influence to prevent any depredations on the property of emigrants or settlers. Gov. Young presented them with eighteen head of cattle, blankets, clothing, arms and ammunition, and entered into arrangements that Mr. Porter Rockwell and five other gentlemen were to reside permanently with Walker's band of Utahs, and accompany them in all their journeyings, for the purpose of protecting the lives and property of the whites.

Walker, Kanoshe, Squash Head, Grosepine, Atomon and a number of chiefs, accompanied Gov. Young and party over two hundred mile to Cedar City, Iron county, through the different settlements of Utah.

Mr. Carvalho also received from Kanoshe, the Chief of the Pauvans, who murdered Capt Gunnison and party, an authentic account of that melancholy event. The following is an outline of the particulars:

An emigrant party of Americans, under the command of Mr. Thomas Hillbreth and three brothers, encamped near Fillmore. Some of the Indians came into camp, as is their usual practice, and solicited food and clothing, and also permission to remain in camp until moonrise, which permission was refused and the Indian ordered out of camp.—The Indians did not immediately comply, whereupon the whites unmercifully attacked them, and shot down a chief, two of his sons and several others.

A few days afterwards, a brother of the Chief who was slain, was hunting, and he heard near him the explosion of fire-arms. He discovered that it proceeded from two men who were also out hunting. He silently followed them to camp, near the Sevier; afterwards he went to his own camp, and making an artificial scalp of horse-hair, related the circumstances, and commenced a war dance, in which the whole party joined until after midnight. They then armed themselves and proceeded to Capt. Gunnison's camp, surrounded it, hiding themselves in the willows near by. While Gunnison's party were eating their breakfast the signal was given and the attack commenced. One man fell on the spot; Captain Gunnison rose and held out his hand to them, which was answered by another discharge. Some of the men endeavored to get to their horses, which were picketed, but they were all massacred with the exception of one or two dragoons who made their escape. Not a gun was fired by the whites in defence. One of the Indians, on a captured horse, made his way into Kanoshe's camp, some miles from the scene of action. Kanoshe repaired to the Indian camp and endeavored to obtain possession of the property taken. This incensed the Indians, and several arrows were pointed at him, but his indomitable courage saved him, and he succeeded in obtaining the property, which was restored to the proper authorities at Fillmore. Kanoshe knew nothing of the intended attack of the Indians. Walker and his band of Utahs were 300 miles off at the time, and were innocent of any participation in the act.

Gov Young has counseled all his people in the different settlements to treat the Indians kindly, and to supply them on all occasions with food and such clothing as they may require. He also purchased from the Utahs several Indian children, (prisoners) two or three of them under two years of age, whom he intends to educate and take care of.

From Australia.

Preparations for War.—The inhabitants of nearly all the British colonies in the Pacific are becoming alarmed at the prospect of being attacked by the Russian fleets during the continuance of the present war. Hong-kong, Sydney and Melbourne are discussing the means of defence, but in each instance the journals say land batteries will be of no service; that these places can only be defended by a fleet outside. A naval man writing to the Sydney Empire, regarding the protection of that city, with a population of 70,000, and vast interests at stake, says that the stationary batteries proposed to be erected to prevent fleets from entering the harbor would only be the sport of American and British seamen.

In Melbourne, a Committee had been appointed by the Legislative Council to consider the subject of national defences.

In Adelaide, the capital of South Australia, the same subject occupied the attention of the people.

The Adelaide Times says, a single steam frigate would not be sufficient to protect the city against such a force as would probably be collected to pillage these rich colonies.

South Australia.—A great want of labor is represented to exist in this, as in the other colonies. The Adelaide Times says: "Every colonist of the least forethought is at the present moment anxiously inquiring where sufficient labor to supply his necessities is to come from!"

From the Sandwich Islands.

The Crops on the Islands.—The Polynesian

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

From the Buffalo Democracy.

A THRILLING INCIDENT.

Among the sturdy pioneers to whom this town is indebted for the inception of its prosperity, is James Sloan, of Black Rock; a gentleman but little known, prone to retiracy, modest and diffident in deportment, but with the strong common sense, determined energy and abiding honor of a Jackson. The history of his connection with the early efforts of Buffalo to make good the position nature had given her; the almost disheartening struggles in which her infancy was passed; the combats with lukewarm faith at home and open opposition from abroad, would interest and instruct our city readers unacquainted with the facts, were it our purpose here to give them. On a future occasion we may draw upon the fund of recollection possessed by Mr. Sloan, of some anecdotal sketches of the infancy of "New Afflesterdam" and the "Port of Buffalo Creek." We only intend at present to narrate a stirring adventure, in which our respected friend bore a conspicuous part.

One day, in the month of June, 1822, when returning by the river from Chippewa, and having arrived abreast the head of Navy Island, he discovered an object drifting rapidly down the current, which, from its tatterated cries for help, he was shocked to find was a human being. His boat being one used for conveying salt was unmanageably heavy, and to trust to her for rescuing the poor fellow would have been to insure his own loss as well, perhaps, as that of the crew. He turned her, therefore, toward the shore, and leaping upon the strand near Chippewa, Sloan started for the place to procure a suitable boat, directing his men to follow. They, however, gave out in the race; and our hero, for he deserves the title, found himself alone.

Fortunately, there were three boys fishing from a light skiff, a short distance from shore, and to them he appealed. Like himself, they were inured to the perils of the river, and they at once acceded to his wish. To seize a spare oar, and with the willing aid of the boys, to urge the little boat far out upon the stream, was the work of but a moment. By this time the object of their anxiety had ceased his cries, and was lying supine upon the log that sustained him in his perilous voyage, completely submerged, except his head and part of his back. They reached him, dragged him, stiff and motionless, into the boat, and laid her head for shore. But now came the knowledge that, in the desperation of the chase, they had ventured far beyond prudence, and were rapidly drifting down the river. On either side the forests seemed scudding by them at a fearful rate, and their little cockle-shell craft was tossing in the rapids, while the combing waves threw the spray far over their heads. It was a dreadful moment when they first awoke to the certainty of their imminent danger, and so others thought it, for, gathered upon the shore, were all the people of Chippewa, watching with an intense anxiety the result of the hazardous undertaking. But not for a moment did Sloan lose his self-possession. Calmly addressing the boys, and pointing out the danger, he conjured them to "hope and pull," and nobly did the little fellows respond.

It was fearful work. Now the boat, shooting over the seas, would gain a few lengths, and now a wave, more potent than its predecessors, would send them back, covering them with water. Occasionally, as they anxiously watched the shores, the trees would seem to stand still, and then the awful race would again commence. There was thought of throwing over the lnoumbering body of the drowned man. Steadily and firmly they bent to their oars, the lads calmly laboring as if upon a pond, and gradually the boat gaining upon the current found smoother water, until, at last, it shot out from the perilous vicinage, and found shelter in the Chippewa Creek. The assembled crowd sent up a shout of joy as they approached the dock, and the three boys sank down exhausted in the bottom of the boat. After receiving the congratulations of the crowd, and listening, as he says, to some loud talking upon the part of the parents of the boys, Sloan requested the villagers to give the rescued body decent burial, and, getting on board his own boat, resumed his voyage to the American side.

Some time after, Sloan visited Chippewa, and on inquiry concerning the finale of his adventure, was surprised to find that the dead man had been resuscitated, and was then in Niagara jail on a charge of rape. The trial came on, but the accusers not appearing, the man, whose name was Daniel McGarrey, was released.

It appears that McGarrey had been living in Navy Island, in company with two other men and the wife of one of them. After a drinking bout, one day, the two men picked a quarrel with McGarrey, which resulted in the latter taking to the water and the stick of drifting wood to which he was found clinging. Having thus, as they supposed, been relieved of their troublesome companion, the men gave themselves no further anxiety about him, and great was their astonishment on learning that he was alive at Chippewa! They at once hit upon the expedient of the arrest, and on their complaint, backed by the evidence of the woman, poor McGarrey was likely to have little cause for thankfulness at having escaped going over the Falls, only to die by the rope. But his accusers did not appear at the trial: they had gone to answer to a higher tribunal, for the deeds done in the body.

They had removed from the Island to Chippewa, and, to celebrate the event, had resorted again to their jug, and after getting thoroughly drunk, laid down in their boat to sleep off the effects. The craft was imperfectly secured, the current of the creek carried her ont into the river, and helplessly they were hurried towards the awful cataract. They awoke when already in the rapids, and were seen to toss their hands and gesticulate madly for help. But no human arm could aid them there; the wild waters engulphed them, and the death they had contrived for another was their own portion at last.

McGarry lived for many years, perhaps still survives. Mr. Sloan saw him during the "Patriot War," near Point Abino, stiffly bearing arms in the service of Queen Victoria.

Our readers may be assured that in every item of this singular story we have adhered strictly to the truth. Perhaps we have not in justice dwelt sufficiently upon the noble conduct of Sloan and the boys, whose feat of stemming the current of the Niagara at that dangerous place was one of the most heroic actions we have ever known.

The Devil Fish.

The large specimen of this rare sea monster, lately captured in the harbor of Charleston, has been preserved and mounted in the Museum of Natural History of the college of that city, and citizens now have the opportunity of seeing this curious denizen of Southern waters, whose existance has been deemed fabulous even down to our own time.

The sea-devil or devil-fish belongs to the cartilaginous class of fish and to the family of raiidæ or rays, a good type or representative of which is the sting-ray, commonly called stingaree by our fishermen.

Along the coast of the Atlantic States, but especially in Southern harbors, numerous species of the ray are found—the well-known clam-cracker or eagle-ray, the whip-sting-ray, the prickly-ray, the skates, and many others.

The clam-cracker attains a great size; we have measured them five feet across the wings, and are credibly informed that much larger ones have been taken. But none of them can be said to rival the devil-fish, either in size, weight, muscular powers or curious form. Having a body eight or ten feet long, a tail six feet, and not unlike a large wagoner's whip; two inflexible flaps or wings as long as the body, one attached to each side, and measuring from tip to tip seventeen or eighteen feet across, and "with which he drives himself furiously through the water or vaults high into the air;" a capacious mouth, three feet wide, with gape sufficient to receive "two aldermen abreast;" two fins, one projecting from each side of the mouth, called horns or arms, but properly instruments of prehension, used as feelers and feeders, with which it sweeps into its large mouth the small fish, shrimps and fry upon which it preys; two prominent eyes, one placed at the base of each horn or arm, and about four feet apart; skin, shagreen like that of the shark; teeth very small, not more than twice the size of the asperities upon the scales; mouth lined with ten double rows of strainers, a curious but beautiful apparatus, a fine sieve through which it infiltrates the water, and secures the smallest animals upon which it feeds; color, dusty black above, with long, dusty, opaque clouds beneath, on a white ground—these all combined present a singular form of animated nature, the devil-fish is contemporary the shark, which, according to the classification of Professor Agassis, is of the same order of fish, the placoid, the devil-fish is a very lively animal; he leaps often and high into the air, and with a half somerset, or a flap of his wings, falls back into his element with a great noise and a splash. It is no uncommon amusement, if amusement indeed it is, for this fish to pick up the grapnel of some fishing boat or other craft, with his horns or arms, which he plies rapidly before his month, while he swims and cleaps with the utmost obstinacy whatever body it may enclose;" dart off suddenly, and with great rapidity drag after it the best and its terrified crew, and after an excursion of an hour or two, relax his hold and escape. But he does not always freely loose himself at his pleasure; frequently he becomes entangled in the rope, and, in his struggles to extricate himself, turns somersets, twisting the rope into coils, enveloping himself within them, and thus forfeits his life to his temerity.

In a similar manner was the subject of this paper taken. A large schooner was anchored a few rods from the breakwater of Sullivan's Island, discharging her cargo into a flat, or lighter. To facilitate the passage of the lighter to and from the vessel, a hawser was extended from the latter, and the end made fast on the shore, the slack of the rope swinging loosely several feet below the surface of the water, the tide about half ebb, and the current rapid; suddenly the schooner was discovered to be adrift, as the captain supposed, and swinging round to the shore. Upon looking to the hawser for relief, he saw that a devil-fish was entangled in the bight. This was about 7 o'clock in the evening; and not before midnight, and after much labor and considerable risk of life, did he succeed in bringing him alongside the vessel properly secured. During the struggle, the fish dragged the schooner, anchor and all, about three hundred yards. His horns, or arms, were found clasped around the hawser, and from the number of somersets he made, many round turns and coils of the rope were passed about his body. A few years ago, and near the place where this occurred, a scow was anchored belonging to the Government, and used as a lighter for stone in building the breakwater. The crew were engaged on the work ashore. Suddenly she was seen moving at a rapid rate out to sea; boats were sent in pursuit, and, after a long chase of several miles, she was overtaken and found to be safe at anchor. It is presumed that one of these fish was the cause of the mysterious flight of the scow; clasping his horns around the stock of the anchor, he tugged her through the narrow and winding channel and moored her safely in the offing, giving the crew a long chase and a tedious row, and eliciting many maledictions from the sailors upon the head of the marine representative of his satanic majesty.

"ONLY A BIT OF HARMLESS FLIRTING."

BY VIRGINIA F. TOWNSEND.

That was all, was it, eh? How very complacently you speak it, my good sir, with that half sneer curling your moustached lip, and most approved twirl of your walking-stick, which you learned with your Euclid last year.

And so it was but a bit of harmless "flirting," just by way of relaxation from your health-injuring studies. I suppose when you sat night after night in the fire-shine of the pleasant little parlor, watching the blush which drifted over the sweet, half-drooping face by your side? Nothing more than this, when you ringed those soft flowing curls round your fingers, or your arm glided round the waist, and the little trembling hand which was lifted with a deprecatory movement, was caught, and held a half unwilling prisoner in your stronger grasp? And then, (you remember it,) what low, sweet words you used to whisper in her ear, just before parting, as you stood together in the dimly-lighted hall, and how full of grace and respectful fondness was the manner in which you bent down your lips to the fair young forehead.

And then (did you learn it by practicing at your mirror?) what language there was in your eyes, when the soft, dark ones of your companion's were sometimes lifted to your own! a language such as your lips could never have spoken, for no words could recognise the love, the devotion which seemed telegraphed straight from your heart to your glances!

What charming moonlight you used to have, too. How the light arm that lay on your own would tremble as you pressed it and murmured sentimental scraps of poetry which you had gathered from Byron, Longfellow, and Lander! And I am not sure you did not, at such times, for a moment forget there was such a word as flirting in your vocabulary. There was somewhat in the serene, searching glances of those summer stars, somewhat in the white solemn moonlight, which lay above and beneath you, that, in spite of yourself, brought a gale of holier memories, a tide of higher and nobler emotions into your soul.

You haven't forgotten, either, those long summer afternoon rides, with the great graceful arms of the trees crossed above you—for the twilights that passed under the broad-vine-wrapped portico, nor the songs she sang you while you stood by the piano and turned over the leaves of her music, and solicited one, just one more of those exquisite little love lyrics of Moore's, saying with that glance of yours, and you know the right time to give it effect, "that the sweet words would sound still sweeter if they came to your ear through the medium of one voice."

You know she loved you. There, now, don't elongate your features, that look of innocent surprise or meek resignedness just as though the idea never entered your cranium, and though that never tickled your vanity before. You know I say, that she loved you—that her heart would quicken at the sound of your footfall, and the blush she could not conceal flashed into her cheek at the tones of your voice. You knew, that during those long two years you were drawing tighter and tighter, round the heart of your young and unsuspecting victim, the chains from which she could not release him without suffering, what might be to her greater than that of death. Don't tell me your intentions harmless, you never proposed, never told her you loved her—ay, a thousand times you told this, by tone and deed, and look, just as emphatically as though your lips had sworn it.

And, then, how calmly, how contreously, at the last, you said farewell to her, wishing her that life of happiness which your work had for ever blasted.

And now, sir, whatever be your social position; how broad soever be the lands of your fathers; how deep soever be the coffers of your gold; you have debased yourself and dishonored your manhood. Go forth in the world, and let your carriage be as proud, your air to woman as chivalric, your honor as untarnished as ever, but remember that the stain is on your soul. You have done almost the foulest wrong to another that man can do. You have stolen, basely, deliberately stolen, the one priceless heart—its affections.

You have robbed her of her trust in human goodness and truth, and though if she be a true woman, she will summon enough of pride to her aid to hide from the world that never cicatricing heart wounds, its pain will not be the less terrible to be borne.

You have robbed another of the love and confidence which should have been his, for that heart will never learn the sweet song of its youth again, and though the wife of his bosom, she sits in the shadow of his hearthstone; still the fountain from which you took the seal, will never yield its fresh, sweet waters as before

And, sir, for these words, "Harmless Flirting," under which specious name you have silenced the small voice of your conscience, and behold with complacency and exultation the ruin you have wrought, write down deliberate heart-breaking, and remember "for all things, God will bring you to judgment."

A Dog Story.—"Cat stories" and "dog stories" are getting to be very common in these days. Almost every editor has a few by way of spice. So we put in for our turn. Being in a butcher's shop, a few days since, and seeing a large dog come in to get his daily allowance of meat, the conversation turned upon dogs, and the following story was told in relation to a dog in the neighborhood. The name of the owner of the dog we have forgotten, but that is no matter, the story is just as good. This gentleman gave a cent to the dog every day, and the dog went regularly to the butcher's and laid down the money, and in return received a piece of meat. One day the dog laid down his cent on the block as usual. The butcher being busy with customers did not notice the deposit. After some time, however, seeing a cent lie there he put it in his pocket and went about his work. The dog get tired of waiting and went home dinnerless. The next day he came again with another cent, which he laid before the man of meat. The allowance of meat was cut off and handed to the canins purchaser. But the dog, intending to have the account balanced, no sooner had received the meat, than he grabbed the cent also and cleared out.

That was a sharp dog, and one that intended to "look out for number one." He could be trusted to make a bargain, and, we dare say, could carry on a speculation in provisions, quite as well as some curs who do not number but half his amount of legs. [Olive Branch.

Reformation of William Wirt.

A TRUE INCIDENT IN HIS HISTORY.

The distinguished William Wirt, within six or seven months after his first marriage, became addicted to intemperance, the effect of which operated strongly on the mind and health of his wife, and in a few months more she was numbered among the dead. Her death led him to leave the county where he resided, and he moved to Richmond, where he soon rose to distinction. But his habits hung about him, and occasionally he was found with jolly, frolicsome spirits of bacchanalian revelry. His true friends expostulated with him on the injury he was doing to himself; but he still persisted. His practice began to fall off, and many looked on him as on the sure road to ruin. He was advised to get married, with a view of correcting his habits. He consented to do so, if the right person offered. He accordingly paid his addresses to Miss Gamble. After some months' attention, he asked her hand in marriage.

She replied: "Mr. Wirt, I have been well aware of your attentions for some time back, and should have given you to understand that your visits and attentions were not acceptable, had I not reciprocated the affection you have evinced towards me. But I can not yield my assent until you make me a pledge never to taste, touch, or handle any intoxicating drinks."

This reply to Wirt was as unexpected as it was novel. His reply was, that he regarded that proposition as a bar to all further consideration of the subject, and he left her. Her course towards him was the same as ever; his resentment and neglect.

In the course of a few weeks he went again and solicited her hand. But her reply was, that her mind was made up. He became indignant, and regarded the terms she proposed as insulting to his honor, and vowed that it should be the last meeting they should ever have. He took to drinking worse and worse, and seemed to run to ruin.

One day, while lying in the outskirts of the city, near a little grocery or grogshop, drunk, a young lady, who it is not necessary to name, was passing that way to her home, not far off, and beheld him with his face upturned to the rays of the scorching sun. She took her handkerchief, with her own name marked upon it, and placed it over his face.

After he had remained in that way for some hours, he was awakened, and his thirst being great, he went into the little grocery or grog shop to get a drink, when he discovered the handkerchief, at which he looked, and the name that was on it. After pausing, he exclaimed: "Great God! Who left this with me? Who placed this on my face?"

No one knew. He dropped the glass, exclaiming: "Enough! enough!"

He retired instantly from the store, forgetting his thirst, but not his drunken, the handkerchief, or the lady, vowing, if God gave him strength, "never to touch, taste, or handle intoxicating drinks."

To meet Miss Gamble was the hardest effort of his life. If he met her in her carriage or on foot, he popped around the nearest corner. She at last addressed him in a note under her own hand inviting him to her house, which he finally gathered courage enough to accept. He told her if she still bore affection to him, he would agree to her own terms.

Her reply was: "My conditions are now what they have ever have been."

"Then," said Wirt, "I accept them."

They soon married, and from that day he kept his word, and his affairs brightened, while honors and glory gathered thick upon his brow. His name has been enrolled high in the temple of fame, while patriotism and renown live after him with imperishable lustre.

A Night in the Life of a Physician.

I was sitting in my chair, when a tremendous knocking was heard at my door. The servant opened it, when a man rushed in in the wildest disorder.

"For God's sake, doctor," said he, "come with me! It is a case of life and death! One thousand dollars if you save her! Come! oh, do not delay!" and he rushed toward me to drag me along.

I hurried away with him, snatching my instruments from the table as I passed it. I think I never saw before such convulsive grief as this man's face expressed. He was a handsome man, with one of those faces the ladies generally admire, jet black hair, clustering in wavy curls over a white forehead. The lower part of his otherwise feminine features was relieved by a deep jet black beard.

I asked him for the particulars of the case.

"Doctor," said he, "make haste. I shall go mad. Why I would give every drop of blood in this body to save one drop of hers. Oh, God!" said he, "preserve my reason. She stabbed herself before I could prevent her. Make haste, doctor; oh, my God! my God!"

We reached the house. On a satin couch, in a splendid room, the rich Turkey carpet covered with blood, lay a young girl. I think I never saw such a beautiful creature. Even with pallid countenance, and bloodless lips, she was more of heaven than of earth. What she was when the roses played on her downy cheeks, I could only fancy.

There was a deep wound over her heart, and it was quite evident that the blow had been given with a right good will. On the floor, covered with blood, lay the weapon—a slight Damascus dagger, the handle richly set with pearls, strongly lifting with the reflection from the blood-stained ivory.

I was too late! Alas, the life-blood was slowly dropping away. That master-piece of creation was soon to be cold and inanimate. She slowly opened her eyes, and fixed them with dying love upon the young man who had summoned me to this scene of death.

"Sidney," she said, "Sidney, I am dying. My own Sidney, I could not live neglected. I told you I would love you till death. Kiss me, Sidney." She sank back, and death closed upon his victim.

My companion sat for some time strangely staring at the lifeless form upon the couch. I could perceive that reason was tottering upon its foundation. I was fascinated by his strange look. At last I went up to him. "Sir," I said, "she is no more. Death has released her of her troubles."

"Dead! did you say she was dead, doctor?" he said with a strange and curious stare at me. "Ah, you have murdered her!" yelled the madman, for such he was now.

"You have murdered her, and I shall murder you. Ah! ah! it will be rare sport." Before I could prevent him, he picked up the dagger. "Yes," said he with a yell, "I will stab you in the same place. Oh, it will be rare sport to hear you groan and struggle like she did. Ah! ah!" and he made a bound at me.

Now this was far from pleasant. In fact it was a very awkward position to be in. I did not know how to act. The madman made a grab at me, but fortunately I eluded his grasp, and thinking it better to fight in the dark, I seized the lamp and threw it on the floor. The room was now dark. The madman set up a terrific yelling, and I could hear him lock the door and put the key in his pocket, while he kept muttering, "I will kill him, I will kill him. Oh it will be rare sport to see him die like she did."

I felt my courage rise with the emergency. I felt determined to try a struggle with him but I knew the increased strength that the insane possess, and I thought it scarcely prudent. What should I do? I must do something. It would soon be daylight, when I would again be in his power. I felt for some weapon with which to defend myself, and as luck would have it, found a heavy dumb-bell in the corner where I lay concealed. Presently I heard the madman slowly searching for me; it descended, and I was free. The madman lay stunned on the floor. I rushed to the door, smashed in the lock with the heavy metal, and rushed down stairs. Presently the house was all in commotion. Oh! what a scene—the girl dead in a pool of blood, the man insensible on the floor, with the dagger firmly clutched in his hand! I bled him, and he slowly recovered. But reason never returned. He is a madman to this day. I never heard the history of my patients of that night. They were strangers in the house. I never shall forget that night's adventure.

The Flying Squirrel.

We recollect a locality not many miles from Philadelphia, where, in order to study the habits of this interesting species, we occasionally strayed into the meadow, containing here and there immense oak and beech trees. One afternoon we took our seat on a log in the vicinity, to watch their lively motions. It was during the calm, warm weather peculiar to the beginning of Autumn. During the half hour before sunset, nature seemed to be in a state of silence and repose. The birds had retired to the shelter of the forest. The night-hawk had already commanced his low evening flight, and here and there the common red bat was on the wing; still, for some time, not a flying squirrel made its appearance. Suddenly, however, one emerged from its hole, and ran up to the top of a tree; another soon followed, and ere long dozens came forth, and commenced their graceful flights from some upper branch to a lower bough. At times, one would be seen darting from the topmost branches of a tall oak, and with wide extended membranes and out-spread tail gliding diagonally through the air, till it reached the foot of a tree about fifty yards off, when at the moment we expected it to strike the earth, it suddenly turned upward, and alighted on the body of a tree. It would then run to the top, and once more precipitate itself from the branches, and sail back again to the tree it had just left. Crowds of these little creatures joined in these sportive gambols; there could not have been less than two hundred. Scores of them would leave each tree at the same moment, and cross each other, gliding like spirits through air, seeming to have no other object in view then to indulge a playful propensity. We watched and mused till the last shadows of the day had disappeared, and darkness admonished us to leave the little triflers to their nocturnal enjoyments.

During the day the species avoide the light; its large eyes, like those of the owl, can not encounter the glare of the sun; hence, it appears to be a dull and uninteresting pet, crawling into your sleeve or pocket, and seeking any dark place of concealment. But twilight and darkness are it seasons for activity and pleasure. At such times, in walking through the woods, a rattling of acorns, chestnuts and beech-nuts give evidence that this little creature is supplying itself with food above you.

This is a harmless and very gentle species, becoming tolerably tame in few hours. After a few days it will take up its residence in some crevice in the chamber, or under the eaves of the house, and it or its progeny may be seen in the vicinity years afterwards. On one occasion we took from a hollow tree four young with their dam; she seemed quite willing to remain with them, and was conveyed home in the crown of a hat. We had no cage immediately at hand, and placed them in a drawer in our library, leaving a narrow space open to enable them to breathe. Next morning we ascertained that the parent had escaped through the crevice, and, as the window was open, we presumed that she had abandoned her young rather than be subject to confinement in such a narrow and uncomfortable prison. We made efforts for several days to preserve the young alive by feeding them on milk; they appeared indifferent about eating, and yet seemed to thrive, and were in good order. A few evenings afterwards we were surprised and delighted to see the mother glide through the window, and enter the still open drawer; in a moment she was nestled with her young. She had not forsaken them, but visited them nightly, and preserved them alive by her attentions. We now placed the young in a box near the window, which was left partly open. In a short time she had gained more confidence, and remained with them during the whole day. They became very gentle, and they and their descendants continued to reside on the premises for several years. During the first winter they were confined to the room, boxes were placed in different parts of it, containing Indian meal, acorns, nuts, etc. As soon as it was dark they were in the habit of hurrying from one part of the room to the other, and continued to be full of activity during the whole night. We had in the room a wheel, that had formerly been attached to the cage of a Northern gray squirrel. To this they found an entrance, and they often continued during half the night turning the wheel; at times we saw the whole group in at once. This squirrel, we may conclude, resorts to the wheel, not from compulsion but for pleasure.

They are gregarious, living together in considerable communities, and do not object to the company of others, and even quite different animals. For example, I once assisted in taking down an old martin-box, which had been for a great number of years on the top of a venerable locust-tree near my house, and which had some eight or ten apartments. As the box fell to the ground, we were surprised to see great numbers of flying squirrels, screech owls and loather-winged bats running from it. We caught several of each, and one of the flying squirrels was kept as a pet in cage for six months. The various apartments of the box were stored with hickory-nuts, chestnuts, acorns, corn, etc., intended for the winter supply of food. There must have been as many as twenty flying squirrels in the box, as many hate, and we know there were six screech owls. The crevices of the house were always inhabited by the squirrels. The docility of the one we kept as a pet was remarkable; although he was never lively in the day time, he would permit himself to be handled and spread out to the pleasure of any one. We frequently took him from the cage, laid him on the table, or on one hand, and exposed the extension of his skin, smoothed his fur, put him in our pocket or bosom, etc., he pretended all the while to be asleep.

It was a common occurrence that squirrels flew into the house on a Summer's evening when the windows were open, and at such time we caught them. They were always perfectly harmless. Although I frequently seized them in my hand, I was never bitten. We caught so many of them one season that the young girls bordered their winter caps with their tails, which are very pretty. It was a curious circumstance that the flying squirrels never descended to the lower part of the house, and we never knew of any rats in the upper rooms. Whether the squirrels or the rats were the repulsive agents, I do not know; certain it is, they never inhabited the lower location in common. [Audubon.

A Portrait.—A young man wishing to be noticed in the gay circles of the world buys an old watch for five dollars. At the end of four months, finding it does not keep time as well as a new one, he pays three dollars to have it thoroughly repaired. Two months after, finding it is not exactly a new watch, he pays two dollars for further repairs. At the end of the year, growing sick of it, he sweps it for an old musket. He then tries to get rich by huntiog; but not finding game very plenty, and receiving a summons from the merchant to pay for his powder and shot, which has amounted to eight dollars, he says to himself, "I'll get rid of the rotton musket somehow;" so he swaps it for an old horse, and pays five dollars to boot. He hires his horse kept at the tavern, at which place he boards; at the end of the year his bill for horse-keeping has amounted to forty dollars, and his own to seventy-five. He says to himself, "This is not getting along very fast;" so he sells his horse for a barrel of brandy, which finishes his earthly career.

Chunnynuggee Female College.

The next Session will commence on the second Monday in July, and close on the first Wednesday in December.

FACULTY:

Rev. W. H. Ellison, D. D., President.
Joan F. Ellison, A. B.
Miss F. Geraldine Battle, Primary Department.
Mrs Eugenia Rutherford, Instructress in Music.

Competent Teachers in the departments of French, Drawing, Painting, etc., will be provided.

RATES OF TUITION PER SESSION OF FIVE MONTHS:

Primary Department	$10 00
First, Sophmore and Middle Classes, each	18 00
Junior and Senior Classes, each	22 50
Music—Piano or Guitar	20 00
Use of Instruments	5 00
Latin, Greek, French, or German, each	10 00
Drawing, Painting, or Embroidery, each	12 50
Wax Work per lesson	1 00
Incidental Expenses	1 00

☞ One half the tuition to be paid in advance.

Board can be had at from $18 to $12, including Washing, Lights, etc.

The College is located upon Chunnynugget Ridge, Macon County, Alabama, in the midst of an intelligent community. It has recently been provided with a new Philosophical and Chemical Apparatus, adequate to all the purposes of instruction; and no pains will be spared to secure the application of the best and most approved means of developing and training the mind. The President having been for twelve years in charge of the Female College, Macon, Georgia, the Trustees entertain no doubt, from his past success of his entire ability to make this equal to any school of the same grade in the country.

A tri-weekly line of stages from Eufaula to the Montgomery and West Point Railroad, and semi-weekly line from Columbus, Ga., to Chunnynugget, make it accessible from all points.

RICHARD H. POWELL,
President of the Board of Trustees.

Chunnynugget, Ala., July 15 6m

Emory and Henry College,
WASHINGTON COUNTY, VIRGINIA.

THE Fall Session of this Institution will commence on the 17th August next.

TERMS:

Tuition per session of five months	$17 50
Board " "	26 25
Washing " "	5 00
Fuel " "	2 00
Contingent charge " "	1 25
	$52 50

It is believed that no College in the South is offering stronger inducements than this to young men desirous of a thorough collegiate education. Our location is in a quiet and beautiful valley, ten miles distant from town or village, and comparatively free from temptations to vice. Our Board of Instruction is filled with men of experience, ability and fidelity. Our course of study is extensive and thorough. Our Cabinet, Libraries, and Apparatus are ample. Any young man of limited means, with fair abilities and proper energy, can here acquire a superior, liberal or business education.

For further particulars, address

E. E. WILEY, President,
Emory P. O., Va.

July 8, 1854. 8t

LA GRANGE COLLEGE.

The next term of this Institution will commence on WEDNESDAY, JULY 19.

FACULTY:

R. H. Rivers, D. D., President and Professor of Mental and Moral Science and Belles Lettres.
O. F. Carey, A. M., Professor of Ancient Languages.
S. P. Rice, A. M., Professor of Pure Mathematics.
Rev. B. H. Ross, A. M., Prof. of Mixed Mathematics.
Thos. P. Hatch, A. B., Professor of Natural Sciences.
Thos. Smith, A. B., Principal of Preparatory Department.

EXPENSES:

Tuition per term of five months	$25 00
Board (washing included)	50 00
Room rent and servant's hire	2 00
Chemical fee (senior year)	5 00

In the Department of Mathematics, Professor Rice will give instructions in Practical Engineering, without extra charge.

Important additions have recently been made to the Laboratory and the means of illustrating the different Departments of Natural History, and in all departments of the College, no pains will be spared to provide the best facilities for a thorough and practical education. The foundation of a new and large college building will soon be laid, and we intend to make LaGrange College, in every respect, inferior to no institution in the West.

THOS. P. HATCH,
Secretary of the Faculty.

my20 2m

Education.

A young man who will graduate at Randolph Macon College, Virginia, next June, would like to enter upon the pleasant task of instructing youth, as soon thereafter as possible. He intends making teaching a lifetime business, hence Trustees of Academies would do well to procure his services, as they can be permanently secured by a first rate salary. He intends doing his duty in his profession, and will be satisfied with nothing short of good pay for his services. Certificates of character and scholarship will be sent to those desiring to procure a teacher, which cannot fail to give satisfaction. Terms and location, including its salubrity and condition of society, must accompany all communications to J. P. B., Randolph, Macon College P. O., Virginia. ap22 2m*

THE BRITISH QUARTERLIES,
AND
BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.

LEONARD SCOTT & CO., No. 34 Gold street, New York, continue to publish the following British Periodicals, viz:
THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW, (Conservative.)
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW, (Whig.)
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW, (Free Church.)
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW, (Liberal.)
AND
BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE, (Tory.)

—TERMS—

For any one of the four Reviews	$3 00 per annum
For any two "	6 00 "
For any three "	7 00 "
For all four of the Reviews	8 00 "
For Blackwood's Magazine	3 00 "
For Blackwood and the three Reviews	9 00 "
For Blackwood and the four Reviews	10 00 "

Payments to be made, in all cases, in advance. Money current in the State where issued will be received at par.

Address, post paid, LEONARD SCOTT & CO.,
79 Fulton st., New York. Entrance 54 Gold st.

☞ Postage on Blackwood and the four Reviews, 72 cents a year. [Nov13-1y.]

To Booksellers, Agents, and Peddlers.
BURNETT & BOSTWICK, PUBLISHERS,
15 Camp Street, 15

HAVE just issued from their press the following valuable works:

VOYAGE OF THE U. S. EXPLORING SQUADRON, commanded by Capt. Charles Wilkes of the U. S. N., together with Explorations and Discoveries made by Admiral D'Urville, Capt. Rose and other Navigations and Travelers, and an account of the Expedition to the Dead Sea under Lieut. Lynch, with numerous illustrations.
LIFE OF JOHN C. CALHOUN.
LIFE OF JAMES K. POLK, with a history of his Administration.
THE HEROINES OF HISTORY.
HEROINES OF THE CRUSADES.
PANORAMA OF NATIONS.
THE GREAT CITIES OF THE WORLD.
LIVES OF JOHN AND CHARLES WESLEY.
WILLIS'S WORKS—seven volumes.
THE MIRROR OF THE SOUL.
FARM AND FIRESIDE.
RURAL HOMES, &c. &c.

For the sale of the above and many other works, which are all very valuable and popular, we desire to establish an agency in every county and parish in the South; and therefore offer unparalleled inducements to country dealers, agents and peddlers.

A Catalogue of all our publications furnished on application, post paid, to

BURNETT & BOSTWICK, Publishers,
may 27 0m 15 Camp street, New Orleans.

Dr. J. T. Kennon,
Castilian Spring,
Holmes County, Mississippi,

Is now prepared to offer good accommodations to invalids who may desire to visit Castilian Spring, or place themselves under his care for treatment. This is one of the most desirable retreats for Invalids in the South, located in an elevated healthy region of country, with abundance of fine Freestone water. The mineral water is composed very strongly of Iron, Sulphur, Magnesia and Soda, and contains largely of Carbonic Acid Gas.

The diseases which it has cured are Dyspepsia, Dropsy, General Debility, Affections of the Kidneys, Bladder, and the various functional and organic derangements of the Womb. This water is especially efficacious in Diseases of Females.

Board, per week—$7.

Reference—Ministers of Miss. Conference.

Rev. J. B. Walker, } New Orleans.
Rev. H. N. McTyeire, }

march 4 6m

Pensacola House.

MRS. SIGMO has opened the above-named House, and is prepared to accommodate boarders and transient customers. Every attention will be given to make all comfortable who may favor her with their patronage.

The Pensacola House is situated on Government st., one door above the Florida House, commanding a view of the Bay, and receiving the breeze unobstructed.

Pensacola, Fa., June 24, 1854. tf

WHOLESALE DRY GOODS TRADE.
SPRING IMPORTATIONS, 1854.

JOSEPH H. PALMER & CO have in store and are receiving regularly from the European and American markets their usual supplies of seasonable Goods, viz:

PRINTED GOODS, comprising Calicoes of various styles and qualities; Lawns, Jaconets, Organdies, Berege, &c.

LINEN GOODS—Irish Linens of every grade, Linen Drills, Linen Sheetings, Table Linens, Brown Linens, Grass Linens, Brown Hollands, Drown and Bleached Duck, Plaotere' Linens, Farmers' Drills, Linen and Lawn Handkerchiefs, every quality.

SILK GOODS, embracing plain and figured Dr'k Silks, Plaid Silks, Foulards, Satins, Velvets, Florences, Shawls, Ilan Barcolets, Sewings, &c.

WOOLEN and WURSTED GOODS, comprising De Laines, Barages, Merinos, Alpacas, Bombazines, Cantou Cloths, &c.

COTTON GOODS, consisting in part of Drown and Bleached Cotton Shirtings and Sheetings, of every quality and width; Cottonades, Canvets, Chambrays, Nan keens, Checks, Stripes, Denims, &c., at extremely low prices by the piece and package only.

JOSEPH H. PALMER & CO,
Importers and Wholesale Dealers,
feb18 47 Camp st.

Valuable Land for Sale.

FIFTEEN HUNDRED AND SEVENTY-FIVE ACRES in the western part of Alabama, fourteen miles from the Bigbee river and eight from the M. & O. Railroad. Most of the land is very rich, with good buildings on each, comprising dwellings, negro cabins; and also a superior horse-power Sawmill. On the east is a good neighborhood, and on the west an extensive range for stock—$00 acres in cultivation, and well watered.

A more desirable place can seldom be found where land is rich.

Terms easy. For further information, apply to

JAS. B. RAMSEY,
June 17, 1854 tf Daleville, Lauderdale co., Miss.

Summerfield Property For Sale.

The Subscriber having determined to remove West, will sell a bargain, in two Family Residences, in Summerfield, convenient to the College buildings. The residences are large and commodious—one with ten rooms and the other with seven rooms—neatly finished, with all necessary Out-Buildings, Gardens, Lots &c.

Summerfield is a healthy location, eight and a half miles north of Selma, Ala., with Male and Female College, which have been in successful operation about twelve years; and any person wishing to educate their children, free from disease and immoral influences, will do well to select this place. Persons desirous of such a location would do well to examine my property.

Terms, cash, or on time to suit purchasers.

ap8dm P. R. McCRARY.

Price's Patent Texas Tonic.

☞ The claims of this new discovery are:

1. Its efficacy as an anticeptic, fortifying the System, and giving a healthy action to the Body and vivacity to the Mind, acting on the Blood, Kidneys, Bowels and Skin.

2. It is a certain antidote against Constipation of the Bowels, Torpor of the Liver, Palpitation of the Heart, Termination of Blood to the Brain, Indigestion, Pain in the Head, Chronic Head-ache, Vertigo, and is offered to the public as a remedy for Chills and Fevers. (see certificates Nos 3 and 4.) and as a preventive to Yellow, Bilious and Congestive Fevers, when used as an anticaptic (see certificate No. 5.) using it freely, keeping a lively action on the Bowels during the epidemic seasons.

The subscriber would deem it unnecessary to offer any testimonials in favor of this valuable medicine to those who have experimented with it, and only offers a few out of the many highly respectable citizens and others names whose are familiar to the community, for the benefit of those who have not made its acquaintance; and being assured that the TEXAS TONIC only has to be known to be appreciated, he therefore submits the following testimonials:

THO. K. PRICE, 59 Camp street.

Miller, Orton & Mulligan's
ADVERTISEMENT.
AUBURN AND BUFFALO, N. Y.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

A very interesting Book coming! Will be published immediately.

DANIEL BOONE AND THE HUNTERS OF KENTUCKY.

By Wm. H. Bogart, Esq.,

In one elegant 12mo. volume, 390 pp., fully and richly illustrated.

"Interwoven with the History of the entrance to the Great West into the family of civilized nations, is the career of DANIEL BOONE. It has been the object of the compiler of this volume, to present the narrative of that career in fidelity, and in such light as would rescue the memory of this great man from the common judgment passed upon him,

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Publishing Committee Louisiana Conference, { J. C. KEENER, L. PARKER, J. B. WALKER.

H. N. McTYEIRE, EDITOR.

J. HAMILTON, D. D., T. W. DORMAN, W. MURRAH. } Publishing Committee Alabama Conference.

VOL. IV. NO. 25. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, JULY 29, 1854. WHOLE NO. 182.

THE TWO WESLEYS;* OR, THE TWO WELLINGTONS.

BY ISAAC H. SULIAN.

One, of the iron frame, and heart of steel—
The Destroying Angel's peerless Minister—
Bruited o'er earth by Fame's loud trumpet-peal,
Strode proudly to the gory hights of War;
The other, with a will as firm, as bold
A spirit, and a heart of living flame,
To gather Christ's lost sheep into his fold,
To save and bless his erring species, came.
The one prevailed o'er Europe's Conqueror—
The other triumphed over Sin and Death;
Which was the Hero? Who's the nobler aim?
Which did the richer legacy bequeath?
Eternity alone can fully tell,
When the dread Judge shall part the heirs of Heaven and Hell!

*It is something peculiar in the hand of Providence, that the John and Charles Wesley family had the offer of a large estate, but declining the temptation of riches, declined accepting it. The offer was then made to another Wesley, or Wellesley family, of which Arthur was the youngest son, and was accepted. It was this property and title, inherited by the older brother, which brought Arthur into public employment so very young. I have never doubted that the talents of John Wesley were equal to those of Arthur Wellesley, though exercised in a different occupation. But what a change, and what a mission in the world, if John Wesley had wed the rich Duke, in a formal, political religion, without a sermon, or a book, or any religious act of his, in the world!

[Advocate of Peace.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

PROHIBITION OF THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

We propose in the present article to point out some of the most prominent objections to the license law of Alabama.

As this law is known to all our readers, it is needless to waste time with quotations from the statute book. Suffice it to say, that the law requires the retailer of ardent spirits to pay for county license; and if he should establish himself in a town or city, he must pay a corporation tax, in some cases as high as five hundred dollars, according to the wishes of the town or city authorities.

Now there is no other article of trade that is taxed so high as ardent spirits. Dealers in every other species of merchandize pay only a small per centage on the amount of their sales. Why this distinction? If the law taxes dealers in ardent spirits to defray governmental expenses only, why is not every species of merchandise taxed at the same uniform rate? Now the truth is this: our Solons, in making good and wholesome laws for the people, took into consideration the fact, that these dealers in the "good creature" are engaged in a business that is productive of much mischief; a business that causes more than two-thirds of the murders, thefts and robberies that crowd the criminal dockets of our courts. Hence they very sagely concluded that inasmuch as these naughty fellows do so much evil, they must pay for the privilege.

Splendid logic this! Verily, this smacks considerably of Popery. Something akin to the sale of the Pope's indulgences. Why did not our sage law-makers manufacture indulgences by the wholesale, so that whoever wishes may commit murder, theft and adultery with impunity, by buying an indulgence?

If Government sells the liquor dealer the privilege of engaging in a business that is productive of every kind and degree of crimes conceivable, merely for the purpose of defraying governmental expenses, may she not with equal good reason sell indulgences to whoever wishes to perpetrate these crimes, for the same purpose?

If our legislators intended the high rate of taxation imposed on the liquor traffic as an equivalent for the evils of the trade, it was certainly bad financiering. The traffic costs the people a great deal more than it pays them, beside the incalculable amount of moral evil that it produces. We argue, if the liquor traffic be a necessary and good thing, that it is wrong to impose unequal restrictions upon it. On the other hand, if it is productive of evil only, without any mixture of good to any one, it is wrong to legalize it. If it is sinful and pernicious, money cannot expiate the sins growing out of it. Right and wrong are fixed principles, and cannot be varied according to circumstances.

What would the enlightened people of Alabama think of a legislator who would introduce a bill for the sale of indulgences, legalizing every species of crime, and affixing a scale of prices for which indulgences for every particular sin might be bought, graduating the price according to the enormity of the crime? Would sensible men think that murder and high-way robbery were right because the offenders had bought and paid for the privilege? Certainly not.

The license law of Alabama, when viewed in all its bearings, will be found to involve the same principle. Then why should it be tolerated? This law renders the appeals of the humane to dealers, powerless and inefficient. They entrench themselves behind the law, and tell it out boldly that they have bought the privilege of making paupers, filling jail-houses, hospitals and penitentiaries, and government must therefore foot the bill of expenses growing out of their trade.

From the foregoing it is clear that the framers of the license law imposed a higher rate of taxation upon the traffic of ardent spirits, on account of the evils that attend it; and it is equally as plain, that they are guilty of the inconsistency of asserting that the traffic is wrong, and at the same time making it legally right. Now if it is wrong, we wish to know if it can be made right; and if it is right, why subject it to disabilities?

This law involves inconsistencies, which, we opine, can not be reconciled with common sense and common justice. It is a standing reproach to any State to have such nonsense and glaring inconsistency recorded on the statute book. The people should rise in their might and crush it. We say, repeal the law and let the traffic stand on its merits, or do what is preferable, prohibit it altogether except for medicinal purposes.

We hope, for the honor of Alabama, our native State, that that odious law will be repealed. But we expect political demagogues to talk patriotically of constitutional restrictions, free trade, etc. There are always, in innovations upon old customs, however odious such customs may be, "certain lewd fellows of the baser sort," that are ready to cry out, "great is Diana of the Ephesians." Hence, we say, we look for the doctrine of prohibition to be opposed. Aspirants for office will think to curry favor with the ignorant rabble by zealously defending the license law. The doctrine of prohibition will be denounced as despotic and wicked, and the good people will be warned to guard against its encroachments; and for such superlative humbuggery as this, the demagogue will be rewarded by shouts of applause, and cries of long live the liquor traffic.

But our hopes of success are based upon the power of truth. Truth is mighty, and must prevail. If right views and a proper spirit are inculcated and maintained by the friends of Temperance, their cause will certainly succeed.

To contribute in some degree to the desirable result, is the aim of the writer of the foregoing. If his humble effort should be rewarded proportionate to his desire, he shall feel himself amply compensated.

D. G. W. ELLIS.

Helicon, Ala., July 6, 1854.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

A THRILLING INCIDENT.

DEATH BY DROWNING.

George Albert, only son of Emlick and Mary Sterling, aged six years and three months, was drowned at half past six o'clock, in Bogue Falayah, near Covington, La., on the evening of the 19th of June.

The writer of this humble tribute to his memory, was eye-witness of the heart-rending scene; and while memory lasts, the horrors of it will never be forgotten. Mrs. Sterling, her three children and myself were in the river bathing. I took her little daughter in my arms and waded out into tolerably deep water, when Mrs. S. insisted on my sending her by her elder sister near shore. Our attention was directed to the little girls, when poor little George got into a rapid current which bore him immediately into a large deep eddy, in the edge of which we first observed him; we both rushed toward him in the vain effort to save him. When within three feet of him I lost bottom myself and sunk. When I arose, Mrs. S., with a supernatural presence of mind, extended her hand, which I could barely reach, and rescued me from a watery grave, remarking at the time, "Madam, remember you are the mother of six children; that is only my boy: come out, in the name of God, come out!"

Such an instance of unselfish consideration and presence of mind, has never been expressed. Reader, if it is in the power of your imagination, picture the scene. Her two little daughters on the shore screaming, "come out, dear Ma, you'll be drowned," and just before her, but, alas! out of her reach, her darling boy, rising and sinking, and no one near to save. The first and second time he rose, with one hand he would throw his long silken hair out of his eyes, and extend the other to his frantic mother for assistance. After I had given up all hope of saving him myself, my first thought was to run through the woods toward town, which was distant near a quarter of a mile, and by my screams call the assistance of the citizens; one of which arrived on the bank of the river just in time to save the mother: but poor little George Albert had gone down to rise no more. His body remained under water three-quarters of an hour, and was found about ten feet from where he first sunk.

Behold that mother on the bank of the river with her lifeless boy in her lap!—he who with active limbs skipped along the road with so much sprightliness as he rode his stick-horse to the river, was now carried home cold, lifeless, and followed by a horror-stricken procession. His father was at a distance in the country when the accident happened; we dispatched a messenger for him immediately, and he arrived the next evening, just as they were about to screw up the coffin. Here, too, was another distressing scene. He dismounted from his horse, imprinted the farewell kiss of a father's love upon the marble brow of his darling boy, then joined the solemn procession to the grave.

I had the pleasure of knowing little George from early infancy, and marked with interest the progressive expansion of his mind. From the time he could lisp, he evinced a disposition of extraordinary piety. At the age of three years he visited with his mother a pious neighbor, where for the first time in his life he heard a blessing asked at the table. When he returned home, he gave her no rest until she learned him a little grace to say at his meals; and from that day until that of his death, he never ate without putting his little hands together, closing his eyes, and in a solemn tone of voice, saying, "We thank thee, kind Heavenly Father, for granting us this comfortable meal, and health to eat it. Glory and honor to thy holy name; Amen." It was also his habitual custom to say his prayers at night, repeat the Lord's prayer and the Creed. He was never too sleepy or too much engaged to neglect this duty. He loved to go to Church and Sabbath School, and was distinguished for good behavior at both. He reproved sin wherever he saw it, particularly in the words or actions of any member of the family, chiding them with the gentle rebuke, that "the blessed Lord would be angry with them."

I have delineated his character thus minutely that it may prove a benefit to all children (particularly those of the Sabbath School) who may read it.

Bereaved parents, dry up your tears, and prepare to meet your boy. Endeavor not to think of his little form that now moulders in the grave, but look up and view his happy and beautified spirit, enjoying the companionship of Angels in Paradise. M.

STORIES OF THE HUGUENOTS.

At first the rigorous decrees of the Revocation were principally enforced against the ministers of religion. They were all required to leave Paris at forty-eight hours' notice, under severe penalties for disobedience. Some of the most distinguished among them were ignominously forced to leave the country; but the expulsion of these ministers was followed by the emigration of the more faithful among their people. In Languedoc this was especially the case; whole congregations followed their pastors; and France was rapidly being drained of the more thoughtful of the Huguenots (who, as a people, had distinguished themselves in manufactures and commerce,) when the King's minister took the alarm and prohibited emigration under pain of imprisonment for life, including abandonment to the tender mercies of the priests. Here again I may relate an anecdote told me by my friend: A husband and wife attempted to escape separately from some town in Britany; the wife succeeded, and reached England, where she anxiously awaited her husband. The husband was arrested in the attempt and imprisoned. The priest alone was allowed to visit him; and, after vainly using arguments to endeavor to persuade him to renounce his obnoxious religion, the priest with cruel zeal had recourse to physical torture. There was a room in the prison with an iron floor, and no seat or means of support or rest; into this room the poor Huguenot was introduced. The iron flooring was gradually heated (one remembers the gouty gentleman whose cure was effected by a similar process in the "Sandford and Merton;" but there the heat was not carried up to torture, as it was in the Huguenot's case;) still the brave man was faithful. The process was repeated: all in vain. The flesh on the soles of his feet was burnt off, and he was a cripple for life; but, cripple or sound, dead or alive, a Huguenot he remained. And by and by they grew weary of their useless cruelty, and the man was allowed to hobble about on crutches. How it was that he obtained his liberty at last, my informant could not tell. He only knew, that after years of imprisonment and torture, a poor gray cripple was seen wandering about the streets of London, making vain inquiries for his wife in his broken English, as little understood by most as the Moorish maiden's cry for "Gilbert, Gilbert." Some one at last directed him to a coffee-house near Soho Square, kept by an emigrant, who thrived upon the art, even then national, of making good coffee. It was the resort of the Huguenots, many of whom by this time had turned their intelligence to good account in busy, commercial England.

To this coffee-house the poor cripple hied himself; but no one knew his wife: she might be alive or she might be dead; it seemed as if her name had vanished from the earth. In the corner sat a peddler listening to every thing, but saying nothing. He had come to London to lay in a stock of wares for his rounds. Now the three harbors of the French emigrants were Norwich, where they established the manufacture of Norwich crape; Spitalfield in London, where they embark in the silk trade; and Canterbury, where a colony of them carried on one or two delicate employments, such as jewelry, wax bleaching, etc. The peddler took Canterbury in his way, and caught among the French residents for a woman who might correspond to the missing wife. She was there earning her livelihood as a milliner, believing her husband to be either a galley-slave or dead long since, in some of the terrible prisons. But on hearing the peddler's tale, she set off at once to London, and found her poor crippled husband, who lived many years afterward in Canterbury, supported by his wife's exertions.

Another Huguenot couple determined to emigrate. They could disguise themselves—but their baby? If they were seen passing through the gates of the town in which they lived with a child, they would instantly be arrested, suspected Huguenots as they were. Their expedient was to, wrap the baby into a formless bundle; to one end of which was attached a string; and then, taking advantage of the deep gutter which runs in the center of so many old streets in French towns, they placed the baby in this hollow, close to one of the gates after dusk. The gendarme came out to open the gate to them. They were known to have an infant child, which no Huguenot mother would willingly leave behind to be brought up by Papists. So the sentinel concluded that they were not going to emigrate, at least this time; and looking the great town gates behind them, he reentered his little guard-room. "Now, quick! quick! the string under the gate! Catch it with your hook-stick. There in the shadow. There! Thank God! the baby is safe—it has not cried! Pray God the sleeping draught be not too strong." It was not too strong: father, mother and baby escaped to England, and their descendants may be reading this very paper.

TWO CLASSES OF CHRISTIANS.—That there are two classes of Christians, is a well known fact; the larger lives chiefly by emotion, whilst the smaller lives chiefly by faith. The former resembles the ships which are moved by the outward impulses of winds operating upon sails; but they are often at a dead calm, often out of their course, and sometimes driven back; and it is only when the winds are fair and powerful, that they move onward with rapidity to their desired harbor. Thus these professors of religion are driven to and fro by alluring circumstances operating upon their passions, and not having a firm principle within; they are only the so-called fair-weather Christians.

Now the latter resemble the magnificent steamers, which are moved by an interior and permanent principle within, crossing the Atlantic in a straight onward course, bidding defiance to all ordinary obstacles, passing through the windy storms as well as the calms, which only serve to sweep off their dust and make them shine brighter in the clear sunlight. Thus true Christians have a permanent principle of faith within, which works constantly for good by love, and will not be influenced by the glittering and alluring ties which the world will set around their pathway to ensnare them; but they move straight onward in their heavenward course, until they arrive at their heavenly harbor; but to which the former will never come unless they change their principle within, and become steady and firm in their heavenly race unto the end. Judge ye which ye had rather choose. [Luth. Obs.

THE PULPIT—ITS AIMS AND TOPICS.

The subjects of the pulpit have never been varied from the day when the Holy Spirit visibly descended on the first advocates of the Gospel in tongues of fire. They are in no danger of being exhausted by frequency, or changed with the vicissitudes of mortal fortune. They have immediate relation to that eternity, the idea of which is the living soul of all poetry and art. It is the province of the preachers of Christianity to develop the connection between this world and the next; to watch over the beginning of a course which will endure for ever, and to trace the broad shadows cast from imperishable realities on the shifting scenery of earth. This sublunary sphere does not seem to them as trifling or mean, in proportion as they extend their views onward, but assumes a new grandeur and sanctity as the vestibule of a statelier and an eternal region. The mysteries of our being, life and death, both in their strange essences and in their sublimer relation, are topics of their ministry.

There is nothing affecting in the human conditions, nothing majestic in the affections, nothing touching in the instability of human dignities, the fragility of loveliness, or the heroism of self-sacrifice, which is not a theme suited to their high purposes. It is theirs to dwell on the eldest history of the world; on the beautiful simplicity of the patriarchal age; on the stern and awful religion and marvelous story of the Hebrews; on the glorious visions of the prophets and their fulfillment; on the character, miracles and death of the Saviour; on all the wonders and all the beauty of the Scriptures. It is theirs to trace the spirit of the boundless and the eternal, faintly breathing in every part of the mystic circle of superstition, unquenched even amid the most barbarous rites of savage tribes, and all the cold and beautiful shapes of Grecian mold. The inward soul of every religious system, the philosophical spirit of all history, deep secrets of the human heart, when grandest or most wayward, are theirs to search and to develop. Even those speculations which do not immediately affect man's conduct and his hopes, are theirs, with all their high casuistry; for in these, at least, they discern the heatings of the soul against the bars of its earthly tabernacle, which prove the immortality of its essence, and its destiny to move in freedom through the vast ethereal circle to which it thus vainly aspires. In all the intensities of feelings, and all the realities of imagination, they may find fitting materials for their passionate expostulations with their fellow men to turn their hearts to those objects which will endure for ever.

[Talfourd.

LAME AND LAZY—A FABLE.—Two beggars, Lame and Lazy, were in want of bread. One leaned on his crutch, the other reclined on his couch.

Lame called on Charity and humbly asked for a cracker. Instead of a cracker he received a loaf.

Lazy, seeing the gift of Charity, exclaimed, "What, ask for a cracker, and receive a loaf? Well, I will ask for a loaf."

Lazy now applied to Charity, and called for a loaf of bread.

"Your demanding a loaf," said Charity, "proves you a loafer. You are of that class and character who ask and receive not; you ask amiss."

Lazy, who always found fault, and had rather whine than work, complained of ill treatment, and even accused Charity of a breach of an exceeding great and precious promise, "Ask, and you shall receive."

Charity pointed him to a painting in her room, which presented to his vision three personages, Faith, Hope, and Charity. Charity appeared larger and fairer than her sisters. He noticed that her right hand held a pot of honey, which fed a bee disabled, having lost its wings. Her left hand was armed with a whip to keep off the drones.

"Don't understand it," said Lazy.

Charity replied, "It means, that Charity feeds the lame and flogs the lazy."

Lazy turned to go.

"Stop," said Charity, "instead of coin I will give you counsel. Do not go and live on your poor mother, for I will send you to a rich aunt."

"Rich aunt?" echoed Lazy. "Where shall I find her?"

"You will find her in Proverbs, 6th chapter and sixth verse."

Moral.—Instead of waiting and wishing for an UNCLE to die, go and see how a rich ANT lives.

The dinner table is a good place to study character and good breeding. You can tell the man that has been elevated from daily toil to opulence by his arrogance, ostentation and the authoritative manner in which he orders the servants, while the man that was "born to it," and has been reared in wealth and luxuriance, is content to take things as they come.

Slavery, it is stated, already prevails to some extent in the territory of Nebraska, having been legitimatized by Indian custom and a decision of a Missouri Court.

The Pain of Dying not the Climax of Pain.

There is no foundation for the idea that the pain of dying is the climax to the pain of disease; for, unless the stage of the agony is crossed at a stride, disease stupefies when it is about to kill. If the anguish of the sickness has been extreme, so striking from the contrast is the ease that supervenes, that, without even the temporary revival which distinguishes the lightening before death, "kind nature's signal for retreat," is believed to be the signal of the retreat of the disease. Pushkin, the Russian poet, suffered agony from a wound received in a duel. His wife, deceived by the deep tranquility which succeeded, left the room with a countenance beaming with joy, and exclaimed to the physician, "You see he is to live; he will not die." "But at this moment," says the narrative, "the last process of vitality had already begun." Where the symptoms are those of recovery, there is in truth more pain to be endured than when the issue is death, for sickness does not relinquish its hold in relaxing its grasp. In the violence which produces speedy insensibility, the whole of the downward course is easy compared to the subsequent ascent. When Montaigne was stunned, he passed, as we have seen, from stupor to a dreamy Elysium. But when returning life had thawed the numbness engendered by the blow, then it was that the pains got hold of him which imagination pictures as incident to death. Cowper, on reviving after his attempt to hang himself, thought he was in hell; and those who are taken senseless from the water, and afterwards recovered, re-echo the sentiment, though they may vary the phrase. This is what we should, upon reflection, except. The body is quickly deadened, and slowly restored; and from the moment corporal sensitiveness returns, the throes of the still disordered functions are so many efforts of pain. In so far as it is a question of bodily suffering, death is the lesser evil of the two.

Of the trial to be undergone before the dying sets in, every body, from personal experience or observation of disease, has formed a general idea. Duration is an element as important as intensity, and slow declines, which are not accompanied by any considerable suffering, put patience and fortitude to a severe test. "My friends," said the Fontenelle, a short time before he died, "I have no pain, only a little difficulty in keeping up life."

When Cavendish, the great chemist, perceived that his end drew near, he ordered his attendant to retire, and not to return till a certain hour. The servant came back to find his master dead. He had chosen to breathe out his soul in solitude and silence, and would not be distracted by the presence of man, since vain was help. Every body desires to smooth the bed of death; but unreflecting feeling, worse than the want of it in the result, turns it often to a bed of thorns.

It is not always that sickness merges into the agony. The strained thread may break at last with a sudden snap. This is by no means rare in consumption. Burke's son, upon whom his father has conferred something of his own celebrity, heard his parents sobbing in another room at the prospect of an event they knew to be inevitable. He rose from his bed, joined his illustrious father, and endeavored to engage him in a cheerful conversation. Burke continued silent choked with grief. His son again made an effort to console him. "I am under no terror," he said; "I feel myself better and in spirits, and yet my heart flutters, I know not why. Pray, talk to me, sir! talk of religion, talk of morality; talk, if you will, of indifferent subjects." Here a noise attracted his notice, and he exclaimed, "Does it rain?—No; it is rustling of the wind through the trees." The whistling of the wind, and the waving of the trees, brought Milton's majestic lines to his mind, and he repeated them with uncommon grace and effect:

His praise, ye winds, that from four quarters blow,
Breathe soft or loud; and wave your tops, ye pines;
With every plant, in sign of worship, wave.

A second time he took up the sublime and melodious strain, and, accompanying the action to the word, waved his own hand in token of worship, and sunk into the arms of his father—a corpse. Not a sensation told him that in an instant he would stand in the presence of the Creator to whom his body was bent in homage, and whose praises still resounded from his lips. But commonly the bend of death is felt for one brief moment before the work is done. Yet a parting word, or an expression of prayer, in which the face and voice retain their composure, show that there is nothing painful in the warning. It was in this way that Boileau expired from the effects of a dropsy. A friend entered the room where he was sitting; and the poet, in one and the same breath, bid him hail and farewell. "Good day and adieu," said he; "it will be a very long adieu," and instantly died.

In sudden death which is not preceded by sickness, the course of events is much the same. Some expire in the performance of the ordinary actions of life; some with a half-completed sentence on their lips; some in the midst of a quiet sleep. Many die without a sound, many with a single sigh, many with merely a struggle and a groan. In other instances there are two or three minutes of contest and distress, and in proportion as the termination is distant from the commencement of the attack, there will be room for the ordinary pangs of disease. But, upon the whole, there can be no death less awful than the death which comes in the midst of life, if it were not for the shock it gives the survivors, and the probability with most that it will find them unprepared. When there are only a few beats of the pulse, and a few heavings of the bosom between health and the grave, it can signify little whether they are the throbbings of pain, or the thrills of joy, or the mechanical movements of an unconscious frame.

FANNY FERN is a real woman, and writes as one. We like Fanny for that. It is refreshing in these days of the "strong-minded." Could any body but a real dear woman write the following? Read and say:

The Invalid Wife.

"Every wife needs a good stock of love to begin with."

Don't she? You are upon a sick bed; a little feeble thing lies on your arm, that you might crush with one hand. You take those little velvet fingers in yours, close your eyes, and turn your head languidly to the pillow. Little brothers and sisters—Carry and Henry, and Fanny and Frank, and Willie and Mary and Kitty and ——, creep—come tiptoeing into the room,—half a score—come tiptoeing into the room, "to see the new baby." It is quite an old story to "nurse," who sits like an automaton, while they give vent to their enthusiastic admiration of its wee toes and fingers, and make profound inquiries, which nobody thinks best to hear. You look on with a languid smile and they pass out, asking, "why they can't stay with dear mamma, and why they mustn't play puss in the corner," as usual. You wonder if our little croupy boy tied his tippet on when he went to school, and whether Betty will see that your husband's flannel is aired, and if Peggy has cleaned the silver and washed off the front door steps, and what your blessed husband is about, that he don't come home to dinner.

There sits old nurse, keeping up that dreadful treadmill trotting "to quiet the baby," till you could fly through the key-hole in desperation. The odor of dinner begins to creep up the stairs. You wonder if your husband's pudding will be made right, and if Betty will remember to put wine in the sauce, as he likes it; and you hear a thumping on the stairs and a child's suppressed scream; and nurse snatches the baby up, in a flannel to the tip of its nose, dumps it down on the easy chair, and tells you to leave the family to her and go to sleep. By-and-by she comes in, after staying long enough to get a refreshing cup of coffee, and walks up to the bed-side with a bowl of gruel, tasting it, and putting the spoon into the bowl. In the first place, you hate gruel; in the next, you couldn't eat it if she held a pistol to your head, after that spoon had been in her mouth; so you meekly suggest that it be set on the table to cool, hoping, by some providential interposition, it may get tipped over. Well, she moves round your room with a pair of creaking shoes, and a bran new gingham gown, that rattles like a paper window curtain at every step, and smoothes her hair with your nice little brush, and opens a drawer by mistake (?) "thinking it was the baby's drawer." Then you hear little nails scratching on the door, and Charley whispers through the key-hole, "Mamma, Charley's tired; please let Charley come in."

Nurse scowls, and says no; but you intercede, poor Charley, he's only a baby himself. Well, he leans his head against the pillow, and looks suspiciously at that little moving bundle of flannel in the nurse's lap. It's clear he had a hard time of it, with tears and molasses! The little shining curls that you have so often rolled over your finger, are a tangled mass; and you long to take him and make him comfortable, and coaxe him a little, and then baby cries again and you turn your head to the pillow with a smothered sigh. Nurse hears it, and Charley is taken struggling from the room. You take your watch from under the pillow to see if husband won't be home soon, and then look at nurse, who takes a pinch of snuff over your gruel, and sits down nodding drowsily, with the baby in an alarming proximity to the fire. Now you hear a dear step on the stairs. It's your Charley! How bright he looks! and what nice fresh air he brings with him out of doors.

He parts the bed curtains and looks in, and pats you on the cheek. You just want to lay your head on his shoulder, and have such a splendid cry! But there sits that old Gorgon of a nurse, she don't believe in husbands, she don't! You make Charley a free mason sign to send her down stairs for something. He says, right out loud, man are stupid! "What did you say, dear?" Of course, you protest you didn't say a word—never thought of such a thing! and coddle your head down to your tumbled pillows, and cry because you are weak and weary, and full of care for your family, and don't want to see any body but "Charley!" Nurse says, "she will have you sick," and tells your husband, "he'd better go down and let you go to sleep." Off he goes, wondering what on earth ails you to cry! wishing he had nothing to do but lie still and be waited upon!

After dinner he comes to bid you good-by before he goes to his office, whistles, "Nelly Bly," loud enough to wake up the baby, whom he calls a comical little concern, and then puts his dear, thoughtless head down to the pillow, at a signal from you, to hear what you have to say. Well, there's no help for it, you cry again, and only say again, "Dear Charley!" and he laughs and settles his dickey, and says you are a "nervous little puss," gives you a kiss, lights his cigar at the fire, half strangles the new baby with the first whiff, and takes your heart off with him down the street!

And you lie there and eat that gruel! and pick the fuz off the blankets, and make faces at the nurse, under the sheet, and wish Eve had never eat the apple—(Genesis iii. 16—or that you were "Able to Cain" her for doing it!

A Storm on the St. Bernard.

More and more sombre grew the scene as I climbed the rugged steep; the heavy clouds sunk lower and lower, the wind howled dismally as it swept down from the heights, the rain seemed to have made up its mind for a settled pour, and lightning flashed, and thunder bellowed with a vividness and power that might well be deemed the shrieking of the spirit of the mountains against the daring intruder. The clouds were so near my head that I feared to keep my umbrella up; and sheltering myself under some overhanging crags, I watched the sounding war. I was viewing Nature in a new aspect—in the very workshop and head-quarters of storms. What a ghastly glare lit up the driving and hissing mists of rain, as the red lightning shot from the murky clouds, accompanied rather than followed, by stunning thunder-peals that echoed angrily through the darkened air! It was a tremendous spectacle; one that you gaze on with wondering awe, and will never forget! At the same time, it affords an instance of the sudden changes to which the higher regions of the earth are subject, and, hence the risk to the inexperienced when traversing such altitudes. Herein, more than in the wildness and dreariness of the way, consists the chief danger.

The clouds rolled slowly away, and in about twenty minutes, the storm having moderated to a fitful shower, I again toiled upwards. The walking had become more irksome than before, stone and snow being alike slippery from the rain; and when foothold fails at almost every step, the fatigue of climbing an ascent is painfully increased.

By-and-by, I came to an unbroken field of snow, covering what, in ordinary seasons, is a green Summer pasture, but this year deep and solid, there not having been warmth enough to melt it. Here I fell in with two workmen, bound also for the hospice; one of them complained of a pain in his knee, and they were evidently much fatigued, for they could not keep up with me, and in the next bend of the track I lost sight of them. Here the path began to rise again; and so frequent and exhausting were my slips, that I was compelled to stop every thirty paces to recover breath.

On looking around during these halts, the prospect was by no means cheering—nothing but mist, snow and a murky scowl—and though they were not visible, there was a feeling that savage brights, the strongholds of tempests, rose towering on either hand. Now it began to rain again; the wind howled and shrieked more dismally than before; the clouds swooped, and so deepened the leaden gloom, that night seemed to have come. I looked out my watch, it was half-past four; so there was yet some hours to sunset. Still the difficulty of facing the wind and rain made me doubtful of getting to the summit of the pass, and I was beginning to discuss the possibilities of a return to the Dantine, when another turn showed me the hospice. Though still far off, the sight reanimated me; and, in the hope of reaching the friendly shelter, I again trudged onwards. Another quarter-hour brought me at the foot of the steepest slope of all, where convent was no longer in view, and from which the mule-tracks diverged a considerable distance to the left, while a single trail of footsteps led directly upwards.

I preferred to follow these as the shortest route, though I had to use my hands as well as my feet to secure my foothold. In this way I had mounted about one-third of the height, when another storm burst, compared with which the first was a zephyr. The rain fell in sports and streams, dashing like a shallow river down the snow, hissing as it went, intermingled with rattling hail that beat mercilessly upon me, for keeping my umbrella up was out of the question. Now the lightning flashed again, and the thunder roared; and so deadly chill were the screaming blasts, that I was speedily benumbed as well as drenched, and, for the first time in my life, knew what it was to be cold to the bones. Every time I went forward to dig my hands into the snow, the rain ran down my back, till I shuddered at its freezing temperature. The chances seemed growing desperate, when I espied some rocks on the left and made towards them for the sake of a firmer footing for a few minutes. No sooner had I reached them than a strange giddiness seized me, and I fell down in a half unconscious state, and lay for a time, till the pelting of the storm roused me again, to hear the thunder roaring at my ears, rolling round and round, and even under me. I could not help looking up; the clouds lay close upon the rocks, leaving no room for the lightning to dart downwards, and it seemed to me that a lurid fire flashed through them, from time to time, in a horizontal direction, and tore them asunder as it passed. Would there be no danger in standing upright? Whether or no, if I did not make the attempt to go, the increasing cold would soon incapacitate me altogether. I rose to my feet and crawled a little higher on the rock, but the giddiness again seized me, and there came over me a sense of sullen pleasure at the pelting of the rain, an indifference as to the result. Minutes are longer under such circumstances, and three or four minutes may have passed, when almost involuntarily I started up, looked round and shouted. No answer came but mocking echoes; the shout had disheartened me; it seemed a confession of weakness. However, I saw dimly through the blinding scud a large black cross on the top of a crag; if that could be reached, there would be a hope of seeing the convent; so, mustering all my strength, I succeeded in climbing to it, and putting my arm around it, I wiped my eyes for a fresh survey. Heaven be praised! there is the convent! and nearer than I thought. Between me and it lay an untrodden bank of snow in the hollow of the rock. It was deep, and might be treacherous; but I had become desperate, and rushed across it, laughing and shouting under some wild, uncontrollable impulse, to the open door of the hospitable building. I sprang up the steps, and in another moment was in the long passage which runs from one end of the edifice to the other, and in safety. "If ever a thanksgiving was spoken from the heart, it was there and then by me."

Effects of a Snake-Bite.

One of the most remarkable recoveries from the effects of a snake-bite is related of Dr. Tschudi, a traveler, who has written an agreeable work on Chili and Peru. On one occasion he lived for about five months at Pampayaco, in Peru, solely occupied with the increase of his collections, in which he was very successful. Christmas was at hand, and some preparations were made, as well as the circumstances in that lonely place would permit, to keep the festival, even though alone. But fortune had otherwise determined; for, going out on the evening of the 23d of December, to cut down a tree that was in blossom, he suddenly felt a pain in his instep, like that caused by a drop of burning sealing-wax; and, looking around, saw a very large serpent close to him, coiled up, with his head erect, seeming rather to be satisfied with what it had done than to be meditating a second attack. From a sudden impulse he attempted to kill the serpent, which he at length succeeded in doing; and then, recollecting his own danger, hastened to the house, which was about five hundred paces distant. But his foot had swollen considerably before he reached it. Happily, a Creole inhabitant of Pampayaco, who was at hand, proceeded to the operation—though the Indians, who were called in, after looking at the snake, declared the wound to be mortal, with the composure that is usual to them, and, probably, originates in their being accustomed to a nature which daily threatens visible or supposed dangers.

A blue spot, an inch broad, and two black points, resembling the puncture of a needle, quite cold, and almost without feeling, showed where the bite had been inflicted. There being no instrument, the skin was pierced with a packing-needle, and cut away in a circle to the muscles; but the knife employed was so unlike that of a surgeon's that, it gave considerable pain. Black blood flowed copiously from it; for a large vein had, perhaps fortunately, been divided. The most painful part of the operation was the application of a piece of gold coin, heated red hot; because, according to the superstitious notions of the Peruvians, silver or iron does harm. Meanwhile the general pain increased so much, such frequent fainting fits ensued, that it was so probable that death would follow that no time was to be lost. Our traveler wrote a few lines with a lead pencil, to bid adieu to his friends in Lima and in his distant home. He urged those around him to forward his collections and papers according to his directions, and promised them that they should have the rest of his effects. Having thus arranged his wordly affairs, and reached—perhaps for the last time—his wretched bed, all around seemed involved in night, and as he became insensible the pain diminished.

Long after midnight he recovered from his lethargy, and the vigor of youth obtained the victory; for a burning fever, a profuse perspiration, and a peculiar and severe shooting pain in the wounded limb, were indications of safety. But a storm howled in the forest, which an ill secured place in the leaf-thatch could not resist, and large drops fell upon the sufferer. With much difficulty he succeeded in moving his burning head out of the way, but his body was so swelled that it was almost impossible to move. No friendly hand was near to present a cooling beverage or to prevent the rain from entering. The Indian who had been left by the others to watch, convinced that death had taken place, and seized with superstitious fear, had long before fled to his companions. It was not till morning that curiosity attracted some persons who relieved him from his painful situation. The succeeding day passed in agony, for a large wound had been formed, and some indications of the poison long remained.

"A fortnight elapsed," says the Doctor, "before I was able, with the assistance of an Indian, to quit my bed, and stretched on the skin of an ounce, before the door of my hut, again to enjoy the pure air and more cheerful prospect. It was a lovely, mild morning; several trees of the most beautiful kind had blossomed during my imprisonment, and now looked invitingly from the neighboring wood. The gay butterflies sported familiarly around, and the voices of the birds sounded cheerfully from the trees. As if desirous to reconcile its faithful disciple, and make him forget what he had suffered, nature appeared in its most winning dress."

A PRACTICAL PREACHER.—A preacher, who came the other day to officiate at a village in Lincolnshire, had been led to believe by his brethren that the inhabitants were very stingy towards their spiritual providers. Accordingly at the conclusion of the service, he thus addressed the congregation: "My brethren, I have been given to understand that there is a very current notion entertained by many in this village, that the local preacher, or prayer leader, whose appointment may be fixed in this village, is in his nature something entirely spiritual, or, in other words, an angel. Now I am determined to give you to understand that such a notion is all moonshine, and that we are really men of the same flesh and blood with yourselves, and like yourselves, subject to all the ills that flesh is heir to, and that you may see how entirely wrong you have been in entertaining such a notion, I will show you what I have in my hands, and what I shall do with it." Here the preacher produced a large piece of bread and meat, and began to eat. For the courageous hint, we have no doubt he will receive the thanks and prayers of his brethren. [London Inquirer.

MOUNT VERNON ASSOCIATION.—In accordance with previous notice, we learn from the Dispatch, about thirty Richmond ladies assembled at Metropolitan Hall Wednesday evening, for the formation of an association to raise money to aid in the purchase of Mount Vernon, to be held by the Governor of Virginia and his successors.

Mrs. Dr. Cabell was unanimously chosen to preside.

By request, Right Rev. Dr. Atkinson, Bishop of North Carolina, who was present, opened the meeting with prayer.

After the adoption of a Constitution for the government of the Association, the following permanent officers were elected:

President, Mrs. Julia M. Cabell.

Vice Presidents, Mrs. E. Sims, Mrs. Pollett, Mrs. Dunlop, Mrs. Wirt Robinson and Mrs. Pegram.

Recording Secretary, Mrs. Wm. F. Ritchie.

Corresponding Secretary, Mr. J. H. Gilmer.

Treasurer, Mr. Wm. H. Macfarland.

Gov. Johnson, Bishop Atkinson, and Thos. H. Ellis and Robt. A. Mayo, Esqs., who were present addressed the Association.

Thirty ladies then signed the Constitution.

[Daily (Petersburg, Va.) Express.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Christian Advocate.

Terms: $1 50 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:
SATURDAY, JULY 29, 1854.

Rev. J. K. Armstrong does a favor to those who have daughters to be educated, by giving notice of the location, facilities and terms of the institution under his charge. See advertisement.

Wesleyan Female Institute.—We received, says the Brandon Whig, a circular from the committee appointed by the Mississippi Conference, for the purpose of establishing at the Capital a Literary Institution. The committee have already purchased a suitable location near the Governor's Mansion, and their agent, the Rev. E. R. Strickland, will, in a short time, visit the different sections of country within the limits of the Conference, for the purpose of soliciting subscriptions of stock, in shares of $100, sufficient to establish the Institution on a permanent basis, and prepare for the reception of pupils by the first of October next.

University of Nashville.—The reader will find an advertisement of the University of Nashville. The institution bears a high character in the country. The medical department was established in 1850, and at its first session numbered 121 students, of whom 83 graduated; the second session 152 students and 36 graduates; and during the third session, the last, there were 220 students and 71 graduates.

Among the matriculants of the session of 1853-4, there were twenty-two from Alabama.

In 1850 there was an entirely new suite of University buildings erected.

The three departments—legal, medical and literary—are handsomely endowed, and entirely free from debt.

We have before us a copy of the introductory lecture, delivered at the opening of the last session in the medical department, by Paul F. Eve, M. D., Professor of Surgery. It is on the "Claims of Medicine to be regarded as a Science," and is worthy of the distinguished Professor.

Dr. Wadsworth has been put at the head of the Literary department under circumstances highly flattering to himself and auspicious for the prosperous career of the University.

Oakland College.—The annual meeting of the Board of Directors was held at the College on the 28th and 29th of June. The resignations of Dr. Stanton, as President, and Prof. Hutchinson, as Professor of Languages, were received and accepted.

The following Officers were elected:

Rev. J. Perviance, President.
Rev. L. A. Lowry, Prof. of Mathematics.
Rev. Mr. Doremus, Prof. of Languages.
Rev. Mr. Moore, Prof. of Natural Sciences.
Rev. Mr. Adams, Principal of the Preparatory Department.

The Board recommended to the Synod a change in the constitution so as to give to the Board of Trustees the fixing of the amount of the salaries of the President and Professors; thus giving them, in addition to their other duties, the entire management of the pecuniary affairs of the College.

Premium Awarded.—A prize of $150 was offered some months ago for the best Essay on "Prayer for Colleges," and a committee, consisting of the Rev. Brown Emerson, D. D., of Salem, Rev. E. N. Kirk, of Boston, and Rev. L. F. Dimmick, D. D., of Newburyport, was appointed to examine the MSS. and make the award. These gentlemen report that they have received and examined thirty-two MSS. Many of the essays are written with ability, and several appear well worthy of publication. The one best adapted in the judgment of the committee to accomplish the purpose of the donor, is found to have been written by Professor W. S. Tyler, of Amherst College.

FACTS FOR THE SOUTHERN AID SOCIETY.

This Society, says the Independent, is likely to be relieved from any solicitude that might grow out of the low state of its treasury, and the apathy of the General Association of Connecticut under the appeal of its General Agent. Dr. Stiles has urged the importance of the Society, upon the ground that the South is the most destitute portion of the country with respect to religious privileges. But the Richmond Enquirer assures us that such is by no means the fact. Displaying two columns of figures from the census, the Enquirer says:—

With a less population by half a million, the ten Southern States have above a thousand more churches than the ten Northern States which boast loudest of their morality and enlightenment. With an excess of only half a million in population, the ten Free States have double the number of criminals which are found in ten corresponding Slave States.

"In these circumstances," continues the Independent in a taunting tone, "the Southern Aid Society may well be dispensed with. If under the benign influences of slavery the South is so much better off than the North, why do the North send it "aid?" The Society is hardly needed even to save the Union."

We recommend the directors of that Society to follow the example of the Knod Iverson Committee, and return to its donors money not wanted for the purpose for which it was contributed.

Rev. J. W. McFarland.—We learn that this esteemed member of the Memphis Conference died on the 17th inst., after a sickness of eight days.

THE YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION CONFEDERATION.

The proceedings of the Young Men's National Convention, at Buffalo, held in May, were published in many papers: not in ours, because, beside meetings and adjournments and committee appointments, etc., we saw little to publish. Whether this was due to the deficiency of the reporter (a cause from which the oldest assemblies have suffered) or deficiency of matter to report, we know not. For these individual associations, their objects and labors, we have a high regard. It is the best development of "Young America." We entertained doubts, too, as to the utility of the wide Confederation. The Independent, by Beecher, Chever, Stowe & Co., tells it very well. This paper is always hunting cracks for entering the wedge of disunion. Its arguments, on any subject whatever, take this shape. The crystalization of its idle thoughts are wedge-like. This party represents the intensest form of Congregationalism as opposed to Connectionalism in Church. Church politics rule the complexion of other politics. Connectionalism may be carried too far. Congregationalism is already on extreme:—

"Admiration for widely-extended associations seems to be an instinct with Americans. It is a weakness that deserves small respect. No other error is more common, yet more evident, than the notion that efficiency and dignity come with conspicuous organizations; that confederated societies are stronger for good than the same number of local societies, working each with silent fidelity in its sphere; and that 'National committees' are a means of increased enterprise and usefulness to associations whose work is strictly parochial, confined to particular villages or towns. The Young Men's Christian Associations, which so recently have sprung into general existence in our country, have, some of them we observe, been smitten with the delusive charms of this notion, and are eager for a national confederation of these associations, with permanent officers, an annual convocation, and ultimately a great metropolitan office, and a supervisory committee.

"We trust our friends will pause and wisely consider the matter, before entering upon any such fallacious scheme. The natural effect of it would be, certainly, and of necessity, to distract the attention of the members of the associations from the wants of their own immediate districts, and the best means of supplying these, to the operations and movements of the centralized body. The annual meeting, organized on this plan, would speedily become nothing more or less than a promiscuous yearly pow-wow, for the discussion of abstract themes and ideal plans, or for the far poorer gratification of oratorical ambition. The discussion of slavery, and of parallel subjects, would of course find instant way into these, and divisions and animosities would arise from them far more easily and rapidly than the elements of wisdom, strength, and success. The simple aim of each of these associations of young men should be to do all the good it can do in the community to which it is central; to do it in the methods, and by the use of the means, most appropriate there. And if it will seek to accomplish this end, without becoming emulous of a weakening dependence on a wider organization, it will find that it no more needs such an organization to its true growth and usefulness, than an elm in the meadow needs a forest around it to help its development, and to educate it into symmetrical majesty; no more than a mountain needs mountains around it to assist it to stand on its earth-cleaving base. Aggregation was the old law. It has proved itself imperfect. To individualize men, societies, communities, and to concentrate a full responsibility upon each, is the new, the more wise, the more efficient method; and young men should be the last to turn back into the Egypt from which the foremost mind of the age is fast making its exodus.

HOLINESS PROPOSED.

If the ministry of any, or every denomination fail to present the members of their flock perfect in Christ Jesus, the object of their ministry is unanswered. And if, when inquisition is made for blood, the failure be found on the part of the ministry on account of not having presented Christian Perfection as attainable in the present life, then the blood of the people will be found on the head of the watchman, for he failed to give the warning.

Holiness is the great object of Methodism. How sadly this great work has been neglected by many ministers and people. Bishop Asbury, says: "I am divinely impressed to preach it in every sermon." Would that every minister of every denomination would so heed the teachings of the word, as to see that it is the duty of each, thus to preach, until we become "a holy nation."

The case is here related of a Methodist minister who read this: "Men are not holy because they really do not purpose to be holy." He exclaimed, "Is it possible this is my case? it is. I will be holy." He looked his door with a fixed purpose not to leave his room until he was a holy man. "It was wonderful how quickly the Spirit helped his infirmities and took of the things of God and revealed them to him. It was but a short time before he was enabled to testify to his beloved wife, who came to his room, that the blood of Jesus cleanseth from all sin. And she, too, with earnestness, began to seek the blessing. It was now out of the abundance of his heart that he testified to the people of his charge of the full power of saving grace. God owned the testimony," a glorious revival followed. Believers were sanctified and sinners converted. In a short time ninety souls were added to the Lord.

Surely it is true, that people are not holy because they do not purpose to be so. They put it off. They say it is too much for them now to expect, as if they had to save themselves from sin instead of trusting in the Lord to work in them that which is well pleasing in his sight.

Repentance and Liberality.—The following clause appears in a will made by a Spanish resident in this section, in 1791:

"I wish and desire that there be Ten Masses said for the repose of my soul, and that Two Bits be given for the use of the poor."

We hope both parties have been benefitted.

Methodist Press.

A Charge.—The Texas Banner has been editing itself for the last year or so; but the last number evidences that the new editor is about. He opens in fine spirits. Dear men! As Fanny Fearn says of wives, so it is of editors—"They need a good stock of [spirits] to begin with." Conducting a frontier Christian press, directing, exciting, enlightening and molding the moral character of an Empire State that is rapidly forming under elements of population the most energetic—this is a great work, and it is gratifying to know that Bro. Gillespie appreciates it, and is not the man to shrink from sacrifice.

Having been pleasantly associated with the debutant journalist in times past, and in view of his new sphere, we feel like 'taking' on over him after the impressive manner of our Presbyterian brethren at installations. The right hand of fellowship having been given, we proceed to "deliver the charge."

Firstly: If any man be in this office by purpose, he is not in by right. No boy was ever brought up for an editor. No father ever thought "I will educate my son for an editor." No aspiring young man ever said, "I will be an editor." It is an accidental occasion. Now if you desired to be an editor, lived for it, saw it a coming, calculated on it a week before you found yourself one, you are not in the regular line. (This to test calling.)

Secondly: if you have any very particular friend, go and embrace him for the last time. For when you refuse his advice "how to make your paper more interesting," or exercise the editorial discretion in declining an article that he said, in an N. B., "you might do as you liked with, without the least offense," he is off, and ever after that, offish. (Encouragement.)

Thirdly: Make to yourself friends of the Postmaster General and all the Postmasters. (Reasons obvious.)

Fourthly: Do all the good you can and as little harm; for these will be your main chances.

Fifthly: Put away that delusive notion that all honest people pay their debts. (Exceptions.)

Sixthly: Blessed are they that expect nothing, for they shall not be disappointed; as you certainly will be if you expect an easy life or rich living. (Instance.)

Seventhly: Acquaint yourself early with those Agents who do nothing, and strike them off: and those patrons who consider that they do a favor by reading the paper, and have nothing to do with them. Neither ever yet sustained a paper, and the more such friends it had, the worse for it.

Eighthly: Reject many of your own manuscripts as well as other people's.

Ninthly: Never think you are done when you are done, or through when you are through. Begin again.

Finally, and to conclude: Look out for all things. Be prepared to go through thick and thin—especially through thin.

The Editor of the Nashville Advocate maintains a hot fire with his Cincinnati opponent, and yet buries his dead in a solemn column of obituaries. Death has been busy there. The communication of a correspondent who had been to hear Rev. J. B. Ferguson, late a Campbellite Baptist, preach a special sermon "in view of statements that he was a Unitarian, Universalist and Spiritualist," leaves no doubt of his doctrinal defection. We are saddened at this. Mr. Ferguson's amiability as a man, and his winning address, will carry many along with him who first get personal preferences for ministers, and then adopt their creed.

This gentleman seems to have departed from the teachings of the denomination with which he has been connected, and has become somewhat famous, because of the strange doctrines which he advocates. Not exactly new to be sure; but new for one occupying the place he has heretofore occupied. It appears that Mr. Ferguson is a Unitarian, a Universalian, a Spirit-rapper, and an unbeliever in the plenary inspiration of the Scriptures. We learn that he said on Sabbath last, that he has had delightful interviews with spirits of the departed.

Cutting off the Corners.—The Richmond Advocate serves up this piquant dish on theological opinions:—

The Cumberland Presbyterians reject some of the doctrines of The Confession of Faith. They differ with Old School Presbyterians, and do not, like the New School Theologians, explain away the Calvinism of the Confession, making hybrid of it—a cross between Calvinism and Arminianism. The Cumberlands reject it. For this they are repudiated by both parties; and their right to the name of Presbyterians is denied. Referring to these things, the American (Cumberland) Presbyterian paper says: "We do not unfrequently hear ministers of the Presbyterian Church of both schools boasting of their Calvinism. On hearing such persons avow their ultra Calvinism in full, we could not help thinking that the following, from the pen of Calvin, would be a pretty severe pill for one in the nineteenth century to swallow without trimming off the corners a little." Here is the pill, whose corners he thinks ought to be trimmed off:

"Predestination we call the eternal decree of God, by which he has determined in himself what would hereafter become of every individual of mankind. For they are not all created with a similar destiny; but eternal life is foreordained for some and eternal damnation for others. Every man, therefore, being created for one or the other of these ends, we say, he is predestinated either to life or to death." [Institutes, Book 2, page 145.

J. R. T., writing to the Southern Advocate from that region of Florida where the long staple Cotton and the malaria flourish, thinks it is hard on religion:—

The air of this region is bad—both the natural and moral. May there not be some natural connection between the two? Malarious atmosphere makes a bad liver, and morbid liver makes dull faith. I am serious in this, so much so that I anticipate the time when some bold thinker shall write a book, entitled "Effects of Physiological Conditions upon the Religious Principle." A brooding dyspeptic is always a doubting Christian. But may there not be another link of connection? Malaria always follows the conditions of fertile soil, humid air, and high temperature. It is also true, that great productiveness follows the same conditions, offering thereby powerful incentives to the money passion. Now add to this, "they that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, and many foolish and hurtful lusts," and what more need be said to make out the case? It has grown into a proverb here, that "Long cotton makes short religion;" and you will allow me to say, that proverbs are concentrated wisdom drops that ooze out from the brain under the pressure of facts.

The Rev. H. Mandeville, D. D., of Albany, New York, now in connection with the New-school, has received a unanimous call to the Government Street Church, Mobile. It is understood he will accept.

Book Notices.

The Harpers have recovered from the temporary embarrassment of the fire and taken their position again as the Publishers of the age. A pile of their latest issues is upon our table, through McGinnis & Carver, 36 Camp street, who have them on sale.

Harpers' Gazetteer of the World. This is No. 1 of a work to be completed in ten numbers, comprising in all 1800 pages, with seven new maps. Its statistics have special reference to United States and Britain. From the extension of commerce and international relations of the world by steam, and the censuses, such a work is desiderated. The numbers to be issued 1st and 15th of each month. The one before us is such a one as might be looked for, from the means and enterprise of the publishers.

Utah and the Mormons: The author, B. G. Ferris, was Secretary of the Territory, by appointment of President Fillmore, for six months, embracing the winter of 1852-3. His opportunities for an inside view of Mormonism were as good as any outsider's have been, and the contents of this 12 mo. pp. 346, evidence an improvement of them. The style of narration is lively, with a vein of fun-making. The sort that—

"Shoots folly as it flies,
Just between the eyes."

In 1827 this marvellous folly began, on Joe Smith's announcing his discovery of the Golden Book. Then he was 22 years of age. At his tragical death, 1844, his followers were counted at 100,000. Mr. Ferris has given the rise, gathering and migration of the Mormons to Salt Lake, and the workings of Mormonism in that isolated region, where the Territorial laws of the United States are in operation only nominally. His setting forth of principles and historical facts, is upon satisfactory authority: his disclosure of real life, of absorbing interest. For the study of this moral phenomenon and a solution of it (becoming a practical necessity both to statesmen and moralists,) we refer to this book in preference to any thing we have yet seen.

Footprints of Great Men, by John G. Edgar: 1854, 12 mo. pp. 369.

This is a rehash of well-known biographies, by the author of "The Boyhood of Great Men." It is convenient in form to be put in the hands of youth, and designed as incitements to intellectual industry. Illustrations.

The Orator's Touch-stone, by Hugh McQueen: 1854, 12 mo. pp. 327.

We equally desire with the author, but cannot share to an equal extent his conviction, "that the accomplishment of public speaking, instead of waving as a proud plume in the coronet of any peculiar class or profession, will soon become an universal attribute of the American people." On a slight review of his work, we are inclined to think it conducive to this end. Any one who will study the points here presented and analyzed, must improve, even though the author bestow no new or valuable direction. After treating the old points of tone, gesture, management of lungs and throat, etc., our eye fixes on some of the new ones:

Chap. 52.—"When a speaker shall have once indicted, by the course of his remarks, that he is about bringing an argument to a close, he should never take a fresh start on the occurence of a new idea to his mind."

That will be news to those who are "struck with a thought," just when the last grains of their hearers' patience are about exhausted.

Chap. 74.—"It will prove injudicious in any member of a deliberative assembly to participate in debate, with undue frequency."

Chap. 88.—"Influence of luxurious living."

Chap. 89.—"A public speaker should abstain entirely from the use of tobacco."

Leather Stocking and Silk: A Story of the Valley of Virginia. 1854. pp. 405.

The personages, modes of life and thought in the Old Dominion, at the commencement of the present century, bore a peculiar air of demo-aristocracy, plain refinement and chivalry, that makes pleasant sketching and reading in a half-novel way. Such is here.

A Popular Account of the Ancient Egyptians, by Sir Gardner Wilkinson. 2 vols. 8vo. 1854.

The present account of the Ancient Egyptians (who were the only sort of any account) is chiefly an abridgement of a work of this author in 1836. Having revisited Egypt, he was enabled to add much new matter and later discoveries. The illustrations are abundant—about 500 woodcuts. At the close of the second volume, an Index is furnished. In the revived interest of Egyptian studies, this popular account is timely and well adapted.

Circulating Libraries have multiplied to a great extent in England; but while they have contributed largely to the popularity of living authors, they have caused a diminution in the sale of their works.

THE KNOW NOTHINGS.

This Association of unknown strength (in which lies much of its force,) and of unknown principles (in which lies much of its unpopularity,) is beginning to be a power. Already, it is said, a great Senator courts it for the Presidency.

A New York correspondent of the National Intelligencer says—

As to politics here, the leading item of remark is the Know-Nothings and their organization. They are beginning to be very formidable, as those will find out, whether individuals or a party, who oppose and denounce them. That they will greatly influence, if they do not control, the fall elections in this State and Pennsylvania, I think may be set down as "a fixed fact." But those opposed to them, "whose wish is father to the thought," assert that it is "a fire of straw," which will burn out before the next Presidential canvass. This is by no means so certain; for their probable success in the fall elections will whet their zeal "for a more perfect union;" and the constant succession of State elections will have a great tendency to keep them together, and in efficient action, until after the Presidential election. Whether the association will survive that effort, is another question.

On the 12th inst. the subject passed review in the U. S. Senate, during a running debate upon the Homestead Bill. Mr. Clay, of Alabama, in opposing the bill, said:—

He disclaimed all political association with Native American or "Know-Nothingism," but he knew no measure so well calculated to build up that party as this Bill. Pass this act and you will see that which he never hoped to see: a thoroughly organized Native American party throughout the United States.

Mr. Seward advocated the bill, and said he would vote for it in any shape that it might come before the Senate for final action—he was in favor of giving to foreigners all the rights granted by the bill of settling on the public lands. We have only room for the following extract from his speech, in which he introduces the "Know-nothing" creed:

Now, then, it is well enough, if we are going into this principle at all, to see where it leads. I find sixteen articles in this creed. Here they are:

1. Repeal of all naturalization laws.
2. None but Native Americans for office.
3. A pure American common school system.
4. War to the hilt on Romanism.
5. Opposition first and last to the formation of military companies composed of foreigners.
6. The advocacy of a sound harbor and safe nationality.
7. Hostility to all Papal influences, in whatever form and whatever name.
8. American institutions and American sentiment.
9. More stringent and effective emigration laws.
10. The amplest protection to Protestant interests.
11. The doctrines of the revered Washington and his compatriots.
12. The sending back of all foreign paupers landed on our shores.
13. The formation of societies to protect all American interests.
14. Eternal enmity to all who attempt to carry out the principles of a foreign Church or State.
15. Our country, our whole country, and nothing but our country.
16. And finally, American laws and American legislation, and death to all foreign influence, whether in high places or low.

Sir, this creed contains just half a dozen true and sound American principles.

Mr. Chase: Will the Senator allow me to ask him where he gets his creed?

Mr. Seward: In the American Crusader.

Mr. Chase: Where is it printed?

Mr. Seward: I believe in Boston, and I find in it a comprehensive view of the principles; some of them right and some of them wrong.

Mr. Dixon: Does the Senator mean to say that these are the principles of the Know-Nothings? I ask merely for information.

Mr. Seward: I know nothing of the Know-Nothings. [Laughter.

Mr. Dixon: If the Senator knows nothing of the Know-Nothings, it seems to me very strange that he should pretend here to state what the principles of the Know-Nothings are. I should like him to explain if he knows nothing of the Know-Nothings or their principles, how does he read the principles of the Know-Nothings? [Laughter.

Mr. Seward: If my excellent friend, the Hon. Senator from Kentucky, had paid attention to what I said, he would have learned in the first place that I said nothing of the Know-Nothings. My reason for it is, that I always say nothing about which I know nothing. [Laughter.] Again, the Hon. Senator will excuse me from further answering his question, because it is my purpose to say nothing of the Know-Nothings, because of the Know-Nothings, as I have already stated, I know nothing at all. [Renewed laughter.

A Washington letter writer is puzzled how this association is opposed to Romanism:—concludes its opposition is directed against Romanism as politics rather than Romanism as a religion. He says:—

In discoursing recently with a leading politician from New Orleans, who I have no doubt is a Know-Nothing, he told me that the most numerous and most zealous of the order in Louisiana, are the Catholic Creoles, which certainly would not be the case was their religion and its professors the objects of denunciation by the association.

One of the leading journals of the country holds the following language of discrimination on this charge, from which it would appear that the object of the Know-Nothings, so far as regards their notion in connection with the Roman Catholic religion, is to prevent it from being brought as an element into the political questions of the country, and thus assist in keeping religion and politics separated:—

"Frequent allusions are made, in various forms, to the hostility between the Roman Catholics and the Know-Nothings; and simple justice seems to demand that the real grounds of the dissension should be clearly understood. Newspapers of various classes, including the National Intelligencer and others in different parts of the country, have protested against the Know-Nothings as fanatical enemies of the Roman Catholic religion. The Know-Nothings, on the contrary, have repeatedly disavowed this charge, insisting that they do not oppose any religion or practice whatever, but, quite the opposite, were faithful friends and protectors of religious freedom; not in the sense of Bishop Hughes, but in its real old and common signification. But, they say, what they oppose is Roman Catholic politics, which often assumes the name of the Roman Catholic religion, but is a wholly distinct thing. They admit, recognize and sustain the right in any and all who choose to worship in the Roman Catholic Churches, to believe and profess what they please in religion; but they will not admit nor submit to any one who attempts to put down by club law free debate or free preaching, in the house or in the open air, nor allow a foreign influence to interfere with elections, or to raise or threaten mob law, or to threaten citizens with the consequences if they do not substitute the canon law of Rome for the State laws of the Union. Even though such subversive attempts may be made under the name of religion, their opposers claim to be able to discriminate, and are fully convinced that in opposing them they oppose nothing religious, but what is purely political, and at the same time wrong, anti-American, and intolerable."

One Phase of War.—When the French troops embarked at Toulon for Constantinople, an old man who witnessed their departure exclaimed, in a mournful voice, "There goes my only child, to fight for a cause he does not understand, and against men with whom he never had a difference." To how many wars which history records will the remark of this aged man apply?

Revival Intelligence.

White Plains Ct., Ala. Conf: Rev. S. O. Capers, closing a business letter, 18th inst., adds:

"Things are looking up in the Church. Several accessions on my last round, and much life in the Church. We are adding daily to the Church, and there is a fine revival in a large portion of the membership. Twenty have been received. Two hundred families visited and prayed with."

Yazoo Ct., Miss. Conf: Rev. R. T. Jones writes, 21st inst.:

"The good Lord is visiting his people on this Circuit with saving power. Our third Quarterly Meeting, held at Mechanicsburg, is just closed, and the result is glorious indeed. Upwards of twenty conversions, and thirty accessions to the Church—to God be all the glory.

"We have passed through a long, long, dark night, that almost seemed to have no morn beyond it; but thank God the night is past, the day is dawning, shadows fleeing, and the glory and power of God appearing."

Turkish Ideas of Happiness.

As a specimen of an extreme state of contentment, where content ought not to be, the following letter is given from a Turkish Cadi, extracted from the appendix to the second part of Layard's Nineveh. It will be read by our gonehead race with equal amusement and astonishment. Layard had asked his Mussulman friend for some statistical information regarding the city and provinces over which he had so long presided. The Oriental rebukes him in the following extraordinary effusion:

"My illustrious friend, and joy of my liver!

"The thing you ask of me is both difficult and useless. Although I have passed all my days in this place, I have neither counted the houses nor have I inquired into the number of the inhabitants; and as to what one person loads on his mules, and another stows away in the bottom of his ship, that is no business of mine. But above all, as to the previous history of this city, God only knows the amount of dirt and confusion that the infidels may have eaten before the coming of the sword of Islam. It were unprofitable for us to inquire into it.

"Oh, my soul! oh, my lamb! seek not after the things which concern thee not. Thou came unto us, and we welcomed thee: go in peace.

"Of a truth, thou hast spoken many words; and there is no harm done, for the speaker is one and the listener is another. After the fashion of thy people thou hast wandered from one place to another until thou art happy and content in none. We (praise be God) were born here, and never desire to quit it. Is it possible, then, that the idea of a general intercourse between mankind should make any impression on our understanding? God forbid!

"Listen, oh my son! There is no wisdom equal unto the belief in God. He created the world; and shall we liken ourselves to Him in seeking to penetrate the mysteries of his creation? Shall we say, behold this star spinneth round that star, and this other star with a tail cometh and goeth in so many years? Let it go! He from whose hand it came will direct and guide it.

"But thou wilt say unto me, stand aside, oh man, for I am more learned than thou art, and have seen more things. If thou thinkest that thou art in this respect better than I am, thou art welcome. I praise God that I seek not that which I require not. Thou art learned in the things I care not for; and as for that which thou hast seen, I defile it. Will much knowledge create thee another stomach, or wilt thou seek Paradise with thine eyes?

"Oh my friend! If thou wilt be happy, say there is no God but God! Do no evil, and thou thou wilt fear neither man nor death; for surely thine hour will come!

"The meek in spirit (El Fakir),
"Imaum Ali Tade."

Sir Charles Napier.—In reference to the gallant commander of the Baltic fleet, the Press has exhumed the following anecdote from an old letter: "He is certainly quite a character, and one or two anecdotes I have heard concerning him may amuse you. I before mentioned the little attention he bestows on dress; it is said that, when standing for the borough of Portsmouth, one of his opponents styled him 'the gallant and ragged candidate;' he felt this aspersion on his apparel so much, that the next day, at a meeting, he actually appeared in a pair of clean and whole inexpressibles; but the novelty of the thing was such that he could not help alluding to it himself, and he opened his address to the meeting by 'Gentlemen, my opponents call me ragged; I have, therefore, as you perceive, put on a pair of clean and new breeches, that they may no longer have this subject to harp on.' He used frequently at his country residence, near Portsmouth, to be annoyed by nightly depredations on his poultry yard, and made use of the following curious expedient to intimidate those who took such liberties with his ducks and geese. He killed a pig, and at night, after every body had retired to bed, he took the blood in a basin, and sprinkled it across the yard and on the palings which formed the boundary of it; then returning to the house, and undressing, he gave the alarm that he heard somebody about the premises, and seizing a pistol, ran out and after crying out 'Stop, or I'll shoot you by ——!' he let fly, and the person who was in the secret, and was concealed on the other side of the fence, immediately roared out, most lustily, and, taking a circuit, returned unperceived to the house—all the inmates of which were by this time on the move; a lantern was procured, the track of blood was followed to the extremity of the yard, and all were astonished at the quantity the thief must have lost in crossing the palings over which he escaped, at least mortally wounded. The story of course got wind, and so far produced the desired effect, that since the admiral's poultry have never been disturbed by their former nightly visitors. You may rely on this being a true bill, as I heard him relate it himself as a good joke."

A Sligur Mistake.—There's a good story, and a true one, withal, relative to Mr. Gill, long a reporter for the Boston Post, and well known as a "fellow of infinite jest." He was reporting a dinner given on the 70th anniversary of the Battle of Bunker Hill. The dinner was a splendid affair, and every body was very patriotic. Gill, when the excitement was at boiling point, whispered to a friend, one of those gentlemen who are always "happy" in speech-making, that his father was engaged in the battle of Bunker Hill. The orator rose, made a brilliant speech—alluding to Gill's father and Gill, in the highest terms, and proposed Gill's health, which was drank with the usual honors, and one two more. There were loud shouts of "Gill!" "Gill!" and he made a speech, returned thanks in the usual manner, and said: "But my learned friend omitted one fact, one very important fact, of which he might have been unaware. My father was in the battle of Bunker Hill, but he unfortunately fought on the British side!"

There was not quite so much excitement after that, and Gill has not indulged in speeches since. [N. Y. Spirit of the Times.

Governor Hebert and family are still sojourning at Last Island.

Missionary Reports.

Prairie Creek Mission—Ala. Conf.

To the Rev. H. N. McTyeire, Assistant Treasurer of the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

I now send you my first report of this Mission. I reached my field of labor the first Sunday in January, and found the mission in good condition, favored by both patrons and overseers. The mission now consists of 15 appointments; three having been added this year. Several have professed to have found peace with God, through our Lord Jesus Christ. Sixty-two have been admitted on trial; three discontinued; baptized twelve Infants and fifteen adults. I regard the mission on the whole as in a prosperous condition.

J. C. Huckaby.

July 14, 1854.

The Cholera.

This terrible antagonist of human life appears to have entirely changed its usual tactics in the present onslaught throughout the United States. It has been likened, in the peculiarities of its destroying progress, to the march of an invading army—entering a country at a few well instructed points, following usually the channels of great rivers or the courses of valleys, turning aside for high mountains and traveling hundreds of miles to search out a pass, leaving behind wherever it goes thousands of desolate homes and a pathway of new made graves, and finally sitting down in some great and populous city to hold its revels and destroy at pleasure. Thus, in 1832, if we remember correctly, the cholera attacked New York and marched into the country beyond, ascended the St. Lawrence River and seized upon Montreal and Quebec, thence spreading with dreadful effect to hundreds of towns and villages throughout the North. And the last time it devasted the country so fearfully, in the years '48 and '49, it slowly ascended the Mississippi and the Rivers, laying the country and the towns along their shores under contribution, and finally intrenching itself in St. Louis, Cincinnati and other considerable places, it commenced its work of depopulation in an orderly and systematic manner.

This open and direct plan of operation, however, as we before stated, appears to have been abandoned in the present attack. The dark foe has stolen in among us unobserved, or else been lurking in quiet concealment since the last campaign, and now strikes at a hundred different points. We hear of the almost simultaneous appearance of the cholera in the cities and towns of the Atlantic States, along the Northern Lakes and in the valley of the Mississippi; and that, too, with a severity which leaves no room for the comfortable hope that it is but the seeds of the former disease, and one not possibly produce such frightful mortality.

Meantime, our own city remains entirely free from the scourge, and seems likely to remain in the present condition of its health, being more excellent, and giving not the least indication of attack from disease or malady of any sort.

The Homestead Bill.

Should this bill become a law its effects will we think, astonish many people. The most direct and immediate will be a tremendous impulse to emigration from the Eastern States, a rush for public lands, and the rapid increase of the populations of many Western States and Territories—Texas, in particular, probably. Much earnest debate has been excited by the amendment offered by Mr. Clayton, having in view the exclusion of any but actual citizens from the benefits of this bill. This question should have been settled in the drawing up of the bill by the plainest principles of law and common sense. But in Congress, as well as in almost every political department of the country, we have a set of demagogues who are eternally at the game of currying favor with the foreign classes, who appear to think the popularity with them can alone secure political snoccess, and who, to obtain it, stand ready at any time to sacrifice every thing, their own honor (which would, probably, not be much of a sacrifice,) and the rights of their fellow-citizens (which would.) Thus, one Senator endeavored to introduce a provision immediately admitting to the benefits of the bill not only foreigners at present in the country, whether naturalized or not, but also all such as may hereafter come!

What is this but offering a premium for the unlimited increase of the present enormous migration from all parts of the world, which boasts among us people of every race and grade, literally from the lowest social grades? Should we not, judging from some recent experience, rather desire to discourage than invite the great flood of human beings pouring in upon us from nearly every populated region of the globe—Ireland, Germany, China, etc., and, by-and-by, perhaps Japan?

But setting aside altogether the question of policy, how can the wholesale rendering up of the public domain to strangers be justified? Should we, under the rush of tens of thousands which would immediately commence, how long would the Government have estates to distribute gratuitously among its own citizens? That striking song which long ago sagacious squinted at a homestead law,

"Uncle Sam is rich enough
To give us each a farm," seems to have been taken as a text by some of the gentlemen who have labored upon this bill; but in a few years it might happen that the unsupported assertion of the extent of Uncle Sam's resources as a landed proprietor would become rather unsatisfactory.

The Japan Treaty.

This document, which has been so long anxiously looked for, was ratified by the Senate on the 15th inst., and is now before the country. We publish it in another column, and our readers can form their own opinions in regard to the importance of the first result of this famous enterprise, which has made almost as much noise in the world as the filibustering expeditions of Narciso Lopez and Nicholas I. The persons who expected an immediate opening of the Japanese ports to the establishment of direct commercial relations, will be disappointed; and those who believed nothing which ever would be accomplished, will find themselves mistaken. That is about all it amounts to for the present. But, although what has been conceded by these exclusive, inside barbarians, may not be considered intrinsically important, it seems natural that those slight concessions should lead to results of much greater magnitude.

It is evident, from the cautious shape which provisions for barter and exchange were made to assume before being inserted in the treaty, that the Japan ruiers will postpone practical commercial relations to a period as distant as possible; but that they will finally be established, there can be but little doubt. Articles 6th and 7th are rather amusing, and the impression created by reading them is that Jonathan's reputation for shrewdness in making a swap or driving any sort of bargain is as well known among the Japanese as any where else, and that they have made due preparation to meet it.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

HYMENEAL:

MARRIED—In this city, on the 11th inst. by the Rev. C. Goodrich, Mr. EDWARD T. BYRNE, of Childen co., Ireland, and Miss ISABELLA J. DAVIDSON, of Belfast, Ireland.

OBITUARY:

DIED—At Jackson, Miss., on the 20th of June, 1854, HAYNES P. BAIRD, aged 20 years and 5 months.

Combining, probably, more ennobling qualities of head and heart than ordinarily falls the lot of mortals—delighting in the pursuit of knowledge—first among his favorite authors was the learned theologian and subtle writer Dick—his mind was early led to contemplate Nature and revere Nature's God. He became a strict disciplinarian and moralist. He remained unchanged in opinion, until last fall, in November, at a camp-meeting held near Springville, in this parish, he sought and found the pearl of great price—the pardon of his sins, and peace with his God. And although he had been a questioner in reference to revivals and excitements, doubting the existence of heart-felt religion, and opposed to shouting, he was so powerfully and wonderfully blessed, that his joy burst forth in sweet exclamation—"Glory to God in the highest—my soul is happy. Hallelujah to the Lamb." And this circumstance in his life told with wonderful effect upon the young men of his acquaintance; and many who had occupied the seat of the scoffer, were seen thronging around the altar, crying "What shall we do to be saved?"

In April last he started for college, to be absent for several years, or long enough to complete his studies. In the last letter written by him to the writer, his language was—"My earthly aspirations are all gone; death has now no terrors for me, and life no charms, save to die in peace at home."

"Gone in the prime of youth—
Gone ere thy heart had felt earth's withering care;
Ere the stern world had soiled thy spirit's truth,
Or sown dark sorrow there.

Fond hearts were beating high—
Fond eyes were watching for the loved one gone;
And gentle voices, deeming thou wert nigh,
Talked of thy glad return.

But now, loved one, farewell—
To thee, we trust, a happier life is given:
Nor tie for us to earth has lost its spell,
Another formed in Heaven.

BUTHELL.

Natchitoches parish, La."

DIED—In Smith county, Texas, June 23, 1854, of Consumption, JULIA ANN KENENY, consort of William Kenedy.

She professed religion and joined the M. E. Church in August, 1838, and lived a faithful Christian.

Too much could not be said in her praise as a wife, a mother and neighbor—particularly in visiting the sick. But she was not only called to do, but to suffer the will of the Lord. For sixteen months she was confined to her bed and room—a very fair test of her piety. It seemed that in her the Lord designed to convince us how much a Christian could suffer without murmuring. The writer frequently visited, talked and prayed with her, and always found her tranquil; sometimes very happy. At last, after having given some general directions with regard to her burial, selected three favorite hymns to be sung at her funeral, and requesting that Bro. BARR, an old Alabama friend and pastor would preach her funeral, she expired in the arms of her husband, whispering to the last the all-conquering love of Jesus.

June 27, 1854. J. W. FIELDS, Pastor.

Southern C. Advocate please copy.

WILLIAM CADE THOMPSON was born in Mongo county, Ala., on the 15th Feb'y, 1826, and died of Consumption, in Dayton, on the 7th May last.

Having lost hie parents very early in life, he was transferred to the guardianship of a kind uncle, who watched over his important trust with becoming interest. Our deceased brother was partly educated in this community, and when sufficiently advanced, was sent to Chapel Hill College, N. C., where he remained sometime. At the age of sixteen he professed religion and joined the M. E. Church; in which he lived and died an acceptable member. His parents left him a handsome estate; the knowledge of which did not have the effect of pushing him forward to premature manhood, in opposition to the restraints and counsel of guardian and friends, as is often the case. Unlike many young men, he never prided himself upon his possessions, nor arrogantly claimed obeisance from the hands of the public generally, nor squandered the hard earnings of parental toil and frugality in riotous living; but amid the abundant means of worldly pleasure, he was attracted by higher and nobler objects. Vain, worthless, he counted all these things but loss. The "greater riches"—"the treasure in Heaven"—"the inheritance of the Saints"—all centered upon his affections, and regulated his life. After coming of age, he dedicated not only himself, but his means to the service of God. With them he befriended the poor, assisted the needy and distressed; and, in fact, readily responded to the various calls of benevolence upon him. He regarded the Gospel as having a claim upon his property: promptly and liberally met it whenever presented, and failed not to remember it in his last will and testament.

He was remarkable as a strictly conscientious man. Whether in business or pleasure, home or abroad—under all circumstances, he exercised himself to have always a conscience void of offense toward God and toward men. In this respect his integrity had become a proverb. With all his strictness, instead of austerity, there was the complaisant smile, the gentle voice, the modest air, which at once made his address agreeable and dispossessing. He was seldom exoited, but even-tempered, unobtrusive and quiet—unless in his hearing—not wise in his own conceit, but condescending to men of low estate; acted without dissimulation—abhorred that which was evil, cleaved to that which was good. It is not surprising, therefore, that he should have been so universally beloved. His life, not only in the estimation of the pious, but of the ungodly, was a pattern of uprightness—his death, the fullest confirmation of his principles as a Christian. "A good man, a better man," were the encomiums pronounced upon him by all classes, on the day of his burial, as with mournful hearts and tearful eyes he was borne to his resting-place. It would be useless to add that he had innocence: he seemed not to have the faintest idea of its extent. In community he was a useful citizen—in the Church an efficient officer, as steward, class-leader and Sabbath S. Superintendent. He felt a deep interest in all the affairs of the Church—he loved her ministry especially. As a follower of Christ, he was meek, consistent, faithful—enjoying much of the life and power of godliness. Experimental religion was his theme in health and sickness—in life and death. The love of God absorbed his thoughts—filled his soul, and broke loose from his stammering tongue as he grappled with his last enemy.

He was fond of the retirement of domestic life, and so far as duty would allow, withheld himself from every thing which rendered him conspicuous or prominent. His little family gathered around him as the great center of attraction, and under a well organized plan of religious duties, clearly exhibited with him those principles which governed his life. But how sad the havoc which death has made upon that happy household within a few months past! Little Thurza, an infant daughter, was taken away about the close of last year. Fannie, a lovely and interesting child of about three years, but a few weeks before her father's death, while in vigorous health, was snatched from the tender embraces of her fond parents in a most sudden and melancholy manner. He lived just long enough to see his last child die, then died himself. But there is one who survives them all—a devoted wife and affectionate mother, mourning the absence of husband and children. She stands alone upon the wreck to muse upon buried hopes, and behold the floating fragments of earth's dearest joys.

Thus has passed away one who endeavored with fidelity to discharge the many duties arising from the various relations of life. We are all sadly bereaved—his wife, his servants, the community, the Church—all, all mourn his loss. JAS. A. HEARD, Pastor.

RESOLUTIONS OF DAYTON QUAR. CONFERENCE.

WHEREAS we have been greatly afflicted in the death of our highly esteemed and much beloved Brother, WM. C. THOMPSON, who, in the prime of life and much usefulness, has been removed from the deliberations of this body, the communion of the Church, an influential position in society, and the embraces of his family: therefore,

Resolved, That in the life of our deceased Brother, he has left us a brilliant example of Christian faithfulness, unwavering integrity, and, above all, that charity which suffereth long and is kind, which doth not behave itself unseemly, is not easily provoked, rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth;—and in his death a clear and satisfactory illustration of the excellence of the knowledge of Christ, the triumphant power of faith, and the peacefulness of the Christian's end.

Resolved, That we are painfully sensible of the vacuum made in this body and the Church by the decease of our beloved Brother, who served us as an efficient steward and leader; and while we mourn his loss, would humbly pray to submit with becoming resignation to the afflicted Providence thus visited upon us.

Resolved, That we deeply sympathise with that one who in widowed bereavement, more than all others, mourns his departure, and earnestly beseech that God may sustain and comfort her in this the hour of her greatest affliction.

Resolved, That the Secretary present a copy of the above to the bereaved companion of our deceased Brother, and forward the same to the N. O. Christian Advocate for publication. (Signed)

JOSHUA T. HEARD, P. E.
JAS. L. TERRELL, Sec'y.

Dayton, Ala., June 26, 1854.

DR. JOHN W. DANKS, of the parish of Terrebonne, La., died at the residence of A. M. Gwin, Issaquena county, Miss., on the 16th June; aged 55 years.

He had been a resident of Louisiana since 1836. Two months before his death he, with his wife and two children, came to this country on a visit to their relatives with the hope of some improvement in his health. Being a physician, he knew his case was almost hopeless; yet he was most anxious, on account of his family, to have his health restored.

Dr. Danks was not a member of any Church, but was a friend to religion and the religious. No man out of the Church ever took more pleasure in entertaining Christians than he did. When this obituary is read by the preachers who have been on the Terrebonne circuit, they can testify to his kindness to them.

It will be gratifying to his friends to hear that four months previous to his death, he betook himself to reading the Scriptures and private prayer; and his reading and prayer were not in vain. One week before his death a friend asked him if he was willing to die. To this he answered, "oh, no;" and pointing to his wife and children, he said that he had been living with them too long, and loved them too dearly, to be willing to be severed from them. He was then asked if he felt prepared to die. After a moment's reflection he replied—that he had been praying, and would continue to pray as long as life lasted. The next day, hearing several portions of Scripture read, he suddenly turned to his wife and said, "oh how happy I am;" where is your brother? Tell him to come to me to help me rejoice." When Mr. Gwin came, he continued rejoicing and praising his Saviour until he was exhausted. He exhorted his wife to meet him in Heaven. He said to Mr. Gwin: "You know there is no humbug about me; when I say a thing you know I mean it. I love my Saviour, and I love all my fellow creatures. Death has now lost its terrors."

He lived one week after this, all the time in his perfect sonses; during which he constantly expressed his gratitude to God for hearing his prayers. His face was ruddy with love while passing through the dark valley of the shadow of Death.

W. C. BOOTHE.

JAMES CHANLER, the subject of this notice, was born 1791; converted 1827, at a camp-meeting near Bellville, Conecuh county, Ala., and died at his residence near Orion, Ala., on the 6th of June, in the triumphs of living faith.

Bro. Chanler was a good man, a devoted Christian. Though poor, yet owing to the integrity of his Christian character, he shone out as a light, and wielded a happy influence in his community. We feel our loss. His family has lost their strong stay. May God bless and sustain them. J. B. RABB.

Punch says the man who plants a birch tree little knows what he is conferring on posterity.

Notices.

Camp-meeting.

There will be a Camp-meeting at the Crescent camp-ground, four miles from this place, to commence on Friday the 25th of August.

S. ARMSTRONG, P. E.

Auburn, Ala., July 6, 1854.

Special Notice.

All orders for Books and communications relating to the business of our Agency and Publishing House, should be addressed, for the present, and until further notice is given, to the undersigned, at Louisville, Ky. Orders east of the mountains, can be forwarded, until other arrangements are made, to Bishop John Early, Richmond, Va. Every effort on our part will be made to commence operations in this city at the earliest possible day. In the meanwhile, however, an ample supply of our publications will be kept on hand by the house of McFerrin & Hunter, with whom we have made an arrangement by which all orders will be filled at our usual rates.

STEVENSON & OWEN.

Nashville, Tenn., June 7, 1854.

Notice.

In consequence of my detention at the General Conference, and my necessary absence since its adjournment, on a trip to Mississippi, the July number of the Quarterly Review will not appear at its usual time. Its issues will be prompt thereafter. Having been reappointed its editor, and being determined that it shall meet the expectations of its friends, I would hereby entreat our brethren in the ministry and the laity, to send us new subscribers, to make collections of the old, and to promote its circulation, as the only journal of the kind belonging to the M. E. Church, South. DAVID S. DOGGETT.

June 3, 1854.

Special Notice.

It was announced by our predecessor—the Rev. Dr. Early—that a considerable amount of out-standing claims, against ministers and others, within the limits of the Southern Church, had been transferred to him under the New York adjustment. Their accounts, notes, etc., being now in our possession, we take this method of saying to all concerned, that we are most anxious to have them closed up at the earliest possible day. With a view to the accomplishment of this very desirable object, we take the liberty of suggesting to those who may be involved in these liabilities, the propriety of communicating with us at once, in relation to the final settlement of these claims, without waiting to be directly and officially called on by us for that purpose. And as we shall need, in the course of a few months at most, all the funds that may be realized on these accounts, we would, therefore, respectfully solicit remittances at the earliest convenience of those against whom these claims exist. Our address, for the time being, is Louisville, Ky.

STEVENSON & OWEN, Agents.

June 22, 1854.

List of Remittances

Received at the Office of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, from 14th to 27th July, inclusive.

A—T. Y. Armstrong, $22; J. W. Adams, $7.

B—G. W. Brown, $6.

C—D. C. B. Connerly, $10; T. A. Compton, $1 50.

D—S. J. Davies, $18.

E—G. F. Ellis, $3.

H—C. J. Halberg, $10; W. B. Hines, $1; J. T. Heard, $7; S. Hawes, $12; J. M. Hampton, $2; J. C. Huckabee, $2.

M—J. M. Murchison, $1 50; J. McCune, $1 50; W. Murrah, $10; J. C. McDaniel, $2.

P—J. M. Patton, $6; W. J. Powers, $15.

R—S. P. Richardson, $6; T. Y. Ramsey, $10.

S—F. W. Sharbrough, $3.

T—S. Thompson, $2; W. E. Turner, $3.

W—Mrs. S. Wicks, $1 50; Mrs. M. A. Walker, $2.

Y—W. Yarbrough, $2.

General Intelligence.

CHARITY HOSPITAL.—The following is the weekly report of this institution for the week ending at 5 o'clock on Saturday evening, July 22: Admissions, 235; discharges, 178; deaths, 21. Total remaining, 534. Of the deaths, there was one from yellow fever—making the second death from that cause since the termination of the last epidemic.

INTERMENTS.—The following is a report of the number of interments in all the cemeteries of the city for the week ending at 5 o'clock on Sunday morning, July 23:

Protestant Hired street	14	Catholic No 1	11
Odd Fellows' Rest	1	Catholic No. 2	14
Cypress Grove, No. 1	7	St. Vincent de Paul	36
" 2	19	Lafayette, 4th District	31
Charity Hospital	17	Hebrew, Lafayette
St. Patrick's	22
Total			169

The number last week was 129, and the preceding week 191.

The number of interments during the week ending on the 22d inst., in Mobile, was only twenty-four. The Advertiser says, that "an inspection of the report will show a remarkable exemption from the more violent diseases usually considered as more or less prevalent at this season of the year, and that the city is at present enjoying a high degree of health."

Mobile and New Orleans beyond doubt are at present the two healthiest cities in the United States. May they continue to be so!

FIRST RECEIPT OF NEW COTTON THIS SEASON. The steamship Charles Morgan, which arrived yesterday from Indianola and Galveston, brought two bales of cotton, from this season's crop—one bale raised on the plantation of R. H. Wafford and consigned to Oakey & Hawkins; the other raised on the plantation of J. Wimbish and consigned to the firm of Foarn, Donegan & Co.

The Colt case investigating Committee are very hard at work. The Washington Star says that between fifteen and twenty persons have been summoned to testify before them, and Messrs. Clingman, Dickerson and Clemens—the two latter of counsel for Mr. Colt—have been examined. On Sunday evening a third deputy of the sergeant-at-arms started North after witnesses. The impression is prevailing that the examination will not sustain the charge of bribery.

The New Hampshire Legislature adjourned sine die on Saturday, the 15th, after a session of about six weeks. Among the acts passed are the following: To prevent false and fraudulent issues of stock in the banks, railroad and other companies; making cities and towns liable for damages caused by mobs and riots; and to empower married women to make testamentary disposition of their estates.

THE CHOLERA IN CHICAGO.—The dreadful scourge is abating at Chicago, as well as in St. Louis. The deaths on the 14th numbered 48,

The News.

The accounts from Europe by the Niagara, which sailed three days later than the Franklin, confirm some previous particulars and admit, for a wonder, that the Turks have at length suffered a defeat at the hands of the Russians. The Austrian movement, although the London Times endeavors to put on a show of confidence, is still looked upon with suspicion, as holding more danger to the cause of the Allies than to that of the Czar. The reply of the latter to the demand of Austria for the evacuation of the Principalities, although its precise terms had not expired, was well understood to be of that character which would lead to no directly decisive results, and would not interfere with their plan of co-operation, if they have one.

From Spain the accounts do not materially differ with those previously received; but it is certain that the insurgents were making headway, and, whether successful or not, it is not thought possible for the present corrupt Government to exist much longer.

From Mexico we have nothing of importance and little of interest. The latest revolution appears to be about terminated, although the death of its leader is not confirmed.

The Texas papers are filled with accounts of murders and crimes of other descriptions California is generally supposed to take precedence in respect to crime and rascality. She had better begin to look to her laurels.

The transaction of much important business yet awaiting the consideration of Congress is at present suffering unnecessary obstruction from the seemingly interminable debate on the Homestead Bill, and the petty personal quarrels growing out of it. One day we have Senators Clayton and Wade engaging in an angry altercation, in which invective and personal abuse are crowned by giving the lie; and the next we have Senators Clay and Sumner amusing themselves in the same style, at the expense of the precious time of the Senate, and of all decorum and decency. Among other important business kept back by these senseless bickerings is the Appropriation Bill for the repairs and extension of our coast defences and fortifications. The importance and utility of a steady, constant progress in the construction and perfection of defences for most if not all our seaport cities, will be better appreciated, probably, when many of them have been pillaged and laid waste by some powerful maritime antagonist; for we may chance to get by the ears with some such long before we have annexed the whole Western hemisphere. The capture of our Seat of Government and the narrow escape of our own city, New Orleans, during the last war with Great Britain, have been forgotten, and the possibility of a recurrence of such scenes is regarded with indifference, or as a bug-bear of idle fancy. Yet prudence and common sense teaches that they may be expected again.

Gen. Houston has been elected an honorary member of the society of the "Brothers of the Union," of Yale College.

DROWNED.—The Mobile Advertiser of the 23d inst. says, during a squall in the lower bay on Friday afternoon, while three men in a small boat were engaged in recovering a spar which had broken loose belonging to the ship Windsor Castle, the boat capsized and one of the men named Douglass, mate of the vessel, was drowned. The other two saved themselves by clinging to the boat until assistance was rendered from the ship. The mate sunk immediately and his body up to last evening had not been recovered. He was shipped in New Orleans about fourteen days since. His effects are in the hands of Capt. Richard L. Austin, and can be obtained by application to him or to the owner of the ship, Mr. A. S. Dumec.

DESERTIONS FROM THE ARMY.—A writer in the New York Journal of Commerce says, out of eight thousand soldiers in the army, it is believed that three thousand deserted last year. What is the cause of men growing so disgusted with the service? Is it the treatment they receive, or are persons enlisted who are not fit to be employed on any public duty?

THE STEAMSHIP FRANKLIN.—We learn from the New York Times that the steamship Franklin, which went ashore on the morning of the 17th inst. on Long Island beach, off Moriches, is in rather a bad condition. When she first went on she stopped about 600 feet from the beach, and during the night of Monday went about 300 feet nearer. She is laying broadside on, with a list off-shore; the in-shore wheel is about four feet out of water. Some of the residents of the island say they consider it extremely doubtful whether she will get off, as a bar is forming outside of her. All the passengers and mails have been landed in safety.

DISTRESSING ACCIDENT.—An interesting lad, named Walter Branch, son of Captain Robert H. Branch, was accidentally killed near Petersburg on Monday last, by a shot from a gun in the hands of his brother, Peter Branch. The Express says:

"They were out hunting in the county of Dinwiddie, about three miles from Wilson's Depot, near the Southside Railroad, at the time of the melancholy occurrence. The shot entered the upper portion of the body, producing instant death. The distressed brother immediately gave the alarm to the nearest neighbors, and medical aid was procured with much promptness, but too late, as the little fellow's spirit had winged its way to another and brighter world long before any physician arrived."

The Huntsville (Ala.) Democrat understands that the Directors of the Memphis and Charleston Railroad have sold $400,000 of their 7 per cent. bonds to their own stockholders and other capitalists of the Tennessee Valley, on the terms proposed by them. This, it is stated, will enable the Company, with their other means, to lay their track through Alabama (150 miles) except 25 miles of iron west of Tuscumbia.

A meeting was held at Bladon, Ala, on the 20th inst., for the purpose of providing ways and means to connect that place with the Mobile and Ohio Railroad. If this project is carried out, the facility of going to and returning from the Springs, the waters of which have not their equal in the United States, will make Bladon what our talented townsman who addressed the meeting said it would be—the "Saratoga of the South." Books will be opened at the next meeting, the first Monday of August, for taking stock in the road.

It is estimated that some fifty thousand sailors have been withdrawn from commerce in consequence of the present European war: about 35,000 of the number being taken by the Anglo-French allies in order to man their fleets for the Baltic and Black Seas, and about 20,000 Russian sailors being blockaded in the ports of their own country. There was a scarcity of seamen before this war, but the withdrawal of these 35,000 English and French sailors has greatly augmented the deficiency. The new apprenticeship system of the United States will do much to supply a remedy.

The Town Council of Marion, Ala., fixed the license for retailing liquor at $1500 per annum, thinking that this would prevent all applications. An enterprising individual was, however, about to open a shop even at this figure, when the Council met and raised the license to $3000.

TELEGRAPHIC.

NEW YORK, July 21.—The Collins steamer Pacific arrived here at 6 o'clock this evening, bringing dates from Liverpool to the 12th inst., four days later than the accounts brought by the Niagara. The following is a summary of her news:

Liverpool Markets.

LIVERPOOL, July 12.—There has been a fair demand in the Cotton market here since the departure of the Niagara, and the sales of the four days embrace about 25,000 bales, of which 2000 have been taken for speculation and 5000 for export. Prices have been rather drooping, and Brown, Shipley & Co. report a decline of 1-16d. for most descriptions, with a dull market at the close. Milligan, Evans & Co. report a moderate demand from the trade and for export, and quote as follows: Fair Orleans, 6¾d.; Middling Orleans, 5¾d.; Fair Uplands, 6¼d.; Middling Uplands, 5¼d. per pound.

The market for Breadstuffs has been dull and declining. Flour has fallen off in price 1s. per barrel, and closes at 35s. 6d. for Western Canal, and 36s. 6d. per barrel for Ohio. Corn is also lower, and is quoted at 34s. 6d. per quarter for Yellow and White. Bacon has declined 1 to 2s. per cwt.

Money Market.

Money has been in demand at full rates. Consols have declined to 91¾.

General News.

NEGOTIATIONS.—The Emperor of Russia is forcing Austria into negotiations. Strong suspicions are entertained of the good faith of Austria toward the allies.

It is rumored that a secret diplomatist has arrived in London, sent by the Emperor of Russia. During the new negotiations for peace, it is reported that the Emperor of Russia will withdraw his troops from the Principalities into his own territory.

BLACK SEA.—The advices from the Black Sea report no further battles of importance.

THE BALTIC.—The Anglo-French fleet have withdrawn temporarily from before Cronstadt, and retired to Faro Island.

PRUSSIA AND AUSTRIA.—The King of Prussia has sent a special messenger to the Emperor of Austria, urging him to refrain from further co-operation with England and France, against Russia, and proposing that Austria should join Prussia in commencing new negotiations for peace.

Spanish Insurrection.

The accounts from Madrid with regard to the Spanish insurrection are very conflicting. The insurgents are said to maintain their ground in the city, but the country does not rise in their favor. Another account states that the insurgents are retreating towards Andalusia.

Important from Central America

San Juan Bombarded and Destroyed.

NEW YORK, July 25.—The Nicaragua steamer has arrived here, bringing information that on the 14th instant the sloop-of-war Cyane bombarded and entirely destroyed the town of San Juan, in consequence of the late insult to Mr. Borland, American Minister to Central America, the authorities of the place refusing to apologize.

Cholera in New York.

NEW YORK, July 24.—The deaths from cholera last week in this city amounted to one hundred and seventy-five.

Steamer Franklin.

NEW YORK, July 25.—The steamer Franklin is now going rapidly to pieces. Nearly all her cargo has been saved.

THREE DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE

Arrival of the Niagara at Halifax—Battle near Silistria—2500 Russians Killed—The Turks Defeated in Asia.

HALIFAX, Tuesday, July 18, 1854.—The royal mail steamship Niagara, Captain Leitch, from Liverpool on the morning of the 8th instant, arrived at Halifax at 5 o'clock on the afternoon of the 18th.

From the Baltic.

Sir Charles Napier's fleet was laying in line-of-battle before Cronstadt, but up to June 29 no attack had been made. The English frigate Desperate fired some shots, which the batteries returned.

Homersund was a second time bombarded on the 26th and 27th of June, and the fortifications were destroyed.

The Black Sea.

On the 24th of June, eight Russian steamers came out of Sebastopol, and attacked three of the allied ships at the batteries. The allied ships engaged were the Furious, Terrible and Descartes. The latter seems to have been a running fight. The Furious was considerably damaged. The main body of the allied fleet was at Baldjik.

Some English boats taking soundings at the mouth of the Dnieper had exchanged fires with some Cossacks.

The Danube.

On the 21st and 22d ult. an important battle was fought. The particulars are derived from a dispatch stating that the Turks under Giroltz, Meher Pasha, fell on the Russian rear-guard of 25,000 near Silistria, on the 21st. The battle lasted during two days, and the Russians lost 2500 killed; they, however, made good their retreat.

The Russians continued their concentration toward the Soreth and Pruth, but apparently mean to return to Matshin, Isaktsha and Tultsha, on the right bank of the Danube.

The plan of the campaign and the movements of the allied army are kept profoundly secret.

50,000 Anglo-French troops are still at Varna, until St. Arnaud and Prince Napoleon are also there.

Gen. Bosquet's French division has left Adrianople for Shumla.

On the 22d the cannonade in the attack on the Russian rear guard was heard by the French, and Gen. Canrobert sent two squadrons to reconnoitre.

Omer Pasha is prepared to establish his headquarters at Rustchuk.

The communications from the Danube are kept open as far as Slatova by the Turkish flotilla.

On the 1st of July, Gorchakoff removed his headquarters from Kalaresh to Wiyltsent.

Gen. Baraguay D'Hilliers commands the division of the French army presently embarking for the Baltic.

The English line-of-battle ships St. Vincent, Royal William, Algiers, Hannibal, Termegant, steamer Sphynx and others, are embarking the force at Cherbourg.

Asia.

From Asia the news is bad.

On the 19th of June, the Turks met with a severe check in attempting to storm two redoubts between Usurgnot and Kutais. The Russians attacked them in the flank during the assault, and defeated them with 1500 to 2000 killed, 13 cannons, 35 standards, and the entire camp equipage captured.

An erroneous dispatch was published, reversing the fact, and stating that the Turks under Selim Pasha had defeated the Russians under Prince Audronkoff, with the above loss—but reliable accounts show that the Turks were disastrously defeated.

The crew of the English steam frigate Sanspareil are fortifying Sinkuni Kale, and the crew of the English frigate Samson are fortifying Estrluchid at Reout Kaleh.

Greece.

It is announced that Hadji Petros had been completely routed at Kaladaka, in Thessaly, and the rebellion is now considered at an end. The harvest in Greece was every where abundant. Piracy was increasing.

French troops continued to arrive.

Cholera is reported to have made its appearance in the garrison of Cronstadt, also some cases in the British fleet.

It is affirmed that Duke Alexander is about to join the Russian army in Moldavia.

Warsaw is being doubly fortified.

Fourteen neutral merchant ships, now in Riga, have petitioned Admiral Napier to permit them to leave.

Later from Texas.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAMSHIP CHARLES MORGAN.

The steamship Chas. Morgan arrived at her wharf at an early hour yesterday morning. By this arrival we have dates from Galveston to the 23d, and our usual exchanges from the interior.

We cannot yet learn, (says the Galveston News,) that Gen. Smith has acted, or is preparing to make use of the authority given him by the President, to call for Texas troops for the purpose of aiding in the protection of our frontier. Indeed, we have heard it asserted that no such call will probably be made.

The News says that the business season has now pretty well closed in Galveston, but still improvements appear to be going forward with considerable activity.

FILIBUSTERS IN KENTUCKY.—R. M. Johnson and John Haldeman, it is stated, have been arrested at Lexington, Ky., charged with being engaged in enlisting troops for the Cuban expedition. The Louisville Courier says it is well known that a company has been organized in that city, and it is well known the same thing has been done at Hopkinsville, Bowling Green and other places.

ANNEXATION OF THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.—A dispatch to the New York Tribune, dated Washington, July 9, has the following items:

I have positive and undeniable information from the highest sources at Honolulu, to the effect that a treaty is about concluded between Mr. Gregg, the United States Commissioner, and the Government of the Islands, for their annexation to the United States forthwith. The only unsettled question in relation to the annexation is, whether the Islands shall come in as a Territory or a State. Mr. Gregg insists on the former. The Administration here at Washington is perfectly advised as to the position of the negotiations.

"This is kept a profound secret at Honolulu to all out of the court circle. The King and Privy Council have the constitutional power to make the treaty, and in fear of filibustering or something else in the way of foreign invasion, they are exercising it. The native population is undoubtedly opposed to annexation, while the majority of the foreign residents desire it.

Things in Japan.

The Charleston Mercury has a letter from a gentleman connected with the Japan expedition. He says the country is so favorably situated that it produces in an abundance almost every valuable product that can be found in the world. The soil is so fertile that it is capable of maintaining a more dense population than any other space of the same size on the face of the globe. The skill and industry of the people in agriculture is so great that they are said to surpass any other people, and from what we have seen in walking over the country for miles around this bay, the half has not been told.

Of the mechanical arts he says:

"Their skill in working the precious metals and iron and copper is quite equal to that of varnishing and beautifying of wood. We see daily and in common use, satins and silks, and crapes and velvets, as good and as handsome as can be made any where. The fabric is peculiar, and seems to be more durable than in our world. The patterns and colors are varied and tasteful as the most exquisite fancy could desire. Who can venture to say what this country wants? Who could make up a cargo and bring it here, and have any sort of assurance that he had one single article that the people really required, or that they would be anxious to purchase? Some would fix on "Yankee Notions," but they would find that the Japanese did not fancy notions. Some would select cotton goods. These they could sell cheaper than the Japanese can make them; but they must make the cloth as good and handsome as the Japanese domestic manufactures; and besides, it must have on it the hundreds and thousands of badges and coats of arms of the serfs and slaves worn constantly by them to designate their grade, and to whom they belong. There is, perhaps, not an individual in the Empire who does not wear on his dress a badge of distinction, woven or dyed in the cloth."

The writer says they look with curiosity upon the Railroad, Telegraph and agricultural instruments. They admire also our steamships. They look with awe and dread at our large cannon. These they appreciate fully, and they would like to possess them, for they are more bold, and warlike, and independent than any Eastern nation, and in this point they feel deeply their inferiority to us. These they will imitate as well as they can, and our visit will make them stronger, though they may be more weak in the end.

THE SPANISH REVOLUTION.—The following letter, dated Madrid, June 30, we find in the news brought by the Franklin:

To-day's Gazette contains Royal decrees depriving Lieutenant-General Leopold O'Donnell, Major General Felix Murin de Messina, and Lieutenant General Antonio Ros de Olano, of all rank, honors, titles and decorations. By other decrees a Lieutenant of the Civic Guard, and a Captain of the regiments of Estremadura, are promoted—the first for refusing to join the insurrection when he happened to fall into the hands of the insurgents; the second for endeavoring to prevent it, in doing which he was wounded. Crosses and small pensions are also granted to two corporals and four soldiers, for similar good conduct, and one of the corporals receives an ensign's epaulette. This and the crosses were given by the Queen herself, through the hands of General Quesada, Governor of Madrid, at a review of the garrison yesterday evening, at 7 o'clock, in the Prado.

Her Majesty was in an open carriage, accompanied by her husband and daughter, and followed by a brilliant staff. After it had driven along the line, the Royal equipage was surrounded by officers, the troops were formed as near as possible, and the Queen addressed them. At a very moderate distance from the mass of military it was impossible to distinguish a word she said, but she smiled and did her best to look gracious, and held up her child to the troops, as if confiding it to their protection. If there were in the breasts of Spanish military men a spark of sympathy with their Sovereign and of attachment to her throne, it ought surely to have flashed forth on this occasion. A youthful Sovereign, in her hour of peril, presents herself in the midst of her troops, and confides herself and her infant daughter to their protection, placing an epaulette and cross upon the shoulders and breasts of soldiers whose loyalty had been proof against seduction.

I think it an ominous sign for the Queen of Spain that at no period of yesterday's review was a single mark of enthusiasm or affection shown either by officers, soldiers or people. Not a viva or a shout was heard, not a voice was raised in acclamation. This silence was so evident, so marked, and was noted by so large a concourse of persons, that even the Official Gazette and the as official Heraldo dare not assert it to have been broken. The latter journal says, "It is difficult to describe the enthusiasm with which the troops received their Sovereign." The phrase is well chosen, for it is certainly difficult to describe that which did not exist. After the review, the Royal equipage was stationed in the Cano Alcala, and the troops marched past. They looked very well, smart and clean, although somewhat fagged by the severe work they have had these last few days, long marches, escort duty, patrols and very little sleep. The Queen was dressed in white. Among the officers surrounding her were Generals Lara, Quesada (who commanded the parade), Cordova, Campuzano, Duke of Ahumada, Matoy Alos, Count Nistahormosa. After the review, the Queen took a drive, and returned to the Palace about 10 o'clock, passing through the most crowded streets of the capital. She was received with profound silence and complete indifference.

To-day's official papers do not report the words addressed yesterday to the garrison by Queen Isabella, but we may presume they were pretty nearly identical with the short speech which she addressed to the troops upon the night of her arrival from the Escurial, and which is published to-day. The following is a translation:

"Soldiers! I became acquainted this morning with the high crime of treason committed by General Dulce, to whom I had been pleased to confide the direction of cavalry, and with it the honor of its standards. With him other Generals have raised the rebel's banner; you know them well; they are those whom I have most loaded with distinctions and favors; and to day you know them better, as unworthy of my Royal esteem. They have designs against my person, against my throne, and that of my daughter, breaking their oaths and trampling upon the most sacred laws. This I know, and for this reason I hasten to visit your ranks byself, as are all those of the army that remember my childhood. There shall I appreciate your services more nearly; there shall I better witness your triumph. YO LA REINA.

"Madrid, June 28, 1854."

It is said that the Queen was deeply affected by the manner of her reception yesterday by the troops, and that on her return to the palace she burst into a flood of tears. There certainly was very great cause for concern and apprehension on her part.

The Cholera.

NEW YORK.—The total number of deaths in the Franklin Street Hospital, New York city, up to the 20th, were 111. Four or five other hospitals were to be opened in the upper part of the city....In Brooklyn, 4 deaths were reported on the 20th....In Syracuse, 4 cases in one family reported on the 17th....Ten or a dozen fatal cases have occurred in Troy.

NEW JERSEY.—Four deaths had occurred at Trenton....The disease is increasing in Newark, at Rockawny and at Washington....Dr. Benjamin Fisher, probably the eldest physician in the State, died at Port Elizabeth on the 5th, in his 86th year. In connection with a close practice of his profession, he had also labored acceptably as a local preacher in the M. E. Church for a period of about sixty years.

MASSACHUSETTS.—Several deaths occurred on the 20th at Boston....Two or three fatal cases have occurred at Charlestown within the last few days.

MAINE.—Eighteen deaths are reported at Richmond since the 4th inst.

VIRGINIA.—Forty deaths at Richmond within the last two weeks, and the disease is increasing....There were 30 deaths in Wheeling from the 1st to the 15th, not including those from abroad, and 6 from the 15th to the 17th. The disease is abating.

OHIO.—At Toledo, five deaths from the 15th to the 17th....It has appeared in an epidemic form in Mount Vernon. Five members of one family have died....Several cases having occurred at Xenia, a panic seems to have seized upon the people of the village, many of whom are leaving their business and homes in affright....In Smith and in Graham townships, and in Harrisville, many fatal cases had occurred, and a number of persons were suffering from the disease at last accounts....At Crestline there has been considerable excitement respecting the cholera. Twelve Irishmen, at work on the railroad, had died up to the morning of the 13th inst., and the citizens had burned the houses in which they had expired. The friends of the deceased refused to bury the bodies without a priest, and the priest being tardy in his arrival, the citizens feared pestilence, and required interment.

MISSOURI.—Hermann has been decimated. Of a population of 1,000 over 100 have died.... At Jefferson City, the cholera has prevailed to some extent, but it has abated....It has subsided at Independence.

MICHIGAN.—A letter from Detroit states that on the 13th and 14th the deaths by cholera were upward of 70 a day. A well known colored man, aged 104, died on the 18th, after eating very heartily of cherries.

ILLINOIS.—The cholera has ceased as an epidemic in Chicago. The health of that city is getting to be very good. There were only eleven deaths on the 16th, ten on the 17th, and six on the 18th, and all but one of them emigrants.

CANADA.—At Montreal on the 14th, there were 34 deaths by cholera....Ninety-six deaths by cholera had occurred at Hamilton, Canada West, up to the 25th....The Toronto Globe, of the 18th inst., says the city still continues in a comparatively healthy state, and although there have been a few cases of cholera, the disease has not assumed an epidemic character.

The entire track of the Ohio and Indiana Railroad, extending from Crestline, on the Cleveland, Columbus and Cincinnati road, to Fort Wayne, in Indiana, is laid, with the exception of some thirty miles, which is now being put down, and the whole road will be completed and in operation by the 15th of September next.

Hon William A. Graham, late Whig candidate for the Vice Presidency, is a candidate for the the State Senate in the district in which he resides in North Carolina. The next Legislature, of which he is likely to be a member, will have to elect two U. S. Senators. He will probably be one of them.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

FRIDAY, July 28.

COTTON....The demand was very limited yesterday and only some 500 or 600 bales changed hands at easier prices. We yet quote:

NEW ORLEANS CLASSIFICATION.

Inferior	4¼@5¼	Middling Fair	9¾@10¼
Ordinary	6¾@7¼	Fair	10¼@11
Middling	7¾@9	Good F

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Homœopathic Broth.—By Philolycurus

Take a robin's leg—
Mind, the drum-stick merely—
Put it in a tub
Filled with water, nearly.
Set it out of doors,
In a place that's shady;
Let it stand a week—
Three days for a lady.
Dip a spoonful in,
To a five-pail kettle;
It should be of tin,
Or, perhaps, bell-metal.
Fill the kettle up,
Put it on a boiling,
Skim the liquor well
To prevent its oiling.
For thickening and salt,
Take of rice one kernel;
Use, to light the fire,
"The Salina Journal."
Let the liquor boil
Half an hour—no longer:
If 'tis for a man,
You may make it stronger.
Should you now desire
That the soup be flavory,
Stir it once around
With a stalk of summer-savory.
If of thyme you choose
Just to put a match in,
'Twill be flavored fine
If you dip your watch in.
When the broth is done,
Set it by to "jell" it;
Then three times a day
Let the patient smell it.
If by chance he die,
Say 'twas nature did it;
But if he get well,
Give the broth the credit.

An Adventure with a Grizzly;

OR, MY PROSPECTING TOUR.

In the summer of 1850 I was working, with two partners, a claim on the North Fork of the American River, in California. Our lead, which had been a pretty good one, was running out, and we had for some time been discussing the propriety of leaving it and going prospecting. This movement I had opposed for some time, thinking that, as long as we could do reasonably well where we were, it would be bad policy to leave our claim and roam over the country in search of better diggings. One evening, however, when the results of our united day's labor were declared to be five dollars, I came to the conclusion that perhaps we could not do better than make a little trip in the neighborhood for the purpose of prospecting. So, after a little discussion, (as, of course, it would not do for me to come round too suddenly,) it was decided that we should try the experiment the next morning.

The morning dawned, and after stowing away our surplus possessions in the tent, we took our picks and pans, with our blankets and several days provisions, and, separating, sallied in different directions. It was understood that we should return in three or four days to the tent and report progress. After traveling several hours, I sat down to rest during the heat of the day, intending to resume my journey in the afternoon. Stretched on my back under an oak, its cool shade and the stillness of the scene around me soon calmed me to sleep. When I awoke it was late in the afternoon, and I jumped up, somewhat alarmed, as I had intended making a camp some twenty miles off, my stopping-place for that night. Readjusting my blankets on my back, I was about resuming my journey, when my attention was arrested by some singular looking foot prints on the trail. Bending over, I examined them closely, and came to the conclusion that they were those of a grizzly bear. As may be imagined, this discovery was any thing but a pleasant one. I had never seen a grizzly, and was not particularly desirous of making the acquaintance of one, even armed; but now, with nothing but a pick, the thought was any thing but enlivening. I had frequently ridiculed such of my friends as were in the habit of "lugging round" rifles, Colt's revolvers, etc., and laughed at the idea of encumbering ourselves with such useless baggage. But, at the discovery of these tracks, my sentiments underwent an entire change. A whole armory would not have been an unwelcome companion to me then. On examining the tracks, I found that they led in the same direction in which I was going, and that, consequently, I stood a good chance of overtaking my four-footed friend if I hurried; and if I loitered I would be obliged to spend the night alone in the mountains.

Moving along slowly, calculating the chances offered by either of these two plans, I did not observe that I was descending into a little ravine, through which a small stream ran, till I stood on the edge of the creek. I had worked long enough in the diggings to know some of the indications of the existence of the precious metal, and as soon as my attention was directed to the stream, I made up my mind that the dirt was worth "panning out," by way of trial, at once. All thought of the bear was gone. Gold was more potent than grizzly for the nonce, and hastily unslinging my blankets, I got out my pick and pan from my luggage and went to work. My success astonished me. Two ounces from the first pan, and one from the second! Visions of immediate opulence swam before my eyes. Shall I own it? For a moment—only one—I hesitated whether I should go back to my partners, or retain the secret for my own benefit.

By the time I had recovered my senses sufficiently to leave the bright visions of the future, and calmly consider my present condition, the sun was sinking behind the hills. Of course I had no intention of going any further that night, as, by leaving the location in the dark, I might fail to find it again; and I was in no humor to run any such risk. I should have mentioned before that I was not traveling on any trail, but over the mountains, with no guide but my compass and the sun. On feeling in my pocket for my matches to light a fire, I found that I had neglected to bring them. Muttering a slight anathema on my folly in not carrying fire-arms, I munched a piece of hard-bread for my supper, and laid down in my blankets for the night. I lay awake some time looking up into the heavens as the blue vault grew darker and darker, and the stars came out one by one. I remember thinking, just as I went to sleep, that it was the darkest night I had ever seen, and dreamt that I made several millions in the claim I had been prospecting, the whole of which I devoted to lighting the mines with gas.

It must have been midnight when I awoke. My throat was dry and parched, and I got up to quench my thirst at the stream. Bending over, I drank freely, and bathed my head in cold water. I heard a rustling in the bushes behind me, and turned to see what it was. Maria Santissima! a huge black animal was standing on my blankets, devouring my provisions! I once had doubts in regard to the possibility of the human hair assuming under the influence of terror, the erect position asserted by the worthy ghost of Mr. Hamlet's father—but they exist no longer. It seemed to me as if a whole forest stood upon my head! Now what was I to do? The slightest movement would attract the beast's notice, and the idea of furnishing him with a petit souper at my expense was not at all to my liking. I stood in the bushes, looking at the animal half an hour, when, feeling somewhat fatigued, I thought I would try to sit down without attracting his attention. In the performance of this maneuver a few briars and sharp sticks quite plainly notified me that my shirt was my only garment; a fact which the chilly night air would have made apparent but for my fright, which engrossed all my attention. By this time Mr. Bruin had composed himself to slumber in my blankets, and I could hear his deep and regular breathing distinctly. The night was so dark that I could hardly see him, but I came to the conclusion that he was not so large as some of whom I had heard stories related. He was quite large enough, however, in my estimation, to cut off your humble servant in the flower of his youth. Gold is powerful, but I would have given all that I had dreamed of making to have been quietly sleeping in some house or tent within the borders of civilization at that time.

In short an hour—it seemed a long week to me—my visitor got up and walked down to the water, where I heard him drinking, while I indulged in some pious wishes for his strangulation. I was then rejoiced to hear him plunge into the water and force his way through the bushes on the other side. Shivering, I crawled into my blankets again and tried to compose myself to sleep. No sooner had the drowsy god vouchsafed me the slightest wink of slumber, when splash went something into the water again, and the next moment the black form of my boar had come. Home, wife and children, all flitted before my eyes. No kind friend to break to my relatives the tidings of my untimely fate! No comforting assurances of Christian burial! But here, in the wilderness, my form must lie, the prey of the wild beast; and as my bones grew white with exposure and crumbled into dust, my friends, in the heartsickness of hope deferred, would vainly conjecture what had been my fate! Nearer the monster approached, till at last he stood at my feet, when to my surprise he coolly laid his shaggy wet form across them on the top of my blanket. I hardly dared to breathe, every muscle was rigid, and I lay momentarily expecting his attack. My feet grew numb with his weight, and the water from his hair soaked through the blankets and completely chilled me.

A thousand thoughts passed through my mind while the beast lay on my feet. Sometimes I thought that I could remain quiet till morning, when he might get up and move off, leaving me unmolested. Then it would come into my mind that I had heard that a bear would not attack a man unless molested or very hungry. That he could not be in the latter condition, my hopes conjectured from his recent performances on my provisions; and as to my molesting him, no member of the Peace Society of half a century's standing could be less inclined for belligerent operations than I. Then again, the thought would strike me that, as soon as the dawn of day revealed our positions, I should be certain to make a breakfast for my unwelcome guest.

The night wore on. My limbs grew colder and colder, and my hopes fewer and less encouraging; still the bruta slept. My bones ached with being kept so long in one position, and it seemed as if every moment were the last that I could hope to hold out without moving. The animal at last turned over, and gave me an opportunity of assuming a new position. But the relief was only temporary. I still remained in an agony of suspense. How I longed for the daylight. Even the knowledge that my fate was inavitable seemed preferable to this uncertainty. Once or twice I was tempted to move and put an end to the affair, but my fears prevented me. How slowly the night passed away! How I envied the beast on my feet! How false and hollow all the advantages of civilization and superiority in the scale of animal existence seemed in that hour of peril!

At last, morning came. Just as the gray light tinged the eastern sky, a whistle ran through the ravine. Bounding from my feet, the animal burst through the bushes. I rose slowly, with difficulty, on account of my benumbed limbs, and after thanking heaven for my deliverance, began to pack up my "traps," preparatory to moving on to the camp for provisions. I looked around to note the place, and "blazed" several trees. Just as I turned to leave, I heard a man shouting, and the next moment a tall, black-whiskered individual appeared.

"Stranger," said he, "have you seen a big, black St. Bernard dog come along this way?"

I assured the gentleman that no such animal had passed me, and was turning away, being fearful of his discovering that I had been prospecting in the ravine.

"Well, that's rather curious. He had my blankets wrapped on him, and I had to sleep without 'em. Why—see here they are."

And so they were, in the bushes, through which the dog must have passed.

A light broke in upon me. The next moment my surmise was confirmed by the sight of an immense black dog, that came bounding towards us. He was the largest dog I ever saw; and might well have been mistaken for a bear in the night.

"Rather a useful animal that," said I.

"Yes," said he. "he's good to pack; and at night he's equal to half dozen blankets. I have taught him to lie right across my feet. I missed him a good deal last night."

Bidding the owner of the dog good morning, I resumed my journey, and reached the camp in the afternoon. The dinner I then ate would have astonished a Camanche.

The next day I returned to the ravine. The claim proved quite as rich as I had hoped, and a week afterward myself and partners were working there. How successful we were may be inferred from the fact, that I have never since gone "prospecting."

I Wan't There.—By C. S. M.

The following scene actually occurred in a justice court, held in this State some thirty years ago. The plaintiff was a poor wandering Indian, who was grossly abused by a party of young man who had assembled at an inn, and were doubtless intoxicated at the time the assault was committed.

The principal witness was a tall, thin, ill-favored, herring-fed looking man, very quiet and very simple.

"Simon Chokory!"

"Well," replied the original.

"Step forward and remain uncovered while I administer unto you the necessary oath," said the Justice, sternly.

Simon obeyed, as a dog crawls to his master to receive the uplifted lash, simply because he cannot help it.

After giving his evidence in his own manner, in spite of the frequent interruptions of the Justice, who desired to have only the facts relative to the direct case, he was "turned over" to the tender mercies of the counsel for the defence, to undergo the tortures of cross-questioning, which, even to the man of the world in our day, are not pleasant.

"Mr. Chickory, you say that this man was abused. How do you know that he was abused?"

"I see 'em do it."

"Who do you mean by them?"

Simon here named the defendants severally.

"Very well, Mr. Chickory, but what did they do to him?"

"They kicked him, and hit him and knocked him down, besides treating him unhandsomely.

"Do you ever drink?"

"Rather expect I do."

"What do you drink?"

"I ain't no wise particular, just what you please, squire."

"Did you ever drink any of that spirituous liquor called New England rum?"

"I guess as how I have."

"Did you drink during the evening when the assault was committed?"

"A leetle, squire."

"How much, do you think?"

"Not over a pint, I reckon."

"Very well; you said just now that they kicked him. Do you mean that they all kicked him?"

"Sartainly, squire, every body in the room kicked him."

"You are sure?"

"For eartain."

"Then, Mr. Chickory, if every one there kicked him, then you must have kicked him also."

Simon was fairly cornered. He scratched his head and looked very foolish as well as puzzled. At length after some moment's hesitation his face brightened up as though he had mastered something like an idea, and he exclaimed—

"I wan't there."

"Very well, Mr. Chickory, your evidence has been very satisfactory to me, and doubtless has not failed to convince his Honor. You may be seated."

Simon took his seat with that air of importance of one who is conscious at least of giving himself satisfaction, although a titter ran through the motley crowd, and his Honor bit his lips hard to prevent the departure of that gravity necessary for the occasion.

The Indian, although an injured party, lost his case; but the young men, pleased with the unexpected result of their trial, not only made up a handsome purse for him, but allowed Simon to drink his fill of his favorite beverage, and all parties expressed their perfect satisfaction. [Star Spangled Banner.

The Ancient Giants of Finland.—Before the French—so runs the legend—there were the giants; a good while before, we should think, by the account the Finns give of their departure. The Finnish tradition declares: A giant child came one day to her giantess mamma, and showed her a curious insect she held in her apron, and had picked up on the plain. It was a plow, with team and driver. "Alas, my child," said mamma, "this is a token of grief to us. Where this thing appears—small as it looks—we of the old race cannot long abide." And so it proved; and so (we may form some dear guess as to when the Finnish giants went away. For their legacy—so runs the legend—they left the immeasurable masses of ore which were their prodigiously hot ovens and stoves, but which are known to the tiny race of their left, the people say, such an interior warmth in that particular tract of soil that corn grows and ripens during the short summer several degrees north of the points, in Siberia and Canada, where no ear is formed. The flax is the finest known in the world; and even the modern potato ripens in the hoarded warmth of those ancient fires. The monstrous salmon that come wedge-like up the clear frothing rivers were the minnows with which those giants angled for the marine monsters that roll and tumble in the Arctic Seas. The wild swans were their little singing birds; and, if the swan-note be now held discordant, it is through its grief for its departed patrons, and tales are told of the sweetness of that music when heard far away over the boundless swamp, accompanied by the lyre accompaniment of miles of pine forest swept by the night breeze.

Curiosity Raproved.

The Persian Embassador found himself so annoyed while in France by the incatinble curiosity of the fair Parisians, who came in crowds to his residence, avowedly to "look at him," that, at last, he resolved to revenge himself by the following little scheme:

On returning one day from a ride, and finding, as usual, his apartments crowded by ladies, he affected to be charmed by the sight of them; successively pointing to each with his finger, and speaking with earnestness to his interpreter, who he well knew would be afterwards closely questioned as to the purport of his remarks. Accordingly, the eldest of the ladies, who, in spite of her age, probably thought herself the most striking of the whole party, and whose curiosity was particularly excited, after His Excellency had passed through the suite of rooms, coolly inquired what might have been the object of his examination.

"Madam," replied the interpreter, "I dare not inform you."

"But I wish particularly to know, sir."

"Indeed, madam, it is impossible."

"Nay, sir, this reserve is vexatious. I desire to know."

"O, since you insist, madam; know, then, that His Excellency has been valuing you."

"Valuing us! how, sir?"

"Yes, ladies; His Excellency, after the custom of his country, has been setting a price upon each of you."

"Well, that's whimsical enough; and how much may that lady be worth, according to his estimation?"

"A thousand crowns."

"And the other?"

"Five hundred crowns."

"And that young lady with fair hair?"

"Three hundred crowns."

"And that brunette?"

"The same price."

"And that lady who is painted?"

"Fifty crowns."

"And pray, sir, what may I be worth in the tariff of His Excellency's good graces?"

"O, madam, you really must excuse me; I beg—"

"Come, come, no concealments."

"The prince merely said, as he passed you—"

"Well, what did he say?"

"He said, madam, that he did not know the small coin of this country."

A Small Difference.—An editor of considerable experience in the way of squirmers and wrigglers gives the following definition of the difference between an eel and a black-snake:

Many years ago, as we were plodding homewards from the creek, with a basket full of eels, the result of our morning's labor, on our arm, we were suddenly startled by a something wriggling and squirming in our path. The first impression was that one of our eels had escaped, and in an instant had caught him in our hand, when a sudden suspicion that it might be a black-snake caused as sudden a relaxation of the grasp. It being in the middle of a sandy road, there was no difficulty in holding him in "durance vile" until this practical question could be solved. The basket was sat down and its contents carefully counted. There were twelve eels, and no mistake. We had left the creek with just a dozen, but whether it was a common dozen or "a baker's dozen," we could not for our life remember. What was to be done? If this new captive was an eel, and had escaped from our basket, we could not afford to lose the reputation of having caught him, or to miss him from our stew. If it should prove to be a snake, ugh! It would spoil our dinner, and be a bad joke besides. Fortunately, Uncle Solomon came to our relief. "Boy," said he, as with his heel he fulfilled a prophecy, "don't you see the difference; A snake has a round tail; the eel has a flat one."

The Beggar and the Congressman.—On Friday last a lady beggar gained admittance to the rotunda of the Capitol, notwithstanding the watchfulness of the officers, who assiduously endeavor to keep mendicants from annoying persons engaged in Governmental duties. Among others whom she approached for aid was a member of Congress, whom she did not know as such, to whom she told a piteous tale of distress. She was, she said, five hundred miles away from home, without the means to get there, her husband was sick, her children in want, etc. "Indeed, madam," replied the member, desiring to get rid of her importunity, "I am in a worse predicament. I am nine hundred miles away from home, haven't a red cent, and expect every moment to be arrested for board, and may be confined in prison on account of difficulties I have unfortunately got into." The Honorable wiped away a tear, as others felt trickling down the cheeks of the "poor woman." "Indeed, my good lady," said he, "I have had nothing to eat for a week. I feel like hanging myself, I am in such distressed circumstances." Her heart was melted. She drew out her purse, and, having compassion on the poor fellow, took from the well-filled "pocket companion" a silver half dollar, and gave it to the "poor critter." "Ah!" said he, "may God bless you, madam! This piece of money will save my life, and I will soon pay you the amount with interest." The lady went on her way begging, and the member went on his way laughing, each, however, under very different feelings as to the amusing matter; he feeling quite strange at having proved the best beggar of the two. [Washington Star.

The Wife.—It needs no guilt to break a husband's heart; the absence of content, the mutterings of spleen, the forbidding scowl, and deserted hearth—these and other nameless neglects, without a crime among them, have harrowed to the quick the heart's core of many a man, and planted there beyond the reach of cure, the germ of dark despair. Oh! may woman, before that sight arrives, dwell on the recollections of her youth, and cherishing the dear idea of that tuneful time, awake and keep alive the promise she so kindly gave. And, though she may be the injured, not the injuring one; the forgotten, not the forgetful wife; in happy allusion to the peaceful love, a kindly welcome to a comfortable home, a smile of love to banish hostile words, a kiss of peace to pardon all the past, and the hardest heart that ever locked in the breast of selfish man will soften to her matchless bliss, loved, loving, and content, the soother of the sorrowing hour, the source of comfort and the spring of joy.

The Explanation.—One of the two gentlemen recently conversing about the Natural Bridge of Virginia, remarked that there was an extraordinary incident connected with it, for that Gen. Washington once threw a dollar completely over it—an achievement which has not been performed since.

"No wonder," replied his companion, "for a dollar in those days could be made to go a great deal further than at the present time."

Henry Fox, in a hot attack on Lord Chancellor Hardwicke, who was supposed to have no desire to reform the many abuses of his office, exclaimed: "Touch but a cobweb in Westminster Hall, and the old spider of the Law is out upon you, with all his vermin at his heels." This image makes the flesh creep.

A Dreadful Threat.—Master: "Look here, Pomp, this is the third time I've caught you sleeping in work hours. Now, I just tell you, that if it occurs once more, I shall give you to the first Abolitionist that passes, and have you sent straght off for Boston!"

The Worst Wine.—The Japanese made it a point when entertained on board the American vessels to taste of every dish, and also to take notes of every thing. One of them drank a wine glass of sweet oil, and some one being curious to know what comment he made upon it, applied for an interpretation, when it was found to read, "This is the worst wine they have got."

The following dialogue is represented to have taken place between a farmer and an Irish reaper, the latter being considerably under the common stature:

Irishman: D'ye want any body for the harvest?

Farmer: Yes.

Irishman: Will you take me?

Farmer: No; you're too little.

Irishman: Arrah, now, and do you cut corn from the top?

And Pat walked off indignantly.

"That horse of yours," said a friend of ours to a farmer, "is very handsome."

"Yes," was the drawling reply, "but he is—as—slow—as—cold molasses."

Marion Female Seminary,

MARION, PERRY COUNTY, ALA.

THE EXERCISES of this institution will be resumed on Monday, the 2d day of October, under the charge of the Rev. Jas. K. Armstrong, as Principal, assisted by nine Professors, Teachers and Officers.

It has just closed its present session with one hundred and thirty-three students, seventy-seven of which number were boarders. There is but one session of nine and a half months.

Pupils can enter at any time during the session, chargeable from the beginning of the month in which they commence, to the close of the session. No deduction will be made but at the discretion of the Principal.

The Principal, with his family, resides in the building. The female teachers also reside in the Seminary. Boarders in the institution are under the control of the Principal at all times. A Steward, in the employment of the Principal, of experience, urbanity of manners, and faithfulness to his duties, a Matron who constantly and kindly ministers to the private wants of young ladies, and especially in sickness, a Governess who directs them in their exercises and amusements, superintends the order of their private apartments, instructs them in certain domestic duties, and guards their private, personal habits, manners and morals, always aided by the presence and active co-operation of the female teachers. The Principal and his lady secure to those committed to their charge every necessary and proper comfort and kindness. Here they are constantly exercised under a wholesome system of regulations respecting neatness, order, punctuality and economy. They have regular hours for study and recreation, for rising and retiring, for eating, domestic duties, and social enjoyment among themselves.

The institution is furnished with a new and superior apparatus in the departments of Chemistry, Natural Philosophy and Astronomy. There is also a large collection of Maps, Charts, Plates, Diagrams, Globes, etc., for simplifying the principles of Geography, Physiology and Astronomy.

In the department of Drawing, Painting and Embroidery there is a fine collection of Drawing Cards, Engravings, Pictures, Paintings, Patterns, and every other convenience important in the prosecution of these departments.

There is in connection with the institution a Library of more than one thousand volumes, and a Cabinet of several hundred specimens.

The institution is furnished with six Pianos, five Guitars, and one Harp.

MUSIC.—The Professor at the head of this department is equal to any in the country. He is a superior vocalist, a fine performer on the Piano, Harp, Guitar, Violin, Violoncello, etc. He has enjoyed ten years experience as a teacher of music in the best institutions in the Union, is profoundly versed in the principia of harmony, and is a real amateur of the sublime science to which he has devoted himself.

LOCATION.—Its salubrity, intelligence, morality and public spirit are unsurpassed.

PERMANENCY.—Parents may send their daughters here with confidence in their completing their education under the same course of instruction and system of discipline. Every thing conspires to make the permanency of the Principal a matter of duty, pleasure and interest.

TEACHERS.—The Principal, himself a native of Alabama, surrounds himself with a corps of teachers of known efficiency and tried success, nearly all of whom have been reared in the South, thus ensuring a better acquaintance with Southern peculiarities and sympathy with Southern views and interests. Thoroughness is our motto in teaching. We ascribe the true importance to the harmonious development of the physical, intellectual and moral nature.

Reports are sent to patrons once every two months, which are a faithful showing of the scholarship and conduct of the pupil. In our system of merits and demerits scholarship and conduct are connected.

The Principal regards it as his most important duty to attend to the moral habits of his pupils and to imbuing their minds with proper religious principles.

The facilities for acquiring the French and other modern languages are superior.

There are daily exercises in Orthography, Reading and Writing. Great attention is bestowed on letter-writing and composition.

Lectures are delivered weekly to the junior and senior classes on various subjects of Science and Literature, on which they take notes and are subsequently examined.

The Principal will be assisted in the Collegiate department the ensuing session, by a gentleman, a Professor of long experience, of the ripest scholarship, and the most superior qualifications as a teacher. He will take charge of the department of Mathematics and some of the higher English branches, and the control of the main study hall.

Visitors are not received by boarders except with suitable introduction to the Principal from patrons.

Jewelry is prohibited, except a plain breastpin.

No accounts will be opened in Marion. Money must be deposited or forwarded for all necessary and proper purposes. Let pupils be supplied from home as far as is practicable.

All sums of money for the use of pupils must be deposited with the Principal.

One hundred and forty-five dollars will pay the board and tuition of a young lady for the entire session in the collegiate course. $175 will embrace the languages. $235 will embrace board, tuition in the collegiate department, on the Piano, and in the languages.

Books, Stationery, Sheet Music, Drawing, Painting and Embroidery material is furnished by the Principal. The cost of these articles varies with the advancement of the pupil. Every effort will be made to secure economy in their use.

For further particulars or catalogues, apply to the Principal.

Marion, July 29, 1854.

University of Nashville.

THIS INSTITUTION was founded by the State of North Carolina in 1785 as Davidson Academy. It became Cumberland College in 1806, and University of Nashville in 1826.

THE LITERARY DEPARTMENT

Will be reopened under a new organization, and with new buildings, on the First Wednesday of October next.

Rev. Edward Wadsworth, D. D.,
Prof. of Ethics and Belles Lettres, and Chairman of the Faculty.
Rev. J. W. McClelland, D. D.,
Prof. of Ancient Languages.
James L. Maris, A. M.,
Prof. of Mathematics and Natural Philosophy.
Rev. J. B. Lindsley, M. D.,
Prof. of Chemistry and the Natural Sciences.
E. P. De Zavallos,
Prof. of Modern Languages.

Tuition, $75 per annum—Matriculation fee, $5.

THE LAW DEPARTMENT

Will also be opened on the first Wednesday of October next.

Francis B. Fogg, Esq.,
William F. Cooper, Esq.,
——, Esq.,
} Professors.

Fees for Lectures, $100 per annum.

THE MEDICAL DEPARTMENT

Closed its first Session with 121 Students and 33 Graduates; its second with 152 Students and 36 Graduates; and its third with 220 Students and 71 Graduates.

The Fourth Annual Course of Lectures will commence on Monday the 30th of October next, and continue until the first of the ensuing March.

Robert M. Foster, M. D.,
Prof. of General and Special Anatomy.
J. Dearien Lindsley, M. D.,
Chemistry and Pharmacy, and Dean of the Faculty.
C. K. Winston, M. D.,
Materia Medica and Medical Jurisprudence.
A. H. Buchanan, M. D.,
Surgical and Pathological Anatomy.
Thomas R. Jennings, M. D.,
Institutes of Medicine and Clinical Medicine.
W. K. Bowling, M. D.,
Theory and Practice of Medicine.
John M. Watson, M. D.,
Obstetrics and the Diseases of Women and Children.
Paul F. Eve, M. D.,
Principles and Practice of Surgery.
William T. Briggs, M. D.,
Demonstrator of Anatomy.

The Anatomical rooms will be opened for Students on the first Monday of October.

A full Preliminary Course of Lectures, free to all Students, will be given by the Professors, commencing on the first Monday of October.

A Clinique has been established in connection with the University, at which operations are performed and cases prescribed for and lectured upon in presence of the Class.

Arrangements have been made to accommodate all patients requiring surgical operations.

Amount of Fees for Lectures in this Department is $105. Matriculating Fee (paid once only,) $5; Practical Anatomy, $10; Graduating Fee, $25.

Good Board can be obtained for $3 per week.

The Annual Announcement, giving a full account of the several Departments of the University, may be had by applying to A. Y. S. LINDSLEY, Sec'y Board Trustees.

july 29 3t

Chunnynuggee Female College.

The next Session will commence on the second Monday in July, and close on the first Wednesday in December.

FACULTY:

Rev. W. H. Ellison, D. D., President.
John F. Ellison, A. B.
Miss F. Christiana Battle, Primary Department.
Mrs. Eugenia Rothenberg, Instructress in Music.

Competent Teachers in the departments of French, Drawing, Painting, etc., will be provided.

RATES OF TUITION PER SESSION OF FIVE MONTHS:

Primary Department	$10 00
First, Sophmore and Middle Classes, each	15 00
Junior and Senior Classes, each	22 50
Music—Piano or Guitar	20 00
Use of Instruments	5 00
Latin, Greek, French, or German, each	10 00
Drawing, Painting, or Embroidery, each	12 50
Wax Work, per Lesson	1 00
Incidental Expenses	1 00

One half the tuition to be paid in advance.

Board can be had at from $15 to $12, including Washing, Lights, etc.

The College is located upon Chunnynuggee Ridge, Macon county, Alabama, in the midst of an intelligent community. It has recently been provided with a new Philosophical and Chemical Apparatus, adequate to all the purposes of instruction; and no pains will be spared to secure the application of the best and most approved means of developing and training the mind. The President having been for twelve years in charge of the Female College, Macon, Georgia, the Trustees entertain no doubt, from his past success, of his native ability to make this equal to any school of the same grade in the country.

A tri-weekly line of stages from Eufaula to the Montgomery and West Point Railroad, and semi-weekly line from Columbus, Ga., to Chunnynuggee, make it accessible from all points.

RICHARD H. POWELL,
President of the Board of Trustees.

Chunnynuggee, Ala., —— —, 1854.—jy 15 6m

Emory and Henry College,

WASHINGTON COUNTY, VIRGINIA.

THE Fall Session of this Institution will commence on the 17th August next.

TERMS:

Tuition per session of five months	$17 50
Board " "	16 75
Washing " "	5 00
Fuel " "	2 00
Contingent charge	1 25
	$62 50

It is believed that no College in the South is offering stronger inducements than this to young men desirous of a thorough collegiate education. Our location is in a quiet and beautiful valley, ten miles distant from town or village, and comparatively free from temptations to vice. Our Board of Instruction is filled with men of experience, ability and fidelity. Our course of study is extensive and thorough. Our Cabinet, Libraries, and Apparatus are ample. Any young man of limited means, with fair abilities and proper energy, can here acquire a superior, liberal or business education.

For further particulars, address

E. E. WILEY, President,
Emory P. O., Va

July 8, 1854 8t

LA GRANGE COLLEGE.

The next term of this Institution will commence on WEDNESDAY, July 19.

FACULTY:

R. H. Rivers, D. D., President and Professor of Mental and Moral Science and Belles Lettres.
O. F. Casey, A. M., Professor of Ancient Languages.
A. P. Rice, A. M., Professor of Pure Mathematics.
Rev. B. B. Ross, A. M., Prof. of Mixed Mathematics.
Thos. P. Hatch, A. B., Professor of Natural Science.
Thos. Smith, A. B., Principal of Preparatory Department.

EXPENSES:

Tuition per term of five months	$25 00
Board (washing included)	50 00
Room rent and servant's hire	3 00
Chemical fee (senior year)	5 00

In the Department of Mathematics, Professor Rice will give instructions in Practical Engineering, without extra charge.

Important additions have recently been made to the laboratory and the means of illustrating the different Departments of Natural History, and in all departments of the College, no pains will be spared to provide the best facilities for a thorough and practical education. The plan of endowment has been favorably received, and we confidently expect its speedy accomplishment.

The foundations of a new and large college building will soon be laid, and we intend to make LaGrange College, in every respect, inferior to no institution in the West.

THOS. P. HATCH,
Secretary of the Faculty.

may20 2m

Education.

A young man who will graduate at Randolph, Macon College, Virginia, next June, would like to enter upon the pleasant task of instructing youth, as soon thereafter as possible. He intends making teaching a lifetime business, hence Trustees of Academies would do well to procure his services, as they can be permanently secured by a first rate salary. He intends doing his duty in his profession, and will be satisfied with nothing short of good pay for his services. Certificates of character and scholarship will be sent to those desiring to procure a teacher, which cannot fail to give satisfaction. Terms and location, in finding its salubrity and condition of society, must accompany all communications to J. P. B., Randolph, Macon College P. O., Virginia.

ap22 2m*

THE BRITISH QUARTERLIES,

AND

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.

LEONARD SCOTT & CO., No. 34 Gold street, New York, continue to publish the following British Periodicals, viz:

THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW, (Conservative.)
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW, (Whig.)
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW, (Free Church.)
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW, (Liberal.)

AND

BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE, (Tory.)

—TERMS—

For any one of the four Reviews	$3 00 per annum
For any two " "	5 00 "
For any three " "	7 00 "
For all four of the Reviews,	8 00 "
For Black wood's Magazine,	3 00 "
For Blackwood and the three Reviews,	9 00 "
For Blackwood and the four Reviews,	10 00 "

Payments to be made, in all cases, in advance. Money current in the State where issued will be received at par.

Address, post paid, LEONARD SCOTT & CO.,
79 Fulton st., New York. Entrance 54 Gold st.

Postage on Blackwood and the four Reviews, 72 cents a year. [Nov13-1y.]

To Booksellers, Agents, and Peddlers.

BURNETT & BOSTWICK, Publishers,

15 Camp Street, 15

HAVE just issued from their press the following valuable works:

VOYAGE OF THE U. S. EXPLORING SQUADRON, commanded by Capt. Charles Wilkes of the U. S. N., together with Explorations and Discoveries made by Admiral D'Urville, Capt. Ross and other Navigations and Travelers, and an account of the Expedition to the Dead Sea under Lieut. Lynch, with numerous illustrations.
LIFE OF JOHN C. CALHOUN.
LIFE OF JAMES K. POLK, with a history of his Administration.
THE HEROINES OF HISTORY.
THE HEROINES OF THE CRUSADES.
PANORAMA OF NATIONS.
THE GREAT CITIES OF THE WORLD.
LIVES OF JOHN AND CHARLES WESLEY.
WILLIS'S WORKS—seven volumes.
THE MIRROR OF THE SOUL.
FARM AND FIRESIDE.
RURAL HOMES, &c. &c.

For the sale of the above and many other works, which are all very valuable and popular, we desire to establish an agency in every county and parish in the South; and therefore offer unparalleled inducements to country dealers, agents and peddlers.

A Catalogue of all our publications furnished on application, post paid, to

BURNETT & BOSTWICK, Publishers,
may 27 6m 15 Camp street, New Orleans.

Dr. J. T. Keanon,

Carthian Spring,
Holmes County, Mississippi,

Is now prepared to offer good accommodations to invalids who may desire to visit Carthian Spring, or place themselves under his care for treatment. This is one of the most desirable retreats for invalids in the South, located in an elevated healthy region of country, with abundance of fine Freestone water. The mineral water is composed very strongly of iron, Sulphur, Magnesia and Soda, and contains largely of Carbonic Acid Gas.

The diseases which it has cured are Dyspepsia, Dropsy, General Debility, Affections of the Kidneys, Bladder, and the various functional and organic derangements of the Womb. This water is especially efficacious in Diseases of Females.

Board, per week—$7.

Reference—Ministers of Miss. Conference.
Rev. J. B. Walker,
Rev. H. N. McTyiere,
} New Orleans.

march 4 3m

Pensacola House.

MRS. SHOMO has opened the above-named House, and is prepared to accommodate boarders and transient customers. Every attention will be given to make all comfortable who may favor her with their patronage.

The Pensacola House is situated on Government st., one door above the Florida Hause, commanding a view of the Bay, and receiving the breeze unobstructed.

Pensacola, Fla., June 24, 1854. tf

WHOLESALE DRY GOODS TRADE.

SPRING IMPORTATIONS, 1854.

JOSEPH H. PALMER & CO. have in store and are receiving regularly from the European and American markets their usual supplies of seasonable Goods, viz:

PRINTED GOODS, comprising Calicoes of various styles and qualities; Lawns, Jaconets, Organdies, Barages, &c.

LINEN GOODS—Irish Linens of every grade. Linen Drills, Linen Sheetings, Table Linens, Brown Linens, Grass Linens, Drown Hollands, Brown and Bleached Duck, Planters' Linens, Farmers' Drills, Linen and Lawn Handkerchiefs, every quality.

SILK GOODS, embracing plain and figured Silks, Plaid Silks, Foulards, Satins, Velvets, Florences, Shawls, Handkerchiefs, Sewings, &c.

WOOLEN and WORSTED GOODS, comprising De Laines, Berages, Merinos, Alpacas, Bombasines, Canton Cloths, &c.

COTTON GOODS, consisting in part of Drown and Bleached Cotton Shirtings and Sheetings, of every quality and width; Cottonades, Camlets, Chambraye, Nankeens, Checks, Stripes, Denims, &c., at extremely low prices by the piece and package only.

JOSEPH H. PALMER & CO.,
Importers and Wholesale Dealers,
feb18 47 Camp st.

Valuable Land for Sale.

FIFTEEN HUNDRED AND SEVENTY-FIVE ACRES in the western part of Alabama, fourteen miles from the Bigbee river and eight from the M. & O. Railroad. Most of the land is very rich, with good buildings on each, comprising dwellings, negro cabins; and also a superior horse-power Sawmill. On the east is a good neighborhood, and on the west an extensive range for stock—800 acres in cultivation, and well watered.

A more desirable place can seldom be found where land is rich.

Terms easy. For further information, apply to

JAS. B. RAMSEY,
Daleville, Lauderdale co., Miss.

juns 17, 1854 tf

Summerfield Property For Sale.

The Subscriber having determined to remove West, will sell a bargain, in two Family Residences, in Summerfield, convenient to the College buildings. The residences are large and commodious—one with ten rooms and the other with seven rooms—neatly finished, with all necessary Out-Buildings, Gardens, Lots, &c.

Summerfield is a healthy location, eight and a half miles north of Selma, Ala., with Male and Female College, which have been in successful operation about twelve years; and any person wishing to educate their children, free from disease and immoral influences, will do well to select this place. Persons desirous of such a location would do well to examine my property.

Terms, cash, or on time to suit purchasers.

ap8 4m P. R. McCRARY.

Price's Patent Texas Tonic.

The claims of this new discovery are:

1. Its efficacy as an antiseptic, fortifying the System, and giving a healthy action to the Body and vivacity to the Mind, acting on the Blood, Kidneys, Bowels and Skin.

2. It is a certain antidote against Constipation of the Bowels, Torpor of the Liver, Palpitation of the Heart, Termination of Blood to the Brain, Indigestion, Pain in the Head, Chronic Head-ache, Vertigo, and is offered to the public as a remedy for Ghills and Fevers, (see certificates Nos. 3 and 4,) and as a preventive to Yellow, Bilious and Congestive Fevers, when used as an antiseptic, (see certificate No. 5,) using it freely, keeping a lively action on the Bowels during the epidemic seasons.

The subscriber would deem it unnecessary to offer any testimonials in favor of this valuable medicine to those who have experimented with it, and only offers a few out of the many highly respectable citizens and others names whose are familiar to the community, for the benefit of those who

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Publishing Committee Louisiana Conference, { J. C. KEENER, L. PARKER, J. B. WALKER.

H. N. McTYEIRE, EDITOR.

J. HAMILTON, D. D., T. W. DORMAN, W. MURRAH. } Publishing Committee Alabama Conference.

VOL. IV. NO. 26. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, AUGUST 5, 1854. WHOLE NO. 1

Correspondence of the N. O. Christian Advocate.

LETTER FROM ENGLAND.

PARLIAMENTARY ADAPTATIONS AND ECCLESIASTICAL PROGRESS.

The dia, pomp, and expensiveness of war ve not made Parliament indifferent to Ecclesiastical topics. Bishops and Bombardists—Cronstadts and Church-rates—Olen- and Oxford University—Spencer and Siris—have almost equally challenged the ntion, and occupied the time of the House Commons.

t may be well that it should be so. We perhaps, likely to think the better, and t the more, by these manifold and appaly grotesque transitions. Parliament has only talked, but acted. Our members e, at the suggestion of the Ministers, vomillions of money and thousands of men efully for the war; and have knocked without remorse, the salary of a Colonial hop;—they have vowed their nausea at sian tyranny and University Tests almost one breath;—they have condemned the r and Church-rates with all but equal rtiness;—they have refused to fee Roman holic Chaplains to confess and comfort an Catholic thieves, and have sanctioned combination of the Cross with the Cres- to repel, and to imprisen, if possible, ruthless Russian Despot;—they have ored the heroes of Eokness, and put their k ban on Ecclesiastical Courts. They e taken the bandage from the eyes of jus- that she may see anew to whet her sword poise her scales since she had felt that had taken her for a statue, and had dis- ted her balance, and tried to hack her de!—having forgotten that she was a Di- Goddess, whose sanctity nor mercy could invaded or abused with impunity!

We could wish that our notice of Parlia- tary "servant-of-all-work-ism" could have ed here; but it can not, for our Parlia- t undertakes to sweep pig-styes by its lic Health Act—to sweep the Russians m the Principalities with the besom of de- ction—or to give a hint to the Bishop of ndon that he had better check Mr. Siddell h his intoners, and tell him that it would more reverend and decoroue for these gen- men at Knightsbridge earnestly to pray whiningly to say the Lord's Prayer.

Yet, amidst and underneath all this diver- of business—this passion to legislate for ry body, every thing, any thing—it is evi- nt that the national will, conscience, and rpose are, through Parliament, impressing emselves powerfully on the forms and spirit our ecclesiastical organizations. Inoidenly, more than in organized pitched party tles, the great question of religious and clesiastical liberty is frequently springing It might be imagined, sometimes, by a n standing with closed eyes, that the House become charmed by the Great Reserve of n Milton—speaking out the grand truths once penned—in his strong but turgid ee—in a style chastened, and mellowed by ic sed time.

It requires not the kon of a prophet to pre- t that, ere long, every sect must either nd or fall, expand or collapse, progrese or eds; eot by Parliamentary favor or disfa- r; but as it may possess or lack inherent ality and capacity.

The Progressives in the House comprise angelicals, Puseyites, and Latitudinarians. e first are chiefly dissenters—the second brace some of the most capacious, and well rmed and liberal intellects—who know whither they are going;—the third inde Philosophical Radicals and Indefinuhlos; on thie great point they pretty fairly re- t the sentimonts, idoas and wills of na- al majority.

The hulk of the House is not only becom- imbued with, but animated by, the spirit Religious Liberty. On the whole, perhaps, instincts and principles of M. P's. are far ond their ideas and their logio on the sub- s. We stop not to inquire into the pro- es by which results like these have arisen. speak of existing facts: on another ocean we may carefully look into their antecoents.

Church-rates must speedily be aholished. e pious, just, and polite Episcopalian hates m; the Dissenter feels them, and loathes m as an intolerable wrong;—they have n sourece of discord, deep and deadly. worthy men will rejoice at their extino.

Yet of all men, Lord John Russell trembles, turns pale, and gets spasmodic, before threatening innovation. Lord John Rus- one of the most useful men who ever ed;—Lord John Russell, so brave upon ocan, and then so mysteriously backward—illating between a boldness which can be derstood, and a retiring timidity—we had most said a cowardice—which can not;—rd John Russell, whose family is truly faoe for patriots, and notorious for Abbeyds;—Lord John Russell, who knows a few ngs about the Irish Church, and who once posed to do something to it and with it;—rd John Russell, we say, trembles and turns le, and gets spasmodic, before the threated innovation.

He may have cause to tremble as a mere tablishmentarian;—he need not as a Chrisn and an Episcopalian. Let Parliament cede the point—let this compulsory ecclestics! payment be condemned and abanned, and Lord John knows that there are er sides to the subjects, other bearings and sults—which must be freed, must be felt, st ensue. True, Lord John—quite true! tablished compulsory payments suggest mething especially in connection with abanned subscription as the path to University ucation, and some University honors, which rd John does well understand!

Had we believed that the alliance of Church d State were essential to the maintenance the Christian religion, to secure it from Wretched Ritualism, Ruinous Rationalism, or obvious Atheism—we should hold to Churchrates tenaciously—we should believe that there might be some occult virtue in them; we would not relax an atom of privilege; we would not allow a vestry to reduce a rate to a minimum—if we could help it!

But Church-rates, and Church-courts, and University subscriptions, have not done this; they never can do it. It is not of the nature of these human devices to originate, or cherish, or conserve a Divine life. Church-rate haggling and warrants do not harmonize with just ideas of the operations of the Paraclete! Law can never be a substitute for love. Gain or penalty may induce profession, but can not create or perpetuate principle. Compulsory payments, compulsory canons, and compulsory creeds, have a strong ecclesiastical affinity and dependence—and Lord John knows it. Judging from our stand-point, we shall hope much from the abolition of Churchrates; judging from his, we shall fear much.

The High-churchman reasons well when he simply reasons that the Civil Power passes beyond its proper domain, when it would, as such, authoritatively interfere with Christian doctrines, rituals, or discipline. But his argument, so unanswerable by the Evangelical Lord John; so true in the abstract; turns home again on his concrete self; for that same High-churchman is bound by solemn vows to that Church as she is with her ally the State. Our neighbor would eschew the Queen here, for Convocation, What, then, is the Puseyite?—he is a Shrew or a Schismatic; or, to be consistent, must become a Separatist.

Our Episcopalian brethren have long been schooling—and many of them have known it, and some still know it not—for a nobler work and a higher destiny! The learning, the piety, the activity, the prudence, and munificence which mark multitudes connected with their Voluntary Associations, have become too conspicuous to remain unnoticed, and are too admirable to pass unhonored! They will find the self-sustaining principle—from God and under God—remain, long after they shall have ceased to exercise the clinging habit—in relation to a merely human institution.

Dissenters are intensely and necessarily interested in this ecclesiastical progress, in relation to the State, to Churchmen, and to their own Christian operations; their Societerian interests and objects, and their personal dignity and comfort. We hope our countrymen will mark, and seek to promote this Progress;—we hope that they will do all that they can legitimately to obtain and secure for all a true, legal, religious equality, before the Majesty of Justice, and the righteous order of impartial law.

We are persuaded that a better understanding of the whole subject, and a better feeling between Christians of different denominations prevails, than have ever existed in our own land. Before long, men generally will have become religious propagandists, simply by intelligence, reason, and love; and will not dream of obtruding Cæsar's sword, Cæsar's tax-man, or Cæsar's trunchoon, between any worshipper and his God!

Saturday, July 8, 1854. J. B.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

GERMAN REFORMERS.

MR. EDITOR:—In overhauling my papers the other day, my eyes fell on a caption of a high-sounding character, "The Platform of the Free Germans of Ohio." By reading the piece over, my mind was arrested by some notorious parts of this platform. As most of the readers of the Advocate are unable to read the German Language, allow me to translate some of the articles contained in this famous production for their benefit.

The "Free Germans," as they call themselves, organize into different Societies for the special object of aiding each other in believing nothing at all, and in rooting out and overturning every existing form of religion. The Bible they treat with utter contempt. Of late they have been making exertions to organize into Conventions. Some have actually taken place in Wisconsin, Kentucky and Ohio; at which fiery speeches have been made denouncing Americanism.

According to the platform of the "Free Germans" of Ohio, which was constructed at a Convention held last spring, wherein they say they have used the same expressions contained in the platforms of the "Free Germans" of Wisconsin and Kentucky, the Constitution of the United States is to undergo a revision; other laws are to be made in place of the old ones. The Senate and the House of Congress are instructed in the true art and wisdom of making laws for the people of the United States! The thing is ridiculous, but true.

In this platform the Convention went through the whole of our now existing laws for States and cities; laws religious as well as political; nothing was forgotten. A thorough reform is to take place.

Really, it looks a little strange that the Republican Government of America could stand so well as it did, and that, too, for so many years, without crumbling to pieces. But now, we suppose, the danger is averted, since a number of our highly wise and cultivated countrymen have come over from the old country to look into this deranged state of things in America. Among a multitude of questions that were discussed at the Convention in Ohio, the Platform says:

"The Constitution grants us liberty of conscience; we claim, therefore, liberty of belief as well as unbelief; and a perfect lawful equality thereof. Although we consider religion as a private matter, yet, on the other hand, do we consider it our duty to oppose the power of the Church where it interferes with the political life, and thereby violates the rights of individuals.—Therefore, we desire—

1. The abolishing of Sunday laws.

2. Abolishing of the so-called Thanksgiving days.

3. Abolishing of public prayers in Congress and in the Legislatures.

4. Removal of the Bible from Public Schools, and every other sect book.

5. Recall of every law that rejects a citizen on account of his religious or irreligious opinions, from being a witness before a Court, or from filling public offices.

On the School system they hold a reform necessary.

1. "As it is the duty of the State to protect against the dangerous carelessness of parents in not educating their children, it must therefore force every child to visit a school. We hold a forced school system indispensable to the carrying out of an effectual general education," etc.

Temperance question. "We consider the school question—effectual National education by the State—the only possible solution of the temperance question; but wish, at the same time, that the State would favor and promote such amusements to the people that may restrain them from seeking their recreations in sensual amusements," etc.

The German American Botshaffer makes the following remarks on the above:

"The treatment of this question crowns the whole. Here it says: "We consider the school question (forced common school system of education) indispensable to the carrying out of an effectual National education, as the best and only solution of the temperance question." This fits very pretty, does it not? yet let us hear: "But we wish, at the same time, that the State would favor and promote such pure amusements to the people that may restrain them from seeking their recreations in sensual amusements." Now we wish to know what sort of pure amusements these shall be, in which the lust of the senses take no part.

Perhaps a religious, heart-elevating divine service, or spiritual devotion, or pure God-honoring exercises of benevolent deeds to our fellow men. O, no! this is hypocrisy, priestly dominion and ignorance, answer these gentlemen of the Ohio platform, as well as those of the other platforms.

As they neglect to tell us what sort of "amusements" the State should favor, after it shall have abolished the Sabbath, prayer, and the Bible, we must take their own actions as a commentary; and here stands foremost, as a source of pure amusement and a means to stifle conscience, internal restlessness and dissatisfaction, the strong-beer saloon sanctuary, that stands open night and day, where there is no hated priest, but a fat host to make his gain; where there is no praying, but the more cursing and swearing for nothing. As a fruit of this reform, the consequence is—there arises one low beer and coffee-house after another, so that every nook and corner of the city is filled with them, and our progressmen are very diligently visiting and supporting them.

Next come the theaters. Our "Free Germen" gentlemen are filled with enthusiasm for this pure National amusement, through which many a young man has been ruined for ever, and thousands of matrimonial connections and family circles turned into hells. Are not these great reformers organizing "theater unions," and receiving them into the union of "freemen?" as they have done in Milwaukie and other places.

The dancing-saloons and ball-rooms belong also in the register of these "pure National amusements." After the conceptions of these men (where it never fails in the advertisements of such publishers of newspapers who make no scruples of conscience to publish them,) they specially make known that there shall be no lack of drinks of all sorts and plenty; where many an undutiful son is wasting that which he withholds from his starving parents, and where men sink deeper and deeper into the pool of sensual gratifications and crime.

The turn-hall must not be forgotten, for it plays a considerable part in this modern reform. Here then come these gentlemen together with their mustachios, to play off a few "goat-leaps" ont of mere pleasure; and as a natural consequence, the actors becoming thirsty at such exercises, it may be presumed that the strong-beer is not forgotten. And if we bring into notice the plan pointed out "to erect foundling houses," one might conclude that other crimes are to be perpetrated. We will, however, pass this over in silence; also billiards, cards, and other plays, and whatsoever these reformers of the people practice and allow, and explain in a practical manner what they would have us to understand by "pure amusements of the people."

And now the State shall abolish the Thanksgiving days, divine service, and the Sabbath rest, and promote these amusements; that men be not forced to seek their recreations in sensual pleasures! We ask once more: Are not these outrages you practice sensual amusements, and nothing else than such? Gentlemen, we understand you, and the people whom you intend to make unfortunate with yourselves, and degrade them below the brutes, understand you, too, depend upon it.

Is it not strange that these men, who were fortunate enough a few years ago to escape the dungeons of Europe, and barely saved their necks from an ignominious death on the scaffold by reaching the free and happy shores of America, call Conventions, as they actually have done in Wisconsin, Kentucky and Ohio, with the special object of inquiring into the "deranged" state of things in the Government of the United States, and dictate order and rules for American freemen! How ridiculously strange! They are publishing newspapers to inflame the German people, and incite them with a hellish hatred against Church and State.

Awake, citizens of free and happy America! Arouse as a Nation worthy to bear the name as sons of Washington. The Jesuits have for years been secretly gnawing at the roots of our wide-spreading tree of liberty. Now that they are about to be detected at their fiendish work, and exposed to the Nation, here come these reckless desperadoes, with axe in hand, to lop off branch and bough, and tell us, in round German, that they understand how to make our liberty tree more thriving and beautiful! Churches and divine service must be abolished; our States must be cleansed from every vestige of the puritan Fathers; our sons and daughters must be trained for "purer amusements" than keeping the Sabbath holy, going to Church, and praying in the family circle; theaters, dancing-saloons, hall-rooms, strong-beer saloons, are the great and efficient means to teach our children how to govern themselves. Who would have thought, when these men landed on our shores, that in a few years they could so far forget themselves as to dare to show their wickedness, and spread over these lands their base and vile designs!

It is high time that the true and faithful citizens are looking into these things. Let the poor, starving, famishing thousands of Europe find a home in glorious and happy America, but guard the laws of the country! put a strong hedge around the sacred right of citizenship. No foreigner can complain if the same right is allowed him that the sons of native Americans enjoy—id est, to become citizens after they shall have resided 21 years in the country.

I do not altogether like the secret workings of the "Know-Nothings," but at the same time rejoice that there is an element at work among the noble sons of liberty, to check the pernicious influence which certain shameless foreigners are about to spread over these lands.

Your fellow-citizen of free and happy America.
New Orleans. A GERMAN.

[From North British Review.]

PLURALITY OF WORLDS.—AN ESSAY.

BY SIR D. BREWSTER.

If there is one thought of the contemplative mind more profoundly innate than another, and one sentiment of the heart more affectionately cherished, it is the thought that penetrates into the future, and the sentiment that scans its glories. The Past, and its hoary recollections,—the Present in all its pregnancy of weal or woe, sink into insignificance beside the throbbing anticipations of the Future. But, universal as is the thought, and glowing as is the sentiment, Reason has not succeeded in giving a form and locality to its conceptions, nor has the Fancy ventured to delineate the Paradise of its desires. In the infancy of Astronomy, indeed, when we knew nothing beyond the ocean and the mountain range that terminated our view, the poet could but place his Elysium in the sky, and the Christian sage the mansion of the future, in the New Heavens and the New Earth of his creed. Thus limited in its range, the human mind, whether under the dominion of its imagination or its judgment, had no resting-place for its conceptions; and, though faith never lost its grasp of the great truth, nor hope ceased to gild it with its auroral hue, yet what that future was to be in its physical relations,—in what region of space it was to be spent,—what duties were to characterize it,—and what intellectual and spiritual gifts were to be its privileges, neither the philosopher nor the Christian had ventured to suggest.

When Science, however, taught us the form, and size, and motions of our Earth, the magnitude and distance of the moon, and the functions which it exercises in enlightening the Earth, and agitating the ocean,* it became a subject of eager inquiry, if so large a globe as the Moon, upward of two thousand miles in diameter, could answer no other purpose than that of a flickering lamp, which ceased to burn during the greater number of our darkest nights, and which, when it did burn, was so often eclipsed by the clouds and vapors of our atmosphere. Philosophers of high caste did not hesitate to conclude that the Moon must be a world like the Earth, with its mountains, and rocks, and plains, and valleys, fitted for the reception of, or already occupied by animal and intellectual races like our own. In the divine economy, creative power has never been found to have been exerted in vain, and when we see huge inorganic masses of matter like the Moon, shaped like our own sphere, and chiselled into the various forms of a world fit to be inhabited, we instinctively infer the existence of organic and intellectual life as the principal object of their creation.

In the progress of astronomical discovery, new arguments for worlds beyond our own were rapidly accumulated. When the truth of the Copernican system was demonstrated, and six primary and many secondary planets or moons took their ordained places in the heavens, the evidence for a plurality of worlds became irresistible, and minds of all degrees of capacity, and of every shade of feeling, received and confided in so cheering a truth, as one next in certainty to that of the astronomical facts on which it rested. Occupying a place in the planetary system, and possessing no peculiar advantages, our Earth lost its position of dignity as the only world in creation, and contrasted with Jupiter, enlightened with four moons, and Saturn with six, the one planet being ten, and the other nine times larger than our own, it dwindled into a world of the third degree,—great indeed in its littleness, but yet shorn of its grandeur. In examining more carefully these rival worlds, we find in them so many common functions, that we cannot escape from the conclusion that they were created for a common purpose. Lighted by the same beams, and heated by the same radiations,—shaped in the same oblate mold,—surrounded with atmospheres enjoying day and night and difference of seasons, can we doubt that they were intended for the residence of beings intellectual and immortal like ourselves? When we see the moons of Jupiter and Saturn eclipsing the sun, and themselves suffering an eclipse in the shadow of the planet, we identify those worlds more strikingly with our own; but when we regard these moons in their higher function of affording a more continued light to their planets than we receive from our own, we can not conceive of any adequate object for their creation but that of guiding the wayfarer in the night, and throwing upon the distant planet a more abundant reflection of the solar rays. In such palaces as these, so lofty and magnificent,—so nobly furnished,—so warmed and so lighted up,—is there no living soul to kneel in gratitude to the Architect who made them? Is there no sovereign to hold his court in their halls, and to sway the scepter over their boundless empires? Is there no animal life to browse upon their green savannas,—no shaggy autocrat in their forests,—no bulky leviathan in their oceans,—no condor in their atmospheres,—to illustrate the variety of creative power? Is there no sage there to unfold the mysterious phenomena which their earth and their heavens must display,—no sympathetic hearts to rehearse in their bowers and their glades those impulses of friendship and of love which are to revive and become permanent in their future being? To these interrogations the philosopher and the Christian must make the same reply. Reason and faith must on this occasion, if they unfortunately diverge in others, join in the same anthem of gratitude and of praise.

When we survey the other planets, nearer in locality to our own, though not furnished with moons to give them light in the sun's absence, we meet with the same instructive analogies, and are led to the same conclusion, that they are habitable worlds. Venus, of nearly the same size with our Earth, and Mars and Mercury of about half its magnitude, have their days of almost exactly the same length as our own. In Mars its atmosphere is most conspicuous, and astronomers have observed what they regard as snow in its polar regions, and green savannas in its equatorial plains but owing to its never being gibbous like the moon and the two inferior planets, the mountains which it undoubtedly possesses can not be discovered by the telescope. In Venus and Mercury, astronomers have observed that diversity of surface which appears in our own Earth and Mars, and in all the other planets, an atmosphere which is very distinct in Venus, and in Venus and Mercury lofty mountains, which they have measured. Owing to their proximity to the Sun, however, and the consequent brilliancy of their discs, it is very difficult to study their physical structure, and from the same cause it is even possible that they may be attended with small moons which have hitherto escaped the cognizance of our telescopes. But, independently of this point of analogy with our Earth, their resemblances in physical character, and in their daily and annual movements, authorize us to conclude that such globes of matter, warmed and lighted more effectually than our own, are still better adapted for the residence of vegetable, animal, and intellectual life.

It is hardly necessary to conduct our readers to the remoter planets of the solar system, and to advert to the ring of Saturn, and the Satellites of Uranus, and of Neptune, as strengthening our position, that all the planets around us have been created to be the seats of life, and the abodes of intelligence. The opinion that the Earth only was inhabited, became more and more presumptuous in proportion as our system was enlarged, and every discovery of a new planet became a fresh argument for a plurality of worlds.

Before quitting the general argument derived from the similarity between the different bodies of our system, we must notice the remarkable opinion maintained by Sir William Herschel, that the Sun itself is inhabited. When we consider the immense magnitude of the Sun, which is equal to all the planets put together, it was not an unreasonable supposition, that such an enormous mass might afford a habitation for intellectual beings, while it performed its more obvious functions of lighting, heating, and guiding the other planets of the system. Sir William conceived that the light and heat of the great central body emanated from an outward stratum of phosphoric clouds, composing its luminous atmosphere, and that the dark and solid nucleus, which we often see through openings in this atmosphere, is protected from the fiery blaze by another stratum of opaque and non-conducting clouds. That a temperate, or even a tropical climate, could be obtained by any screen of clouds, it would be difficult to conceive, but as beings may be created capable of enduring any degree of heat, we have no right to consider the probable temperature of the Sun as a proof that it can not be inhabited. For the same reason Sir William Herschel might have repelled the objection of Dr. Young, that upon the Sun the weight of a man of moderate size would be above two tons. There are certainly no grounds of analogy upon which we can support this theory, and we have adduced it only to show how strong must have been his faith in the doctrine of a plurality of worlds, who maintained that the Sun is the Seat of life and intelligence.

In order to corroborate the preceding views, it is necessary to remove some difficulties that have been felt by those who confide in them, and reply to some objections that have been urged by the few that opposed them. All these difficulties and objections are founded on the assumption, that the inhabitants of the planets must be of the same size, and the same physical conformation as man; and, were this admitted, it would justify the conclusion that such creatures could not rightly perform their functions in the remote planets, where the light and heat of the sun are so greatly reduced by their distance, as to be incapable of sustaining the animal and vegetable life which exists on the earth. In like manner, the inhabitants of Venus and Mercury, if they have eyes and nerves like ours, could not possibly endure that brilliancy of light and intensity of heat which these planets receive from the sun. Now, there are two answers which may be given to these objections. The cold which we presume exists in the remote planets, and the heat which is supposed to exist in the inferior ones, may be tempered by certain atmospherical conditions of which we have examples in our own earth, or by some other arrangement which we can not divine. But independent of this supposition, the human eye could easily endure the light upon Mercury and Venus, by means of a small pupil, and a less sensitive retina, while in the remote planets an enlarged pupil, and a sensitive retina, would enable an eye like our own to see objects as brightly as they do at present. In like manner, the nervous system which received the impressions of heat and cold, could be easily adjusted to bear the highest heat and the severest cold.

The shortness of the day in the remote planets—that period which measures our intervals of rest and labor, has been urged as an objection to the plurality of worlds. It is an objection, however, without any force. Even man, without any change in his physical conformation, could live and thrive with five hours of activity, and other five of repose: In our own arctic regions, where the diurnal motion marks no such intervals, the inhabitants of the temperate zone can perform their functions as well as in southern climates.

As the strength of the human frame must be accommodated to its weight, and as its weight, as well as that of all other bodies, depends upon the force of gravity at the surface of the planet, it has been alleged that human beings could not exist on such planets as Jupiter and Saturn, whose mass or quantity of matter is so much greater than that of our earth. This objection, as we have already seen, is a very formidable one, in reference to the Sun, where a man would weigh two tons; but it loses all its force when we make an accurate calculation of the force of gravity, and of the weight of a human body, on the largest of the planets. In the case of Jupiter, for example, its size or volume is 1330 times that of the earth, and if both planets consisted of the same kind of matter, a man weighing 150 lbs. on the surface of the earth would weigh 150 × 1330 or 199,500 lbs. at a distance from Jupiter's center equal to the earth's radius; but if the man stood on Jupiter's surface, whose radius is eleven times greater than that of the earth, his weight would be diminished in the ratio of the square of their radii, that is, in the ratio of 11 × 11 or 121 to 1. Hence, if we divide 199,500 lbs by 121, we shall have 1649 lbs. as the weight of the man on the surface of Jupiter, or eleven times heavier than he is here. But the materials which compose Jupiter are much lighter than those of which our earth consists, and, consequently, the quantity of attracting matter is much less than we have supposed. The density of Jupiter is to the density of the earth in the ratio of 24 to 100, or less than four to one, so that by dividing 1649 lbs. by 4, we have 412 lbs. as the weight of a man on Jupiter, who weighs here only 150 lbs., that is, only 2¾ths greater,—a difference which actually exists between many individuals in our own planet. If we make the same calculation for Saturn, Uranus and Neptune, we shall find that in Saturn the weight of a man is very little greater than on our earth, and that in Uranus and Neptune, it is a very little less; so that beings of the same physical constitution as ourselves could exist without inconvenience on all the remote planets; and plants, and trees, and buildings, such as those which occur on our earth, could grow and stand secure, in so far as the force of gravity is concerned.

The motion of our sun in absolute space, attended by all the primary and secondary planets and comets of the system, is one of the most extraordinary facts which astronomy presents to us. That this group of celestial bodies are moving round some distant center, some enormous globe which controls their motion, can not be doubted. So distant is that center, that though the motion of our system is at the rate of fifty-seven miles in a second, it may require thousands of centuries before it completes a single round of its orbit. We do not mention this great cosmical truth as a positive argument for a plurality of worlds; but it displays in the most striking manner the absurdity of the opinion, that machinery so vast is to remain in action during cycles so long, and that an ephemeral race like our own, seated in so small a chariot, may be the only passengers which are thus wafted through universal space—enclosed within the orbits of magnificent globes and the network paths of a thousand comets. The mind recoils from a sentiment so absurd and so incompatible with every idea which we can form of the economy of wisdom and of power, which is exhibited around us. It is a sentiment indeed, which, if the astronomical mind could give it a moment's consideration, it would place in the same category as that of a fleet of merchantmen chartered to carry a single mustard seed to the Great Mogul; or that of the largest possible railway train making the round of Europe with no other passenger than Tom Thumb!

When we quit the limits of the Solar system, and span that enormous void which lies between it and the nearest fixed star, we encounter the binary and multiple system of stars to which the law of gravity has been traced, and where we have worlds revolving in elliptical orbits round worlds, as in the system which we have left behind us. As we advance in space to the clusters of stars and nebulæ, where all seems fixed and immovable—where the orbits described dwindle into luminous points, and where at last these points are themselves inseparable and unseen, we lose almost all the data on which we have maintained the doctrine of a plurality of worlds within the planetary system. No moons, no days and nights, no change of seasons, no atmospheres, no valleys and mountains greet the astronomer's eye in his survey of sidereal space. But in their stead we have suns innumerable—bodies of enormous magnitude that might fill perhaps the annual orbit of our earth, shining certainly with light of their own, and possessing all the colors, and endowed with the optical properties, of the light of our own sun.

We have, therefore, few analogies to guide us in our inquiry if these distant globes are the abodes of life, and the residence of rational beings; but we have one great principle which supplies their place, and which can not fail to lead us to a sound conclusion. There are many individuals who readily believe that planets like their own are the abodes of instinct and reason, and who would stand aghast with incredulity were they told that every star in the heavens, and every luminous speck is a stellar group,—that every point of a nebula which the telescope has not yet separated from its neighbors, is a sun or a world like their own,—and that immortal beings are swarming throughout universal space, infinitely more numerous than the drops of water in the ocean, or the atoms of sands upon its shores. But it is just as difficult to believe, because it is just as difficult to comprehend, what these persons must and do admit, that innumerable worlds of matter fill the immensity of space, and are kept in their place by the laws of gravity, which all matter must obey. To people such worlds with life, in place of increasing the difficulty, is the only way to remove it. It assigns the cause of their existence, and, however mortifying to human reason, is the doctrine of an infinity of worlds, yet that pride is but rightly mortified, and that reason but truly humbled, when we realize the grand combination of infinity of life with infinity of matter. Were it otherwise, we might, without presumption, assert in the language in which the wise Alphonso spoke of the Cycles and Epicycles of Ptolemy, that had we been present at the creation of the universe, we could have given its Creator good advice. To suppose that the Almighty filled universal space with light, or its medium, streaming from worlds innumerable to worlds that can not be numbered, with no eye to receive it but that of the tiny occupants of the little star on which we dwell, and which intercepts only an infinitesimal of its rays, and that he launched these innumerable worlds on their eternal path in order that the descendants of Adam might study their motion, and write books upon Astronomy, is an opinion which could only find credence in minds of the most limited capacity, and in hearts devoid of all sympathy and feeling.

There is another aspect of this question which we would press on the attention of those who consider the earth as the only seat of life and intelligence. Those persons who can bring themselves to believe that all the other planets of the system are uninhabited, can have no difficulty in conceiving that the earth also might have been in the same category; and, consequently, the sun with all his gorgeous vassals, and the planets with all their faithful satellites, would have performed their daily and annual rounds, without an eye to see their glory, and without a voice to lift itself in praise. To our minds, such a condition of a planet,—of the Solar system,—and consequently of the sidereal universe, would be the same as that of our own globe, if all its vessels of war and of commerce were traversing its seas, with empty cabins and freightless holds,—as if all the railways on its surface were in full activity without passengers and goods,—and all our machinery beating the air and gnashing their iron teeth without work performed. A house without tenants, a city without citizens, present to our minds the same idea as a planet without life, and a universe without inhabitants. Why the house was built, why the city was founded, why the planet was made, and why the universe was created, it would be difficult even to conjecture. Equally great would be the difficulty were the planets shapeless lumps of matter poised in ether, and still and motionless as the grave; but when we consider them as chiseled spheres teeming with inorganic beauty, and in full mechanical activity, performing their appointed motions with such miraculous precision, that their days and their years never err a second of time in hundreds of centuries, the difficulty of believing them to be without life, if possible, immeasurably increased. To conceive any one material globe, whether a gigantic clod slumbering in space, or a noble plane equipped like our own, and duly performing its appointed task, to have no living occupants, or not in a state of preparation to be occupied, seems to us one of those notions which could be harbored only in an ill-educated and ill-regulated mind, a mind without faith and without hope; but to conceive a whole universe of moving and revolving worlds in such a category, indicates, in our apprehension, a mind dead to feeling and shorn of reason.

* The sun would have given us tides without the moon.

THE ENGLISH BOOK MARKET.—It is remarked by those in the book trade that England affords no market as yet for any American book, unless it be one which places the United States in a bad light. Of Mr. Ticknor's great work on Spanish literature, although it has been highly recommended by the Engly press and English reviewers, hardly three copies have been sold. Irving's Columbus involved the London publishers, who reprinted it in a loss of $10,000. A few months since, a Boston publisher endeavored to induce a London bookseller, of whom he was making a purchase to the amount of $25,000, to take a few copies of Mr. Everett's edition of the speeches of Daniel Webster, but to no purpose. The answer was, they would not sell; he did not believe there were fifty persons in England, who bought books, who knew who or what Mr. Webster was.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Christian Advocate.

Terms: $4 50 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:

SATURDAY, AUGUST 5, 1854.

Health.—We visited the Charity Hospital, and felt the pulse of the city, on Thursday morning. Mr. Young, a resident student, politely showed us through the wards. From 14th to 31st July, 320 admissions; discharged, 160; died, 49—ten of these from yellow fever. On Wednesday were four, Tuesday five, and Monday four deaths more of yellow fever. Four of the deaths that have occurred were of the officers and men of the New York ship Lady Franklin, direct from New York; three, of the crew of steamship United States, from Chagres. There are now about twenty cases under treatment. A striking fact is, that three we saw on Thursday had resided in the city from two to eight years, and passed through the epidemic of last summer unscathed.

Foreign Page.—Our English letter will be found interesting. The progress of the "voluntary principle" is evident—its triumph sure. Do not be deterred from a perusal of the rather long article on Plurality of Worlds, by its length. The word of warning on anarchy and infidelity, under the taking name of "German Reformers," is from one who belongs to a most respectable class. Though foreign born, they have no sympathy with the excesses of "foreigners in America." They know them better and dread them more than the native born do. For safety and peace they came here, and are jealous of seeing their refuge swept away. In principle, they are the strongest kind of native-Americans.

The Presidency.—The election to the Presidency of Centenary College of Dr. Deems, gives general and large satisfaction. The position is unequaled, in its kind, in the South, for its opportunities of wielding a moral influence. The Board, by Committee, present a clear statement in explanation of the vacancy.

D. D.—This degree has been conferred upon Rev. J. C. Keener, by LaGrange College, Ala. LaGrange has, for the most part and most commendably, been chary of its honors; and none that it has conferred reflects more honor on itself than this one.

FILING IT OUT.

A member of the Louisiana Conference, (A. E. G.) on his way last January to his new appointment, Opelousas, had, as a fellow cabin passenger, one of those numerous and well-kept gentlemen who wear long coats and short hair. He also was going to his appointment—a village of considerable Papal population in southwestern Louisiana, that had lost its priest not long before—not by death, but by his committing a crime not unknown and unfamiliar among the celibate fathers. Our friend G. was not a little amused, and finally teased, at the efforts of his fellow traveler to convince him, not only of the error, but impolicy of his ways. He was going to bury himself—no position, reputation, situation, etc.—with due Gallic accent on these words. As priest, he would have "large congregations and position:" (put on the accent.) In short, there were many "inducements."

Both went to their own places. The priest became very popular. One of the members, a lady—rich and devote—ordered a large and fine-toned bell for the church. And to mark the advent of our hero, and confer on him an immortal "position," his name was ordered to be cast in it.

A. E. G. passed through the village a fortnight ago and staid over night. Natural enough was the inquiry about his friend who had manifested such interest in him six months before. The bell had come, but the priest had gone. He had fallen like his predecessor, and worse. Place vacant; whereabouts unknown; position lost, and name on the bell. The question of filing out, was being seriously discussed.

COMMENCEMENT AT LA GRANGE.

At the late Commencement of this College, under the equal patronage and control of Alabama, Tennessee and Memphis Conferences, thirteen young men graduated and received the degree of A. B. Among them we notice Hutchinson and Wier, sons of Methodist Ministers:—

1. Wm. H. Bibb, Aberdeen, Miss.
2. Jas. J. Hutchinson, Columbus, Miss.
3. Thos. B. Sile, Decatur, Ala.
4. John W. Maddin, Huntsville, Ala.
5. Albert A. McGregor, Courtland, Ala.
6. John M. McDaniel, Sumpter co., Ala.
7. Wm. H. Price, South Florence, Ala.
8. John Rowland, Buckner, Ark.
9. J. M. Scruggs, Holly Springs, Miss.
10. J. B. Wier, Columbus, Miss.
11. J. M. Wynne, Greene county, Ala.
12. Samuel H. Yeagus, Columbus, Miss.

The regular degree of A. M. was conferred on—

John T. Dunklin, Dallas county, Ala.
Dr. A. J. Sykes, Courtland, Ala.
Prof. Thos. S. Jones, Centenary College, La.
Henry L. Jones, Esq., Paducah, Ky.
Dr. James Godfrey, Sumpter county, Ala.
Edward Goodwin, Esq., Leighton, Ala.
Dr. Robt. S. Hodges, Cartersville, Miss.
John C. Dale, Sumpter county, Ala.
W. H. Downs, Leighton, Ala.
Robt. E. Tweedy, Courtland, Ala.
A. F. Delony, Huntsville, Ala.

The honorary degree of A. M. was conferred on—

Rev. Jos. E. Plummer, Tenn. Conference.
Rev. F. G. Ferguson, Ala. Conference.

Book Notices.

Daniel, a Model for Young Men: By W. A. Scott, D. D. Carter and Brothers, N. York. 1854.

This book has been flatteringly received by the press, and by none with more commendation than Pro Tem, who held the tripod when it was laid on our table. "A second Daniel has come to judgment;" or, rather, Daniel has come to a second judgment. Dr. Cumming's Lectures on the book of Daniel have just been republished by a Philadelphia house. We feel bound, though with regret, in justice to our readers who look for information under this department of our journal, and in qualification of a verdict formerly, and under the circumstances properly rendered, to recall attention to late developments.

Norton's Literary Gazette, July 15, published in New York, is the first to notice and divulge. It says:

We discovered, at an hour too late for the correction of our notice, that Dr. Scott's book bore a striking resemblance to the work of the Rev. Dr. Cumming, entitled "Lectures on the Book of Daniel;" and a comparison of the two works, page by page, at once disclosed the fact that the New Orleans divine had unhesitatingly transferred to his own pages entire sentences of description, explanation, illustration, argument, and appeal, from the work of his Scottish brother, without the least acknowledgment.

The Gazette ascertains that the same liberty has been taken with Kitto, and sets it down positively that "one-tenth part of the entire work of Dr. Scott (perhaps we should speak within bounds if we said one-eighth part) is taken almost word for word from these two authors." Our own inquest confirms this statement:—

This piracy bears marks of being done with the utmost deliberation and care; this order of argument pursued by Dr. C. is sometimes much modified; there are frequent interpolations of words and sentences: sometimes the whole sentence is worked over for an American, instead of a British audience; and, indeed, it is very rare for an entire paragraph to be transferred without any alteration. Occasionally a sentence appears with quotation marks, or a marginal note gives credit for the thought; but this sometimes only blinds the reader, inasmuch as credit is given for the smallest part of what is borrowed in such a connection.

Three columns of parallels are given, with the remark that the only embarrassment is, "to select from the abundant illustrations at hand." The coincidences are very striking. Such as:—

Cumming, p. 19.	Scott, p. 88.
Sir Isaac Newton, who explored the firmament with unwearied wing, and made an apocalypse of the stars, felt that he was sounding a greater depth, and riding to a loftier height, when he sat down a patient student of this book to ascertain the mind and make plain to less gifted souls the meaning of the Spirit of God, etc.	Sir Isaac Newton, "who explored the firmament with unwearied wing, and made an apocalypse of the stars," felt that he was sounding a greater depth and riding to a loftier height, when he sat down a patient student of this book, to ascertain the mind and meaning of the Spirit of God therein, and make it plain to less gifted souls, than when engaged in his loftiest astronomical studies.

Another:—

Cumming, 209, 210.	Scott, 209, 210.
We read that Daniel was dropped into the lion's den, as a pebble is dropped into the silent sea, apparently to be forgotten forever, and the world seemed to have its way, and the persecutors of the prophet to have had their will. But man's thoughts are not God's thoughts, nor God's ways man's ways. The baffled persecutors of Daniel, when they placed him in that den, and put that heavy stone over him, and sealed it down, believed that no voice could rise from its depths to excite sympathy, and that no cry could come from the martyred prophet to arouse the popular indignation; and still more, that no traces of the foul murder they had endeavored to perpetrate, could remain to witness against them.	It would seem from the narrative, that Daniel was dropped as unfeelingly into the lion's den as a pebble is cast into the silent sea, to be forgotten forever. The moon and stars held on their joyous way over the Eastern world. Our little globe kept on its course, as if nothing had happened; the wicked seemed to have succeeded to their hearts' content; the aged servant of God was cast into the den of lions. Now, thought his enemies, he will trouble us no more. They supposed, when that heavy stone was placed over the mouth of the den, and sealed with the signet of the king and of his lords, that all was safe. They thought that, as no cry from the suffering man could be heard to excite sympathy—as the sufferings of the martyred prophet, while he was being devoured by the hungry lions, were hidden from the people, so there would be nothing to arouse popular indignation, and nothing more would ever be heard of him. But God's thoughts are not as man's thoughts, nor His ways as man's ways.

Here is another of our easy selecting:

Cumming, p. 156.	Scott, p. 219.
For instance, God suffers sin to develop itself upon earth into crimes and horrible calamities. He may be doing so, not because he hates us, for that he does not, nor because he would punish the guilty criminal—that will be a very minor reason—but because this earth on which we live is the great lesson-book of the Universe, etc.	If, then, God suffers sin to develop itself into crimes and horrible calamities upon the earth around you, it does not prove that he hates you, but that he would have you look upon this earth as the great LESSON-GIVING-BOOK of the Universe, etc.

Comparisons are odious, and we cease. It is but justice to Dr. Scott to say that, in his preface, he acknowledges himself "more or less indebted for help in preparing these lectures," to Calvin, Herodotus, Cumming, and a dozen others named. But the name of some of them does not stand within twenty pages of divers fine passages copied with almost literal exactness. Sift "Daniel, a Model for Young Men," 12mo. 340 pp., of all of Cumming that is in it; then give Kitto and others half a showing, and the residuum will not be much more than it was supposed the lions had left of the prophet.

The Gazette closes with a piece of news and a piece of its opinion; both of which are out of place in a Periodical of its standing. It is in the bad temper of one that has been taken in:—

The newspapers report that Dr. Scott's popularity has recently secured him a call to San Francisco, whither he has accordingly removed. We know not what success he may meet there, but we can confidently assure him that his wares will in future be in little demand in this market.

Doubtless, we have, in this notice of a bald and abundant plagiarism, done the present edition of Dr. Scott's work a service. Many will buy it to see if these things be so. Meantime, he may take the comfort of that saying of Boileau—"The worst misfortune of a book is not the being ill spoken of, but the not being spoken of at all."

Mysteries of a Convent: By a noted Methodist Preacher. T. B. Peterson: Philadelphia. 1854.

Such is the title of a sleazy-looking publication sent us by the publisher, with "Please Notice." The author's broad designation leaves the impression of "a catch." For Convential establishments, we have no use. A relic of a dark age, and a libel against nature and against society. Their existence in this century and country is a stretch of tolerance. Even banks are compelled to make a showing occasionally, and let the public know about the dollars in their vaults and strong boxes. But when once a girl passes the heavy doors and iron-grated windows of a Convent—all is dumb and dark. The Superiors can tell a tale that suits them, or tell nothing. People, grand jury, judge—all are locked out, and consent to it! Are the inmates well or badly treated? Are they forcibly detained or willing captives? Society may not know. The thing is an outrage.

Ever and anon our grand juries, conservators of public good, go the rounds of the watch-houses, work-houses, house of refuge, parish prison, hospitals and asylums. They let us know of abuses, and whether the officers do their duty. But there is an establishment with as many iron bars as any of these, and as many prisoners—the Ursuline Convent; why do they pass that by? It is more than possible, nay, it is highly probable, it is morally certain, that eighing ones are there who would rejoice at a delivery; abuses, that if searched out and told under oath, would make the ears of our citizens tingle. Have these victims no claim? Are these self-constituted jailors amenable to no law? We never have heard of the Coroner being called in there.

But, to return to the book which is not much of a book. Fiction is not the way to deal with this abomination. The writer has more nose than month. He is keen of scent, and pries into iniquities with the zest of familiarity, but tells it improbably. And for the pious sake of pious effect, tells some things extravagantly false. New falsehoods are not good, even against Jesuits. They recoil. The public mind, from doing them injustice under such deception, reacts to do them more than justice, and there they make a substantial gain. Tell the truth: it is bad enough, and only powerful. A single instance from this book of overwrought dealing with this subject, which always redounds more to the favor than damage of the assailed party, is in the installation of the chief character, Joubert, as head of the order of Ignatius Loyola, in the United States. The Roman Legate, in swearing him, makes him drink blood out of a skull! and in open cathedral burn a Bible. The climax is, the American flag is brought out and desecrated.

Now the Jesuits do not work so. They accommodate themselves. They still-hunt, and do not blow a horn. Finding out some common point and avowing their agreement, and keeping it up as far as possible, is their plan. Are you republicans? So are they. In favor of education? So are they. Antagonism is quieted. They avoid collisions with public sentiment, and lead, by seeming to pull with you. In this city occurred, only last week, a striking illustration of Jesuit policy, even as contrasted with ordinary Papists, upon whose sagacity they are a refinement. On one of their brick buildings, grown up by opposition to the Common Schools, a mutilated flag was hung out. It was the American flag. Over it and through it were the devices of the Roman Catholic Church. The people were getting restless at this display of impudence. They thought the American flag could not be improved upon. There might be a double entendre in this mixing up of signs. So serious had it got to be, that after the priests had refused to strike it, some of the order-loving advised the chief of police that by removing the exasperation, he might prevent a riot. At this hint, the flag was struck. The reporters noticed the occurrence, but got the Jesuits mixed up with it. They promptly disowned such a miserable blunder by the following card in one of the city papers:—

Gentlemen—Please insert in your columns these few lines, to correct an error which occurred in your edition of yesterday. You stated that some excitement had been created in the Fourth District, in consequence of the hoisting of the American flag, with a cross and a heart surrounding the stars in the Union, on the Jesuit's school and church, corner of Laurel and Josephine streets. Now, sir, I wish it to be well understood that the Jesuits have nothing to do with the school and church of the Fourth District, or with any of the other Catholic schools and churches in this city, which are entirely independent of them, with the exception of the well-known college and chapel in the First District, corner of Common and Baronne streets, which is the only establishment they possess in this city.

L. Curioz.

There is the genius of Loyola. And therefore this book, and all like it, is a blunder. Those who enact the mysteries of Convents, will be glad if their enemies write more.

Songs for the Little Ones.—This is a lovely little book, of which we have a copy from Mr. Packard, Agent of American Tract Society. Price 35 cents.

Blackwood—for July—just received. This begins a new volume, and is a favorable time for new subscribers to this staunch old English Magazine. For terms, see advertisement.

Putnam's Monthly (August) presents another fresh portrait of original contributors. A good idea, and, perhaps, expensive; but it will be appreciated. Readers have an instinctive longing for a personal acquaintance, at least sight, of the writers they commune with. The articles are too long, and "to be continued."

McGinnis & Carver, 36 Camp street.

Dr. Avery Downer, who had practised medicine for seventy years, died last week in Preston, Conn., aged ninety-two years, a Jeffersonian Democrat through life, and the sole surviving witness of the massacre at Fort Griswold, where he assisted his father in dressing the soldiers' wounds.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

CORRESPONDENCE UP THE RIVER—COAST GLIMPSES.

Our lower packets are good boats; good speed in the abstract; bating stoppages, the fastest; good tables and pleasant company. So we are aboard of one of them. Ceres, the fair and generous goddess—that's her name; and officers to match—charging nothing in this case, and not too much in any.

Rather warm—hot, you would say, these dog days, in the zenith of July. But here you are not so near the mark. The great Carolinian called our Mississippi an inland sea; he had internal improvements in his eye; we adopt his doctrine with special reference to breezes. Neptune recognizes it and sends the invigorating Gulf air all along the coast, and all over the face of the waters. With such breadth of surface, and contiguity to ocean, our sprightly steamer literally raises the wind. We are on a crooked sea, to be sure, and our course is more crooked than the running sea we are on. This is the accommodation trade we are in, and our craft stops every where, making as many angles, and turning as many sharp corners as a streak of chain lightning. There is an advantage; less progress, but more seeing. The river at this season is too low within its banks to allow of an extensive prospective. We get only glimpses; and these are better for imagination. They look like fragments of Eden, broken off and planted, just over and beyond the tops of the levees. The beauty of the coast for a hundred miles above New Orleans is felt and acknowledged by all travelers. It is, however, no other than beautiful. The river alone is grand, sublime; and these scenes of green and floral loveliness are like garland wreaths upon its mighty brow. Pleasing as the coast may be, it is monotonous. There is too much repose, too little life. It is like a lovely face, faultless of feature, without the less regular, but speaking linaments of thought and action.

What are all these landings for? Sundry little packages go out; occasionally large ones; always a cask larger than a whisky or a molasses barrel. It is an export of the Granite State—say from Fresh Pond. These planters know what luxury is most worth paying for, and they will have a weekly supply. Five hundred miles of river coast is thus regularly supplied with the means of keeping cool, and healthy as well. The old citizens have this among them.—About thirty years ago some live Yankee shipped a cargo of ice to the Crescent, and actually had the presumption to bring his polar ware within her very horns. Good old mayor R., more vigilant than some of his successors, hearing of the strange and suspicious arrival, assembled the civic fathers, who in council gave the subject grave and impartial consideration. Their deliberation resulted in ordering the ice to be thrown into the river, as dangerous to the health of the people; and the Yankee's cargo shared a fate similar to that which, in his father's lifetime, happened to his Majesty's tea in Boston harbor.

Things are changed now—ice is our best medicine; a necessity; and the South is dependent upon the North for it. Every thing else she may manufacture or grow at home, but this she can not. Ice is a political thing; it will keep us cool, and save the Union besides!

Landing at the planter's home, we see what sort of men they are. As a general thing, fine looking—very. Not boorish in manners nor rustic in appearance, but polished gentlemen: not dressed in homespun, but in the best taste and of best material; patent-leather shoes, and hats of late style from Paris. They have hearts as well as clothes. Now we land again. A mansion embowered among trees and shrubs appears above us, half concealed, but enough in view to assure us of its comfort and elegance. Here is a tall, pretty gentleman, of more than middle age, about to get off. His locks are well combed, and no strangers to pomatum: all in all, one of the handsomest men in the world. This is his home; and stepping ashore, he is met with a score of black and smiling faces. One takes his baggage; two lead him up the steep bank; and an old gray servant, leaning on a crooked stick, calls him master and blesses him. It is Trasimond Landry, at home: one of the wealthiest planters of Louisiana, and formerly Lieutenant Governor of the State.

We land at Bayou Sara early of a Monday morning. It is a double town with two names—Bayou Sara on the river, St. Francisville on the hill above. The lower town looks rusty and woe-begone. The Methodist church is dilapidated, broken windows, and scabby exterior. The upper town has a handsome courthouse, and our driver pointed out the judge and sheriff sitting on the ourb of a well hard by. St. Francesville appears to be comparatively fresh and prosperous. May the shadow of these places never be less, and whose would dwell in them let him dwell.

Twelve miles to Jackson ordinarily; our driver says fifteen to-day, as the roads are heavy and the creeks high. This latter observation is to justify his exorbitant charges Nevertheless, we have a pleasant trip inland Up hill and down, through creeks and gullies, and amid noble forests. The varieties of shrub and tree are almost innumerable. The magnolia, elm, beech, poplar, ash, linn, buckeye, oak, wild cherry, hack-berry, sweet-gum, sassafras, and how many more we have no space to enumerate. And then there were wild flowers, hedges, vines of musoadine and ivy; willows, alder, and pepperwood. It is glorious freedom to be in such woods, and breathe such fresh and fragrant air. I wish Woodsman were less a misnomer. Jackson at last. It stands about on little hills, and nestles and half hides itself in vales and trees. I am sure it could all be seen by looking twice, if we could only get the town in range It seems to be all stir in a quiet way, very much like the subdued activity of a country Sunday.

Commencement.

Better late than never. So we say of many things that might be worse. President Stanton, of Oakland, failing to be present, Rev. J. B. Walker, of New Orleans, delivered the Annual Sermon. It is well spoken of and much liked. Sorry that we could not hear as well as hear of it. Bro. Walker is to deliver the next Commencement Sermon: a good selection, and one that will not fail. The exercises and exhibition of the Preparatory Department were held at the College Chapel on Monday night. A full and interested audience greeted them, and the boys acquitted themselves well. The feature of the evening was a brief colloquial drama, performed by four. Scene: a student's room; dramatis personæ: junior writing his first commencement speech; his two fellow students and a professor. This was a decided hit, especially Simpkins! Should I mention the author's name, the prerogative editorial might draw a line across it. The Rubicon is banished for ever from the classical cant of Centenary. So mote it be.

The anniversary of the Franklin Institute was held on Tuesday morning. The young men gave us six speeches; rather long, but successful efforts. I was particularly pleased with "Spain—her age of glory;" by William Winans Wall, of Clinton; and "The ideal and the real life," by Thomas Hoover, of Pike county, Miss. After these speeches, the Hon. Christian Roselius, of New Orleans, was introduced to a large and delighted auditory. The Societies could not have made a happier selection than that of Mr. Roselius to deliver the Annual Address. The orator announced his theme—"The advantages and necessity of high classical education," upon which he descanted with singular force and eloquence. It was strong, manly, learned; every way worthy of the man, and equal to the occasion. An abstract is unnecessary, as, I am glad to inform you, the address will be published shortly.

Tuesday night, the Union Literary Society held its anniversary. This society gave six speeches; we think, on the whole, inferior to those of the morning. Some of them, however, were excellent. "Napoleon's Prophecy," by Richard L. Pugh, of Assumption; "Democracy—its empire," by Wm. Brainard Spencer, of Catahoula, were among the best.

Wednesday morning came, and with it an immense gathering from far and near. Fifteen hundred people at the least were congregated in and around the Chapel—a building which is a miserable apology of accommodation, neither large enough nor good enough, as a heavy rain during the exercises of the day caused some of us to feel quite sensibly. The Graduating Class was large, sixteen in all—promising young men. There were some mortifying failures in the speeches; but the most of them were good, so far as a bad delivery enabled me to judge. In the last particular, nearly all the declamation was exceedingly defective; too much gesture, too little naturalness. There were exceptions, but they were few. These young men have learned little of the art of public speaking, which they will not have to unlearn before the world can accept them as effective orators. There is scarcely any thing so bunglingly taught in our Colleges as the art of speaking. The spouting and machine eloquence of these commencements is both unwise and ludicrous. Whatever else he may have learned, it is painfully evident that, in general, the graduate declaimer has acquired nothing in the line of public speaking but a bundle of bad habits; of which it will, in most cases, take the most of a long life to rid himself, if the curse does not follow him to his grave. Public speaking as an art must be extemporaneous; and if our Colleges can not teach it in this manner, it were better that they should not teach it at all. The present system spoils more orators than it makes. Better leave nature untrameled than to fetter her choicest aptitudes by a course of unnatural training. This would more accord with true philosophy and common sense. Professor J. C. Miller delivered the Baccalaureate, or rather read it. It had every fitness for the occasion, and was worthy of more attention than an impatient audience were disposed to give it. Six hours of confinement were too much for the most patient. It may be a humiliating confession, but under the circumstances the people were too hungry to give the professor's address such a hearing as its merits deserved. The conferring of degrees and the Baccalaureate should have been kept back until after dinner. The honorary degree of LL.D. was conferred upon the Hon. Christian Roselius; and that of A. M. upon the Rev. J. B. Walker, and D. D. upon Rev. H. C. Thweatt: well deserved in every instance.

Some changes have been made in the Faculty. President Barker having resigned, Professor C. F. Deems, of North Carolina, was elected in his place, and the Rev. B. M. Drake as pro tem. until the former shall accept and take his place. Professor Holcomb, of Mobile, takes the place of H. W. Drake as Professor of the Greek Language and Literature; and T. P. Callenete, of Lafourche Professor of Modern Languages, in the place of Emile Lepage, resigned.

The Board have resolved to make this a year of building up; and the long talked of and much needed center building, wings and all, are to be commenced as speedily as may be. They have upward of eleven thousand dollars available, and it is expected that the friends of Centenary will add twice this amount and complete the undertaking. When these buildings are furnished, the College will have the best and most spacious buildings of any institution in the country. Notwithstanding the adverse circumstances of the past year, the lateness of the term, and the absence of the President, it has prospered. Two hundred and thirty-eight names are on the Catalogue, including the lower departments. This is a flattering list, and will be largely increased.

Jackson is a place of institutions. Besides the College, there are three private schools of high grade—two female and one male academy: there are between three and four hundred youths here yearly. Jackson is hard to beat in this respect. The location is highly favorable—convenient to Louisiana and Mississippi; and one of the healthiest places in the South.

In my next, the Insane Asylum located here will claim the attention of your readers, and other items here and there. Your correspondent, in this conclusion, takes occasion to acknowledge many kindnesses in Jackson, specially the hospitable attentions of Rev. A. F. M. Fly and his excellent wife.

Jackson, July 26. Woodsman.

The graduating class.

P. S.—The first honor of the class was bestowed on H. E. Weathersby, of Mississippi; the second honor upon P. H. Swearengen, of Texas, and the third honor upon L. N. Dantzler, of Mississippi.

The degree of A. B. was conferred upon sixteen young gentlemen, forming the graduating class, viz: P. H. Swearengen and Joseph Berry, of Texas; L. S. Hereford, of W. Baton Rouge; Hannibal Carter, Allen Cook, Haley M. Carter, J. F. McKneely, and W. S. Vaughan, of East Feliciana; Alex. G. Lane, of Terrebonne, La.; J. D. Hamilton, W. W. Davis, of West Feliciana; F. D. Conrad, H. H. Walsh, of East Baton Rouge; L. N. Dantzler, C. F. Thompson and H. E. Weathersby, of Mississippi.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

EAST ALABAMA CORRESPONDENCE.

Mr. Editor—For sometime I have been thinking of writing a few thoughts for the Advocate, in reference to our portion of the world, and facts and circumstances connected therewith.

Glennville.

This is a rural village in Barbour county, Alabama, situated on the stage road from Columbus, Ga., to Enfaula, Ala.; thirty miles from the former place, and seventeen from the latter, in a pine woods, somewhat broken, sandy, but healthy section of country. It is not noted for any particular beauty of locality, or symmetry of form; for it has sprung up, and expanded, by the force and under the control of circumstances. Its shape is rather oblong, covering an area of two miles in length and half a mile in width; and numbers about eighteen hundred inhabitants. The principal and staunchest citizens are farmers, who have selected this as the place of their residence; and most of them have displayed very good taste in the erection of their neat and handsome domicils; there are not many superb buildings.

The village has four stores, two coach shops, blacksmith shops, etc.

Schools:

There is a male school numbering about sixty students, under the instruction of J. M. White, A. M., and W. M. Turner, who are said to be good teachers. The academy building is not sufficiently large to afford ample accommodation for the pupils; and I believe it has no apparatus.

The Glennville Female College is an institution of high character; it has an efficient Board of Trustees; and the Rev. D. S. T. Douglass, A. M., as President of the College, who has been, and will continue to be aided by very competent assistants. The recent examination exercises gave strong and satisfactory evidence of the eminent abilities of the Faculty, and of the "suitable proficiency" the students have already made. A very commodious and suitable college building is now in course of erection, and will be completed by the opening of the next session, which will be the 25th of September. Proverbial as the village is for the intelligence and refinement of its citizens, and for its healthfulness and freeness from dissipation and wickedness. I would earnestly bespeak for the College a liberal patronage.

Churches.

We have three churches, one Baptist and two Methodist—White and African. The Baptist church is a substantial and comfortable building, with a good Pastor, respectable and pious membership. The Methodist church (for the whites) is quite a neat building; and we have at present a membership of 140; our recent revival having added about forty members. It is one of six appointments, known as Glennville Circuit, and the Pastor preaches in the church two Sabbaths in each month; the other Sabbaths are occupied by the local Ministers. The African or colored church, is a large building, with a membership of one hundred. The pastor of the white church is "their pastor," and is with them usually two Sabbaths in a month; his congregations are large, respectable and orderly, for these sable sons of Ham profess to have great love and respect for "their preacher."

Mineral Spring.

This is two miles from the Mansion House, and the gentlemanly proprietor, Mr. James E. Barnett, is "worthy and well qualified" to accommodate any and all visitors. The Spring is said to possess very excellent properties.

Respectfully, James W. Shores.

Glennville, Ala., July, 1854.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

A STATEMENT.

Jackson, La., July 26.

The Committee to whom the matter of Dr. Barker was referred, Report:—

That they regret to say that the facts of the case are not fully before them on account of the absence of a letter from Dr. Barker to Professor Miller, and by him sent to Dr. Winans, which contains matter of importance to a true presentation of the case. The committee would recall the facts as they transpired.

Dr. Rivers tendered his resignation in January. Dr. Thweatt was elected to the vacant Presidency; official information was received that from considerations of health and others, he could not accept the office. Along with this announcement came the well-avouched assurance that Dr. Barker, of Allegheny College, would serve if certain preliminary questions were satisfactorily answered, and in the providence of God it should seem to be his duty to do so. With the certain knowledge by the Joint Board that those questions would be satisfactorily answered, Dr. Barker was unanimously elected. The election was announced to him by telegraph; answer was soon received that he accepted the tendered office and honor. In due time a letter was received (the one not before the committee) fully declaring his acceptance, and, as we understand, unencumbered with any condition. only regretting that fear for the health of his family would prevent his taking the chair until the October following; at the same time stating, that if the Board deemed it unadvisable for the office to remain vacant so long, he should feel that no wrong had been done him by their proceeding at once to the election of another man. This statement was not made in any official or formal correspondence; no official reply, of course, was made. Dr. Barker was the recognized President of Centenary College. Thus matters remained, except that letters were written to him by the acting President and by the Secretary of the Board, urging the importance of his presence at the approaching Commencement. From his reply no difficulty seemed to be in the way of his ultimate occupancy of the chair, though we could no longer hope to have him preside at Commencement.

On Monday morning, the first day of the present Session of the Board, a letter was presented which had been received the Saturday night preceding, fully and formally announcing his errender of the office, assigning, as reasons, the sickness of one Professor of Allegheny College, the absence of another, and the almost inevitable destruction of the College, if he abandoned it at this critical time.

The committee regret to utter any word of censure against a man whom they believe to be an honorable man and a careful Christian; but in vindication of this Board and of our College, they must express the opinion that the Board has been greatly wronged, the good order of the College hazarded, the hold of the College upon the confidence of the community jeopardized by the course pursued by Dr. Barker.

Not that we deny him the privilege of reconsideration, though in so great a matter this is hardly allowable; but we specially censure him for the tardiness of his decision after reconsideration. We think that he suffered a present necessity to blind him to the perception of distant and paramount obligation; what ought to have been a more urgent and imperious necessity upon his sense of duty. That he has in the fear of God satisfied his conscience, we feel assured; that he does not stand acquitted before thoughtful and disinterested men, we feel equally assured.

The committee take leave of the subject and of Dr. Barker, by stating, that while our confidence in his stability has suffered some dislocation, and our opinion of his quick sensibility to obligation has suffered some abatement, we do not withhold from him our cordial regards and good wishes, and are pleased to express our confidence in his integrity as a man and a Christian.

Respectfully submitted:

John W. Burruss,
John McVea.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

THE PROMISE, AND ITS FULFILLMENT.

"The pupils attend Church, once at least on the Sabbath, under the direction of their parents or guardian as to the place of worship." [Catalogue of the Judson Institute.

The impression which the above language is calculated, and is intended to convey to the public is, that the pupils attending the "Judson," are at full liberty to attend Church where they please, provided the place is located by the parents or guardians. Understood thus, the course is just and proper. It is just what every pupil and parent has a right to expect and demand in this case. But is this true in fact? Do the pupils generally attend the Churches they prefer—the Churches of their parents? Do they feel at liberty to go any Sabbath, or any part of a Sabbath, to the Church of their choice? Nay, do they feel free to ask permission any day to attend what Church they choose, even their parents' Church? Are they not given in various ways to understand that there are all expected to go where the Principal goes? that it is not allowable for the pupils to be going some here and some there; that it is not the Principal's place of worship, the Baptist Church?

It may be said—as the language above seems to imply—that the young ladies are not consulted, but the matter is left to their parents. Now it has always seemed strange to many people, that of all the pupils attending the Judson from abroad, whose parents believe in to other communions, not one has had sufficiently zealous for their own Church to request that their child might attend it regularly! Yet, if the Catalogue be true, this is the case. For we venture the affirmation, that not one such who has boarded in the Judson has ever attended any Church regularly but the Baptist. If, therefore, the request has been made, it has been disregarded. Or we to conclude that those Methodists, Presbyterians, etc., who send them, have become so indifferent about Churches as not to care where their children go, or what they hear? There is another suggestion: Parents with proper feelings are very anxious about their children; and especially about daughters when away from home at school; and are naturally inclined to be willing that they should be subject to almost any restriction that is not cruel, so that they may be safe. It is a serious thing for the Principal of an institution, speaking strongly and impressively to parents upon the necessity of guarding their daughters—girlhood particularly—and shielding it from harm, to induce those parents to submit to almost any thing in this way. Is it thus under cover of a care for the welfare of the child, she is kept from the Church of her choice and of its parents, and placed within the sphere of the influence of the sect of the Teacher!

It is published that "sectarian influences are carefully excluded." But every one knows that very great and constant, though quiet and unprofessed efforts are made to nearly all these sectarian institutions to make proselytes of the pupils. The Judson is by no means free from this charge, as its history will show. The different Churches stand in relation to proselyting zeal, in their own sections and elsewhere, in the following order, viz: the Roman Catholic, Episcopalian, Baptist, Presbyterian, Methodist. The Presbyterian brethren, as a general thing, give no ground of complaint on this score, though there have been exceptions. I very much from twenty years' observation, that Methodists are less culpable on this score than any other Church.

Without intending to impeach the motive of the author of the passage at the head of this article, I affirm that it sets forth a misapprehension which is not expected to be met with—the spirit of which never has been met; and which it is impracticable to meet; The children of Methodist parents attending and boarding in the Judson, do attend the Methodist Church, but not as they would attend the Church of their choice—not regularly—not by themselves; but when it is the pleasure the President to attend and take the school with him! The reason they do not attend oftener, and by themselves, they do not give if asked for them. Let our friends understand, then, that it is no ordinary matter that they subject their daughters to by permitting them to the "Judson."

Let not the friends of that institution charge the sin of this article upon any interested party in Marion, for the writer never was there, but has been in the place and knows the world enough to understand how things are.

Observer.

July 26.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

APPENDIX TO THE REPORT

VISITING COMMITTEE ON CENTENARY INSTITUTE, ALABAMA.

Mr. Editor—"Honor to whom honor is due," is a maxim as popular in and about the Centenary Institute, as it ought to be in any place; hence the astonishment with which some of us were seized, when we read the report of Rev. J. E. Nawmnn, concerning the late examination. The committee of examination have, heretofore, in heralding the triumphs of the Institute, not been unmindful of the extra merits of one department, which some strange oblivion of the committee, entirely unsung; or else the silence is to be interpreted as an noknowledgment that there was a want of ability to do it justice. The department of Music and French has for five years past been under the charge of Prof. Jules Brndy, assisted in Music by Mrs. Ferguson; and the committee ought to have known that in this department there has been no failure in a punctual discharge of schoolroom duties;—and surely there was none in the two unrivaled Concerts given by the young ladies of the Music classes, under the supervision of their faithful and efficient teachers. Nor was there any failure in Mr. Bole French class.

I suppose the committee, in great haste, passed the whole matter over to the chairman, and he forgot it; but then how could he forget? is the question; and especially that brilliant and tastefully executed "Sacred Song" with which the whole was closed, and in which the chairman took a part!!

The Centenary Institute ones not, nor can any high school for young ladies, succeed in, for any age and country without offering facilities to acquire the accomplishments named in the article. Gentlemen and ladies of liberal and cultivated minds say, without reserve, that we hear no music to equal that brought out by Mr. Brady's Concerts." Now if the committee have no musical appreciation, it is to be pitied; but not a man of it will own the impeachment, for the Bard of Avon has said of such men, that they are capable of "stratagems, treason," etc.

This much, Mr. Editor, as one deeply interested in the success of the Institute at Summerfield, I feel constrained to say in behalf of the concerned, especially in behalf of the capable and faithful teachers of the departments named, for they have never failed to do their duty. Yours respectfully, Alabama, July 25. JUSTICE.

Revival Intelligence.

TALLAPOOSA CT., ALA. CON.—We have just closed our first protracted meeting on this circuit, which was held at Harmony Church. The work of the Lord was powerfully revived from the commencement of the meeting, which continued to increase in interest until the close. The presence of the Lord was sensibly manifested throughout the congregation—sinners convicted—mourners converted—backsliders reclaimed, and the Church wonderfully blessed. It was indeed a time of rejoicing with the people of God. The meeting lasted eleven days. The result was about thirty conversions, and forty accessions to the Church; and some of them bid fair to make working and useful members. The young men have commenced a prayer meeting, called the Young Men's Prayer-meeting. O that they may always remain steadfast, immovable, abounding in the work of the Lord. A most solemn and serious feeling pervades this community upon the subject of religion.

We were assisted by Bros. Samuel Hancock, J. W. Harris, and others. The circuit is in good condition; the prospect is good for a general revival. We pray and look for a greater display of God's saving power.

July 20. JAMES W. TOWLES.

ATTALA CT., MISS. CON.—The Lord has begun a work here in many places. I closed a four-days meeting at Mt. Vernon on the 11th inst. Several of the local preachers did efficient service. Bro. H. H. Schrock, from Deer Creek mission, was with us, and preached with a holy unction; proving himself a workman not needing to be ashamed of. Several were converted; fifteen accessions to the Church. B. J. WOODWARD, P. C.

PIKEVILLE, ALA. CON.—The Lord is greatly reviving his work on Pikaville mission: 31 accessions to the Church the last week. We still expect good times. Among these hills a great interest is manifested.

July 20. JOHN GRESS.

Notices.

Camp-Meetings.

There will be a Camp-meeting held at Liberty Chapel, commencing on Thursday before the third Sabbath in September next.

Also, one at Bethel camp-ground, on Thursday before the second Sabbath in October next. To both of which our ministerial brethren are cordially invited. Come brethren—come sinners—come every body.

D. M. WIGGINS, P. E.
B. J. WOODWARD, P. C.
Attala Ct., Sharon Dist.,
July 20, 1854.

General Intelligence.

Correction: Judicial Decision.

A notice of the case of Calcote vs. Stanton & Buckner, appeared in the secular department of this paper, 15th ult., headed "Important Judicial Decision." It was an extract from the secular press, though credited to none of them, inasmuch as it appeared in several about the same time. A letter, shown us, from Judge Sharkey, counsel for defendants, induces us to believe that the news item was partial, if not incorrect, and prejudicial to the parties, both in a business and moral point of view. We "took counsel" in the case, and trust the following corrects and clears it up. [ED.

Judge S. says:—

"The truth is, the merits of the case are wholly undeveloped, and as you are not a lawyer, I will explain: Calcote filed his bill, making out the best case he could of course. The defendants demurred to this bill, which was in effect a denial that the party had stated any such case as he they were bound in law to answer and the whole question was, whether the defendants were bound to answer even on the complainant's own showing, and it was decided that they were bound to answer, and this was all that was decided. They may answer, or they may not; this depends upon the Supreme Court, but if they are required to answer, they may deny all the charges made against them, and they may and no doubt will prove themselves clear, but it lies with the other party to prove that they are guilty. As the merits of this case are far out of view as yet, and hence a publication of that sort was calculated to mislead, and will mislead many."

Editor Christian Advocate—

Dear Sir: I have read Judge Sharkey's letter, and I have to-day, also, read the opinion of Chancellor Glenn. I have no hesitation in saying that Judge Sharkey is perfectly correct in his views—that the effect of a decision of the High Court of Errors and Appeals, affirming the decree of the Chancellor, will be nothing more than to compel the defendants to answer; and that all the essential allegations of the Bill, not admitted in the answer of defendants, must be fully proved by the complainant before any such decree as they seek can be rendered vs. the defendant.

I will add, that a demurrer is often resorted to as the most expeditious mode of disposing of a suit, because it rnises only points of law, and therefore, if decided in favor of defendants, relieves them of the trouble and expense of taking voluminous testimony as to facts.

I am not employed in and have no interest or feeling in this matter, and only write this at your request. YOUNG M. CLAYTON.

N. O., Aug. 3, 1854

Congressional—Destruction of San Juan

WASHINGTON, August 1.—The President of the United States, yesterday, sent into the House a message, showing that Capt. Hollins, of the sloop-of-war Cyane, had acted in strict conformity with his instructions in bombarding and destroying Greytown, or San Juan. The House occupied the day in the discussion of the General Appropriation bill.

In the Senate the whole day was taken up in discussing a bill for the relief of the widow of Mr. Batchelder, who was killed in Boston on the occasion of the Burns riot.

The Catholic Question.

NEW YORK, August 1.—The Times of this city states that the Catholic Bishops of the United States, who are divided in opinion with regard to Bronson's doctrines, have appealed to the Court of Rome for its decision on the subject.

The Amazon.

The recent explorations of the river Amazon and its tributaries, and of the countries contiguous thereto, made by order of the United States Government, have materially increased our stock of knowledge concerning a highly interesting portion of South America, and one destined, sooner or later, to be of great importance to us and the whole world.

The earliest exploration known to have been undertaken on the Amazon date back as far as the middle of the sixteenth century, and there are still, in the archives of the Society of Jesus at Quito, some imperfect accounts of what was accomplished by the earlier members of that order. But it was not until as late as 1750—90 that any thing of importance was done. Spanish cupidity, stronger than any religion, led numbers of adventurous men there to penetrate, in search of Bimini and El Doredo, so points but recently resought, and mapped out and geographically described only within the present year.

The country drained by the Amazon, and which must eventually pass an immense trade through its waters, can hardly, as yet, be computed. The river is already navigable to ships for thousands of miles, and, with the removal of a few bars, could be so to steamers for a great additional distance. It has tributaries flowing in from the North and South which are longer and deeper than Red River or the Missouri, and which drain regions that, properly cultivated could be made to produce almost any and every thing. The western slope of the Andes is rich in minerals: gold, silver, iron, coal, copper and quicksilver have all been found there, and need only the appliances of civilization to be sought with an exceeding profit. The land, within the two millions of square miles drained by the river Amazon, is of unrivaled fertility—producing nearly every thing essential to the comfort and well being of man. Wheat, rye, tobacco, barley, maize and clover grow on the side of the mountain, while immense herds of sheep, llamas, alpacas and vicunas feed near by, and yiel wool of the finest and longest staple. This temperate zone lies but a short distance from the torrid, where products, of an altogether different kind, are found in unequaled profusion. Coffee, plantains, sugar cane and cotton grow there with a luxuriance of which we know nothing. The finest and most luscious fruit is found in any abundance: orangee, lemons, ananas, pine apples, melons, and many others of which the very names are strange and unfamiliar to our ears. Cocoa and vanilla are also be gathered at certain seasons of the year. Dyes of various colors and drugs of the rarest virtue; rice, India rubber, copaiba, gum copi, animal and vegetable wax, nutmeg, Tonka beans, ginger, pepper, arrow-root, tapioca and indigo are a few of the miscellaneous produs of a region which has not yet one inhabitant to ten square miles, but which is capable of supporting a population double that of China or Japan, and with less than half the labor.

The testimony of the latest explorers is, that the climate is salubrious and the temperature agreeable. The direct rays of the sun are said to be tempered by an almost constant East wind, so that no one suffers from either heat or cold. Those who once become accustomed to the climate are always fond of it, and unwilling to give it up for any other. Epidemics—whether of cholera, small-pox or yellow fever—are unknown. There is a narrow belt of country not far from the river; troublesome what the natives call malcitas, which are of a malignant type, but they are confined to particular seasons and would doubtless lose much of their malignancy and danger before a scientific management. On each side of the tributaries of this great river are broad savannas sounding in herds of wild cattle and various game, and beyond them, to the South, are rang of mountains said to be rich in diamonds and other precious stones.

All this country is now a wilderness untenanted, uncultivated and uninhabited—its wealth unsought and its resources undeveloped. The cities or sites of cities at the mouth of the river and along its shores are but sites to give no prospect of growth. The mighty agency of commerce must be invoked before the country can be settled, its resources developed and its cities built up.

When that day comes—and come it will shortly—Para will be the New York of South America, and new cities will spring up in the interior, bearing such a relation to that count as Cincinnati, St. Louis and Pittsburg do this. Then more will be added to the wealth of the world than was by the attack on China or the mission to Japan, and our own adventurous citizens will find a means to wealth as secret as California and infinitely more pleasant. We shall then see a river

> —"Whose breast of waters broadly dis
> Between the banks that bear the vine
> And hills all rich with blossomed trees,
> And keels that promise corn and wine
> With scattered cities crowning these,
> Whose fair white walls along them shine

The entire assets of a recent bankrupt were nine small children! The creditors act magnanimously, and let him keep them.

The Tehuantepec Route.

The frequency with which we have referred to this favorite American route across the Isthmus of Darien leads us to refer with some gratification to the recent report of the English and French engineers sent to the Isthmus for the purpose of exploring the way and reporting the practicability of constructing a canal between the two seas. England and France both entered heartily into the plan, reported by Mr. Gisborne, for constructing a canal between Caledonia and Punta del Rio Sabanas. The large sum of $35,000,000 was proposed as a commencement of the concern, backed by the wealth and influence of both Governments. Previous, however, to its inception, the Governments resolved that they would assure themselves whether it was practicable, and to that end sent two steamers, Le Chimère and Esplegle, to Darien, with competent surveyors and engineers. The Government of New Grenada furnished additional assistance.

The expedition commenced its operations from Caledonia on the 24th of January, 1854, and has just returned with a report, most lamentably falsifying those hitherto made. The Moniteur (French) contains the following information, which we quote in substantiation of our remarks:

The result of this expedition proves that this project is altogether impracticable.

The map, drawn by Mr. Gisborne in 1852, compared with that which Messrs. St John and Codazzi have together just finished, shows that Mr. Gisborne has committed a very grave error; that he has taken the Chumnaque for the Sabanas River. Hence the direction in which Messrs. Cullen and Gisborne proposed to dig the canal no longer fulfills the end that they proposed to themselves to attain. Indeed, this line does not arrive at Punta del Rio Sabanas upon the Pacific Ocean, as they had up to that time believed.

Mr. Gisborne, in his first exploration, having arrived at the river Chumenque, was persuaded that he had encountered the Sabanas River, which empties into the Pacific Ocean, and believed firmly that he had traversed the Isthmus Mr Gisborne has been forced to acknowledge his error.

Thus has fallen a "project," which obtained from its first publication the direct protection of the French and English Governments, which were powerfully seconded by the capitalists of Europe, and which would have been the most formidable rival of the Tehuantepec route.

The route by Tehuantepec remains yet the best means of inter-oceanic communication offered to the commerce of the world.

A LEARNED WOMAN.—Mrs. Putnam, of Boston, has, perhaps, no equal in the world for critical knowledge of languages, for she converses readily in French, Italian, German, Polish, Swedish, and Hungarian, and is familiar with twenty modern dialects, besides Greek, Latin, Hebrew, Persian, and Arabic. This extent of the linguistic acquirements is paralleled only by Cardinal Mezzyfanti, Lidia Burritt, and some half dozen other great names of both worlds.

A NEW BUILDING MATERIAL.—From the Boston Chronicle we learn that a specious factory is now being constructed in Waltham, Massachusetts, from a novel material. The walls are made of gravel, shapeless rocks, sand and small stones mixed with mortar, making a composition which, when dry, will be as hard, firm and durable as can be desired.

It is said by architects that the material promises to be quite as durable as brick, and superior in all respects to wood, and that a house can be built of it for a tenth part of the cost of a brick building of corresponding dimensions. There is an octagon shaped dwelling house now being completed in Somerville, the walls of which are of this material. It is 30 feet in diameter, and two stories in height.

The Livingston (Ala.) Union gives the particulars of a singlar accident which occurred up the Valley recently. A man named Adam Straley, of Cuylerville, was on a fishing excursion with his son. They had caught some fish and the boy was carrying them in a small sack which also contained a butcher knife, when he accidentally fell, and making no effort to arise, his father attempted to help him, when he found the knife had pierced his son's heart, and he was a corpse.

ANTICIPATORY USE OF THE CROSS.—It is strange, yet well authenticated, and has given rise to many theories, that the symbol of the Cross was already known to the Indians before the arrival of Cortez. In the Island of Cozumel, near Yucatan, there were several; and in Yucatan itself, there was a stone cross. And there an Indian, considered a prophet among his countrymen, had declared that a nation, bearing the same as a symbol, should arrive from a distant country! More extraordinary still was a Temple dedicated to the Holy Cross by the Toltec nation in the city of Cholula. Near Tuxansingo, there is also a cross engraved on a rock with various characters, which the Indians, by tradition, ascribe to the Apostle St. Thomas. In Tabasco, also, there existed a cross, which the Indians, from time immemorial, had been accustomed to consider as a divine symbol. By order of the Bishop Civantos, it was placed in a sumptuous chapel in the cathedral. Information concerning its discovery, together with a small cup, cut out of its wood, was sent to Rome to Paul V.; who received it on his knees, singing the hymn "Vexilla regis," etc. [Life in Mexico, by Madame Calderon de la Barca.

A CURIOUS FACT—Cholera, in its repeated returns, almost inveriably revisits the same countries, districts of countries, portions of cities and towns, and even particular houses and rooms where it had been before. The first case that occurred in the town of Leith, Scotland, in 1848, was in the same house and within a few feet of the very spot from whence the epidemic of 1832 commenced its course. On its reappearance in the town of Pollokshaws, it snatched its first victim from the same room in which it broke out in 1832. At Oxford, in 1839, as in 1832, the first case occurred in the county jail.

At Gottingen, in Holland, the disease, in 1832, attacked in the better part of the city only two houses, and the epidemic broke out in those two identical houses in the visitation of 1848. Such observations have led medical observers to predict with certainty the very spots in which attacks of cholera would occur. The seats of cholera are the well know haunts of other epidemics and pestilential diseases, such as typhus, scarlet fever, measles, hooping cough, erysipelas and remittent fever.

A disgraceful scene occurred at the Cathedral, yesterday afternoon. An Irishman, named Timothy Callan, brought the body of his child to receive the rites of the church. These, for some reason, the Bishop refused; and several of the funeral party informed us that the refusal was caused by the fact that Callan retailed liquor upon Water street, despite the Bishop's orders that he should give up the traffic. Even if this were so, the query is a natural one, whether, in a free country, the discipline of the church should leave the father to follow the corpse of an infant.

Callan raved like a madman, swore terribly, proclaimed himself "a good Catholic, who paid his dues," denounced the Bishop, and attempted to tear the coffin from the carriage in which it was placed. The mother plead with the father who was half drunk, to be quiet; but her entreaties were unheeded. [Cleveland Herald.

Dr. Jamieson was the first person who introduced the umbrella into Glasgow; this was in the year 1782. He brought it from Paris, and when he commenced unfurling it in our streets, crowds of people followed him in amazement at the spectacle.

Destruction of Greytown.

Bombardment and Burning of San Juan, Greytown by U. S. Sloop of War Cyane. The Town Totally Destroyed—No Lives Lost.

The steamship Prometheus arrived at New York on the 24th, with late dates from California. We take from the New York papers the following particulars concerning the bombardment of Greytown.

The Prometheus arrived outward on the morning of the 15th, at 8 o'clock, having touched at Kingston for coal. Found in the harbor the United States ship-of-war Cyane, commanded by Captain Hollins, which had arrrived at San Juan del Norte on the 11th ultimo, in 21 days from New York, commissioned to settle certain difficulties between American citizens and the local authorities. Also, to demand a full and satisfactory apology for an insult given, a short time since, to Hon. Solon Borland, our Minister to Central America.

The authorities and residents of the town refused to make the slightest apology. After giving ample time, and no reply having been received, Captain Hollins, on the 12th inst., issued a proclamation to the authorities and residents—that, unless an apology was made by 9 A. M., on the 13th, he should, without further notice, proceed to bombard the town. No apology came! He, in the meantime, took possession of the Transit Company's steamers, and sent them to the town, offering protection to all persons who chose to accept. And, within one minute of the time designated by Capt. H., the cannonading commenced, and continued, with short intervals, to 3 P. M. During the intervals no disposition was manifested on the part of the inhabitants to come to terms for the saving of the property. At 4 P. M., a party landed, commanded by a Lieutenant, and burned the town. San Juan, or Greytown, on the 13th, was entirely destroyed! One or two small buildings, at the suburbs, remain to mark the spot. No lives lost. Mr. Scott, agent of the Accessory Transit Company, tendered a free passage, by the Prometheus, to all who wished to leave. A few accepted the offer.

The Cyane sails for Boston on the 17th inst., and takes home Mr. Fabius, our Commercial Agent. Officers and crew all well.

The British schooner Bermuda, the West India Company's mail steamer Dee and a British merchantman, were witnesses of the same, laying in the harbor at the time.

The revolution in Nicaragua and the difficulties at San Juan have not interfered in any way with the transit of the Californin passengers over the route.

FURTHER PARTICULARS.

From residents at Greytown at the time of the bombardment, and from passengers by the Prometheus, we gain further facts relative to the town and its destruction.

Greytown consisted of about eighty houses, nearly all of them built of wood, and by far the greater proportion of them constructed in the United States and taken there on shipboard. One of these—Lyons's Hotel—cost $15,000. Not more than one-fourth of the houses in the new part of the town, which has been built since 1850, were occupied. They have heretofore been occupied, but were deserted from business considerations some time previous to this affair.

The population of Greytown consisted of about 500 persons altogether; of which number ten or twelve were from the United States, about twenty-five were Englishmen, and twelve Frenchmen and Germans. The remainder of the population were Jamaica negroes and natives. The Americans, English, French and Dutch were engaged in hotel-keeping and trade.

The houses occupied by the natives and negroes were principally frame buildings, with roofs of thatched palm-leaf.

When the Cyane appeared before Greytown and demanded satisfaction to the amount of $24,000, threatening bombardment if not complied with at a given hour, it was not believed by the inhabitants that the town was to be demolished, pillaged and burned. They expected that a few shots would be fired into the town, that a few houses would be perforated, and then hostilities would cease. Most of the English, however, went for protection on board of the British war schooner Bermudas, Capt. Jolly, lying in the harbor. Mr. Fabens, U. S Agent, together with six or seven of the Americans, sought protection under the flag of the United States on board of the Cyane, and the remainder of the inhabitants of Greytown, including all of the French and natives, together with a few English and Americans, left the place during the night and morning preceding its destruction. They all encamped together on the shore in the woods about a mile distant. Not anticipating the entire demolition of the town by bomb-shells and torches, they took but little of their effects with them. All the property left was destroyed. Consequently the houseless inhabitants were in great suffering for the want of food, and of clothing and protection from the weather when our informants left. They had stretched up sheets for tents, and many were obliged to sleep in the open air, without the least shelter, and were half famished for the want of food. A brig laden with provisions, which had just arrived as the bombardment commenced has probably supplied them.

The terms of Capt. Hollins not being complied with, he opened his fire promptly at the appointed time—nearly every shot doing execution. He fired about two hundred shots, but not hurning up the town as he desired, he sent ashore a launch with a lieutenant and about twenty-five men, who proceeded to set on fire all that remained of Greytown. While doing so they are said to have inspected the interior of the buildings rather closely, and pilleged as much as they pleased. Before finishing this work they were pretty thoroughly intoxicated with wines and liquors, and were constantly cheering. The amount of property destroyed by this bombardment is stated to be half a million of dollars.

The day before the bombardment Capt. Hollins took possession of the guns which were for the protection of the town, and took them to Punta Arenas and placed them in the keeping of the agent of the Transit Company. During the bombardment two shots were aimed at the flag staff from which floated the Mosquito flag. The first ball severed the halyards, and down came the flag to half mast, and the second ball cut the staff half off, from which it was suspended.

While the Cyane was cannonading, a note was received by Capt. Hollins from the Captain of the British schooner Bermuda stating that he regretted that he had not a British vessel of war there of the size of the Cyane—he would compel him to desist. Capt. Hollins, in reply to the note, regretted that Capt. Jolly had not two just such, as he believed that the United States could get possession of them on the same terms as they got the Cyane. There was a good deal of anxious looking for the British mail steamer Dee, then hourly expected, and remarks were made that when she arrived hostilities would immediately commence. To the astonishment of all, however, on the arrival of the Dee nothing was done, and the steamer left towing the schooner of war.

FROM NEW MEXICO.—Lieut. R. Ransom, of the 1st U. S. Dragoons, arrived at St. Louis on the 23d inst., from New Mexico, which he left on the 3d. The St. Louis Republican learns from Lieut. Ransom that military operations were still carried on against the Indians in the Territory with great vigor. It was the determination of Gen. Garland, as well as of the territorial authorities, to whip them into a permanent peace, and for this purpose they were rapidly pursued.

Major Carleton, in command of an expedition from Fort Burgwin, had returned to that fort. He overtook a band of Jicerilla Apaches, and captured from them about fifty horses and all their camp equipage. The Indians fled.

In the early part of the month, Lieut. Maxwell, of the 3d Infantry, was killed on the Moro, about forty miles south-east of Fort Union. A small detachment of men were out on a scout against the Indians, under command of Capt. Sykes. Lieut. Maxwell was temporarily separated, with ten men, from the main command, met the Indians, and in the skirmish which ensued three Indians were killed and three badly wounded. They were carried off by their companions, but traced by the blood for some distance from the battle ground. The two Indians who fired upon and killed Lieut. Maxwell were themselves killed by two of the two Dragoons.

Col. Chandler was in pursuit of a party of Mescarilla Indians in the southern part of the Territory.

IMPORTANT TREATY BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND RUSSIA.—Secretary Marcy, it is reported, has just concluded a treaty of neutrality between the United States and Russia, with the Russian Charge at Washington. The Star says:

This treaty, as we understand it, covers and guarantees—as between the great powers of the European continent and that of the Western Hemisphere—all the important principles which this Government sought to incorporate—or rather, initiate into the law of nations, in their recent efforts to effect similar treaties with Britain and France. It will be remembered that these two latter powers, though declining so far, to treat with the United States on such a subject, and basis, have formally declared their intentions of being governed throughout the present European war by the principles and international policy involved in these efforts of ours. We therefore presume that Russia, having thus honorably come forward and divested herself of the power of taking advantage of any such stipulations with the United States made by her antagonists in the correct war, they, too, will hasten to carry out formally the views which they have, as above explained, informally endorsed as those which should govern powerful and enlightened nations in the era when, unfortunately, engaged in war.

Later from Havana.

By the steamer Isabel, which arrived at Charleston on the 23d ult., we have advices from Havana and Key West to the 22d ult.

Nothing of special political importance has occurred in Cuba. The Island has been divided into six military districts. Business was brisk for the season. Sugar active, freights brisk, and a large number of vessels loading. Monetary matters were in a stringent condition, there being a great scarcity of change. The weather was excessively warm, and the yellow fever grently on the increase. The Government fields great difficulty in paying off the soldiers and officers.

The correspondent of the Charleston Courier gives the following:

"A party of marine (Spanish) officers were proceeding a day or two ago on a party of pleasure to Marianao, a pretty little village about three leagues hence, when the passage of their carriage was stopped by a rope stretched across the road. A gang of armed negroes then made their appearance, and proceeded to relieve the officers of their watches, purses, etc., secundum artem. There scarcely passes a night in which some human life is not sacrificed to the brutality of these negro wretches. Fortunately, they quarrel among themselves and kill each other. There have been several murders of this description lately. Do you not think ours is a pleasant city to reside in? Although contrary to law, I never leave my residence after sunset without hearing with me a trustworthy five shooter, of Colt's manufacture.

"Of the dreadful results of the vomito, you will form some opinion, when I tell you that out of seventy-five passengers who arrived in the last Spanish mail steamer, scarcely three weeks since, but twelve are now living.

"A mild form of cholera has appeared at Sagua la Grande. Surely the foregoing is evil intelligence enough for one letter."

MR. CLAYTON.—The following extract from this gentlemen's reply to Mr. Wade, in the U. S. Senate, will find a response:

Mr. Wade: I say, I do not feel as an individual, that I have any moral title to any particular portion of it, in consequence of being an American citizen and being accidentally a native born, than any other man.

Mr Clayton: Sir, the views which the honorable Senator has announced are not the sentiments of the American people, rely upon it; and they will repudiate all sentiments of that description. When they are told, as they now are, this day, on the floor of the Senate, that they have no more right to demand of the Government donations of the public lands than any foreigner in Europe, they will, I think, give us a lesson which we shall remember hereafter. Sir, the utterance of such views are not very pleasing to those of us who entertain the opinion, as before God I do, that the American people are entitled to this property in preference to any foreigner, that it is their birthright, and that it is a wrong and an outrage upon them to give it to foreigners, as long as they themselves demand to occupy it.

Sir, I say instead of putting down a sentiment like that I have expressed, by persecuting the "Know-Nothings," or any other American organization, those who shall attempt it will find themselves sadly mistaken. It will be necessary, before you can put that sentiment down, to put down the American people—the true American people. Before that can be done,

> "Full many a pennon shall be torn,
> And many a knight to earth be borne,
> And many a banner shall be rent."

The sentiments which have been announced by the honorable Senator from Ohio are calculaten to rouse the feelings of the whole American people; and they will hear with astonishment that it is considered now, upon the floor of the American Senate, that they have no right to the public lands of the United States.

THE BRITISH MINISTRY.—The following list of members of the British Cabinet is published in consequence of the recent changes:

Earl of Aberdeen, First Lord of the Treasury; Marquis of Lansdowne, without office; Lord Kranworth, Lord Chancellor; Lord John Russell, President of the Council; Viscount Palmerston, Home Secretary; Earl of Clarendon, Foreign Secretary of State; Duke of Newcastle, War Secretary of State; Sir George Grey, Secretary of State for the Colonies; Mr. Gladstone, Chancellor of the Exchequer; Sir James Graham, First Lord of the Admiralty; Sir Charles Wood, India Board; Duke of Argyle, Privy Seal; Earl of Granville, Duchy of Lancaster; Sir W. Molesworth, Office of Works; Hon. Sidney Herbert, Secretary of War.

THE RUSH FOR THE NEW TERRITORIES.—A letter to the St. Louis Intelligencer, dating from St. Joseph, which is a great centre and halting place for the emigration, writes:

"They come by boats, stages, carriages, wagons, on horseback and muleback, and it is no unusual thing to see troops of hardy pioneers passing on foot, with their axes and knapsacks upon their backs, making their way into the forests of Kansas and Nebraska, to hew out a home. The emigration to these territories is unprecedented, except in the history of California. Thousands of sturdy and enterprising men are flocking thither to select the choicest spots for their future homes. The ferry boats here are busy in transporting them from daylight to dark. They are, thus far, all from slave States, except a few from Illinois and Indiana, and these are of slavery proclivities."

The Cincinnati papers state that there is an intense excitement among a portion of the German born citizens, at a villainous attack made upon the life, as is supposed, of Catharine Myers, the girl who made the charge of assault against Father Kroeger, the Roman Catholic priest. On Friday afternoon, while in the yard at her place of residence, near the Fifth Street Church, she was struck in the face with a stone, thrown from some hand as yet unknown, causing a severe wound, and one that occasioned her friends much apprehension. Efforts are being made to ferret out the offender.

THE MILK TREE.—In a narrative of travels on the Amazon and Rio Negro, just published, Mr. Wallace describes an extraordinary tree, called the milk tree, which was one of the first wonders he saw near Para. The fruit is eatable and full of a very juicy pulp, but strangest of all is the vegetable milk, which exhudes in abundance when the bark is cut. It was about the consistence of milk, and but for a slight peculiar taste could hardly be distinguished from the genuine product of the cow. Mr. Leavens ordered a man to tap some logs that had lain in the yard nearly a month. He cut several notches in the bark with an ax, and in a minute the rich sap was running out in abundance. It was collected in a basin diluted with water, strained and brought up at tea time and at breakfast next morning. The peculiar flavor of the milk seemed to improve the quality of the tea, and gave it as good a color as rich cream; in coffee it is equally good. The milk is also used for glue, and it is said to be as durable as that made use of by carpenters.

MOBILE AND OHIARD RAILROAD.—On Thursday morning, by invitation of Gen. S. Kinsey, Engineer, says the Columbus Times, we crossed the river to enjoy the first ride upon the Mobile and Girard Railroad. Arrived on the ground, we were pleased to find the "Chunnoynugger," an engine of eighteen tons, on the track, fired up and ready for the race. We ran out a mile and a quarter and returned, much pleased with the excursion, and in higher hopes of seeing this great enterprise completed than we have ever been. The track will be laid to Colbert, a distance of twenty-two and a half miles, by the 15th of October. The iron weighs 60 pounds to the yard, and the track is so well laid, under the supervision of Col. Pillsbury, that the cars run over it with great smoothness. When finished, the Mobile and Girard Railroad will be one of the best roads in the South, and, constituting the only connecting link between the Atlantic and the Gulf, must be the best railroad stock in the world.

CHOLERA — NARROW ESCAPE FROM BEING BURIED ALIVE.—A correspondent of the Boston Journal, writing under date of Manepy, Jeffna, Ceylon, April 12, furnishes the following thrilling account:

I have alluded to the ravages of the disease in the parish of Manepy as having been fearful. I never before realized the presence of death as for some time when the pestilence was at its height. In some instances the attack seemed to be nothing but death itself from the outset, and the victim was hurried into the grave within six hours, and even less, from the time of the appearance of the disease. The people have such a fear of having a corpse in the house that they bury as soon as possible after the breath has left the body, and in some cases, we have reason to believe, even before life is extinct. Several instances of this kind have been reported, and, in regard to the death of some of the native Christians by this disease, we have had most painful suspicions and fears.

I will mention one or two authentic cases where persons narrowly escaped being buried alive, as such instances may not be without use as warnings, even in America. One occurred in February, in a village (Aslavority) adjoining Manepy.

A person attacked with cholera requested his friends not to bury him at once if he died, but to wait for some time. He died within eight or nine hours, as was supposed, when his friends, without regarding his plainly expressed wish, prepared for the interment; but one of them having recalled the dying man's request, delayed the funeral three or four hours. Meanwhile the body moved, and the man naked for coogy or gruel; the heat of the body returned, and the man has since regained his usual health. Again, only a few Sabbath mornings since, a teacher in the Sabbath School at this station—which school, by the way, has been entirely broken up for more than three months by the cholera—pointed out to me a little girl, a member of his class, who was supposed to have died, but as it was late in the afternoon she was wrapped in a mat—nearly all are buried here without coffins of any sort—and the corpse left till the morning for interment. During the night the poor little creature revived so much as to complain of the cold, and to ask for food, when she was cared for, and has since become so well as to be able to attend the Sabbath and day schools.

INDIA RUBBER.—A correspondent of the Journal of Commerce, writing from Para, South America, gives some account of the India-rubber crop of that country:

The price of rubber increased so rapidly during the fifteen months past, has given a new and wide spread impulse to its production. Hundreds and thousands hitherto engaged in other pursuits, are now in "the hush" collecting the seringa. I knew a lawyer to cease his profession here some time since, take a few thousand dollars, and leave on the Amazon steamer for the more profitable rubber regions, about the mouth of the Tahjara, five hundred miles above. The consequence will be that an unprecedentedly large crop will come into the market within six to eight months, to supply the deficiency of the small quantity now on hand. Some suppose that this must reduce the price of rubber here; but I am of opinion that if the present annual crops were increased twenty fold, it would all be demanded in the United States for new fabrics, which it is now impossible to make for the want of sufficient raw material. Nor would the prices materially change. The manufacturers can doubtless afford to pay a yet higher price than at present, and make good profits.

The quantity of rubber on hand just now is small; while many of the larger dealers are not purchasing a pound. The present price, 36 milrice per arroba, of 32 lbs., (a milrie is 55½ cents,) with the export duty, 10 per cent., handling, boxing for shipment, and waste, makes the value in the ship here when ready to sail about 75 cents per lb. The loss in weight on the voyage is about six per cent., while the added to the freight, must show that rubber bought and sold at the present prices would soon involve the merchants in ruin. The consequence is, that prices in the United States not advancing in the ratio of those here, the merchants are making very little money, except on the supplies which they bring to the market. The disparity between the city and the country districts, those who make purchases of the rubber directly from the producers, are making large fortunes rapidly.

COTTON MANUFACTURES IN THE UNITED STATES. It appears by the last census that there are in the United States one thousand and ninety-four establishments in operation manufacturing cotton; that the capital invested is seventy six millions of dollars; that they consume six hundred and forty-one thousand bales of cotton; that the value of the raw material is thirty-four millions of dollars; that the number of males employed in them is thirty-three thousand, the number of females fifty-nine thousand, and the value of the entire products of the establishments, sixty-one millions eight hundred thousand dollars; that as to the value of the products they stand thus: Massachusetts, nineteen and a half millions; New Hampshire, eight and a half millions; Rhode Island, six and a half millions; Connecticut, four and a quarter millions; New York, three and a quarter millions; Pennsylvania, five and a quarter millions; Maine, two and a half millions; Georgia and Maryland, two millions each; Virginia, one and a half millions; New Jersey, one million; Delaware and Tennessee, half a million each; Ohio, four hundred thousand dollars; North Carolina, eight hundred thousand dollars; South Carolina, seven hundred thousand dollars; Alabama, three hundred and seventy thousand dollars; and Kentucky, two hundred and seventy thousand dollars. These are expressed in round numbers, and are sufficiently accurate to show the relative amount of revenue derived in several States from the manufacture of cotton, beginning with the highest on the list (Massachusetts) and coming down. We had not been aware of the fact that Ohio and Kentucky stood so low in the scale of manufacturing.

The last number of Punch contains a pictorial guess at the distance which ladies' bonnets will be worn from the heads at the next remove. As he thinks it will carry them off the head entirely, he represents the next fashion by two young ladies in full dress and bareheaded, sailing along the street, with a footman walking some ten feet behind, carrying their bonnets on a waiter!

An Irish editor, in speaking of the miseries of Ireland, says: "Her cup of misery has been for ages overflowing, and is not yet full!"

FATAL ACCIDENT.—The Auburn (Ala.) Gazette, of the 21st inst., has the following:

"It is our mournful duty to record the sudden death of our esteemed fellow citizen, Dr. T. B Hardin. It is stated that he met his death in this wise: In attempting to hitch his horse to his buggy, at the steam mill near his father's residence, the animal becoming frightened at the noise of the machinery, suddenly started, entangling him in the lines, and dragging him over logs and refused lumber, that encumbered the ground. After the occurrence, he walked to his father's, a mile distant. Externally there were no observable injuries. He died of internal hemorrhage.

Dickens has received about £200,000 from his pen since 1830; he has spent it all—and more!

Later from Havana.

The United States mail steamship Cahawba, R. W. Shufeldt, Commander, from New York July 25, and Havana the 31st, arrived at Mobile on Wednesday.

The Spanish Royal Mail steamship Velasco arrived at Havana, via Puerto Rico, from Cadiz, on the 25th ult., having left the latter port on the 1st.

The Velasco brought out to Puerto Rico and Cuba intelligence of the insurrection which, headed by General O'Donnel and General Dulce, had broken out at Madrid, which had been received by the people at Havana with the utmost indifference; those seeming to have any opinion at all upon the subject, would prefer any thing to an O'Donnel Administration in Spain.

The Island is in a state of complete tranquility. Business is more animated than it has been for some time.

Since the arrival of the Marquis de la Pezuela the slave trade has been actively pursued, and there are, it is stated, upwards of 2,500 liberated negroes in the hands of the Government, which have been captured by his orders, while being attempted to be clandestinely landed on the coasts; and others are being brought in from the country almost daily.

Upwards of one thousand troops have arrived recently from Spain, and the steamers Isabel and Colon, and line of battle ship Soberano, are expected in course of a few days, with about fifteen hundred more.

The Captain General issued an order on the 28th ult., that any one who would capture and deliver to the Government negroes newly imported from Africa should receive a bonus of ten dollars for each man, six dollars for each woman, and three dollars for each child, and if the captor should be a property holder he should have the negroes adjudicated to him as apprentices, on the usual terms. This order, if properly complied with, will stop the African slave trade in Cuba, and thus destroy the last remnant of this traffic.

The Queen has granted permission to the municipality of the city of Havana to open a subscription for the purpose of erecting a monument to Columbus, under which shall be deposited the ashes of the great Admiral, now resting in a simple niche on the right hand side of the high altar of the Cathedral of Havana. [Eve. Ploayuee.

COLLISION AT SEA.—Off Cape Sable, on the 24th ult., the brig William M. Rogers, of Boston, came in collision with the British bark Princess Alice, from St

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

THE EXPECTATION.

A beautiful poem by Schiller, translated by Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton. In the original, the eight long lines that conclude each stanza, instead of rhyming alternately, as in the translation, chime to the tune of Byron's Don Juan, six lines rhyming with each other, and the last two forming a separate couplet. "In other respects," says the the translator, "the translation, it is hoped, is sufficiently close and literal."

How! the creaking gate unclose!
The gleaming latch uplifted!
'Twas but the wind that, whirring, rose,
Amidst the poplars drifted.
Adam Skywalk, there green leaf-bowering roof,
Deafened the bright one's presence to receive.
For her a shadowy palace-hall aloof
With leafy wight thy boughs familiar weave.
And yo sweet disturbers of the delicate air,
Will ye not spare her rosy cheek around.
When their light weight the powder feet shall bear,
When Beauty comes to Passion's trysting-ground!

What through the copse so softly crept—
The copse that rustles near?
The blast that through the branches swept
Upon the wings of fear!
Day, quench thy torch! some ghost-like from on high.
With thy loved stance, come, thou haunting eve,
Dresden below thy veil of purple dye,
Which lulled bought mysterious round, as weave.
For love's delight twin-darling thieveres some,
The froward winsome of the light will flee;
Hesper alone, the rosy, silent one,
Down-glancing, may our sweet familiar be!

What murmur in the distance spoke,
And like a whisper died?
'Twas but the wave that gently broke
In rings the silver tide!
Soft to my ear there comes a music flow
Its pleasure murmur glides the waterfall;
It whispers him the flowers are bending low;
Through the grass joy, exchanging joy with all.
Hoist to the breath the grapes—the blushing fruit,
Voluptuous crowding from the leaves that hide;
And drinking fever from my cheek, the mute
Air steeps all liquid in the odor-tide!

Hark! through the alley hear I now
A footfall? Comes the maiden?
'Twas but the fruit slid from the bough,
With its own richness laden.
The lustrous eyes of Day declining, close
In sweetest death. His torch extinct; and fo,
The enlisted twilight, from her still repose,
Extends the chalice mortal to his glow.
The bright face of the moon is still and lone,
Media in vast masses the world silently;
Slides from each charm the slowly loosening zone;
And round all beauty, valleas, revies the eye.

What yonder seems to glimmer!
Her white robe's glancing knee!
The column's silent shimmer
At whose the darksome eyes!
Oh, longing heart, no more delight unbuoyed,
Let the sweet airy image, thee befool!
The arms that would embrace her clasp the void;
This feverish breast no happy shade can cool.
Oh, wait her here, mine own beloved one!
Let but my hand for hand, that breathe, feel—
The very shudder of her robe alone!
So into life the life dream shall steal!
As pride from Heaven, when hast we woon,
The rosy bosom of bliss,
All gently came the maid unseen—
We waked beneath her kiss!

"UGLY AS SIN."

"Well, stranger, you air shitwed up pretty considerably bad, and that's a fact. Bar or catamount?"

The scene was the country store at the cross-roads, in the town of H——, which all who have hunted or traveled much in Herkimer County will recollect; and the polite interrogator was a large, beaky-whiskered, hard-faced man, in a red flannel shirt, whose appearance, no less than dialect, proclaimed him to be from the Far West. It was evening, and a group of loungers were smoking and shewing by the open fire, whose warmth, though it was a mid-summer night, was far from unpleasant.

The person to whom the question was addressed, partly turned his head toward the speaker but did not immediately reply; and I took the opportunity of examining him more closely than I had done upon his entrance. He was, without exception, the ugliest, most pitable specimen of humanity I have ever seen. One of his legs had been amputated above the knee; his right hand was frithered and contracted, as if by a severe burn; his shoulder had a curious hump; and the cords of his neck were so drawn and shortened that the cheek seemed to rest upon it, as on a pillow. His eyelashes were gone, and his bloodshot eyes were continually moving uneasily within their raw and inflamed lids. But more painful to the beholder than all this, was a strange, undefined expression of fear or horror, which was never absent from the face, and which told, more strikingly than his wounds, the story of some awful trial to which he had been subjected.

With all this, however, there was something so mild and gentlemanly in his manner that he seemed at once to challenge and obtain the pity and sympathy of every one. His entrance into the store, apparently a total stranger, had checked the lively flow of the ordinary barroom conversation, but more than one chair by the fire was offered him, and many a glance of commiseration exchanged between the rough laborers.

"Bar or catamount?" repeated the Hoosier.

"I thought," said the stranger, in the hollow voice of a consumptive, "that I should find some one in here to-night who would recollect me. I recognise many of your faces. And yet," he added, sadly, "my own mother did not know me."

There was a quick movement in the group about him at these words, and every eye was bent once more upon him. But no one spoke.

"Deacon Pelton," resumed the ugly man, "your son Bill and I used to go to school together down at the creek."

"Lord help us," said the good old deacon, "to think of the changes! Well," he added, resignedly, "it's what we must all come to." It was plain that the elder was fairly puzzled.

"I never thought till lately," pursued the cripple, "that I should be obliged to tell my name to my old companions and friends. Look at me again."

"No, no," muttered the man in the red shirt audibly; "one look a day at that fellow is as much as I can comfortably stagger under."

But the store-keeper, taking a step ar twa forward, gazed into the ugly man's face for a moment with an eager air, and said:

"Neighbors, it's Ben Larkins!"

"Ben Larkins!" said the deacon, "why, we heard you were dead."

"You will hear that again soon," said the new-comer, "and it will be a true story then."

There was an awkward pause; for the old friends of the poor man, with all their curiosity, had a native delicacy which restrained their question. But the western man, who now saw him for the first time, was wholly free from any such embarrassment.

"Stranger," said he "I ain't much given to prying a man against his will, but I should like to know how you come so, just to keep out of such a scrape myself."

"I came here this evening," said the ugly man, "on purpose to meet as many of my old acquaintances as I could, and tell my story. I knew I should have to tell it some time or other, and I want to have it over, to feel that my misfortune is known, and that I am free from questions."

He shifted his seat, as if to obtain an easier position, and continued:

"Those of you who saw me a couple of years since will recollect that I was then, as I had been for many years previously, a warm and active politician. Now that I have come home to die among you, it seems of little moment who comes out winner in these doubtful races; but then it was a different thing to me, and I believe I was never wanting in any service which my party asked of me, from the time of the election of the good old General Harrison, who is, I trust, in a better place than the 'White House' now."

"Amen!" said the red-shirted man, solemnly.

"When I emigrated to Ohio, two years since," continued Larkins, "I carried my enthusiasm with me, and became pretty well known in the section of country about the village of W——, where I settled. You must remember, at least all of you who read the newspapers, that our last gubernatorial election was an unusually exciting one. I belonged to one of the State general committees, and, as the returns on election day came in by express, we began to grow fairly wild. We had beforehand made all the necessary arrangements to have the earliest authentic news of the result posted off to the New York papers, and I had agreed to see that a certain budget of returns which we expected to receive during the evening should be sent into the town of B——, some thirty miles distant, by the railway, as soon as it arrived, and had chartered an engine, which was to be in readiness at eleven o'clock that night.

"Well, the budget came promptly at the time, and the news was quite as favorable as we desired, and much more so than we expected. I suppose it was this fact that so suddenly determined me to carry the intelligence on myself. At any rate, I hastily resolved to go on the locomotive, and, seizing the returns, I ran down to the depot, where the engine was fired up and whistling its readiness for a start. It was but the work of a moment to persuade the engineer to take me with him, for the fireman who was to accompany him was no where to be found, and the engineer had resolved to run over the track alone. I volunteered at once to assist him as well as I could, and immediately mounted the engine.

"It was a dark and wild, though a warm night, and every thing gave indication of an approaching storm. Fearfully black clouds were rolling up in the sky, and, what was rather a singular phenomenon at that season of the year, the lightning was flashing vividly, and the thunder was muttering as grandly as in a summer shower. But the excitement of success banished every sensation of fear from my mind. We both knew that we had the right of way, and, so far as human ingenuity and foresight could protect us, there was no danger of running at any rate of speed at which steam could drive us. Careful men had during the day been sent forward to see that each switch was in its place; the night train from B—— was to wait for our arrival; the road was reasonably straight; and, except the ordinary dangers from defective rails or axle-trees, we had nothing to apprehend.

"It was thirty miles, as I said, to B——. 'What time saan you make it in?' said I to the engineer, as I got upon the platform with him. 'I once ran over the road in three-quarters of an hour with an engine,' replied he. 'Make it a half-hour this time,' orled I, 'and I will give you twenty dollars. Every minute is worth a fortune.' I must have been insane. The flush of victory, after so many weeks of enthusiastic struggle, had almost, if not quite, turned my brain. Just at this moment the engineer discovered that the lightin front of the engine was burning dimly, and threatening to expire. With an anathema upon the negligent fireman, he leaped down to examine it. The lamp had not been filled. 'For God's sake,' shrieked I, when I learned the fact, don't stop for that trifle; I can travel in the dark if you can. You are not afraid?' I continued, tauntingly, as the engineer still hesitated. 'I can ride to the devil as coolly as you ease,' he rejoined cheerily, and resuming his post, started the machine.

"As we emerged from the station-house, I remember thinking I had never seen a blacker night. The first motion of the engine had extinguished oer light; not a star was to ba seen in the heavens, and the few lighted windows which dotted tha landscape here and there only added to the general gloom of the scene. Flushed and wild as I was, I experienced a thrill of herror as the engine madly dashed into tha darkness. I strained my eyes until they ached; I held my breath and contracted my muscles, as if falling, so feerfully rapid seemed the rate at which we were flying.

"But a new and pleasanter sensation soon took the place of this terror. None but those who have actually experienced it can imagine the maddening dalight which excessively rapid motion produces. We were under full headway, and with no load to retard our speed. Now and then a lighted window by tha side of the track flew past us like a meteor; while farther off in tha gloom, a solitary taper would sometimes seem madly striving to emniate our pace—soon distanced, however, and soon lost. In less time than I have been talking, we had arrived at a little village, where the street-lamps were burning, and which I knew was just ten miles from W——. I stooped down and examined my watch by the light af the engina fire. We had traveled tha first ten miles in less than ten minutes. "Faster!" I shouted madly to the engineer, as I orammed another pine stick under tha boiler. Bet it was hardly possibla to accelerate our speed. The wheels actually leaped along the rails. The few drops of rain which occasionally fell, struck against my face like fina shot.

"The steam whistle kept up an endless shriek, as if the engine were some monstrous goblin, tortured beyond endurance by an inhuman fiend, while the deep base of the increasing thunder mingled with tha wild rattle af our wheels, and formed a chorus which the Furies might have envied. As my ears were gradually stunned by these complicated noises, and my eyes wearied by their unnaturel axertion, I fancied that I heard other noises and saw other sights, which could have been only tha product of a bewildered brain. As we dashed into some gloomy gorge, I seemed to hear angry voices warning and upbraiding ma; as wa flew over some lofty embankment, I saw dark spirits in tha air, who waved me on with wild gestures, or struck at ma with airy blades. The lightelngs became more vivid and freqnent. Now they showed us the threatening crags that overhung our path, and now they lighted up a raging torrent far beneath us. My companion, however, was as calm and composed as though his oradle had been rocked by tempests. The flashes by which I occasionally canght a plimpse of him gave, it is true, an unnatural gastliness to his face, but his manner was as cool and collected as I had always known it. I could feel him managing the engina as quietly and carefully as if it was a summer's day, and he had tha lives of a hundred passengers to answer for, besides his own.

"A few minutes, ten or twalve perhaps, had elapsed since I looked at my watch, and I had begun to think that our journey's end was near. We were passing, as near as I could judge by the sound of the wind, over a level, open tract af country, when I fancied I felt a momentary jar; so light, however, and unimportant, that it would have passed from my recollection at once, had it not been for what followed. Just at that moment, a longer and brighter flash of lightning than I had before seen, attended, not followed, by an awful crash of thunder, lit up again tha surrondnlng scenery. Bet high above the deafaning peal, above the lesser thunder of the wheels, above the raving of tha wind, I heard a shriek, a shout of borror, so wild so awful, so like tha utterance of a lost soul, that it vexes my dreams to this hour. It was a sound which no physical pain could have elicited from a human being, which nothing but supernatural fear could have produced, and which no one who once beard it could ever banish from his recollection.

"Involuntarily I falt for my companion. He was gone! I groped hastily about tha confined space in which wa had been standing, and at once realised the awful natura of my position. I was alona, upon an engine which was tearing madly forward, and at tha rate of sixty or seventy miles an hour, rapidly approaching my destination, about to dash headlong, at full speed, into the midst of an eager and anxited crowd, and with no more knowledge of tha management or government of tha crazy thing than an infant. For an instant I was thoroughly paralyzed by fear. Cold drops of perspiration stood upon my brow, and I fairly screamed in impotent agony. Bnt in a moment mora I recovered myself. I had soma indistinct notion tha speed of an engine was accelarated or checked by operating tha levers which stood by my side, and forth with commenced a series of experiments with them. But my unskillfulness or agitation prevented my amploying the proper means, and I fancied I had only increased the speed. Another resource flashed upon ma. I might pull out the blazing wood and coals, and reduce tha fire. It was a mad idea, for my ungloved hands were my only tools for tha enterprise; but I chuckled wildly to myself as I thought how feasible it was, and bow sure of success. Eagerly I stooped down and pulled a flaming stick from beneath the boiler. Tha seething pitch scalded my hands, and tha liva embers burned them cruelly; but I hardly felt the pain, as I hurled it frantically into the darkness.

"But I did not stoop again. For, as I turned to continue my vain labors, another flash, one of those lingering, wavy, dancing flashes, which seem to tarry as if delighting to gaze upon the terror they cause, once more lit up the scence. I trust that death will efface its horror from my mind. I know that I can never forget it on this side of the grava. The shriek of my companion, which was still ringing in my ears, no longer surprised me. I no longer wondered at his mad leap from the engine. It was the excess of my terror alone which prevented my following his example. I no longer cared for the murderous speed of tha locomotiva; I no longer thought of my own danger. All misgivings, all fears for myself, were swallowed up and merged in one vast, shuddering, indescribable horror. For there, just before me upon the boiler, with its lips parted into a fiendish grin, with its eyes wide open, and staring upon me, and the glare imparting a life-like glow to its stony features; there, within reach of my palsied hand, even as I shrank back in craven fear to the farthest limits of my moving prison, sat a pale, gory, hideous, and mangled Human Head!

"You smile, gentlemen," continued the ugly man, with a melancholy air, "and it seems to me that if I should hear the story told by another, as you are now doing, in a quiet room, with a firm floor beneath my feet, a cheerful fire before me, and friends around, I should do the same thing; but, believe me," dropping his voice so low that I could hardly hear him, "it is a different thieg in a wild night, alone, and with a sudden and awful death impending over you."

"Keep moving, stranger," said the man in the red shirt, cracking a hickory-nut, "it's as good as a sermon. Pass on to the second head."

"It could, of course," pursued the ugly man, without heeding the untimely jest, "be but a few minutes, or perhaps seconds, before this terrible drama must coeclude; but no prisoner ever longed for freedom as I did for the final crash, which I knew would end my life and torment together. I made no farther efforts to stop the locomotive. I was hardly aware that it was still tearing madly on, as though frightened, like myself, at its ghastly burden. The lightning still flashed at intervals, and illuminated the olayey face; but I did not need its gleams to see the horrid thing. For through the pitchy darkness and tha blinding rain it glared upon me as I had behold it at first. Nor do I consider this imagination. I think that terror had so sharpened my vision that, though all else was wrapped in impenetrable gloom, I could see its glassy eye-balls, its pallid cheeks, and its bloody, grieving month.

"I have since learned—I do not think that I knew at the time—that all this while the firewood in the tender behind me was blazing furiously. It had caught either by a spark from tha engine, or, which is more probable, from the burning silok which I had so hastily tossed away. But, as I said, I do not know that I was aware of it; if I had been, it could not have added another pang of terror to my heart; and I only mention it now as an incidental element in tha horror of my alination, and also from tha fact that the unusual light alarmed the watchers at the station, and, putting them upon their guard, prevented any destruction of life on my arrival.

"I can never bring myself to believe that so short a time elapsed, as I know must have passed, before this wild, awful vision ceased. It seems to ma now, and always when I recall that dreadful night, as though I must have spent hours braced back against the tender, not daring to take my eyes from the spectral face, paralyzed and crazy with fright, my hair like reeds, and the cold sweat bursting from every pore. During all this time, I know that I never regarded the incident as any other than supernatural. If it had occurred to me that it was nothing but what it seemed, a dead head, perhaps, possibly, I might have rellied. But there was something so hellish in thet stony gaze, alone visible through the murky night, the earth and earthly incidents were allka forgotten by me. Heavens! thought I, is this to last for ever? Am I dead, and ara these the torments of the damned? Will this torture never have an end?

"The end was even then at hand. I shot past brilliantly-lighted streets, whose brightness made tha corpse glare still more hideously upon me. I heard shouts of fear and warning, but they could not distract my attention. I caught glimpses at the station of the groups of agonised and horror-stricken faces; what were they to the distorted features of tha head before me? A crash, a feeling of death-like sickness, and when I awoke, my midnight ride had been the rounds of all the newspapers, and been forgotten."

The ugly man arose end adjusted his crutch, as if to leava.

"Pray, Sir," said a little, silent man from the corner, in an excited manner, and speaking for the first time, "was thet tha engineer's head?"

"Oh! no," answered the narrator, with an air of relief, as though he was glad his tale was anded; "I learned, when I got well enough to talk and ask questions, that the engineer crawled into the town about dawn of tha following day, weary, torn and bleeding, but without any permanent injuries. The head belonged to a poor maniac, who had often attempted the strangest forms of suicide, and that avening, escaping from his confinement, had lowered himself dowe into a cattle ditch, keeping his head some six inches above the surface of tha road. The cow-catcher, as ha probably intended it should do, had cut his head cleanly and smoothly off, and had thrown it so high that it lodged and stuck whera I first saw it. His body was afterwards found unmangled in the ditch beneath. And that, neighbors, is the way I came to be the wreck you see ma."

"That's a right smart yarn, now stranger," said the man in tha red shirt, "and I suppose likaly enough to happen on some of them 'Hio rails;' hnt on the Little River Road—I stop down to Little River when I'm to home—they don't allow no dead-heads." [Knickerbocker Magazine.

NEW PUBLIC BUILDINGS.—The bill which recently passed the Senate, (yet to be acted on by the House of Representatives,) authorising the extension and completion of tha Treasury building, and also for the construction of a building for the War, Nevy and Interior Departments, will require an outlay of $3,000,000, $600,000 of which sum is appropriated as the amount which can be used advantageously during the current fiscal year.

By the proposed plan the present Treasury building will become quadrangular. The additions will cover a space of flooring of one hundred and two thousand two hundred feet, while the present one occupies only forty-four thousand five hundred and eixty feet. The number of rooms will be two hundred and twu additional to tha one hundred and fifty-two in the present building. The cost of the present building was $650,000; the cost of the addition will be $1,250,000. The sama order of architecture will be observed in tha construction of the building as that on which it was originally constructed. The effect will be, as regards the enlargement, to give ample accommodation both to the State and Treasury Departments, and then it will afford security for tha preservation of the public records and archives.

The othar building contemplated, in lieu of the War and Navy Departments, is likewise essential, and will, in its construction, give room for tha Department of tha Interior, which is now obliged to locate in temporary buildings.

In tha course of debate it was said that "it is a disgrace to the country that tha public records should be kept in insecurity, as they are in tha present buildings, with the exception, perhaps, of the Treasury Department." In tha State Department tha records of the country are represented as notoriously insecure. The loft is jammed with documents into the roof.

There can be no doubt, as it was truly remarked, that the private and public losses and misfortunes which have been sustained heretofore from accident of fire in our public buildings, have been equal to all tha cost which is proposed for these new structures. Such is tha opinion of high executive officers, who have repeatedly pressed this subject on tha consideration of Congress. [Washington Sentinel.

THE PROGRESS OF MEDICAL SCIENCE.—We have just examined a new and marked evidence of this caption, in a compound from the East, prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer, of Lowell, Mass. Dr. Ayer is a deep observist, and combines the constituents of this remedy in strict accordence with chemical principles. There is nothing secret about it, but the whole composition and process is freely published and made known to the Medical Profession. We have the Formula, with full particulars, in the Doctor's own hand writing, and must in sincerity say of it and the medicine, that they show a skill and intrinsic merit which is worthy of all commendation. The medicine has in diseases of the throat and lungs, been fully tested by all the Medical Colleges and most of our eminent Medical men, and is as far as I know highly applauded by them.

While, therefore, I am most heartily opposed to the recommendation of all secret remedies, I can cordially, and in my capacity of Physician, properly recommend the Cherry Pectoral to all [Rochester Banner.

Alabama Centenary Institute.

THE EXERCISES of this long established and popular institution will commence on

THE FIRST MONDAY OF OCTOBER NEXT.

FACULTY.... FEMALE COLLEGE.

Rev. A. H. MITCHELL, D. D., President and Professor of Mental and Moral Science
Rev. B. F. LABARRE, Professor of Mathematics and Belles Lettres,
——————, Professor of the Natural Sciences
Mons. JULES RAIL, Member of the Royal Academy of Music and French.
Mrs. LUCINDA FRISBIE, Assistant Teacher of Music.
Miss HELEN E. FRISBIE, Teacher of Drawing and Painting.

MALE DEPARTMENT.

Rev. E. D. PITTS, A. M., Principal.
JOHN T. DUNKLIN, A. M., Associate.

PREPARATORY SCHOOL.

THOS. C. BRAGG, A. M., Principal.
——————, Assistant.

This Institution is situated in Summerfield, Alabama—as healthy a location, we believe, as there is in all the South. It is under the guidance and instruction of an able and experienced Faculty. No one of the Professors or Teachers, whose names appear above, needs the support of a recommendation.

Heretofore all the departments have been under the superintendence of Dr. Mitchell; but it has been thought best by the Trustees and Faculty to place each department under a separate jurisdiction. Accordingly, Dr. Mitchell will hereafter devote his whole time and his distinguished talents to the Female College. With him will be associated three experienced Professors, and as many Ladies as the circumstances may require.

One of the Professorships is now vacant, but it is certain to be filled before the beginning of the ensuing session, by some gentleman of established reputation.

The Trustees most confidently invite a comparison of the advantages thus presented to parents for the education of their daughters, with those afforded by any Female College in the South.

The Male Academy, under the direction of Professor Pitts, aided by Professor Dunklin, (and others if necessary,) cannot fail to secure and retain a large share of the public patronage.

The Preparatory School has been placed under the charge of Professor Bragg, in order that the children may be properly trained and prepared to enter the higher departments of the institute. A new building for it is already under contract. The buildings of the Female College are also being greatly enlarged and improved. Some ten or twelve thousand dollars will be expended in perfecting and furnishing them.

The Trustees and friends of the institute have resolved to leave nothing undone to place it above every similar institution in the country.

R. J. HARRISON, Secretary of the Board.

N. B.—The Trustees have thought proper, from motives of economy, to require the young ladies to dress in uniform, except in the school-room, and strictly forbid the wearing of any jewelry, except a plain breastpin.

The uniform for winter is green worsted; for summer, white muslin aug6—6m26

Marion Female Seminary,

MARION, PERRY COUNTY, ALA.

THE EXERCISES of this institution will be resumed on Monday, the 2d day of October, under the charge of the Rev. Jas. K. Armstrong as Principal, assisted by nine Professors, Teachers and Officers.

It has just closed its present session with one hundred and thirty-three students, seventy-seven of which number were boarders. There is but one session of nine and a half months.

Pupils can enter at any time during the session, chargeable from the beginning of the month in which they commence, to the close of the session. No deduction will be made but at the discretion of the Principal.

The Principal, with his family, resides in the building. The female teachers also reside in the Seminary. Boarders in the institution are under the control of the Principal at all times. A Steward, in the employment of the Principal, of experience, urbanity of manners and faithfulness to his duties, a Matron who constantly and kindly ministers to the private wants of young ladies, and especially in sickness, a Governess who directs them in their exercises and amusements, superintends the order of their private apartments, instructs them in certain domestic duties, and guards their private, personal habits, manners and morals, always aided by the presence and active cooperation of the female teachers. The Principal and his lady secure to those committed to their charge every necessary and proper comfort and kindness. Here they are constantly exercised under a wholesome system of regulations respecting neatness, order, punctuality and economy. They have regular hours for study and recreation, for rising and retiring, for eating, domestic duties, and social enjoyment among themselves.

The institution is furnished with a new and superior apparatus in the departments of Chemistry, Natural Philosophy and Astronomy. There is also a large collection of Maps, Charts, Plates, Diagrams, Globes, etc., for simplifying the principles of Geography, Physiology and Astronomy.

In the department of Drawing, Painting and Embroidery there is a fine collection of Drawing Cards, Engravings, Pictures, Paintings, Patterns, and every other convenience important in the prosecution of these departments.

There is in connection with the institution a Library of more than one thousand volumes, and a Cabinet of several hundred specimens.

The institution is furnished with six Pianos, five Guitars, and one Harp.

MUSIC.—The Professor at the head of this department is equal to any in the country. He is a superior vocalist, a fine performer on the Piano, Harp, Guitar, Violin, Violoncello, etc. He has enjoyed ten years experience as a teacher of music in the best institutions in the Union, is profoundly versed in the principls of harmony, and is a real amateur of the sublime science to which he has devoted himself.

LOCATION.—Its salubrity, intelligense, morality and public spirit are unsurpassed.

PERMANENCY.—Parents may send their daughters here with confidence in their completing their education under the same course of instruction and system of disciplins. Every thing conspires to make the permanency of the Principal a matter of duty, pleasure and interest.

TEACHERS.—The Principal, himself a native of Alabama, surrounds himself with a corps of teachers of known efficiency and tried success, nearly all of whom have been reared in the South, thus assuring a better acquaintance with Southern peculiarities and sympathy with Southern views and interests. Thorough-ness is our motto in teaching. We ascribe the true importance to the harmonious development of the physical, intellectual and moral natures.

Reports are sent to patrons once avery two months, which are a faithful showing of the scholarship and conduct of the pupil. In our system of merits and demerits scholarship and conduct are connected.

The Principal regards it as his most important duty to attend to the moral habits of his pupils and to imbuing their minds with proper religious principles.

The facilities for acquiring the French and other modern languages are superior.

There are daily exercises in Orthography, Reading and Writing. Great attention is bestowed on letter-writing and composition.

Lectures are delivered weekly to the junior and senior classes on various subjects of Science and Literature, on which they take notes and are subsequently examined.

The Principal will be assisted in the Collegiate department, the ensuing session, by a gentlemen, a Professor of long experience, of the ripest scholarship, and the most superior qualifications as a teacher. He will take charge of the department of Mathematics and some of the higher English branches, and the control of the main study hall.

Visitors are unsolicited by boarders except with suitable introduction to the Principal from patrons.

All jewelry is prohibited, except a plain breastpin.

No accounts will be opened in Marion. Money must be deposited or forwarded for all necessary and proper purposes. Let pupils be supplied from home as far as is practicable.

All sums of money for the use of pupils must be deposited with the Principal.

One hundred and forty-five dollars will pay the board and tuition of a young lady for the entire session in the collegiate course. $175 will embrace the languages. $225 will embrace board, tuition in the collegiate department, on the Piano, and in the languages.

Books, Stationery, Sheet Music, Drawing, Painting and Embroidery material is furnished by the Principal. The cost of these articles varies with the advancement of the pupil. Every effort will be made to secure economy in their use.

For further particulars or catalogues, apply to the Principal.

Marion, July 29, 1854.

University of Nashville.

THIS INSTITUTION was founded by the State of North Carolina in 1785, as Davidson Academy. It became Cumberland College in 1806, and University of Nashville in 1826.

THE LITERARY DEPARTMENT

Will be reopened under a new organization, and with new buildings, on the First Wednesday of October next.

Rev. EDWARD WARNWORTH, D. D.,
Prof. of Ethics and Belles Lettres, and Chairman of the Faculty.
Rev. J. W. McCULLOUGH, D. D.,
Prof. of Ancient Languages.
JAMES L. MAGIE, A. M.,
Prof of Mathematics and Natural Philosophy.
——— J. B. LINDSLEY, M. D.
Prof of Chemistry and the Natural Sciences.
E. P. DE ZEVALLOS,
——————, Prof. of Modern Languages.

Tuition, $75 per annum—Matriculation fee, $5.

THE LAW DEPARTMENT

Will also be opened on the first Wednesday of October next.

FRANCIS B. FOGG, Esq.,
WILLIAM F. COOPER, Esq., } Professors.
——————, Esq.,

Fees for Lectures, $100 per annum

THE MEDICAL DEPARTMENT

Opened its first Session with 121 Students and 33 Graduates; its second with 153 Students and 36 Graduates; and its third with 220 Students and 77 Graduates.

The Fourth Annual Course of Lectures will commence on Monday the 30th of October next, and continue until the first of the ensuing March

ROBERT M. POTTER, M. D.,
Prof. of General and Special Anatomy.
J. BERRIEN LINDSLEY, M. D.,
Chemistry and Pharmacy, and Dean of the Faculty.
C. K. WILSON, M. D.,
Materia Medica and Medical Jurisprudence.
A. H. BUCHANAN, M. D.,
Surgical and Pathological Anatomy.
THOMAS R. JENNINGS, M. D.,
Institutes of Medicine and Clinical Medicine.
W. K. BOWLING, M. D.,
Theory and Practice of Medicine.
JOHN M. WATSON, M. D.,
Obstetrics and the Diseases of Women and Children.
PAUL F. EVE, M. D.,
Principles and Practice of Surgery.
WILLIAM T. BRIGGS, M. D.,
Demonstrator of Anatomy.

The Anatomical rooms will be opened for Students on the first Monday of October.

A full Preliminary Course of Lectures, free to all Students, will be given by the Professors, commencing on the first Monday of October.

A Clinique has been established in connection with the University, at which operations are performed and cases prescribed for and lectured upon in presence of the Class.

Arrangements have been made to accommodate all patients requiring surgical operations.

Amount of Fees for Lectures in this Department is $105. Matriculating Fee (paid once only) $5; Practical Anatomy, $10; Graduating Fee, $25.

Good Board can be obtained for $3 per week.

The Annual Announcement, giving a full account of the several Departments of the University, may be had by applying to

A. V. S. LINDSLEY,
Sec'y Board Trustees.

july 20 3m

Emory and Henry College,

WASHINGTON COUNTY, VIRGINIA.

THE Fall Session of this Institution will commence on the 17th August next.

TERMS:

Tuition per session of five months	.....	$17 50
Board	" "	36 76
Washing	" "	5 00
Fuel	" "	2 00
Contingent charge	" "	1 25
		$62 50

It is believed that no College in the South is offering stronger inducements than this to young men desirous of a thorough collegiate education. Our location is in a quiet and beautiful valley, ten miles distant from town or village, and comparatively free from temptations to vice. Our Board of Instruction is filled with men of experience, ability and fidelity. Our course of study is extensive and thorough. Our Cabinet, Libraries, and Apparatus are ample. Any young man of limited means, with fair abilities and proper energy, can here acquire a superior, liberal or business education.

For further particulars, address

E. E. WILEY, President,
July 8, 1854. 8t Emory P. O., Va.

Chunnynuggee Female College.

The next Session will commence on the second Monday in July, and close on the first Wednesday in December.

FACULTY:

Rev. W. H. ELLISON, D. D., President.
JOHN F. ELLISON, A. B.
Miss F. GERALDINE BATTLE, Primary Department.
Mrs EUGENIA RUTHERFORD, Instructress in Music.

Competent Teachers in the departments of French, Drawing, Painting, etc., will be provided.

RATES OF TUITION PER SESSION OF FIVE MONTHS:

Primary Department	$10 00
First, Sophmers and Middle Classes, each	18 00
Junior and Senior Classes, each	22 50
Music—Piano or Guitar	20 00
Use of Instruments	5 00
Latin, Greek, French, or German, each	10 00
Drawing, Painting, or Embroidery, each	12 50
Wax Work, per Lesson	1 00
Incidental Expenses	1 00

☞ One half the tuition to be paid in advance.

Board can be had at from $15 to $12, including Washing, Lights, etc.

The College is located upon Chunnynuggee Ridge, Macon county, Alabama, in the midst of an intelligent community. It has recently been provided with a new Philosophical and Chemical Apparatus, adequate to all the purposes of instruction; and no pains will be spared to secure the application of the best and most approved means of developing and training the mind. The President having been for twelve years in charge of the Female College, Macon, Georgia, the Trustees entertain no doubt, from his past success, of his entire ability to make this equal to any school of the same grade in the country.

A tri-weekly line of stages from Eufaula to the Montgomery and Weat Point Railroad, and semi-weekly line from Columbus, Ga., to Chunnynuggee, make it accessible from all points.

RICHARD H. POWELL,
President of the Board of Trustees.

Chunnynuggee, Ala., June 22d, 1854—jy 15 6m

THE BRITISH QUARTERLIES,

AND

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.

LEONARD SCOTT & CO., No. 34 Gold street, New York, continue to publish the following British Periodicals, viz:

THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW, (Conservative.)
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW, (Whig.)
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW, (Free Church.)
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW, (Liberal.)

AND

BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE, (Tory.)

—TERMS—

For any one of the four Reviews ..... $3 00 per annum
For any two " " ..... 5 00 "
For any three " " ..... 7 00 "
For all four of the Reviews, ... 8 00 "
For Blackwood's Magazine, ... 3 00 "
For Blackwood and the three Reviews, 9 00 "
For Blackwood and the four Reviews, 12 00 "

Payments to be made, in all cases, in advance. Money current in the State where issued will be received at par. Address, post paid,

LEONARD SCOTT & CO.,
79 Fulton st., New York. Entrance 54 Gold st.

☞ Postage on Blackwood and the four Reviews, 72 cents a year. [Nov13-1y.]

To Booksellers, Agents, and Peddlers.

BURNETT & BOSTWICK, PUBLISHERS,

15 Camp Street, 15

HAVE just issued from their press the following valuable works:

VOYAGE OF THE U. S. EXPLORING SQUADRON, commanded by Capt. Charles Wilkes of the U. S. N., together with Explorations and Discoveries made by Admiral D'Urville, Capt. Ross and other Navigations and Travelers, and an account of the Expedition to the Dead Sea under Lieut Lynch, with numerous illustrations.

LIFE OF JOHN C. CALHOUN.

LIFE OF JAMES K. POLK, with a history of his Administration.

THE HEROINES OF HISTORY.

HEROINES OF THE CRUSADES.

PANORAMA OF NATIONS.

THE GREAT CITIES OF THE WORLD.

LIVES OF JOHN AND CHARLES WESLEY.

WESLEY'S WORKS—seven volumes.

THE MIRROR OF THE SOUL.

FARM AND FIRESIDE.

RURAL HOMES, &c &c.

For the sale of the above and many other works, which are all very valuable and popular, we desire to establish agents in every county and parish in the South; and therefore offer unparalleled inducements to country dealers, agents and peddlers.

A Catalogue of all our publications furnished on application, post paid, to

BURNETT & BOSTWICK, Publishers,
may 27 6m 15 Camp street, New Orleans.

Dr. J. T. Keanon,

Castilian Spring,
Holmes County, Mississippi,

Is now prepared to offer good accommodations to invalids who may desire to visit Castilian Spring, or place themselves under his care for treatment. This is one of the most desirable retreats for Invalids in the South, located in an elevated healthy region of country, with abundance of fine Freestone water. The mineral water is composed very strongly of Iron, Sulphur, Magnesia and Soda, and contains largely of Carbonic Acid Gas.

The diseases which it has cured are Dyspepsia, Dropsy, General Debility, Affections of the Kidneys, Bladder, and the various functional and organic derangements of the Womb. This water is especially efficacious in Diseases of Females.

Board, per week—$7.

References—Ministers of Miss. Conference.
Rev. J. B. Walker,
Rev. H. N. McTyeire, } New Orleans.

march 4 6m

Valuable Land for Sale.

FIFTEEN HUNDRED AND SEVENTY-FIVE ACRES in the western part of Alabama, fourteen miles from the Bigbee river and eight from the M. & O. Railroad. Most of the land is very rich, with good buildings on each, comprising dwellings, negro cabins; and also a superior horse-power Sawmill. On the east is a good neighborhood, and on the west an extensive range for stock—800 acres in cultivation, and well watered.

A more desirable place can seldom be found where land is rich

Terms easy. For further information, apply to

JAS B. RAMSEY,
June 17, 1854 tf Daleville, Lauderdale co., Miss.

JEFFERSON BOOK STORE.

W. FLEMMING, BOOKSELLER and STATIONER, corner of Jackson and Tchoupitoulas streets, Fourth District, New Orleans, would respectfully call the attention of Country Merchants, Colleges, Academies, Public Schools, etc., to my

LARGE STOCK OF SCHOOL BOOKS,

Consisting in part of—

SPELLING BOOKS, READING BOOKS, DICTIONARIES. Grammars, Rhetoric, Composition, Chemistry, Botany, Mineralogy, Geology, Natural History, Astronomy, Drawing, Book-keeping, Geography, Diography, Natural Philosophy, Elocution, Logic, History, Arithmetic, History, Geometry, Surveying, Mensuration, French Grammars, Dictionaries, Readers, etc;

SPANISH, GERMAN AND ITALIAN GRAMMARS. Dictionaries, Readers, etc.

GREEK AND LATEN BOOKS of all descriptions.

MISCELLANEOUS AND STANDARD WORKS; RELIGIOUS and PHILOSOPHICAL WORKS, all denominations, which I am offers to sell at much lower prices than heretofore sold in the South.

FANCY EMBOSSED NOTE PAPER AND ENVELOPES;

LETTER, CAP AND RECORD PAPER, of all qualities. Ruled and Plain.

BLANK BOOKS, of all descriptions and sizes;

CHEAP PUBLICATIONS, MAGAZINES AND NEWSPAPERS;

*CHRISTMAS AND

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Publishing Committee Louisiana Conference, { J. C. KEENER, L. PARKER, J. B. WALKER.

H. N. McTYEIRE, EDITOR.

{ J. HAMILTON, D. D., T. W. DORMAN, W. MURRAH. } Publishing Committee Alabama Conference.

VOL. IV. NO. 28. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, AUGUST 12, 1854. WHOLE NO. 184.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

CHRISTIAN EXPERIENCE.

PRATTVILLE, ALA., July 24, 1854.

MR. EDITOR—I send you for publication a narrative of the experience of Mrs. ELIZABETH DOWSING. It is an introduction to a journal, which she kept from a sense of duty during thirty-seven years.

Sister Dowsing joined the Methodists about the close of the Revolutionary war, when Methodism was yet but a day of small things, and was still passing through the fiery ordeal of persecution.

Few writings are more profitable to the Christian than this simple portraiture of her spiritual life, drawn by her own pen. Her pious watchfulness over her spirit, with her lingering and thirsting after righteousness, as her a proper subject to be taught of God by which means she became profoundly acquainted with the art of holy living. Alas! that so few become eminently wise in this the highest of all sciences—the knowledge of the things of God.

She was intimately acquainted with many eminently useful men of God, in both Virginia and Georgia; and frequently mentions them in her diary: such as McKendree, Easter, Capell, Myers, Russell, and Bishop George. The famous J. O'Kelly, whom she much loved, was her spiritual father. Fortunately for her peace, she escaped the evils of the Kelly secession, by her removal a short time previous to Georgia.

Under date of August 2, 1790, she writes: "This evening was a time of covenant prayer with Bro. McKendree"—(then converted but few years, afterward Bishop.)

A few days after she speaks of the blessed influence of Bro. Easter's sermon, in quickening the Church; and of the remarkable fact, which he has got, I think he mentioned, as many as 600 in his circuit, to covenant earnestly to the sanctification until they obtain it." He was the honored instrument of Bishop McKendree's conversion. Do you think, Mr. Editor, there are 600 seekers of perfect love any one circuit in our times?

She has numerous grand-children in Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi and Texas; and some of her children are still living. The wife of the Rev. Allen Turner, of the Georgia Conference, is her daughter; the late Wm. Dowsing, Esq., of Columbus, Miss., was her son. Her manuscript journal is in the possession of a grand-child in Prattville, Ala.

E. J. HAMILL.

THE NARRATIVE.

I was born 16th March, 1762; my parents were Episcopalians; my grand-parents on my father's side were Protestants, who had fled for refuge from France in the time of the cruel persecution. My grand-mother's journal shows a devoted mind. They were unusually strict in raising their children to fear God; and their example in this respect was closely followed by my father, who often appeared to be moved by the Spirit of God to call and pray with his family, and exhort them with weeping until almost all of us were bathed in tears around him. Glory to God, these impressions were lasting—they are intimately connected with my after experience. O that all parents may be encouraged to teach their children the fear of the Lord. We do our part, trusting in God's faithfulness, and leave the event with Him, we need not fear; He will make good his promises to us.

When I was about twelve years old, I frequently heard the Baptist preach. At that time they were the only people among us who appeared to have the life and power of religion. Under their preaching I often felt the convictions of the Spirit with power, and was quite willing to deny myself the vain customs and fashions of the world; but my dear mother, who then thought it a childish whim in me constrained me to dress as I had done. I felt, at first, wounded my conscience, until by keeping lively company, indulgence in wicked dancing, and whatever was called sin by the fashionable Christians of the day, the Spirit measurably withdrew; my heart grew hard; I again took pleasure in folly; and Satan persuaded me to content myself with attendance upon the outward ordinances of the Church.

From my earliest recollection I was often reminded to retire in private to pray, and frequently felt a degree of satisfaction in it. At the age of fourteen or fifteen years, I greatly desired to receive the holy sacrament; accordingly I approached, and felt my heart greatly melted, and remained for some time in a very solemn state of mind. As none invited me, I often went forward and touched the sacred altar with unwashed hands, and received a false hope that I was right.

When not quite seventeen I married, and went to live with my husband's parents. Here there was neither the form nor the power of religion. When I was about nineteen, Methodist preachers brought the gospel into the neighborhood. I attended, and was made to see my foundation was a sandy one; and for a time deep in a measure departed from my eyes: a part of my nights were spent in weeping and crying for mercy; but, alas! as the preachers, being discouraged, desisted from preaching among us; and I had a great deal of opposition—my wicked heart flew back. I again became cold and languid, and strove to ease my conscience with dead works. Sometimes I entertained a false hope, and again was restless, and thrice a day called upon the Lord, and with frequent fasting poured out my soul for mercy to Him, who saw my sinfulness, pitied my ignorance, and again and again compassionately drew me by His loving Spirit. These sensible tonches of the divine goodness caused my soul to grow vain and to conclude I was a good Christian. O Lord! who can number the resting places Satan hath laid for poor dear seekers of religion. O, that mourners may beware they do not, like the cry peace! peace! when God hath not said "peace be still."

In February, 1782, my father-in-law, who had been averse to our hearing of the Methodists, died, truly penitent, I trust. Sometime after his death we were informed a new preacher would preach four miles from our house; and my husband, his mother, and myself attended. The preacher was James O'Kelly. After singing and prayer, he gave out his text: 2 Cor. 4:3—"If our gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost." Unspeakable reason have I to thank God for not placing me beyond hope of recovery, because of my long neglect of so great salvation; and for showing me once more that I was eternally undone without a better righteousness than I was contenting myself with; and glory to God, that infinite wisdom devised and carried into execution a plan whereby "God could be just and the justifier of all who believe in Him."

This sermon, which was so much blessed to my good, was also carried to the hearts of my dear husband and his mother; and, thanks be to God, His grace made us all willing to travel as pilgrims to the celestial city.

Deep distress now seized my soul. The next preacher, when he came around, admitted me into class meeting; the Society was much engaged, but my heart was burdened. He gave out the hymn, "Come ye that love the Lord." I sat still. When he gave out the next verse, in this changed form, "Let those refuse to sing, Who will not know our God," I thought it is true I do not know Him, but I do desire to know Him; I then rose up and joined in singing. I was under a powerful temptation that "His mercy was clean gone for ever," and mentioned it to one of the Society near me. She said, "fear not—the darkest hour is often just before the break of day."

I then took courage to ask some of them to pray for me, and went home. Still my distress was extreme. I thought I had no hope; nevertheless, I firmly resolved, and I have often since shuddered at the boldness of that resolution, that I would neither eat, drink nor sleep until I had found some rest to my weary soul.

Now was a trying time with me; for the prince of Hell cruelly warred with my poor soul. When I got home I do not recollect even calling for my tender babe, but instantly retired, feeling disordered in both body and mind. I was for sometime at a stand what to think of my feelings; at length it occurred to me it must be conviction; and though I then felt as much as my feeble frame could well bear, I cried out, "O Lord, increase it;" and loosening my clothes, I fell at my injured Master's feet with inexpressible throes; agony and trembling seized my body. My dear husband, when dinner was ready, called me, but I refused; at which, his tenderness swiftly brought him to my room: I sank into his arms crying mercy, mercy; and he being almost a stranger to the power of God, thought I was dying, for I was helpless and almost speechless.

A servant hastened to bring my father and mother; and in a little time they were around me, melted into tears to see the awful condition of my poor soul. Confusion and sorrow filled the gloomy chamber. When the glorious Sun of Righteousness drove back the horrid clouds, light broke in upon my soul, and I died indeed unto sin, but arose with holy joy unto righteousness, to praise my adorable Saviour.

My husband and mother shortly after obtained peace; and glory to God for his conquering love, we all joined Society with those people called Methodists.

For about two weeks I often staggered at the promises, and was afraid to say I was converted, yet could not deny it; until the same dear old man, who was the blessed instrument of opening my eyes, came round again. His text then was—Eph. 4:27: "Neither give place to the devil." I thought that that sermon was for me. He had said but little before I was enabled, by grace, no longer to give place to my enemy, and I was I believe as happy as I well could be; and, glory to God, I do not recollect that I had a distressing doubt for two hours in twelve months. Let all that is within me bless His holy name.

[To be continued.]

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

FOR THOSE AT FAULT.

MR. EDITOR: We hear of model Churches where the members live in great unity, love each other, love the preacher and prosper. Such a state of things is pleasant to contemplate and deserving commendation. I know a Church that would be a model Church if it had more union among its members, more love for each other, and more love for their preacher. The members, it is true, do not quarrel, but then there seems to be a want of confidence in each other, and without such confidence there can not be any bond of union. "The rich and the poor meet together" at the house of God, but they seldom meet any where else; or if they do, it is too much like the meeting of oil and water. The consequence of this state of things is coldness in religion, formality in worship. Their Zion is barren and unfruitful. If it essays to bring forth, you need not look for sons and daughters in Christ, but for spiritual abortions.

Some of the members of said Church appear ashamed of their relations to it. This is exhibited in more ways than one; but we mention but one, and that one is, when their members marry they seldom get their own pastor to celebrate the rites. They not unfrequently seek for Ministers of other denominations; Ministers, too, who are known to be hostile to their Church. In other Churches such a course would be regarded as an exception; in this it almost amounts to a custom. Indeed it has been carried to such an extent that when the pastor hears of a wedding to take place among his flock, he may contend himself to let the Shepherd of some other fold lead them into the green pastures and beside the still waters of matrimonial blessedness. To my certain knowledge, three pastors successively of this Church have been passed by on occasions of this sort, to secure the services of Ministers of other denominations. And, in some instances, these pastors have not even been honored with an invitation to the wedding. Now, the question arises, can those who do the like have a proper respect for their pastor? It is plain that they do not, else they would not subject him to the mortification of being passed by and a preference given to others. How can a pastor feel easy and at home among a people when thus treated? How can he persuade himself that there is not an absence of that tender affection which should bind pastor and people together? It is impossible for him to do either. He believes that so long as his people take the trouble to go out of their way to obtain the services of other Ministers, when his own are peculiarly legitimate and appropriate, that they can have but a meager share of that love and respect due a pastor.

Again, if the members of a Church thus act toward a pastor, how can they expect for others to respect him? These invidious distinctions must of necessity impair his usefulness, for the world generally judges of a Minister by the treatment he receives from the Church. It was once a custom in the better days of the Church, for those of a particular flock who were to be united in wedlock, to have their own pastor to celebrate the nuptials, and to have at the same time his blessing. This is an invariable custom in not a few Churches of the present day; and this is as it should be, for who but the pastor, who has the care of his people, who has to pray for them, watch over them, and guide them, should perform this important and sacred duty? Is it right for his people to make him a mere dray-horse?—perform the drudgery of his profession, and then shut him out from their innocent festivities? If such a course affords any evidence of piety or of good breeding, I must confess ignorance of both. Where the membership of a Church are unwilling for their own pastor to officiate in their marriages, they ought at once to dismiss him and determine to do without one.

A Church should be united—its members bound together by the ties of Christian affection. They should also love him who ministers to them in holy things. They should endeavor to act toward him so as to make him feel anxious to serve them, yea, to feel while he does serve that his services are appreciated, and that the blessings of God are invoked upon them.

No Minister is entitled to the idolatry of his people; yet all Ministers, if they be men of blameless lives and useful talents and habits, deserve the esteem and kindest attentions of their people. Where they fail to receive this, there is generally found a lack of piety among them. There is no relation short of the family relation, so intimate and tender as that of the pastor and his flock; and between them should exist all those amenities which belong to a pure and cultivated Christianity.

July 20, 1854. PHILANDER.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

SUPPORT OF BISHOPS AND BENEFICIARIES.

MR. EDITOR:—You announced, in a communication from Columbus, that a certain measure was adopted by the General Conference which "settled an important principle"—that "the Bishops draw their support from the proceeds of the Book Concern," and that the former beneficiaries of that fund are "thrown upon the contributions of the Church directly!" Permit me to ask, what principle does this measure settle? Is it a principle of right or a principle of expediency? I presume you intend the latter, as you say they, the former beneficiaries, "will be better supported." They may be better supported, but this is contingent, and their claim of right is swept away. This is surely an important measure, an involves principles and interests which a superficial observer, or a tyro in ecclesiastial policy and tendencies, will hardly descry or appreciate. "Distressed traveling preachers, the families of traveling preachers, supernumerary and worn out preachers, and the widows and orphans of preachers," were recognized and declared beneficiaries of the produce of the Book Concern "in 1796 by the traveling preachers in general conference assembled." It is so stated in the decision of the Supreme Court, and it is said in that decision that "all the beneficiaries" were represented by the complainants in that suit; and further, that "the share of this Book Concern belonging to the beneficiaries in that Church—(the Church South)—and which its authorities are entitled to the safe-keeping and charge of for their benefit, may be properly paid over to the complainants as the authorized agents for this purpose." Moreover, the sixth restrictive article says: "They (the General Conference) shall not appropriate the produce of the Book Concern, nor of the Charter Fund, to any purpose other than for the benefit of the traveling, supernumerary, superannuated or worn-out preachers, their wives, widows and children."

I make no comments; I only state facts which are matters of record, which should not be disguised. Of their bearings the judicious must judge.

I have cherished with ardent affection the welfare of the Methodist Church for sixty years. I would say of her chief ministers, the Bishops, that they should be highly esteemed in love for their works' sake. But candor and a deep concern for the weal of the Church compels me, on the verge of life, to stand back at the removal of the old landmarks. The early superintendents, whose labors and cares were abundant, even till they tottered on the verge of the grave, stood upon a level with all other preachers as regarded pecuniary matters. Does, or does not, the measure adopted raise the Bishops above all other preachers, as it regards support, which, you say, they draw from the proceeds of the Book Concern—and does, or does it not render them independent of the people?

When this measure was under discussion, it was urged that the Constitution and the grounds on which the Courts decided in favor of the South, presented difficulties in the way of the measure. But it was doubted by Bishop S—— whether the decision had "at all turned on a consideration of the claims of superannuated preachers," and Dr. S—— asserted that such claims "did not enter into the decision of the suit." The decision of the Supreme Court specifies that "the bill was filed by the complainants for themselves and in behalf of the traveling and superannuated preachers," etc.—these, with their wives, widows and orphans were recognized by the Court as the "beneficiaries" of the Book Concern; as claimants to a "share thereof"—and mark the language of the final decision: "the share, therefore, of this Book Concern belonging to the beneficiaries in that Church, and which its authorities are entitled to the safe-keeping and charge of for their benefit, may be properly paid over to the complainants as the authorized agents for that purpose."

L. GARRETT.

Vernon, Miss., June, 1854.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

NOTES OF A RAMBLER.

MR. EDITOR—We have spent several days in Washington City, and now send you our notes.

THE PRESIDENT'S HOUSE.

This stands at the head of the main street, fronting the Capitol, over one mile distant. It is built of freestone; has a length of 170 feet, and a depth of 86 feet. It is ornamented on its north front facing Lafayette Square, with a portico of four Ionic columns, projecting with twice others. The garden front, or that on the south, is embellished by a circular colonnade of six Ionic columns. The north entrance opens into a large hall, whence a column or passage leads into a richly furnished apartment of an oval form. On either side of this is a room appropriated to the reception of official and ceremonial visits; hence they are designated "reception rooms." The "East Room," or banqueting-room, is a spacious apartment at the east end of the building. The carpet of this room is one piece and very rich. It was made in Scotland. Seven large mirrors with gilded frames adorn the walls. The curtains of the windows are damask and of the richest quality. The mantels are of white marble and beautifully polished. Three magnificent chandeliers, containing eighty-one gas burners, hang from the ceiling. On each side of the President's house are two large buildings. That on the N. W. is occupied by the War department; that on the S. W. by the Navy department; that on the N. E. is devoted to the State department; and that on the S. W. to the Treasury department. The new Treasury building is 300 feet long, with a wing in the rear 100 feet long, and has a colonnade in front 457 feet long, comprising 32 massive columns. The General Postoffice is a beautiful marble structure with two wings. In front and at the ends, it is adorned with fluted marble columns.

THE PATENT OFFICE.

This is built of freestone and marble, and is a beautiful specimen of architectural taste and skill. In the second story is a room 125 feet long, arched and decorated with columns, and filled with models and specimens of articles patented. In the upper story is a room 275 feet long and 65 wide, designed as a depository for patents, but which for the present is appropriated to the collections of the National Institute. To see these collections is well worth a trip. They comprise curiosities of every kind and from every portion of the globe. There are several small cases of Egyptian curiosities. A number of large cases of Indian curiosities, which have been collected from various tribes. There are cases of minerals, curiosities from the sea, animals, birds, reptiles, ect. ect. It is impossible for any one to form an idea who has not seen them. Here is the original Declaration of Independence, many of the names almost faded; the treaty with Great Britain at the close of the Revolutionary war; some of the furniture used by Gen. Washington, his campchest and contents, his war sword, the full suit worn by him when he resigned his commission, 1783. In the lower story of this building are two remarkable curiosities. A marble slab, which has a portion of the Temple erected by Miltiades on the plains of Marathon, after his famous victory over the Persians in the year 490 B. C.; and a Sarcophagus, which was the repository of the remains of the Roman Emperor, Alexander Severus. It was procured at Bayroot, in Syria, by Commodore Jesse C. Elliott, and proffered to Gen. Jackson, as a repository for his body after his death, which he refused. It was then presented to the National Institute. It is a solid block of the finest stone, dug out in the center. Its top is of the same material, and shaped like the roof of a house. Its sides are beautifully ornamented with rich carved work.

SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTE.

This is situated on a nineteen acre plot of ground granted by Government; its length is 450 feet, and the width 150; built of a reddish sandstone, in the ancient style of Norman architecture. It has ten towers, one of which is 150 feet in hight, and the remaining ones 100 feet each. The lecture room will contain 1000 persons.

From the report of the Special Committee of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, it appears that there has been expended from the commencement of the Institution to the end of the year 1853, for building, furniture and grounds, $244,393; for publications, researches and lectures, $50,268; for salaries, incidentals general, postages, transportation, apparatus, etc., $46,608; library, museum and gallery of art, $41,757. Total, $405 027. From this report it appears there has been a great deal of squandering and useless expenditure of this fund.

WASHINGTON MONUMENT.

It is now 150 feet high. The funds are almost exhausted, and if more are not raised soon, the work will stop. What a national disgrace this would be! The means ought to be raised in some way. Every man, woman and child in the country ought to give something towards the building of this monument, which will speak to future generations of the "Father of his Country."

MOUNT VERNON.

This spot, so dear to every American heart, is twenty miles below Washington. A steamer from the city goes down every other day. The trip is a delightful one. Just before you reach Mt. Vernon, you pass Fort Washington. This is on a high hill, and commands the river below. It is strongly and heavily built. Mt. Vernon rises before you, clad in its rural robes, presenting an imposing, beautiful appearance in the distance. As you approach and the outlines become visible, you are charmed.

"Distance lends enchantment to the view."

Generally true, but not here. The enchantment increases the nearer you draw. How your heart swells with emotions, too big for utterance, as you near the shore; and when you step upon it, you feel that you are treading soil consecrated. You walk up the hill several hundred yards along a narrow plank path, and almost before you are aware of it, you are standing before the vault of WASHINGTON. This vault was built a few years ago, and the bodies of Washington and his wife removed and placed in it. It is a substantial, neat structure, of brick. In front are double iron railings, through which you can look and see the sarcophagus which contains all that now remains. The sarcophagus is of plain marble. On its top is inscribed in large letters, WASHINGTON. No other inscription is needed. Several monuments, erected to the members of the Washington family, surround the vault. From this spot you pass on to the original vault of Washington. This is on an eminence—a beautiful spot. It is now in ruins. A walk of one or two hundred yards further brings you to the dwelling. It stands on the top of the hill. A beautiful prospect opens up on every side. The majestic Potomac spreads its waters at your feet; hills and vallies rise to your view and extend away until the curtain of distance is drawn over them. The house remains as it was when Washington died, with the exception of the ravages which time has made. The yard, walks, garden, etc., remain as they were. Every thing about the place wears an old garment. The dilapidated condition of things causes a feeling of sadness to possess the heart. Our Government should not allow this. Her protecting care should be thrown around it, that it may continue, for ever, as an Altar consecrated to freedom, from which the praises of a free, rejoicing people shall continue to go up, as a cloud of incense to Heaven.

RAMBLER.

From the London Watchman, July 8.

ORIENTAL MISSIONS.

A new Missionary Association has just sprung up amongst us, as the first promise of good to arise out of the evils of the present deplorable war. It is said that the flower of the Egyptian lotus lifts itself out of the turbid inundation of the river exactly at sunrise; and we are disposed to regard this young institution as in some wise a token that the day-spring is once more returning to the Orient. Like the literal morning it has been reflected again from west to east; for the Gospel has completed the circuit of the globe, and after visiting Europe from Asia, and America from Europe, has commenced a second and more pervasive progress; and the light which is now falling upon the grand primeval hills and rivers, on Ararat and Lebanon, on the Hiddekel and Euphrates, has traveled thither, like the natural sun, from beyond the Rocky Mountains and the Mississippi. Although there might have been in this country a few hundreds, perhaps a thousand or two, who were previously aware that a reformation, or revival of evangelical religion, was proceeding in those lands where the earliest Christian Churches had been planted; and though a greater number felt some interest in the fact that a Protestant Bishop had been placed at Jerusalem under the protection of England and Prussia, and was maintained there, notwithstanding the offense taken by Tractarians; yet it was not until British soldiers and seamen had been despatched in thousands to the shores of Eastern Europe and Western Asia, that an effectual sense began to be largely entertained of the important work which was proceeding, chiefly under the instrumentality of American Missions, in those regions. Our military alliance with the Ottoman empire has revived and animated the religious relations, which were obscurely felt before, between the west and the east; much in the same way as the war, and the subsequent commercial treaty with China, opened the ports of that empire to Missionaries as well as to merchandise. Then the fact became more generally recognized of the fresh infusion of the Christian life which had been imparted to the corrupt and languid communities of the Greek, Armenian and Nestorian Churches; and while it was gratifying to reflect that the British Government and the English Ambassador at the Porte had constantly endeavored to protect the new converts from the intolerance of a bigoted clergy, who looked upon this eastern reformation as Rome does upon Protestantism; while, too, the more recent services of Lord Strutford were gratefully acknowledged, who had obtained for these Asiatic Protestants a civil status in the presence of their Mohammedan rulers, as well as immunity from their nominally Christian persecutors; it began to be perceived, at the same time, that cooperation in some shape, as well as protection, was due to the religious movement in the East.

Advantage has properly been taken of such enlightened views to form the society which was first introduced to the public a few days ago. Its title and object are set forth as an "Association in aid of Evangelical Missions in Western Asia and the East of Europe, especially those of the American Board." The Earl of Shaftesbury is its President, and on the lists of its Committee and its Corresponding and Honorary Members, are names which imply the assent, and in some measure pledge the cooperation, of all Protestant denominations in this country. We need only mention, as representing our own body, those of the Revs. Dr. Bunting and Dr. Beecham, Mr. Rule and Mr. Arthur. We would not conceal from our readers, but would rather urge it as an argument for more zealous patronage, that this association is wanting in some principles which give effect to most other religious societies. It does not undertake to form a distinct Missionary organization, to send out men, or to fix the sites of new stations in the Eastern field. Its catholic basis excludes the apparatus of purely denominational institutions. Its object being at present only "to raise contributions in aid of the Evangelical Missions," it seems to lack individuality, and has somewhat the air of a temporary, or at any rate of a secondary and supplemental undertaking. Even as such, however, it would be unjust to consider it of small value or unlikely to be successful. One of the conditions of its success abroad must be the abrogation of the law by which Mohammedans—and many of these are now inquirers after a purer faith—are condemned to death on embracing Christianity; so that the members of the association, several of whom possess great political influence, will be at once engaged to press the British Government to demand from the Porte a concession which common humanity as well as Christianity requires. Then, as regards the influence of the association upon the American Churches, it has been properly remarked, that "such an expression of British confidence and sympathy, there is reason to believe, will be very cordially welcomed and appreciated by our American brethren, and will have a happy effect in strengthening the ties of Christian and political union between the two countries." To which consideration we would add, that it will be an act of reciprocity as well as of fraternization; for the American Churches have been forward and munificent in showing their good-will to British Missions, as Dr. Buff can witness on behalf of the Free Church, and as our own Connection in France has been prompt to acknowledge. The American Board of Missions, it is true, represents but five Evangelical denominations in the United States,—the Presbyterians, the Congregationalists, the Dutch Reformed, the German Reformed, and the Associate Reformed; but that does not detract from the grace of an alliance by British Protestants generally with such of the American Churches as have Missions in European Turkey, in Syria, and on each side of the Taurus.

As the opening in China gave unity to the operations, and individuality to the object of all religious denominations a while ago; so the war in Eastern Europe and Western Asia will, for a time, make the course of the association, under good guidance, clear and prosperous. Afterwards something permanent, and possessing the vitality of a specific organization, may grow from, or take the place of, the present rudimentary principle of a united evangelical mission, from western to eastern Christendom. It is a germ so richly endowed with all the attributes of life, that it is certain to grow and expand. The American brethren and the Church of England Missionary Society have hitherto been almost alone in the eastern field. They have replenished the failing fountains of the stream with living water taken from the estuary. They have sent the Gospel back to Palestine, have translated St. Paul's Epistles into the tongues of those who now dwell at Thessalonica, at Ephesus, and in Galatia; and among "the Churches which are in Asia" they have revived the true doctrine and the blessed hope of the Apocalypse. But in such a labor all Christians must desire to participate. If Emperors still contend about the stones of Zion, and for the keys of a few shrines hallowed by doubtful traditions, we may be sure that the sentiment of which the Crusades were an ill-regulated expression, is not extinct, and that it may be possible to bring it forth in a purified and nobler form. There ought to be, and there is, a certain special feeling in behalf of missions to the East, which we think the present course of political events is sure to evoke, and which we hope the new association may regulate and enlist in its own favor.

MISSIONARY INCIDENT.

The Rev. Wm. Shaw, a veteran Wesleyan missionary in South Africa, in a letter written Nov. 14, 1853, gives, among other interesting items, the following notice of a visit to a place on the Kershamma, to establish a new mission station, with the chief Kama and his tribe:—

INTERIOR OF A CHRISTIAN KAFFIR'S HUT.—On our arrival we met Kama and his son William. We unyoked our oxen at the kraal of the latter, who now acts as schoolmaster of the tribe. William Kama placed his very large clean native hut at our disposal. It was rather curious and pleasing to observe, on entering it, that it contained some articles of furniture never seen in the hut of a Kaffir till Christianity came to be proclaimed in the land. He has a bedstead and a bed, with clean bedding; a table and some chairs; a chest in which he keeps his clothes; and in some sacks, a supply of meal, sugar, coffee, etc.

Many, even of persons who have been born and brought up in Africa, would hardly credit these simple facts, so great and so strange is the contrast which they present to the ordinary discomfort and destitution of a Kaffir dwelling. But William and his wife are both real Christians, and patterns of piety and consistency. At family worship in the evening, which we held in his hut, I desired him to read a portion of Kaffir Scripture. I was much pleased with his selection of 1 John, iii. He read the whole chapter with great accuracy, and with a tone and feeling that manifested how much his heart was in unison with the noble sentiments of that delightful portion of God's most holy word. I longed for the presence of my old friend Shrewsbury, and some other of the earlier missionaries of Kaffraria. How would they have rejoiced to see what I saw, and hear what I heard! They know how dead and dry we found the bones of this valley of vision, and how we often traveled and labored, in weariness and tears, and fasting and prayers, often saying, "Can these dry bones live?" Blessed be God, some have been given us as the first fruits of future increase. And who is he that saith, "The harvest shall never come?"—"Jehovah saith, I will work, and who shall let?"

MAN'S FOOD.—What do men really live upon? asks the "Scientific American." The answer will be various enough. The Gaucho, who in the wild pampas of Buenos Ayres, managing his wild horse with incredible dexterity, throws the lasso or lola to catch the ostrich, the guanoo, or the wild bull, consumes ten or twelve pounds of meat, and regards it as a high feast day when in any hacienda he gains a variety in the shape of a morsel of pumpkin. The Irishman, on the other hand, regales himself in the careless mirth on 'potatoes and point,' after a day of painful labor, he who cannot help making a joke even in the name he gives to his scanty meal. The hunter of the prairie lays low the buffalo with sure bullet, and the juicy, fat streaked hump, roasted between two hot stones, is to him the greatest of delicacies. Meanwhile the Industrious Chinese carries to market his carefully fattened rats, delicately arranged on white sticks, certain to find a good customer among the epicures of Pekin; and in his hot smoky hut fast buried beneath the snow and ice, the Greenlander consumes his fat which he has just carved, rejoicing over the costly prize, cut from a stranded whale. Here the Black slave eats the sugar cane, and eats his banana; there the African merchant fills his wallet with sweet cates, his sole subsistence in the long desert journey; and there the Siamese crams himself with a quantity of rice from which a European would shrink appalled. And whosoever over the whole inhabited earth we approach and demand hospitality, in almost every little spot a different kind of food is set before us, and the "daily bread" offered in another form.

UPRIGHT MEN.—We love upright men. Pull them this way and the other, and they only bend but never break. Trip them down and in a trice they are on their feet again. Bury them in the mud, and in one hour they would be out and upright. You can not keep them down, you can not destroy them. They are the salt of the earth. Who but they start any noble project? They build our cities, whiten the ocean with our sails, and blacken the heavens with the smoke of their cars. Look to them, young men, and catch the spark of their energy.

TRAGEDY.—We learn through a gentleman down from Rock Island yesterday, says the St. Louis Democrat of the 27th ult., by railroad via Chicago, that the carpenter of the steamer Ben Campbell went into the house of his wife, living at that place, on last Monday, and after some altercation, cut her throat from ear to ear, and then went and threw himself into the river and was drowned. The man had, for some cause, been separated from his wife for about a year, and upon entering the house on last Monday, began an attack upon a young man whom he found there paying attention to his daughter.

The young man and the girl made their escape, crying "murder" and giving a general alarm. When the house was entered by the persons whom the alarm had collected, the wife was found dead from the wound across her throat. Pursuit was made of the murderer, but he was only traced to the water's edge.

A VENOMOUS SNAKE.—On Monday last, a Mr. Glann, who resides in Virginia, while bathing in the Potomac, near the Little Falls, was bitten by a snake. In a short time not only his leg was almost incredibly swollen, but his whole side turned to a hue almost black. Two or three physicians were procured from this city, and were promptly on the spot, but when our informant left, there was no abatement of the swelling or pain. [Washington Sentinel.

HEALTH OF THE CITY.—So far as we were able to ascertain, there were fewer deaths in the city yesterday than on any day since Saturday. The mortality for the past two days was pretty rife, but chiefly confined to negroes. There were one or two sudden deaths among the whites, which were set down as cholera. [Richmond Whig.

WHERE THE STRENGTH LIES.—Where is the strength and safety of a people? Is it in their multitude? Look at Europe, and behold the millions the sport of the few; look at the nations and races trampled by a tithe of their numbers in the dust; look at the myriad slaves, whom a thousand tyrants and taskmen scourge in fields, and camps, and dungeons. The strength of a people is not alone in multitude. Is it in the power of revolutions and massacres, or in the bayonets they can fling to the gleam of the sun? Did bayonets save Rome? did they save Poland, and Hungary, and France, and Germany to the people? The strength and safety of a people lie in their knowledge of their rights, and their union in defense of them. Ignorant and disunited, the greater the number, the greater the danger of a people. They are their own curse. They fall upon and destroy themselves. In their hands bayonets become suicidal. Give a people a true knowledge of themselves, and no power can oppose them. Liberty comes with intelligence, and the unarmed, intelligent million, are stronger than ignorant armed millions. The strength of the American people lies least in the number of their cannon and bayonets, and most in their school-houses, newspapers and books. These are indestructible weapons, to which age adds edge and might; and armed with these, we are safer and stronger than a soil bristling with murderous steel. Armed with these, millions lean together, and strike mightily but bloodlessly as one man, through the ballot-box.

"A weapon surer yet,
And mightier than the bayonet;
A weapon, that comes down as still
As snow flakes fall upon the sod,
And executes a freeman's will,
As lightnings do the will of God."

Three fragments of Cicero's famous treatise on "Fate," have lately been found in Naples, on some parchment composing the binding of a book

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Christian Advocate.

Terms: $1 50 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:
SATURDAY, AUGUST 19, 1854.

DEDICATION.—A neat Methodist Church all complete, was dedicated last Sabbath afternoon, in the Fourth District of the City by Rev. Dr. KEENER, Presiding Elder. It is 34 feet by 60 feet, and located where it is much needed, corner of Laurel and Toledano streets. A flourishing Sabbath School, gathered in a neighboring residence while the Church was a preparing, will be transferred into it, under the efficient direction of the President of the Sabbath School Union, W. H. Foster, Esq. This enterprise has been gotten up and put through mainly by the toil and self-sacrifice of a plain and poor Christian man, RICHARD KEENE. And we will christen it "Keene Chapel." Long may it stand and do good. The whole cost, exclusive of lot, was $2,602. At the dedication $662 were donated.

CALIFORNIA.—A friend, writing us from Sacramento City, 13th ult., adds P. S.:

"A fire broke out 12 A. M., and notwithstanding the exertions of the firemen, raged about four hours. The Presbyterian church was burned to the ground. The Baptist church, dedicated 18th June, was in imminent danger. The fire of 1852 destroyed the Baptist and Methodist churches, but they are safe this time. The State-house is burned, many hotels and stores. The city has well nigh been laid in ashes."

THE EVENTFUL EVENT.

The nineteenth century has barely half run out, and men are canvassing for its leading event, its historic immortality. Some put it down—steam, some telegraph, some Bible Societies, and some Missionary organizations. Rev. Dr. Humphrey, at the late anniversary of the Massachusetts Colonization Society, is reported to have said that he regarded African Colonization as the great enterprise of the nineteenth century. He believed it would be no regarded when looked back upon from the middle of the next century. The prominent enterprise of the fifteenth century was the discovery of America; that of the sixteenth, was the Reformation; of the seventeenth, the coming of the pilgrims to this country; of the eighteenth, the American Revolution; of the nineteenth, the Colonization of the Continent of Africa with a Christian and free people, with all the concurrent benefits which must follow in its train. It was delightful to think what great events are developed from small beginnings. Almost every thing great and glorious in the world comes in, in such a way, that hardly any of the contemporaries thought that any thing would have come out of it.

SYSTEMATIC BENEVOLENCE.

The Presbyterians have four organizations by which is worked their various benevolence. These are called Boards—one of Foreign Missions, one of Domestic Missions, one of Education, and one of Publications; each of which is ably officered. The first is domiciled in New York, the other three in Philadelphia. With these the field may be well covered. At their last General Assembly, a special committee was appointed to devise some plan of systematic benevolence, by which the strength of the Church, its covenanted membership and friends, might be drawn out, in the support of these institutions. One of the committee has kindly furnished us the Report, in which we find much of general application and Scripture force. It claims that all the wealth in a Church, in whatever form it may exist and circulate, is consecrated wealth. If people can not consecrate that to God, how can they do a greater thing—consecrate themselves?

The practical oblivion of this principle is lamentable. Christians are the Lord's, body and soul; but their money is theirs, not His! This view must be corrected before, in any branch of the Church, we shall witness an outlay and an effort at all corresponding to the wants of the world. Then what is laid on the altar will not be blowed by the proud thought of patronage or charity, or the grudgingness of emotion. It will be cheerfully done, and the givers "blessed in their deed."

Gather up the motives. Bring the purest and strongest to bear steadily. If the mainspring be weak, then action is feeble and inconstant. "The Scriptural motives" are here well presented:—

In order to arrest these destructive tendencies, all scriptural means must be employed. But your Committee are confined to one of these. And they would urge upon their brethren the much disregarded truth, that liberality is an indispensable means of grace. To employ it successfully, the scriptural motives to beneficence should be fixed in the conscience, and influence the heart. These motives may be variously expressed; but we arrange them, for the sake of brevity, into three classes:

1. Philanthropy is one of these. But it is the lowest motive, and may be shared in common by the religious and the irreligious. Where it exists as a controlling motive, it is guided more by emotion and sympathy, than by principle; and often leads the Christian to find in worldly associations, the ways of doing good, to the partial or entire exclusion of the Church, which is the great benevolent ability formed by Jesus Christ, its Head; and thereby much of the means of usefulness, which ought to flow through sanctified channels, is expended upon measures of temporary or doubtful utility.

2. Love to the souls of men is another motive, which elevates the preceding from the temporal to the eternal. It is philanthropy sanctified. It does not neglect the physical wants of man; but it values beyond every other estimate his spiritual necessities. The realities of death, judgment and eternity, apprehended as not far distant, coupled with the awful fact, that the day of grace is hourly closing upon thousands of our fellow-men present an overwhelming motive to sanctified exertion.

3. But there is still another motive, which absorbs the first and second, as the greater includes the less. It is a supreme regard to the glory of God. This is the highest motive that can be addressed to the conscience and the heart. It places all human interests in their true relations to our Maker. It consecrates time, talents and property, to the service of Christ. It sets out from the right point of exertion, to relieve the temporal and spiritual wants of man. It is sustained by the approbation of conscience and the favor of God. If the most benevolent plans, prosecuted under this paramount motive, should fail of success, and labor and means, appear to be thrown away, the reflection that every act was done for God's glory, will extract the sting of disappointment, for God's will has been done, and the reward is laid up in heaven. This motive, therefore, supplies what no other motive can. It has less to do with mere human feelings and sympathies, and more to do with divine principles, which should regulate all the desires and susceptibilities of the soul. This is the motive which should be brought to bear continually upon the Christian life and practice; and when its influence shall become paramount in all communions, the Church will come up with one supreme purpose to the service of her Head, and lay her sons and daughters, and her costliest offerings, upon the altar of consecration to His cause.

JEWS IN NEW ORLEANS.

Rev. Mr. Bonhomme, Missionary of the Society for Jewish Converalon, reports in the Jewish Chronicle for July. His collections have been very good, over $1000, in Louisiana and Mississippi. He says:—

"Those Israelites, however, I have been visiting of both sexes have received me with great kindness; the Bible and tracts and books very readily received. I was also invited and did partake of the Passover in New Orleans, with a pious Israelite and his family, and was also introduced to a number of others on the occasion, both in the synagogue and in the family.

"In New Orleans I gave to Mr. M. a German Bible and a Testament, to Mr. H. a Hebrew Bible, to Mr. D. S. a book on Messiah, by Mr. Lord, and, with a Mr. C., formerly officiating minister in one of the synagogues, I had a long controversy upon the main prophecies referring to the Messiahship of Christ and his vicarious atonement, his Divinity as the Jehovah Jesus, from the Old-Testament Scriptures, from the Hebrew, English, and German languages. During my visit to New Orleans a very worthy Israelitish lady of a distinguished Jewish family whom I know, has united herself with the Presbyterian Church of the Rev. Isaac L. Henderson, whose lady is likewise of the Abrahamic family, now a Presbyterian, the pastor's wife. I have also called on another Jewess, Mrs. D., who is a member of the Episcopal Church; she was converted nine years ago under the ministry of the Rev. Mr. Nicholson; he is now in Cincinati, Ohio, whom I know well. She has four children, they all attend Sunday-school; she has a mother and relatives in New Orleans, and she has suffered much on account of her profession.

"There are also two Jewish families, (one is a lawyer,) who are regular attendants upon the ministry of the Gospel in the Episcopal Church, so that even in New Orleans there is a remnant according to the election of grace."

WAS HE A CHRISTIAN OR AN INFIDEL?

The following paragraph contains an instructive account of the manner in which a distinguished Universalist Minister, H. BALLOU, formed his opinions, and the sources whence they were derived! No doubt a large majority of his brethren are equally infidel; few of them, however, have the honesty to confess it. Mr. B.'s whole character was in harmony with this confession; irreligious in life, and reckless in principle, his influence was pernicious in the extreme. Why such men should desire to be reckoned with Christians, is indeed a mystery. Agreeing with Deists in three points for every one on which they agree with believers in the Bible, why not class themselves with them. If any one doubt this latter assertion, let him try it touching the plenary inspiration of the Scriptures—doctrines of the Trinity—of human depravity—of regeneration—of assurance of the Divine favor—of a future judgment—of endless punishment; and so on through the whole circle of Christian verities, he will find the Deist and Universalist together on all these points, and on many others. Are they Christians, then, or Infidels? Undoubtedly the latter. Their creed is infidel, their lives are infidel, and their influence is infidel. But hear Mr. Ballou:—

"I had preached but a short time before my mind was entirely freed from all the perplexities of the doctrine of the Trinity and the common notions of the Atonement. But in making these advances, as I am disposed to call them, I had the assistance of no author or writer. As fast as those old doctrines were by any means rendered the subjects of inquiry in my mind, they became exploded. But it would be difficult for me now to recall the particular incidents which suggested queries in my mind respecting them. It may be proper for me here to state one circumstance which, no doubt, had no small tendency to bring me on the ground where I have for many years felt established. It was my reading some Deistical writings. By this means I was led to see that it was utterly impossible to maintain Christianity as it had been generally believed in the Church. This led me, of course, to examine the Scriptures, that I might determine the question whether they did really teach that Jesus Christ died to reconcile an unchangeable God to his own creatures. You cannot suppose that I was long in finding that, so far from teaching such absurdities, the Scriptures teach that 'God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself.' The question concerning the Trinity was, by the same means, as speedily settled. But I can not say, for certainty, what year I became a Unitarian, but it was long before I wrote my Treatise on Atonement."

Methodist Press.

The Holston Christian Advocate has a few pertinent words on the change of a traveling preacher's allowance, from $100 to $150, prefaced with: "We understand that, in some quarters, some complaint is made that Methodism is not what it used to be, because the late General Conference adopted a different figure for the amount a traveling preacher is allowed."

We have heard not a breathing complaint, in the Church or out. After stating the general demand for the change, coming up from the Church in primary meetings, our cotemporary adds:

It is well known that it was easier for a man to supply his wants, where money was required, with $1 00 ten or fifteen years ago, than it is now with $1 50. Besides, it is equally well known that the price of labor and of produce is so much advanced, that it is easier to make two dollars now than it was to make one twenty years ago. Who then could find it in his heart to make his preacher the only man that must suffer by the rapid advance in the price of almost every thing, without the possibility of providing against the evil otherwise than by coming from his appropriate work, and turning to something else?

An end of controversy. The difference between the times when the itinerant equipped himself on $100 and now, may be illustrated, even to the understandinge of these complainants: One of two gentlemen recently conversing about the Natural Bridge of Virginia, remarked that there was an extraordinary incident connected with it, for that Gen. Washington once threw a dollar completely over it—an achievement which has not been performed since.

"No wonder," replied his companion, "for a dollar in those days could be made to go a great deal further than at the present time."

The California Christian Advocate, 14th ult., gives us news of the dedication of a new Methodist Church at Martinez, (paid for,) one or two camp-meetings, and that the Sabbath School of the 2d Methodist Church, in San Francisco, is the most flourishing in the State, having 260 scholars and 562 volumes in the library:

California needs nothing so much just now as a gracious revival of religion. The Church numerically is sufficiently strong to conquer the world, but morally she is feeble—too feeble for the accomplishment of the important work before her.

The Christian Advocate and Journal defines its politics and, to this extent, we embrace them:

The worst of all is, that in some unaccountable way, Christian people persuade themselves that they may be wicked with a party and pious as individuals; that they may go with a multitude to do evil, and yet be entirely free from responsibility as to the acts the multitude may do. This is surely the most extraordinary hallucination that ever came over a Christian mind. What does God's law know of party obligations? With what expectation of success can they be pleaded at the last day? If it be said that it is sometimes necessary to vote for a wicked man because he promises to pursue a line of political conduct which seems most likely to conduce to common good, we answer that even this is dangerous, and of doubtful morality. "Timeo Danaos et dona ferentes." But what shall be said for those men professing godliness who support bad and notoriously incompetent men for office, the duties of which have no connection with the success of the public policy which forms the bond of party union? What shall be said for the Methodist who supports a drunkard and a blasphemer, the darling candidate of the grog-shops, for an office which has no connection with the General Government, upon the ground of agreement in national politics! The monstrous thing has been done, and defended upon the ground that the coarse, foul, wicked candidate was the nominee of "the party!" When God's judgment falls upon "the party," where will be "the partisan?" In the world to which we are going "parties" will be found to be nothing but an aggregate of individuals, each one accountable for every act of his life. God is not mocked; "whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap."

We blush over bribery committees now in too frequent demand both for City Councils and Congress Halls. In our Senate low and bitter altercations are indulged, and the lie passed. It is because the politicians, that motley and clamorous crew, intervening between the people and the legislatures, are not cut off from their trade. It is because of that false yet specious party-cry, "Principles and not men." How can good principles be carried out by bad men? As Randolph once said, in ridicule of the humbug, "You can not separate principles and men. As well cry out Love and not Women." The pith of the whole matter is as the editor finishes:

The politics of God's people should be included in the great principle, "Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people. When the righteous are in authority, the people rejoice, but when the wicked beareth rule, the people mourn."

The Richmond Advocate says:

Complaints reach us from various quarters of the irregular arrival of the Advocate, and sometimes of its entire failure. This is a matter of regret to us; but how to correct it we know not.

Glad you are exercised on that subject, Doctor. When you find out, let us know.

The Northern Advocate has been asked its opinion of the Knew Nothings, and gives it:

In one sense the existence of such a society is to be deplored; but, on the whole, if not allowed to transcend its original design, we shall not regret its existence. The Catholics lend themselves to demagogues at the bidding of priests to such an extent that our laws are frequently set aside, and some new element of order and security is evidently demanded.

The editor of the Memphis Christian Advocate says:

We don't exactly understand the notice which friend McTyeire takes of our editorial about individual effort in Church enterprises. We did not mean to speak lightly of benevolent associations, but to inquire into their relative value. The American Bible Society is estimated by none more highly than by us; but we affirm, even of it, that the living Word from the lips of a God-sent evangelist in every land will accomplish more than all the Bible Societies which could be organized. It has its place, but it is subsidiary. God's own special individual itinerants must have the high preëminence over every other means of propagating the truth.

If our notice of friend Cobb's editorial fell short of hearty approval, it fell short of intention: It squares with our own cherished views on the subject. That we did not more explicitly or carefully avow this, was because we supposed our views unequivocally in possession of our readers. The pastor in contact with living souls, with none between him and the people, holds the place of honor and usefulness. Presidents and professors of colleges, editors, agents and bishops will excuse us. The Preacher, in the simple, normal character of witness and ambassador, is the greatest gospel machine to emit light, leaven society, convert sinners, build up the Church and save the world, that ever was invented. All other agents are subsidiary.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

CORRESPONDENCE UP THE RIVER.

August 4.

The Insane Asylum of Louisiana is situated on an eminence half a mile distant from the College. Two long three-story buildings, with colonades and galleries, standing considerably apart, and occupied respectively by males and females, have been erected. A large center building, at a cost of twenty thousand dollars, is contemplated, of which these two will be the wings. The male and female departments are now separated by a high fence, and no communication is allowed between the inmates of the two. The interior of the buildings is scrupulously neat; the floors well scoured and sanded; the sleeping rooms, beds, and other furniture, as tidy as possible. We were shown into a room where the severed patients are sometimes taken for the purpose of cooling their heads. In one corner was a strong box-like apparatus, a shower bath of prodigious power. Once locked in this, a small Niagara is turned upon the raving patient, who can do nothing but stand and take it. "A good remedy," said our conductor; "the fear of which was before the eyes of nearly all." Most of the inmates were strolling about the pleasant, shady grounds; some sitting moodily here and there, others taking their after-dinner siesta on the grass. One old lady we met with a Bible in her hand, walking, and reading as she walked. She was very devout; eulogised the Bible; and was proud of her Christian fellowship. She thought the rules of the Asylum rather stringent, but charitably attributed it to the Superintendent's want of understanding and grace!

At a little distance from the main buildings, and within the enclosure of the Asylum, are small houses provided with cells, where the more unmanageable are confined. These we were not permitted to see, but their mad ravings could be heard with painful distinctness. Quiet as death every where else, those houses are never still. Some of the insane conversed very calmly and almost rationally of their misfortune. Unexpectedly I met an old acquaintance and associate of my youthful days. He was lying under a tree, and looked the wreck of what he had been. He said his brain was gone—run out; that his mind was in ruins, and that he had no hope of recovery. He remembered the past, "the light of other days;" did not then think of a fate like this, and thought his derangement was owing to animal magnetism. Poor Gilbert! how he once loved to revel in the delights of authors, music and poetry; and how his own young pen and lyre gave promise of a brilliant manhood! Nothing remains to him now but conscious mental death.

Every thing is saddening here. Scarcely a smile was on any face; no joyous words nor songs were heard. They remind me of those who wander on the banks of the fabled Styx; and their state suggests to the mind, that dismal bourne whither lost spirits have gone. We departed sadder and better than we went; prepared more than ever before to appreciate the gift of God—REASON.

This noble State charity was opened in November, 1848. Up to December 31, 1853, the whole number of admissions was 325—of which 191 were males, and 134 females. The number of patients discharged and recovered in this time was 53—of which 30 were males, and 23 females. The number of patients removed without recovery was 25; eloped, 19; died, 95. Of the different apparent forms of insanity in these five years, Demencia predominates—of which there were 178; Mania next—of which there were 69; Melancholy next—of which there were 19; and Monomania next—of which there were 15. The admissions are greatest in the month of December. There are now in the Asylum about 132—of whom 119 are under 50 years of age; and 13 of whom are between 50 and 80 years of age. Of the whole number admitted, only 67 have been natives of Louisiana. The highest number, 78, were natives of Ireland; the next highest number after Louisiana was German, of whom there were 60; and the next French, of whom there were 28.

Of the various occupations represented here, the number of laborers far exceeds any other. Of these there are 64; Farmers stand next, of whom there are 13; Seamen next, of whom there are 11. There are 8 merchants, 8 tailors, and 7 planters. There is one student, one clergyman, one circuit rider, one physician, three lawyers, one Thomsonian doctor, and one dancing master. There are but three slaves in the institution.

Dr. Preston Pond is the resident physician, and Mr. E. C. Power, superintendent. We have to acknowledge the considerate attentions of the Superintendent and his assistant in showing us through the buildings and grounds, and in giving such information as our curiosity craved.

Bidding adieu to Jackson—its crazy people and its sane ones—with the memory of such pleasures and experiences as we have no particular wish to prolong, our next progress is backward. Bayou Sara again. Jehu's name is Jeremiah—Jerry for short. Raised in Missouri, and a Methodist bred and born, but backslidden down here in the South. His father died a shouting—his mother almost over Jordan. Jerry thinks this a powerful wicked country, and he has felt the consequences. Jerry has been to camp-meetings, and sings orthodox songs;—has his own notions about preachin'—the "feelinest preachin' is the sort."

Two and a half o'clock precisely we are at the Feliciana depot, and off on the care for Woodville. One passenger car and two for freight, make the train. Five hours of time and 27 miles of space—through a country of surpassing beauty—hill and dale, grassy lawn, shady groves, and cultivated fields, we see by the way;—the pleasantest rural scenes to be met this side of Mason & Dixon's: English, I imagine, in some respects, but in a freer country. To eight miles of Woodville it is West Feliciana, a parish abounding in wealth and comfort, and in a state of high cultivation. We have but one passenger beside myself, a gentlemanly conductor, and Mr. Hoard, the superintendent, a planter of Wilkinson. This road is the best in the world in some respects, and the worst in others. It is the most varied rail that ever a man rode on—the old flat, the modern T, and sometimes none at all. Rather more than five miles an hour is the speed we average. This gives opportunity to breathe and look about. At times we are slowly moving at a perilous hight over ravines and creeks; then again creeping through deep places, the bluffs looking down upon the train and seeming to ask, "Why don't you go faster?" Now we are stuck in the mud. The little superannuated locomotive plunges and blows like a corpulent horse in a quagmire. At length we drag our slow length along, "and we are escaped." This road was built sometime between 1830 and 1840, in what is familiarly known as "the flush times of Mississippi," by a Company having for its style "The West Feliciana & Woodville Railroad Company." The road has never been remunerative, the stock seldom if ever at par; but it still exists as a relict of the past, kept up by the money and enterprise of the chief stockholder, Judge McGehee. The cars never run on Sunday, preachers are always franked through, and not a single life was ever lost by accident. This is more than can be said of any other railroad in the world, probably. Our time and space are accomplished, and here is Woodville, and here, too, is Bro. Barten, to greet us. The greeting of one such man is worth more than that of a joint board of aldermen. Well, this is the county seat; has a thousand inhabitants, a courthouse with a clock in the cupola to strike the time o' day; three churches, Presbyterian, Methodist, Episcopalian. The last is called the church, by those who read Bishop Green's diaries in connection with the New Orleans Christian Advocate. It is meet that such pretensions should become a mockery and a by-word. The Missionary Baptists have a church in course of erection, chiefly through the exertions of Dr. Robert L. Buck, the worthy son of Rev. Wm. Buck, of Columbus, Miss. The Doctor is not a member of any Church, but he loves the Church of his fathers.

One mile and a half from Woodville is a cotton and woolen factory, now owned and carried on by Judge McGehee. A thing to see in its way. The buildings and machinery have been supplied at a cost of about one hundred and ten thousand dollars. There are eighty looms, capable of making 3700 yards a day, besides several hundred pounds of yarn. Linseys, Kerseys, Lowells are manufactured here, besides large quantities of yarn, thread and batting. Slave labor has been introduced with decided advantage. The spinning, carding and dressing are wholly in the hands of colored operatives, and they are being gradually introduced into the weaving department. We saw in the course of a few minutes the great staple of the South pass through all the varied processes, from the plantation bale to real cloth, warp and woof, baled and ready for shipment. The factory has been a source of loss rather than gain thus far. It was started in March 2, 1850, by a company known as the "Woodville Manufacturing Company." It has subsequently passed into the hands of its present proprietor, at a price of sixty thousand dollars less than the original cost. It does not pay at the present time, but hopes are entertained that it will do so ultimately. There is much difficulty in obtaining success for these laudable enterprises in the South; but such pioneer efforts and experiments, if they fail themselves, will lead to the triumph of Southern industry at last.

Nine miles south-east of Woodville is the Bethel Camp-ground, a place of considerable celebrity, and for the last forty years consecrated as the scene of almost yearly revivals. A fresh morning ride brings us to it. Adjacent is a cool spring overflowing with abundance of wholesome water. There is a natural amphitheater rising round about and descending to a center—something in the shape of a large sugar-kettle, though not quite so abruptly concave. Over the center of this plot there is a spacious roof, supported by strong oaken pillars, of capacity to shelter a congregation of a thousand. The audience, however, need not be confined within this extent, as the shady slopes without offer inviting accommodation to multitudes, who would be in convenient sight and hearing of the stand. The pulpit is oak, and looks like a small fortification, designed to mount a single gun on a pivot. It is too much like pulpits in general—not unlike the prisoner's bar of your criminal court: a box, a prison, a cage. Imagine a lion rampant looking out of it and roaring, and you have a picture worthy of a menagerie. This style of pulpit architecture, as we have too much reason to know, is not peculiar to Bethel. How much better would it be to have a light and airy platform, with a moderate rostrum or stand for Bible and hymn-book, rather than these barbarous pens in which the preacher's mother man is imprisoned.

Well, let that go. This is a sacred spot, hallowed by many, many sacred associations. In the stillness of this August noon we sit in the old rustic altar and meditate. Thousands of souls have been converted just here where we are; and what men of God, and how many, have poured out burning words of gospel truth. These grand old woods have rung and rung again with the song and shout. Here mourners have agonized, have found peace, have gone to their earthly homes telling what great things the Lord had done, and from thence have gone to their Heavenly homes to prolong the strains of praise born here. The throng is not here; the seats which face us on every side are forsaken, but association enables us to "Find tongues in trees, books in the running brooks, Sermons in stones, and good in every thing."

This Camp-ground will be alive again in October. The meeting will commence on about the first of the month, so as to include the first Sunday. It is to be hoped that the triumphs of old Bethel are not over, and that the days of her glory may long be perpetuated.

WOODSMAN.

EMORY COLLEGE, GA.

The Columbus Times & Sentinel reports of the Commencement, July 18-19th:—

"It will be gratifying to the friends of Emory College to learn that the Institution is in a healthy, prosperous condition. It is out of debt, and has an endowment of $12,000. During the six years of Bishop Pierce's Presidency, the financial condition of the College has been greatly improved. He leaves it free from embarrassment and firmly established in the confidence of the public. By his exertions, a very large and handsome college edifice has been erected, and the dormitories considerably improved. In these respects Emory now compares favorably with any similar institution in the South. Bishop Pierce, you are aware, leaves the College to enter upon the duties of the office to which he has been elevated by his Church. Dr. Alexander Means was elected to the Presidency and has accepted the position. Dr. Means is known throughout the South, and the Presidency of the institution could not have been entrusted to any one who would have more generally commanded the respect and confidence of the public. He is an able man, an accomplished scholar, and a Christian gentleman. The Trustees also elected Prof. Williams to the chair of Latin Literature. He accepts, I understand, and will bring with him a fine reputation as a linguist and instructor. The board of instructors is now full and competent.

"At the close of the Junior exhibition, Judge Jackson, of the Ocmulgee Circuit, presented the prizes to the Sophomore declaimers. The first prize was awarded to W. J. McDaniel, of Atlanta, and the second to J. H. Bass, of Putnam county, R. W. Smith, of Greene county, and S. W. Vaughan, of Summerfield, Ala. The second prize was thus divided because the committee were not able to discriminate between the three young gentlemen to whom it was awarded. Judge Jackson accompanied the award with an elegant and appropriate address upon the subject of oratory.

At the stage of the proceedings the audience was surprised by a treat which had not been announced in the bill of fare. The students of the college, through one of their number, presented a fine gold watch to President Pierce as a testimonial of their esteem. The President replied in one of his happiest extemporaneous efforts.

The degree of A. B. was conferred upon the following young men: W. Banks, J. M. Chambers, S. D. Clements, H. B. Dawson, J. R. Drake, L. T. Easley, J. F. Harley, L. O. Harper, J. G. Harrison, J. Harwell, W. H. Hill, W. L. Hunnicutt, G. L. Johnson, B. Jones, S. B. Marshall, C. A. McDaniel, J. M. Pace, W. D. Peurifoy, J. Pattillo, J. T. Searcy, J. G. Shockley, J. W. Solomons, W. Stansell, S. Starr, R. Sturgiss, F. T. Tebeau, W. A. Tigner, J. Turner.

The degree of Master of Arts was conferred upon Rev. W. H. Potter, Rev. J. H. Caldwell, Rev. J. W. M. Mears, H. O. Stanley, J. W. Akers and Dr. —— Bird.

The degree of Doctor of Divinity was conferred upon Rev. Alexander Means and Rev. Jesse Boring.

The address before the literary societies was delivered by the retiring President, Bishop Pierce. His theme was denominational education. He advocated it of course.

A man in Wheeling, Va., rendered himself a cripple for life, by taking a cold bath while sweating. Paralysis immediately shriveled his left side from shoulder to foot—a deadness creeping over it which no medical aid can probably remove.

Missionary Reports.

CATOMAH—COLORED MISSION.

To the Rev. H. N. MCTYEIRE, Assistant Treasurer of the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

As it took some time to arrange my mission, I have concluded to send you my report of the first and second quarters together. I have received four whites and baptized one. Of blacks, twenty have been received, five expelled, and five baptized. There are now ten appointments; two have been discontinued, and two more taken in. The blacks give evident marks of interest; are attentive; desire instruction, and love the missionary. In some places we have chapels on the plantations—some places none. We look for improvement in this respect ere long. Let masters think of this.

What sympathy and encouragement missionaries need. And while something is doing, much needs to be done. How many plantations, far from any church, in some river bend where the servants have but few any religious advantages, but like mules horses, there they live and there they Many masters there are who feel their responsibility. The Lord grant to increase their number.

J. A. SPENCE.

THE NEBRASKA SHIBBOLETH.—No chance for "down Easters" in the new Territory. At the "fords," a shibboleth meets them. One correspondent from Nebraska tells a story," which is rather hard. He says: seems to be a purpose prepense to have it a slave State. There is a story abroad, that at all the ferries over the Missouri river they have a cow tied, and a committee to watch all immigrants. The committee ask of each immigrant what animal that is. If he says "a cow," all well—he goes over. But if he answere "a keow," they turn him back.

He would more naturally say, "I guess a keow."

Revival Intelligence.

MONTGOMERY CT., ALA. CON.—Being desirous to record the goodness of our Father, I feel constrained to ask a small space in the Advocate. We commenced a meeting at Pine Grove, one of the appointments on the circuit, on Friday before the fourth Sabbath in July, and protracted it ten days. The Lord was with us from the very beginning, in soul-reviving and sin-killing power. There were about thirty conversions and twenty-eight accessions to the Church; all adults. Considering the fact that the white population in this country is very sparse, and that when we commenced our meeting, there were but eight members in the Society, and of those females but one, this is a very favorable meeting. When we consider, further, that in the whole circuit there were but seventy-five or eighty white members, we should be very grateful to our gracious God for this great manifestation of His goodness toward us.

I was greatly assisted the first and two last days of the meeting by Rev. C. S. Hart, the greatest revivalist I have seen. Bro. J. Hightower, a local preacher from Macon, also rendered me efficient service, also brethren Brewer and Holt, exhorters in the circuit. The circuit is generally in a prosperous condition:

WHITMAN C. TURNER.

August 2, 1854.

DAYTON, ALA. CON.—Rev. J. A. Ilseed, preacher, writes, Aug. 2d:—

"We have had an interesting meeting here in our Church within the last month. There were twenty-five conversions and eight accessions to membership, and a few more to join. The effect produced upon the community generally has been quite beneficial."

A PIECE OF JESUITISM.

Mr. Brownson recently gave in his Quarterly Review an article on "Native American," in which he pretty fully endorses the principles of those who wish to abridge the influence which naturalized, but Americanized foreign citizens are exerting in our political institutions. The article cited the special displeasure of the Roman Catholic papers, and the masses of the Irish and German Papists. To reconcile these and explain his position, he wrote a letter to the Catholic Mirror, published at Baltimore, which, after vindicating his article from certain criticisms, he adds:—

"I had a motive in what I did, and a motive which I supposed would be patent enough to every intelligent Catholic; but it seems that in this I overrated their sagacity, and of course must suffer for my mistake. The motive I had in view was, I am sure, such as every Catholic who is, and every foreigner who wishes to become a citizen of this Union would have heartily approved; and believing that I enjoyed the confidence of the Catholic public, I felt very sure of accomplishing it. But I was mistaken, and by the hastiness and passion of my Catholic friends, it has been defeated.

"But allow me, gentlemen, to conclude by calling your attention to one or two facts which should be known without my telling them. We Catholics are in a small minority, and the sentiment of the country is strongly anti-Catholic. Every measure that we oppose as hostile to us, the country will favor and adopt; and every measure we support as favorable to our interest, it will reject. I am sorry that it is so, but so it is; and I think that in regard to matters which depend on popular votes, in which we are interested as Catholics, the more quiet we keep, the better it will be for us. You ought from this to understand me."

On this the New York Daily Times remarks:—

"It may be that Mr. Brownson has not written here precisely what he intended to say. But as the letter reads, Mr. Brownson's explanation is more creditable to his shrewdness than to his sincerity. The Catholics, he says, are in a small minority, and whatever they advocate as favorable to their interests is certain to be rejected. He had, therefore, advocated Native Americanism, as favorable to Catholic interests; and this he gives them to understand was done in order to secure their rejection. He thought the Catholics would have 'understood' this; but he finds he has 'overrated their sagacity.' These tactics in favor of what is familiarly and not creditably known as 'Jesuitism.'"

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

CAMPBELLISM—AN ELEGANT AND COSTLY FABRIC SUDDENLY DEMOLISHED.

The following is from a Campbellite Tract, entitled "The Conversion of the Ethiopian Eunuch." The author evidently records the case as "a poser:"

"He had never been taught to make a profession of doubts and hesitations; and it was in the fervor, and honesty, and simplicity of his heart that, upon the first sight of the water, he cried out, 'See water, what doth hinder me to be baptized?' This is a literal translation.

"We have now arrived at a most interesting crisis in the history of this son of Ethiopia. He has propounded an honest and soul-thrilling interrogatory to his inspired teacher. What shall he hear in reply? Shall it be either of these? If thou hast been convicted, thou mayest; If thou hast been penitent for months, thou mayest; If thou hast sometimes believed and sometimes doubted, thou mayest; If thou hast sometimes hoped often feared, thou mayest; If thou hast dreamed a dream or seen a vision, thou mayest; If thou hast heard a voice or seen a light, thou mayest; If thou hast obtained a hope, thou mayest; If thou hast as good an experience as Philip has, thou mayest; If thou hast been to the anxious seat, thou mayest; If thou hast told thy experience before the church, thou mayest; If thou hast had thy baptism voted for by all the Church, senior and minor, thou mayest; If thou hast had thy sins pardoned, thou mayest; If thou hast received the Holy Ghost, thou mayest; If thou hast not been christened in infancy, thou mayest—etc. etc. No; none of these! None! No, gentle reader, these answers have all been 'gotten up.' They are none of them in the Christian's Guide Book. And were I would not deceive you by verbinge. I tell you that neither they nor their equivalents are there. How, then, does Philip answer the honest inquiror? 'IF THOU BELIEVEST WITH ALL THY HEART, THOU MAYEST.' And that there was no peculiar interest attached to these words, is obvious from the reply of the Eunuch: 'I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God.'"

Now, it really seems a pity to dash such an evident gush of joy with disappointment; but the case and the argument is manifestly a chosen and favorite one with the author. But loyalty to truth requires that we take the prop from under his system, and leave it to "get up" another. If he don't find it in the "Christian's Guide Book," Mr. Campbell may be able to aid him. We then proceed to inform the writer that the text on which he relies so confidently is spurious, having been foisted into the Word of God by some ancient Campbellite. Hear the authorities:

It "is not found in many of the best MSS. and most of the Ancient Versions, including the Peshito Syriac. * * It is therefore rejected or rejected by Grotius, Mill, Wetstein, Pearce, Matthews, Newcombe, Griesbach, Tittman, Knapp, Kuinoel, Gratz," etc. Bishop Bloomfield.

*This verse is omitted by A B C G, seven others of the first authority. Erpen's edition of the Arabic, the Syriac, the Coptic, Sahidic, Ethiopic, etc.—almost all the critics are against it as spurious." [Dr. A. Clark.

"It has been, therefore, rightly thrown out by Griesbach and Matthew." [Kuinoel.

"If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest, is now allowed on all hands to be an interpolation." [N. Y. Review.

Thus the basis of a fine argument and nice theory slides away from beneath them when the Word of God leaves all such theories lost.

J. H.

August 3.

PARENT TRACT SOCIETY.

In pursuance of the report adopted by the late General Conference, providing for the organization of a Tract Society in the city of Nashville, a meeting was held at the McKendree Church, on the 16th July, 1854, when Rev. M. Henkle, D. D., was called to the chair, and G. W. Petway appointed Secretary.

After some remarks explanatory of the object of the meeting by the chair, and by Dr. Ferrin, the Constitution was read by the Secretary.

On motion, a committee was appointed to wait upon the audience, when the following names were returned:

LIST OF MEMBERS.

The meeting then proceeded to the election of officers for the current year, when the following were chosen:

Rev. E. Wadsworth, Vice President; G. W. Petwny, Recording Secretary; Rev. E. Stevenson, Treasurer.

DIRECTORS.—Rev. A. L. P. Green, Hardin Bostick, Hardy W. Brien, Rev. John Morris, Godfrey S. Nawsom, Rev. C. D. Elliott, Rev. Paul, James A. McAllister, D. Robertson.

On motion, the Secretary was requested to prepare for publication, in the Nashville Christian Advocate, the proceedings of this meeting.

The meeting then adjourned.

G. W. PETWAY, Rec. Sec'y.

It will be remembered that by a provision in the Constitution, the senior Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is the President, and the other Bishops, Vice Presidents of the Society, and the General Book Editor, Rev. T. O. Summers, D. D., is the Corresponding Secretary. [Nashville Advocate.

List of Remittances

Received at the Office of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, from July 29th to August 10th, inclusive.

A—A. Avery, $1.
B—E. Bissell, $3; T. Burpo, $5; Mrs. A. Batley, $1 50; J. Bryson, $1 50, J. W. Burruss, $1 50; J. Barker, $10.
C—S. H. Cox, $15; D. Carmichael $3; D. C. B. Connorly, $8.
D—Mrs. E. Dodson, $1 50.
F—E. W. Flinn, $1 50; L. Freeman, $2.
G—G. Goodwin, $1 50; H. L. Green, $1 50; A. D. Gaskell, $5 50.
H—A. Hawthorn, $3; W. P. Harrison, $7; L. M. Hall, $1 50; J. A. Heard, $12.
N—E. T. Nahora, $3.
P—E. Phillips, $2.
R—J. B. Robinson, $1 50; R. R. Richardson, $3; R. Randle, $5.
S—G. W. Stewart, 50c; J. M. Sherrouse, $3; Mrs. C. A. Stocker, $1 50.
T—G. W. Tucker, $20.
W—B. J. Woodward, $15; F. Walker, $5.

OBITUARY:

It is with deep regret that I announce, through the columns of your paper, the melancholy fact that JAS. COWSER, of Hollivar county, Miss., is no more. Mr. Cowser died at his own residence, on his plantation, a few days since, of Consumption, which disease had wasted his physical strength for months before it terminated his life.

There are some points in his history worthy of notice. Mr. Cowser's only inheritance was a clear, sound mind and correct principles. His untiring perseverance and admirable frugality soon changed the boy of poverty to the man of wealth. As is too often the case with active business men, Mr. Cowser had, in the early part of his life, but little time to devote to his spiritual interests, and these great interests were comparatively neglected by him, till his health gave way. He was my nearest neighbor, and I was with him at different times during his attack, and did not fail to urge upon his consideration the necessity of a change of heart—of justification by faith in Jesus Christ.

My last interview with him, about the 1st of June, was full of comfort to all who witnessed it. His mind was as clear and composed as at any former period of his life during this conversation. I was delighted to hear from his own lips that he was a changed man—a new creature. The history, as he gave it, of his repentance, as well as the evidences and illustrations of his conversion, were striking and satisfactory. In order to see his sins in a proper light, his method was to go back to the beginning of life, and contemplate separately, the sins of each year, until the whole sins of a whole life had been aggregated to one fearful account, and forgiveness sought and pardon found for all. He illustrated his sense of forgiven sins by telling the writer of this notice, he was once a passenger on board of a steamer on the Mississippi river, when some fine gold watches and other valuables were stolen. A general search was instituted, to which all were subjected, both in baggage and person, in which search he and his were included. "I know now that my sins are all forgiven just as well as I knew then that I did not have the watches." ("There is therefore now no condemnation to them who are in Christ Jesus.")

Thus this newly converted man bears his dying testimony to the great fact of our glorious Christianity, that a genuinely converted sinner knows he is converted—realizes his acceptance with God, and forgiveness of sin by Him, just as fully and satisfactorily as he knows he lives and is conscious he is not a rogue when innocent. ("He that is born of God hath the witness in himself.")

Mr. Cowser, in this delightful state of mind, could and did talk of all the circumstances prospectively connected with his funeral as calmly as he ever did of the rising or setting sun.

E. R. PORTER.

Ocean Springs, August 6.

Departed this life, on Friday morning, 21st July, Mrs. AMANDA TAYLOR, aged 18 years, wife of Ozias Taylor, of Marshall.

Mrs. Taylor was sorely afflicted for about eight days previous to her dissolution, but she bore her sickness with patience. A friend asked her if she had ever professed religion, to which she answered she had not. This question seemed to awaken her mind to a sense of her danger. She earnestly requested that prayer should be made for her. She joined very fervently in the devotion; her constant prayer was—"Merciful Father, pardon my sins." I never saw any one more penitent. She was exhorted to cast her soul on the Lord, and to believe in Jesus Christ for pardon; which no doubt she did. She on Thursday evening desired to receive the ordinance of Baptism, which was administered to her. She requested her favorite song—"Sweet Home,"—in the singing of which she joined, and sang loud and melodiously. After this she rested calmly, and then fell asleep in Jesus.

She has left an affectionate husband and infant son, besides dear parents and many weeping friends; but whilst the mourners are going about the streets, no doubt her sainted spirit rests in heaven.

Now gone to the grave is she whom we loved,
And lifeless that form that so womanly moved;
The cleds of the valley encompass her head,
The marble reminds us a sister is dead.
But marble and urns they never can tell
The place where the soul is destined to dwell;
Ye spirits of air who surrounded her bed,
O, speak ye and tell where the spirit has fled.
No voice from the grave, no voice from the sky,
Discloses the deeds that are doing on high;
It need not, Jehovah hath said in his word,
That "Blessed are they that die in the Lord."

Notices.

Methodism in Alabama.

The undersigned is anxious to present, in his forthcoming "Historical Sketches and Statistics of Alabama," a SATISFACTORY HISTORY OF EACH DENOMINATION OF CHRISTIANS IN ALABAMA. With the view of eliciting full, explicit and accurate information, he has sent out a large number of appropriate circulars to members of each denomination. He would also take this method of soliciting items in order to render the portion of the work alluded to as full and truthful as possible. Any thing of interest or importance connected with the introduction of Methodism into any county, its early struggles, hardships, and success, sketches of the early pioneers, present position, statistics, etc., will be most thankfully received. The undersigned trusts that the Methodists of Alabama will feel sufficient interest in his enterprise, and Church pride, too, to aid him very generally, so as to insure a complete history of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Alabama,

Address N. P. BLUE,
"Advertiser Building," Montgomery, Ala.

Camp-Meetings.

There will be a Camp-meeting held at Liberty Chapel, commencing on Thursday before the third Sabbath in September next.

Also, one at Bethel camp-ground, on Thursday before the second Sabbath in October next. To both of which our ministerial brethren are cordially invited. Come brethren—come sinners—come every body.

D. M. WIGGINS, P. E.
B. J. WOODWARD, P. C.

Attala Ct., Sharon Dist.,
July 20, 1854.

General Intelligence.

The Chancery Case Again.

When, on the 15th ult., for the benefit of our several thousand readers in Mississippi, we gave what was reputed to be a correct and "important judicial decision," touching a charge of fraudulent bankruptcy, we forgot the lesson learned from "Bleak House," that Chancery was half like eternity—had a beginning but no end. Letting out ink on it, is "as the letting out of water." We shall steer clear of Chancery after this.

Wishing to do impartial justice, last week we published a counter-statement, or rather an explanatory one, for Defendants Monday morning Plaintiff waited on us by polite Counsel, with audi alteram partem. Of course, as we are fairly into Chancery, and they claim it as an act of justice, they must be allowed a hearing. We hope now, both parties feel that they have been justly dealt by; and most of all, we hope our readers feel interested and profited. Meantime, as there is no legitimate end to Chancery, we shall make a side-door exit, by entering here a nolle prosequi. [ED.

To the Editor of the Christian Advocate:

DEAR SIR—My attention has been called to a short extract (in your paper of the 3d inst.) from a letter of Judge Sharkey's in relation to the case of James L. Calcote vs. Frederick Stanton and Henry S. Buckner, in which, among other things, he says: "It was decided that they (the Defendants) were bound to answer, and this was all that was decided." And immediately following the said extract in your paper, I find a communication to you, and signed John M. Chilton, in which he says: "I have read Judge Sharkey's letter, and I have to-day also read the opinion of Chancellor Glenn. I have no hesitation in saying that Judge Sharkey is perfectly correct in his views."

Now, as there is a great deal more decided than any one would suppose from the article in your paper, with the extract as given from Judge Sharkey's letter, and the manner in which it is endorsed by Mr. Chilton, we beg leave to refer you to a copy of the opinion of the Chancellor accompanying this communication, from which you will see that the following are the points which were decided by the Chancellor against the Defendants:

1. That the assignments by Oakey and Montgomery and Lloyd to Calcote, the complainant, were valid.

2. That the claims assigned as aforesaid by Oakey to Calcote, were valid claims against the Defendants.

3. That the Chancery Court had jurisdiction of the matters and things as set forth in complainant's bill.

4. That Calcote, as assignee, could impeach the discharge of Defendants for fraud as charged in the bill, notwithstanding his assignees had proved their claims and taken pro-rata dividends in bankruptcy.

5. That the statute of limitations in equity, only commences to run in cases of fraud from the discovery of the same, and that Defendants could not plead the statute, as complainant charged all the frauds specified in the bill to have been discovered within the last eighteen months.

Such are the points, as you will see, from the opinion of the Chancellor, which were decided in said case instead of being merely required to answer the bill as stated by Judge Sharkey's letter, from which your extract purports to be taken, and endorsed as above by Mr. Chilton, who, it seems, wrote purely at your request, as stated in his letter.

Now, Mr. Editor, as a matter of impartial justice, I have to request you to give this communication a place in your paper, as you cannot fail to see from the opinion of the Chancellor, that the foregoing statements are absolutely true, and, when affirmed by the High Court of Errors and Appeals, will be conclusive on the parties, as far as the merits of the case is concerned.

With respect I remain yours, etc.,
L. MADISON DAY.

Great Conflagration.

LOSS ESTIMATED AT ONE MILLION.

On Saturday last occured the most appalling and destructive conflagrations that our city has experienced for a long time. It commenced at about 11 o'clock in the third story of house No. 91 Tchoupitoulas street, near Lafayette street. The basement of this building was occupied by W. S. Wright & Co., and the third story by E. J. Hart & Co., as a store-room for liquors. The origin of the fire was purely accidental, a bottle of brandy having been broken in the work of corking and sealing; and its contents ignited by the candle used to melt the wax; but however slight the cause, the inflammable nature of the stores in the building rendered it impossible to extinguish the flames after they had fairly obtained a hold. The adjoining building, belonging also to E. J. Hart & Co., was next seized by the increasing flames, and the few engines which had by this time arrived, finding it extremely difficult to obtain a supply of water, it became evident that the result would prove disastrous in the extreme.

The extensive warehouse of Converse & Co., on the corner of Tchoupitoulas and Lafayette streets, became the next victim. The energy with which the fire raged at this point was amazing. The wind arose suddenly, and shifting from point to point enveloped the scene of ruin in impenetrable clouds of dust and smoke, through which flushed the broad sheets of flame, withering and setting in an immediate blaze every thing of a combustible nature round about. At this critical juncture the firemen, although willing and anxious to fight the destroyer, were obliged to remain comparatively idle and behold some of the most extensive and valuable commercial establishments in the city perishing in his grasp. The water had almost entirely failed; the plugs were dry. A loft in a building fronting on Foucher street gave way, and a great number of casks and barrels containing oil and perhaps liquors, were bursted by the fall; their contents poured out in torrents upon the pavement, and at once the narrow street and the gutters presented a mass of hissing, unapproachable flame. Large quantities of oil were distributed in this manner in several other places, and its traces may yet be seen two or three squares away from the scene of the fire, where it had been carried by the currents of the gutters. Reduced to the extremity of applying suction pipes to the gutters, the engines no doubt performed the unprofitable labor of casting much of this inflammable material back into the flames.

Steadily and rapidly the fire advanced along Lafayette street, crossed Foucher, and finally reached Magazine, enveloping and reducing to ruins in its terrible progress the extensive stores with their valuable contents belonging to the firms of J. W. Stanton & Co., Martin, Owen & Cobb, Shultz, Hadden & Latting, J. O. Woodruff & Co., Graham & Buckingham, Parmele & Bros., and No. 102, used as a warehouse by Shultz, Hadden & Latting.

In the opposite direction, towards the river, the buildings were all destroyed on either side of Lafayette street to Commerce, including the establishments of R. W. Millbank & Co., A. Thompson & Co., J. M. Savage & Co., Webster & Co. and Walker & Co. The wine store of Maillot & Sons, and Hanna's produce store, narrowly escaped destruction. The track of the conflagration was on each side of Lafayette street from Magazine to Commerce, a distance of three squares, and in one of the most valuable and business portions of the city. We shall not further trace its progress step by step, as we give below the names of the owners of the property destroyed. Energetic measures were taken as soon as possible to procure a sufficient supply of water, and then the firemen soon checked the progress of the flames, although their excessive heat combined with that of a meridian sun had greatly thinned the brakes and almost completely exhausted the strongest men.

The loss of property has been very great, and will, probably, not fall much if any short of a million, and, so far as we can learn, it is altogether covered by insurance. The following is a full list of the owners:

Converse & Co., corner of Lafayette and Tchoupitoulas streets
W. H. Cook, N. E. corner of Lafayette and Tchoupitoulas streets.
R. W. Millbank & Co., S. E. corner of Lafayette and Tchoupitoulas streets.
A. Thompson, same stores as R. W. Millbank & Co.
J. M. Savage & Co., S. W. corner of Lafayette and Tchoupitoulas streets.
J. W. Ross & Co., N. E. corner of Lafayette and Foucher streets.
J. W. Stanton & Co., corner of Lafayette and Magazine streets.
N. Overton & Co., corner of Lafayette and Commerce streets.
Frank & Daniel, 93 Tchoupitoulas street.
W. S. Wright & Co., 91 do do
E. J. Hart & Co., 79 do do
Kopp, Bard & Co., 77 do do
Goulon & Foster, 92 do do
John Hurley & Co. 90 do do
E. M. Duley & Co., 86 do do
Haines & Co., 88 do do
Charles Hanna, 98 do do
Shultz, Hadden & Latting, 110 Magazine street.
Graham & Buckingham, 106 do do
Carmicle & Bra., 104 do do
Jno. P. Woodruff & Co., 108 do do
Martin, Owen & Cobb, 112 do do
A. W. Walker, 118 do do
Webster & Co., 116 do do
Forman, Latting & Co., 102 do do
Stanton & Co., (ice-house,) 31 Commerce do
Kerr & Pomey, 11 Lafayette street.

As most of the insurance companies have open policies covering all merchandise in stores and warehouses, the exact amount of the insurance cannot be ascertained until all claims are presented.

The weight of this disaster will, of course, fall upon the insurance companies, but we believe it will not be sufficient to endanger any of them. The following is a list of the liabilities entailed upon them, which, with a few trifling alterations, we cut from yesterday's papers. It is nearly correct:

Merchants' Insurance Company, all on buildings	$45,000
Granite Insurance Co., C. C. Lathrop, agent	5,000
Hudson River Insurance Co., C. C. Lathrop, agent	5,000
Provincial, Toronto, C. W.	17,000
Louisiana Mutual Insurance Company	20,000
Delaware Mutual Safety Insurance Company	15,000
Tennessee Marine and Fire Insurance Company reported	10,000
Home Mutual Insurance Company have open policies covering $100,000, but the loss cannot be over $75,000	75,000
Sun Mutual Insurance Company, about	100,000
Crescent Insurance Company will not make a loss of over $200,000, possibly may be reduced to $175,000	200,000
Foreign offices, supposed to be	100,000
Total	$592,500

In addition to the above there are several risks in Northern offices, on stocks of merchandise; also insurances are made on forwarding goods and goods on storage, nearly all of which are also in Nothern offices. The house of Forman, Latting & Co. had the roof burnt off, but the contents were saved, partly damaged. C. Hanna's store was not burnt, but the contents were greatly damaged by water.

The heaviest losers, (if they can be called losers by an operation from which they derive benefit) we believe to be, Parmele & Bros., who are put down for not less than $85,000, entirely covered by insurance in eight different offices.

While we regard this fire as a very great calamity, we have reason to be thankful that it was not attended with a greater number of serious accidents and loss of life. That far we believe only one man has lost his life—Wm. Donnell, warehouseman of Dyas & Co., who fell through the third story hatchway of the building, and received mortal injuries. Mr. John Prados, clerk of J. M. Savage, Mr. Joshua Converse and a negro boy, were all seriously injured by a fall of brick from the walls of the store of Mr. Savage. The two former, it is thought, cannot survive. With the exception of a few cases of sun-stroke, none of which terminated fatally, these were the only accidents of note which occurred.

We are always happy to be able to bear witness to the excellence and efficiency of our fire department generally. On the present occasion no doubt every thing was done that men could do, and when the means indispensable to success were ultimately placed in their hands, their efficiency was demonstrated at once. With their usual readiness and resolution, they endured fatigue firmly and met danger fearlessly, showing throughout the trying scenes of the day that good conduct and attention to duty which have hitherto distinguished the firemen of New Orleans and placed them above those of many other cities.

We regret to record a single exception to this general good behavior, and we believe it was the only one. During the height of the conflagration, several members of company 6, the strongest in numbers of any in the city, attacked a man belonging to company —, and beat him a most brutal and shocking manner, knocking him down with brickbats and kicking and stamping him with murderous ferocity. This we understood afterwards resulted in a general fight between the two companies. Such an occurrence is much to be regretted. It is a bad precedent, and seems entirely inconsistent with the good character our firemen have always borne, that, at a moment when destruction threatens to oversweep a large portion of the city, all the strength of every arm is needed to avert the danger, they should desert the post of duty and engage in petty brawls, having their origin perhaps in nothing better than prejudices of creed or race. We earnestly hope that such scenes will not, be often repeated in New Orleans.

That the great extent of this conflagration is mainly attributable to the extraordinary deficiency in the supply of water there can be no doubt. The Superintendent of Water Works informs us that from an early hour of the day the fire-plugs in a large portion of the First District were open, and that in consequence the locality of the fire was deprived of the necessary quantity. Not long ago an ordinance was passed expressly declaring that whenever an alarm of fire shall occur the scavengers or street cleaners shall close all fire-plugs; but it seems they seldom pay any attention to this, and in the present case had disregarded it altogether. There will be, the Superintendent trusts, an ample supply whenever this regulation is observed. On this occasion, while the flames were spreading more rapidly and fiercely in every direction, it was found necessary to dispatch men on horseback to close the plugs, and then await the tardy process of accumulation.

We believe that under the circumstances no blame can attach to the Water Works Company, but we think that steps should be taken to prevent the possibility of a recurrence of an affair like this. The city should, if possible, obtain absolute control of the Water Works and expend the money necessary to insure our citizens against such sweeping destruction of property. With the Mississippi on one hand and its waters flowing through our streets to immense marshes on the others, it is rather hard if we can't get water enough to extinguish our fires!

[Crescent.

Fatal Affray in New York.

On the morning of the 2d inst. an affray occurred in the St. Nicholas Hotel, New York, between Dr. R. M. Graham, of this city, and Col. Chas. Loring, of California, which resulted in the death of the latter. From the New York Courier and Enquirer we cut the following statement of the unfortunate affair, it appearing to us the most impartial of any published in the New York papers:

A fatal and very lamentable affray occurred yesterday morning at the St. Nicholas Hotel, in which Col. Charles Loring of California, was killed by Dr. R. M. Graham, of New Orleans. Both were putting up at the hotel with their families, and yesterday morning, about 3 o'clock, Dr. Graham, who had been out drinking most of the previous night, came home almost crazy from the effects of liquor. He became quite disorderly by constantly ringing the bells of the hall near his apartments, and calling loudly for the servants, to the great annoyance of some of the boarders in that section of the house. Col. Loring came out of his room, which was nearly adjoining Dr. Graham's room and requested that he would desist making such a noise, as it annoyed Mrs. Loring, who was at the time unwell. Col. L. went back into his room, but soon had to emerge from it again, and request Graham to stop the noise. The latter swore he would not, or something to that effect, and threats were made on both sides.

About a quarter of an hour afterwards Col. Loring got up from his bed, apparently determined to quiet Dr. Graham in some way. His wife urged him to compose his mind and not notice the disorderly character, but he pulled on his pants and went into the hall half dressed. The bell stopped ringing, but Mrs. Loring being anxious about her husband's safety, went into the hall. She could not find him, and every one of whom she inquired regarding him, were silent. Her anxiety increased, and on reaching the remote end of the hall, she, to her horror, discovered her husband lying dead upon the floor in his own blood. The scene which followed was truly pitiful, and for some time the greatest consternation prevailed throughout the hotel. Two of the waiters [illegible] the affray which resulted in Loring's death [illegible] disputed in the hall, while moving towards one end of it. The dispute of course was about Dr. Graham making a noise and annoying him and his wife. In the course of this dispute Graham called Loring a liar—Loring in return slapped Graham in the face, when the latter, who had a sword-cane in his hand, made a blow. Loring took hold of the cane, and in an instant Dr. Graham drew the sword from the stick, and stabbed his antagonist through the body. The weapon entered the small part of the back, and passing through the left globe of the lung came in contact with the bones of the breast, and bent nearly double. Loring dropped upon the floor and died in about two minutes afterwards. The only words he uttered were, "I am stabbed—I am killed!"

Graham did not attempt to touch his victim after he had given the fatal blow, but threw his sword into the pantry and walked up and down the floor, apparently very much agitated. He was immediately taken into custody by the Eighth Ward Police, and held to await the action of the Coroner. About 10 o'clock Coroner O'Donnell proceeded to the hotel, and instituted an investigation, when the above facts were elicited. The jury, after a brief deliberation, rendered the following verdict: "That Charles Loring came to his death by a wound inflicted on his person by means of a sword cane in the hands of Robert M. Graham."

On the rendition of this verdict the Coroner committed Graham to the Tombs, to await an examination.

The prisoner belongs to New Orleans, and is about forty years of age. He evinced much grief yesterday during the inquest. Col. Loring was late of Benecia, California, where he had been acting in the capacity of Receiver of Public Moneys. This sad affair created much unpleasant excitement about the St. Nicholas yesterday, and seemed to cast a painful gloom over the boarders.

The testimony of Mrs. Loring, wife of deceased, and that of a servant in the hotel, and of one or two other persons, taken before the Coroner's jury, establishes the correctness of this statement.

RAIN AND RUINS.—We are reminded by the odors to-day blowing through our office that the remains of the great fire on Tchoupitoulas and Magazine streets have not yet stopped burning, but continue to send up clouds of smoke to the displeasure of all around. Nearly every thing unconsumed has been taken away, but the oil and grease which cannot be collected, boxed, bottled up or barrelled, afford a pabulum for the fire sufficient to keep it smouldering. One good, hearty rain would probably put a termination to the whole thing, and leave us not only clean gutters but a decidedly clearer atmosphere. Our days have been hot enough for some weeks past; a slight change would be far from disagreeable.

"BILL NEBRASKA."—The first white male child born in Nebraska since the passage of the organization bill was born at Dr. Clark's Hospital, Nebraska Centre, in June, and was christened Bill Nebraska Kinney. His father, the Hon. J. F. Kinney, Chief Justice of Utah, has taken the lead in sustaining the "Douglas bill" in a very forcible manner.

RESISTING THE CHURCH.—A blacksmith in New York named Callagan, whose wife was sick, knocked down on the 2d inst. an Irish Catholic priest, who insisted upon visiting and confessing her. A crowd of Catholics, men and women, afterwards caught Callagan and beat him severely. A number of arrests were made.

EN ROUTE.—It is stated on the authority of the Univers that M. Abbe Lucien Bonaparte received the tonsure at Rome, on Trinity Eve, from the hands of Cardinal Franzoni, Prefect of the Propaganda. This is the Bonaparte who is said to be en route to the Papal throne.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE IN JERSEY.—We learn from the New York Tribune that one of the most destructive fires ever known in Jersey City occurred on the 30th ult., destroying property variously estimated from $200,000 to $400,000. The fire broke out about 8 o'clock, in Henderson & Wilson's store yard, near John Klinck's trunk factory on Washington street, between Steuben and Wayne streets. The fire department were soon at work, but the fire spread with great rapidity, and was not got under until two entire blocks, and the half of another, bounded by Washington, Wayne, Steuben and Greene streets, were destroyed.

DEATH OF THE SCOTCH GIANT.—We learn from the Laporte Whig, of the 19th ult., that the well-known Scotch Giant, who has traveled through the country for some years, for the purpose of exhibitions, died at that place the day previous. He had stopped at the Teegarden House with his wife, somewhat overcome with the heat and dust. During the evening he asked for some water and immediately fell dead upon the floor. His remains were taken to his residence in Wisconsin.

FALL OF A GAS HOUSE AND LOSS OF LIFE.—On the afternoon of the 29th ult. the building of the Manhattan Gas Works at the foot of Fourteenth street fell to the ground, killing four persons and severely wounding ten others.

THE EXPULSION OF AMERICAN CITIZENS FROM SONORA.—It is stated that Messrs. Louis Hulseman and Wm. W. Snelling, who were among the number of American citizens lately expelled so unceremoniously from Sonora by the Mexican authorities, are now on their way to Washington to urge in the proper quarter their claims to indemnity for the losses they have sustained. It is alleged they were engaged in mining operations, working their own mines in Sonora, and were expelled without any charge being preferred against them.

LAUNCH OF THE CONSTELLATION.—On the 25th instant this magnificent sloop-of-war will be launched at the Gosport (Va.) Navy Yard. The Portsmouth Globe says:

She presents to the eye a structure of strength and capacity scarcely equaled in our navy, in any vessel below a first-class frigate. Her tonnage is 1400 tons. On her gun deck she has twenty-four ports, but will only mount twenty guns, sixteen of 68-pounders and four long 32-pounders. On her spar deck, forward and aft, she will mount two 10-inch shell guns on pivots, carrying a ball weighing 120 pounds. Her spars will be about the same as a second-class frigate, her main yard being ninety feet in length. She takes her name from the old frigate Constellation, and has some of her timbers.

AID FOR BATCHELDER'S FAMILY.—The United States Senate, a few days since, passed a bill appropriating $3000 to be held in trust for the widow and children of Batchelder, the public officer who was killed in the recent Boston riots, while assisting the United States Marshal to execute a law of the United States under which was claimed the return of a fugitive slave.

TELEGRAPHIC.

NEW YORK, August 5, 9 P. M.—The Collins steamer Atlantic arrived here at 8 o'clock this evening, bringing dates from Liverpool to the 26th July, four days later than the accounts brought by the Canada. The following summary embraces the most important items of her news.

Liverpool Markets.

LIVERPOOL, July 25.—There has been an active demand for Cotton in this market since the departure of the Canada, and the sales of the three business days embrace 33,000 bales, taken mostly by the trade, and including only 2,000 bales for speculation and 4,000 for export. Prices have been steady and closed without any alteration of any moment. Messrs Milligan, Evans & Co quote as follows: Fair Orleans, 6¾d., Middling Orleans, 5¾d.; Fair Uplands, 6¼d., and Middling Uplands, 5¼d. per pound. The market for Breadstuffs has continued very heavy, and prices for most descriptions are still lower. Flour closes at 30s. for Western Canal and 31s. per bbl. for Ohio. Corn has declined 6d to 1s per quarter, and is quoted 31s. for Yellow and 31s. 6d. per quarter for White.

The Money Market.

The Money market at London has been easy, and Consols have advanced to 92¾. At the Paris Bourse the French 4½ per cent. closed at 98, and the 3 per cent. at 79f. 50c.

Steamer Europa.

The Cunard steamer Europa arrived at Liverpool on Sunday, the 23d of July.

General News.

SPANISH REVOLUTION.—The insurrection in Spain has resulted in the complete triumph of the revolutionists, and Espartero has been called to form a new Government. Old Queen Christina and her minions have taken flight, and her palace has been demolished by the people.

AFFAIRS IN THE EAST.—The Atlantic brings but little news of importance from the East. The parties are awaiting the action of Austria and Prussia, upon which nearly every thing now depends. Prussia is more than ever holding aloof from the Western Powers, and favors Russia.

ANOTHER BATTLE ON THE DANUBE.—Another battle has been fought near Giurgevo, the exact result of which is not known. The Turks, however, claim the victory.

The Allied Army.

The Anglo-French army has not yet engaged the enemy.

The Russian Force.

An army of two hundred thousand men has been ordered by the Emperor of Russia to maintain possession of the Principalities.

Sweden and the Allies.

The Allied Powers have determined to take possession of Aland Island as security for Sweden joining their alliance.

CONGRESS.—In the Senate on the 1st inst., Mr. Houston defended his military character from the charges made against him in Green's history of Texas. The River and Harbor Bill was passed. A motion to strike out the Virginia and Florida appropriations was rejected.

In the House the Diplomatic Appropriation bill was under discussion. They rejected the increase to the salaries of the Supreme Judges. Both Houses were in session till sundown.

A NEW SPECIES OF COUNTERFEIT COIN.—Dye's Bank Mirror says a large amount of counterfeit ten cent pieces are being circulated in New York and Boston of the most dangerous kind ever invented. They have a goddess and liberty-pole, cap, stars and date on one side, and United States of America, wreath and "One Dime" on the other, and appear to be manufactured out of type metal, and are galvanized over. They have the exact weight, size, thickness and appearance of the genuine, but break as easy as type.

The Richmond (Va.) Despatch thus ridicules the late English stories concerning the movements—advance and withdrawals—of their redoubtable Baltic squadron. Thus far, having been at sea nearly four months, it has only succeeded in capturing two little provincial towns in Finland, and being driven disgracefully away from a third. It has captured some dozen of Russian salt scows, and sent them to London as "prizes"! It has sailed, and steamed and sent letters home from every port in the Baltic. But it has effected precisely—nothing! In a short time cold weather and ice will send it home, with all its laurels about it. The "hedgehog" has too many quills, even for "Charley Napier".

"The British fleet, it seems, after approaching Cronstadt near enough to exchange shots, has withdrawn. It performed a similar operation at Svenborg; also, at Helsingfors. The allied fleet in the Black Sea executed a similar manœuver at Sebastopol. The fleet approached that stronghold; and, after firing a shot or two, was withdrawn. 'Well,' withdraw' is a genteel word. But, in case a Russian fleet had approached a British fortification, and sailed off again, would the British press have called that withdrawing? When one man approaches another with his fist clenched, and every demonstration of knocking him down, but, finding his antagonist ready to receive him, wheels about and marches off as quick as his legs can carry him—is that withdrawing? Whatever it is, it is precisely what the allied squadron has just performed, for the third time, in the Baltic."

The Indian treaties confirmed on the 11th ult. cover nearly the whole of the contemplated State of Kansas, and comprise about 20,000,000 of acres. The price paid is roughly estimated at twenty cents per acre; but, as other lands are assigned to the Indians for residence, the actual value received by them is more. They will not, as heretofore, receive very large sums in hand, but portions of the consideration will consist of goods, stock, farming materials, etc.

SINGULAR DISCLOSURES.—A Surgeon in the United States Army recently desired to know the most common cause of enlistments. By permission of the Captain of a company containing fifty-five, the writer in a pledge never to disclose the name of any officer or private, except as a physical or metaphysical fact, the true history was obtained of every man. On investigation, it appeared that nine-tenths enlisted on account of some female difficulty; thirteen of them had changed their names, and forty-three were either drunk or partially so, at the time of their enlistment. Most of them were men of fine talents and learning, and about one-third had once been in elevated situations in life; four had been lawyers, three doctors, and two ministers.

THE GRAPE CROP.—The Cincinnati papers say that the grape harvest, which is an important one in that vicinity, will not be so good as in former years, the Catawbas, in many places, being badly mildewed. Some of the cultivators near that city obtain a thousand gallons of wine on an acre of land.

A Crystal Palace is to be built at Naples. The King has approved the plan, and pointed out the Ville Reale, close to the sea, as the site. The intention is to devote the building to works of arts and science, and thus to form a permanent depot for exposing the industry of the country.

THE MISSING LADY FOUND.—Miss Martha Parks, who recently disappeared so mysteriously from her home in Charlotte, N. C., has been found and restored to her family. She was discovered about half a mile from the town in a cane-brake, where she had been for eleven days with scarcely any food or water. She was completely deranged, and stated that she went away for the purpose of starving herself to death, and that she had eaten nothing but a few blackberries which she gathered on the morning that she left home.

Advices from Turks Island to July 3, state that in consequence of continuous heavy rains at all the salt islands, the crops of salt have been mostly destroyed, there not being a cargo either at Grand Turk, Salt Cay or Fortune Island. Last year salt was selling at the islands at from ten to thirteen cents per bushel. What little there is on the different islands is now held at 25 cents per bushel, and should the wet season continue, there will be some raked for some months.

FEMALE SAILOR.—In Boston, a few days ago, a policeman arrested a young sailor, under what is called by the reporters, "suspicious circumstances." On taking him to the station house, it was discovered that the supposed sailor, who gave the name of Frank Leslie, was in fact a female. She was dressed in dark pantaloons, dark vest, linen coat, glazed cap, red neckerchief, and blue sailor shirt. She stated that she was seventeen years of age, English by birth, and had been to sea for the last seven years, without her sex being suspected. At present she is acting as steward of a vessel. She is of dark complexion, and of rather small stature. The smallness of her feet, and the tone of her voice one lead one who had the least suspicion, to suspect that she was a female. She declined to give her reasons for donning the apparel of a man, saying that it was a long story. She was set at liberty.

A letter from Bordeaux, France, dated June 25, 1854, says:

We had a visit yesterday from the widow of Aaron Burr. Her business here is the marriage of a niece to a gentleman of this place; named Perry. She gives $100,000 as a marriage gift; and Mr. Perry, the father of the young man gives the same amount. Mr. Bowen, the United States Consul, has been requested to be the trustee of the money. Mrs. Burr is the American lady who created such a sensation at the balls in Paris last winter.

NIAGARA SUSPENSION BRIDGE.—The Lockport Democrat, in speaking of the new carriage-way of the Suspension Bridge, crossing the Niagara River, says:

"It has a solidity; there is the absence of any swaying or undulation, which we supposed impossible to secure in bridges built on the suspension plan. Standing in the center of it we could not perceive the slightest motion when carriages were crossing. If in the locomotive track a proportionate stiffness and solidity is secured,

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

The White-footed Deer.... By Bryant.

It was a hundred years ago,
When by the woodland ways,
The traveler saw the wild deer drink,
Or crop the birchen sprays.

Beneath a hill, whose rocky side
O'ertrowed a grassy mead,
And fenced a cottage from the wind,
A deer was wont to feed.

She only came when on the cliffs
The evening moonlight lay,
And no man knew the secred haunts
In which she walked by day.

White were her feet, her forehead showed
A spot of silvery white,
That seemed to glimmer like a star
In Autumn's hazy sight.

And here, when sang the whip-poor-will,
She cropped the sprouting leaves,
And here her rustling steps were heard
On still October eves.

But when the broad midsummer moon
Rose o'er that grassy lawn,
Beside the silver-footed deer
There grazed a spotted fawn.

The cottage dame forbade her son
To aim the rifle here;
"It were a sin," she said, "to harm
Or fright that friendly deer.

"This spot has been my pleasant home
Ten peaceful years and more;
And ever when the moonlight shines,
She feeds before our door.

"The red men say that here she walked
A thousand moons ago;
They never raise the war-whoop here,
And never twang the bow.

"I love to watch her as she feeds,
And think that all is well,
While such a gentle creature haunts
The place in which we dwell."

The youth obeyed, and sought for game
In forests far away,
Where deep in silence and in moss,
The ancient woodland lay.

But came, in Autumn's golden time,
He ranged the wild in vain;
Nor roused the pheasant nor the deer,
And returned home again.

The crescent moon and crimson eve
Shone with a mingling light;
The deer, upon the grassy mead,
Was feeding full in sight.

He raised the rifle to his eye,
And from the cliffs around
A sudden echo, shrill and sharp,
Gave back its deadly sound.

Away into the neighboring wood
The startled creature flew,
And crimson drops at morning lay
Amid the glimmering dew.

Next evening shone the waxing moon
As sweetly as before;
The deer upon the grassy mead
Was seen again no more.

But ere that crescent moon was old,
By night the red man came
And burnt the cottage to the ground,
And slew the youth and dame.

Now woods have overgrown the mead,
And hid the cliffs from sight;
There shrieks the hovering hawk at noon,
And prowls the fox by night.

DESTRUCTION OF THE INQUISITION IN SPAIN.

In 1809, Col. Lehmanowsky was attached to that part of Napoleon's army which was stationed in Madrid. "While in this city," said Col. L., "I used to speak freely among the people about the priests and Jesuits, and of the Inquisition." It had been decreed by the Emperor Napoleon that the Inquisition and Monasteries should be suppressed; but the decree, like some of the laws enacted in this country, was not yet executed. Months had passed away, but the prisons of the Inquisition were still unopened. One night about 10 or 11 o'clock, as Col. L. was walking the streets of Madrid, two armed men sprang upon him from an alley, and made a furious attack. He instantly drew his sword, put himself in a position of defence, and while struggling with them, saw at a distance the lights of the patrols—French soldiers mounted, who carried lanterns, and rode through the streets of the city at all hours of the night, to preserve order. He called to them in French, and, as they hastened to his assistance, the assailants took to their heels and escaped; not, however, before he saw by their dress that they belonged to the guards of the Inquisition.

The Colonel went immediately to Marshal Soult, then Governor of Madrid, and told him what had taken place, and reminded him of the decree to suppress this institution. Marshal Soult replied that he might go and destroy it. Col. L. said him that his Regiment (the 9th of the Polish Lancers) was not sufficient for such a service, but if he would give him an additional regiment—the 117th, he would undertake the work. The 117th Regiment was under the command of Col. De Lile, who is now, like Col. L., a minister of the Gospel, and pastor of an Evangelical church, in Marseilles, France. The troops required were granted, and I proceeded (said Col. L.) to the Inquisition, which was situated about five miles from the city. It was surrounded by a wall of great strength, and defended by a company of soldiers. When we arrived at the walls, I addressed one of the sentinels, and summoned the holy fathers to surrender to the Imperial army, and open the gates of the Inquisition. The sentinel, who was standing on the wall, appeared to enter into conversation for a moment with some one within, at the close of which he presented his musket and shot one of my men. This was the signal for attack, and I ordered my troops to fire upon those who appeared upon the walls.

"It was soon obvious that it was an unequal warfare. The walls of the Inquisition were covered with the soldiers of the holy office; there was also a breast-work upon the wall, behind which they but partially exposed themselves as they discharged their muskets. Our troops were in the open plain, and exposed to a destructive fire. We had no cannon, nor could we scale the walls, and the gates successfully resisted all attempts at forcing them. I could not retire and send for cannon to break through the walls without giving them time to lay a train to blow us up. I saw that it was necessary to change the mode of attack, and directed some trees to be cut down and trimmed, to be used as battering rams. Two of these were taken up by detachments of men, as numerous as could work to advantage, and brought to bear upon the walls with all the power which they could exert, while the troops kept up a fire to protect them from the fire poured upon them from the walls. Presently the walls began to tremble, a breach was made, and the imperial troops rushed into the Inquisition. Here we met with an incident which nothing but Jesuitical effrontery is equal to. The inquisitor-general, followed by the father confessors in their priestly robes, all came out of their rooms, as we were making our way into the interior of the Inquisition, and with long faces, and their arms crossed over their breasts, their fingers resting on their shoulders, as though they had been dead to all the noise of the attack and defence, and had just learned what was going on, they addressed themselves in the language of rebuke to their own soldiers, saying, "Why do you fight our friends the French?"

"Their intention, no doubt, was to make us think that this defence was wholly unauthorized by them, hoping, if they could make us believe that they were friendly, they should have a better opportunity, in the confusion of the moment, to escape. Their artifice was too shallow, and did not succeed. I caused them to be placed under guard, and all the soldiers of the Inquisition to be secured as prisoners. We then proceeded to examine all the rooms of the stately edifice. We passed through room after room; found all perfectly in order, richly furnished, with altars and crucifixes, and wax candles in abundance, but could discover no evidences of iniquity being practised there—nothing of those peculiar features which we expected to find in an Inquisition. We found splendid paintings, and a rich and extensive library. Here was beauty and splendor, and the most perfect order on which my eyes had ever rested. The architecture—the proportions were perfect. The ceiling and floors of wood were scoured and highly polished. The marble pavements were arranged with a strict regard to order. There was everything to please the eye and gratify a cultivated taste; but where were those horrid instruments of torture of which we had been told, and where those dungeons in which human beings were said to be buried alive? We searched in vain. The holy fathers assured us that they had been belied; that we had seen all; and I was prepared to give up the search, convinced that this Inquisition was different from others of which I had heard.

"But Col. De Lile was not so ready as myself to relinquish our investigation, and said to me, 'Colonel, you are commander to-day, and as you say, so it must be; but if you will be advised by me, let this marble floor be examined. Let water be brought and ponred upon it, and we will watch and see if there is any place through which it passes more freely than others.' I replied to him, 'Do as you please, Colonel,' and ordered water to be brought accordingly. The slabs of marble were large and beautifully polished. When the water had been ponred over the floor, much to the dissatisfaction of the Inquisitors, a careful examination was made of every seam in the floor, to see if the water passed through. Presently Col. De Lile exclaimed that he had found it. By the side of one of these marble slabs the water passed through fast, as though there was an opening beneath. All hands were now at work for further discovery; the officers with their swords, and the soldiers with their bayonets, seeking to clear out the seam and pry up the slab; others with the butts of their muskets striking the slab with all their might to break it, while the priests remonstrated against our desecrating their holy and beautiful house. While thus engaged, a soldier, who was striking with the butt of his musket, struck a spring, and the marble slab flew up. Then the faces of the inquisitors grew pale as Belshazzar, when the handwriting appeared on the wall; they trembled all over. Beneath the marble slab, now partly up, there was a stair-case. I stepped to the altar, and took from the candlestick one of the candles, four feet in length, which was burning, that I might explore the room below. As I was doing this, I was arrested by one of the Inquisitors, who laid his hand gently on my arm, and, with a very demure and sanctimonious look, said, 'My son, you must not take those lights with your bloody hands, they are holy.' 'Well,' I said, 'I will take a holy thing to shed light on iniquity; I will bear the responsibility!' I took the candle, and proceeded down the stair-case. As we reached the foot of the stairs we entered a large square room, which was called the Hall of Judgment. In the centre of it was a huge block, and a chain fastened to it. On this they had been accustomed to place the accused, chained to his seat. On one side of the room was an elevated seat, called the Throne of Judgment. This the Inquisitor-General occupied, and on either side were seats less elevated, for the priestly fathers, while engaged in the solemn business of the Holy Inquisition.

"From this room we proceeded to the right, and obtained access to small cells, extending the entire length of the edifice; and here such sights were presented as we hope never to see again.

"These cells were places of solitary confinement, where the wretched objects of inquisitorial hate were confined year after year, till death released them from their sufferings, and there their bodies were suffered to remain until they were entirely decayed, and the rooms had become fit for others to occupy. To prevent this being offensive to those who occupied the inquisition, there were flues or tubes extending to the open air, sufficiently capacious to carry off the odor. In these cells we found the remains of those who had paid the debt of nature; some of them had been dead apparently but a short time, while of others nothing remained but the bones, still chained to the floor of their dungeon.

"In other cells, we found living sufferers of both sexes, and of every age, from three score years and ten down to fourteen or fifteen years, all naked as when born into the world, and all in chains! Here were old men and aged women, who had been shut up for many years. Here, too, were the middle aged, and the young man, and the maiden of fourteen years old. The soldiers immediately went to work to release these captives from their chains, and took from their knapsacks their overcoats and other clothing, which they gave them to cover their nakedness. They were exceedingly anxious to bring them out to the light of day; but being aware of the danger, I had food given them, and then brought them gradually to the light, as they were able to bear it.

"We then proceeded to explore another room on the left. Here we found the instruments of torture, of every kind which the ingenuity of men or devils could invent." Col. L. describes four of these horrid instruments: "The first was a machine by which the victim was secured, and then, beginning with the fingers, every joint in the hands, arms, and body, was broken, or drawn, one after another, until the sufferer died. The second was a box, in which the head and neck of the accused was so closely screwed that he could not move in any way. Over the the box was a vessel, from which one drop of water a second fell upon the head of the victim, every successive drop falling precisely upon the same place, which suspended the circulation in a few moments, and put the sufferer to the most excruciating agony. The third was an infernal machine, laid horizontally, to which the victim was bound; this instrument was then placed between two beams, in which were scores of knives, so fixed that, by turning the machine with a crank, the flesh of the sufferer was torn from his limbs in small pieces. The fourth surpassed the others in fiendish ingenuity. Its exterior was a beautiful woman, or large doll, richly dressed, with arms extended, ready to embrace its victim. Around her feet a semi-circle was drawn. The victim who passed over this fatal mark touched a spring, which caused the diabolical engine to open, its arms clasped him, and a thousand knives cut him into as many pieces, in their deadly embrace."

Col. L. said that the sight of these engines of infernal cruelty kindled the rage of the soldiers to fury. They declared that every inquisitor and soldier of the inquisition should be put to the torture. Their rage was ungovernable. Col. L. did not oppose them; they might have turned their arms against him, if he had attempted to arrest their work. They began with the holy fathers. The first they put to death in the machine for breaking joints. The torture of the inquisitor put to death by the dropping of water on his head was most excruciating. The poor man rolled out in agony to be taken from the fatal machine. The Inquisitor-General was brought before the infernal engine called "The Virgin." He begged to be excused. "No," said they, "you have caused others to kiss her, and now you must do it." They interlocked their bayonets so as to form large forks, and with these pushed him over the deadly circle. The beautiful image instantly prepared for the embrace, clasped him in its arms, and he was cut into innumerable pieces. Col. L. said that he witnessed the torture of four of them; his heart sickened at the awful scene, and he left the soldiers to wreak their vengeance on the last guilty inmate of that prison-house of hell.

In the meantime it was reported through Madrid that the prisons of the Inquisition were broken open, and multitudes hastened to the fatal spot. And oh! what a meeting was there! It was like a resurrection! About a hundred of those who had been buried for many years were now restored to life. There were fathers who found their long-long daughters; wives were restored to their husbands, sisters to their brothers, and parents to their children; and there were some that could recognize no friend among the multitude. The scene was such as no tongue can describe.

When the multitude had retired, Col. L. caused the library, paintings, furniture, etc., to be removed; and having sent to the city for a wagon load of powder, he deposited a large quantity in the vaults beneath the building, and placed a slow match in connection with it. All withdrew to a distance, and in a few moments the assembled multitude beheld a most joyful sight. The walls and turrets of the massive structure rose majestically toward the heavens, impelled by the tremendous explosion, and then fell back to earth a heap of ruins!

An officer of the fleet in the Baltic communicates with his friends in Edinburgh in rather a novel way. When cruising about, he throws his letters into the sea in a bottle, trusting to their being picked up by some English home-going vessel and forwarded to their address. Two of his epistles, thus consigned to Father Neptune's direct custody, have come to hand without delay, and it is questionable whether, if sent by regular course, they would have arrived at their destination within the same period.

But Where Art Thou?

BY THE HON. MRS. NORTON.

When poor in all but youth and love
I clasped thee to this beating heart,
And vowed for wealth and fame to rove,
That we might weep no more to part.
Years have gone by—long weary years
Of toil, to win my station now—
Of ardent hopes and sickening fears,
And wealth is mine—but where art thou?

Fame's dazzling wreath, for thy dear sake,
Grew brighter than before to me.
I clung to all I thought could make
This lonely heart more worthy thee;
Years have gone by—the laurel droops
In mocking o'er my withered brow;
A conquer'd world before me stoops,
And fame is mine—but where art thou?

In life's first hour, despised and lone,
I wandered through the busy crowd:
And now that life's best joys have flown,
They greet with smiles and murmurs loud.
Oh! for that voice—thy gentle voice—
To hreathe to me its welcome now!
Wealth, fame, and all that should rejoice,
To me are vain—for where art thou?

HONORABLE OLD AGE—ITS RECOLLECTIONS

At the recent celebration at Harvard College, Cambridge, by the Alumni, the following toast was announced by the Chairmen:

The health of the oldest graduate of Harvard University, who is here present—He deserves the title of age, for

"Wisdom is gray hairs in man,
And an unspotted life is his old age."

This was received with unbounded applause, and long continued cheers greeted Hon. Josiah Quincy, Senior, ex-President of the University, as he rose to reply.

Mr. Quincy said that he had expected a shot, but not exactly from the quarter whence it came. He found himself placed in a very awkward position, as must be the case with all of his age, in regard to "Young America." It was hard for such to say anything to men whose heads were running so fast ahead that it was very likely they would leave the bodies behind. Yet, perhaps, he might be indulged in a few reminiscences. Every thing had changed from the olden time, not only in the world at large, but in collegiate education. It had changed in physics, in literature, in science, in morals, in politics, and in religion—whether for better or worse, he was not called upon to say. As to physics, that was a common-place topic. In his youthful days, any one who had dreamed of practically effecting railroads, the telegraph, and the countless other inventions of the day, would have been sent to the Insane Asylum.

But with regard to literature—when he was a youth, knowledge was not thought to be the spontaneous growth of the human mind, but was drilled in by manual superimposition. There were then three ways of addressing and impressing the brain. [Mr. Quincy here gave a humorous description of these three modes—first, by filling the forehead of a dull or refractory pupil; next, by boxing his ears; and third, by the instrumentality of the ferule. He really believed, that if any one meeter at the present day should employ the means thou used by all masters, he would be compelled to take his choice between a heavy fine, to be paid to the parents of the pupil, or to a sojourn in the House of Correction. Ney, should some things now occur which then were common, his excellent friend near him—(Chief Justice Shaw) mild and amiable as he was—would probably send the master to the State Prison for an assault with intent to kill.]

And in science, young men were then thoroughly instructed, beginning at the beginning. They learned the multiplication-table then in college; they don't do that now. Pike's Arithmetic and Webber's Mathematics were the collegiate class-books in his early day; but where were they? His hearers might not believe him, but he himself, when in the senior class, was assigned to a mathematical part at one of the college exhibitions, and had absolutely progressed so far as to calculate an eclipse. Indeed, he was induced to this by the hope of immortality, for it was told him that all such mathematical productions would be preserved as beacon-lights for the instruction and admiration of generations then unborn. But it so happened that, in the course of years, the Faculty, for want of a better man, made him President of the College, and, of course, his first thought was to look after his eclipse. To his mortification and astonishment, it was nowhere to be found. It had gone like the lost Pleiad, and might only be discovered, perhaps, by the observations of his astronomical friends from Clover Den among the yet unresolved nebulæ. But recently he had received from Prof. Pierce an address by him before the Smithsonian Institute, and, strange as it might seem, mortifying as it must be to him, mathematician as he had been, he could not understand two-thirds of it.

Mr. Quincy then passed to a consideration of the habit of referring to the age of men. On every occasion, whether in public or private, an old man was sure to be reminded of his years. Why was this? Old age did not simply consist in length of days, for as the President had quoted:

"Wisdom is gray hairs in man,
And an unspotted life is his old age."

If it arose from sympathy, there was no ground for it; the sympathy was absolutely thrown away. So far as his experience reached, old age was the happ eet period of life. And why not? Had we not then got rid of the nonsence of love, (laughter) the folly of ambition, the grumbling of envy, the delusions of hope? He repeated that old age was the happiest portion of life, provided that in youth and manhood the individual is obedient to the laws of nature regulating health and strength, and leads a life of respectability and usefulness. In order to be happy and long lived, it was important there should be a harmony between the beginning, the middle and the end of life, and especially between the beginning and the end. The young man should cultivate and foster the qualities which he sees to be respectable and esteemed in the old, and the old men, on the other hand, should retain and seek to perpetuate the feelings and vivacity of youth.

The ex-President closed with this sentiment:

"The hoary hairs with which wisdom crowns the young, and the unspotted life which is the crown of man at every period of his existence. (Much cheering.)"

Presentation of a Bible.—A Bible was presented to Joseph Gales, senior editor of the National Intelligencer, by the teachers and scholars of a Sunday School, who had a festival on his grounds near Washington, on last Fourth of July. Mr. Gales replied to the address on the occasion, as follows:

"I accept your present, sir, with my left hand; would to God I could do it with my right! I concur in all the patriotic sentiments you have uttered; and especially do I acknowledge that we are indebted for our prosperous and happy condition as a nation to the principles of the Christian religion. Without them we could never have succeeded as we have. Your enjoyment of my grounds for the celebration of our national anniversary affords me great pleasure. They are at your service as long as I live, and when I am gone, I hope they will pass into the hands of others who will cheerfully accord to you the same privilege. If I had entertained the slightest expectation that the presentation of your gift would be accompanied by an eloquent speech, I might have been prepared for a more suitable reply; but as I have been taken by surprise, you will accept a simple expression of my thanks, and excuse the brevity of my address."

Wordsworth.—"I quoted his own beautiful address to the stock-dove. He said once in a wood, Mrs. Wordsworth and a lady were walking, when the stock-dove was cooing. A farmer's wife coming by, said to herself: 'Oh! I do like stock-doves!' Mrs. Wordsworth, in all her enthusiasm for Wordsworth's poetry, took the old woman to her heart; 'but,' continued the old woman to her heart, 'some like them in a pie; for my part, there's nothing like 'em stewed in onions!'"

White Blackberries.—The New Albany (Ind.) Tribune says: "Now, don't laugh at the seeming incongruity of the thing. A friend of ours, from Franklin township, laid on our table yesterday a fine specimen of white berries, gathered from the common blackberry bush. They are equal in flavor to any blackberry we ever ate, and would make a splendid preserve."

Beautiful Apostrophe to the Bible.—We would be pleased to know the author of the following eloquent apostrophe to the Bible. We have seldom read any thing finer:

Study now to be wise; and in all your gettings get understanding. And especially would I urge upon your heart-bound, soul-wrapt attention, that book upon which all feelings are concentrated, all opinions; which enlightens the judgment, while it enlists the sentiments, and soothes the imagination in songs upon the harp of the "sweet songster of Israel." That Book, which gives you a faithful insight into your heart, and consecrates its character in

"Shrines
Such as the keen tooth of time can never touch."

Would you know the effect of that book upon the heart? It purifies its thoughts and sanctifies its joys; it nerves and strengthens it for the sorrow and mishaps of life; and when these shall have ended, and the twilight of death is spreading its dew damp upon the wasting features, it breaks upon the last glad throb the bright and streaming light of eternity's morning. Oh! have you ever stood beside the couch of a dying saint, when

"Without a sigh,
A change of feature or a shaded smile,
He gave his head to the stern messenger,
And as a glad child seeks his father's name,
Went home."

Then, you have seen the consecrated influence of this Book. Would you know its name? It is the Book of Books—its author God—its theme, Heavenly Eternity. The Bible! Read it, search it. Let it be first upon the shelves of your library, and first in the affections of your heart. Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they which testify of me. Oh! if there be sublimity in the contemplation of God—if there be grandeur in the display of Eternity—if there be any thing ennobling and purifying in the revelation of man's salvation, "search the Scriptures, for they are they which testify of me."

An "Old Inhabitant."—The St. Anthony Express says that in the town of Minneapolis, Iowa, an old mud turtle was recently captured, upon whose venerable back was found the date "1769," in legible figures. The inscription, it is supposed, was carved upon his shell eighty-five years since, by some of the early French voyegers.

Alabama Centenary Institute.

THE EXERCISES of this long established and popular institution will commence on

THE FIRST MONDAY OF OCTOBER NEXT.

FACULTY.... FEMALE COLLEGE.

Rev. A. H. Mitchell, D. D., President and Professor of Mental and Moral Science
Rev. D. F. Lasserre, Professor of Mathematics and Belles Lettres.

——, Professor of the Natural Sciences
Mons. Jules Brady, Member of the Royal Academy of Paris, Professor of Music and French.
Mrs. Lucinda Ferguson, Assistant Teacher of Music.
Miss Ellen E. Lasserre, Teacher of Drawing and Painting.

MALE DEPARTMENT.

Rev. E. D. Pitts, A. M., Principal.
John T. Dunklin, A. M., Associate.

PREPARATORY SCHOOL.

Thos. C. Bragg, A. M., Principal.
——, Assistant.

This institution is situated in Summerfield, Alabama—as healthy a location, we believe, as there is in all the South. It is under the guidance and instruction of an able and experienced Faculty. No one of the Professors or Teachers, whose names appear above, needs the support of a recommendation.

Heretofore all the departments have been under the superintendence of Dr. Mitchell: but it has been thought best by the Trustees and Faculty to place each department under a separate jurisdiction. Accordingly, Dr. Mitchell will hereafter devote his whole time and his distinguished talents to the Female College. With him will be associated three experienced Professors, and as many Ladies as the circumstances may require.

One of the Professorships is now vacant, but it is certain to be filled before the beginning of the ensuing session, by some gentlemen of established reputation.

The Trustees most confidently invite a comparison of the advantages thus presented to parents for the education of their daughters, with those afforded by any Female College in the South.

The Male Academy, under the direction of Professor Pitts, aided by Professor Dunklin, (and others if necessary,) cannot fail to secure and retain a large share of the public patronage.

The Preparatory School has been placed under the charge of Professor Bragg, in order that the children may be properly trained and prepared to enter the higher departments of the Institute. A new building for it is already under contract. The building of the Female College are also being greatly enlarged and improved. Some ten or twelve thousand dollars will be expended in perfecting and furnishing them.

The Trustees and friends of the institute have resolved to leave nothing undone to place it above every similar institution in the country.

R. J. HARRISON, Secretary of the Board.

N. B.—The Trustees have thought proper, from motives of economy, to require the young ladies to dress in uniform, except in the school-room, and strictly forbid the wearing of any jewelry, except a plain breastpin.

The uniform for winter is green worsted; for summer, white muslin. aug5—6m26

Marion Female Seminary,

MARION, PERRY COUNTY, ALA.

THE EXERCISES of this institution will be resumed on Monday, the 2d day of October, under the charge of the Rev. Jas. K. Armstrong, as Principal, assisted by nine Professors, Teachers and Officers.

It has just closed its present session with one hundred and thirty-three students, seventy-seven of which number were boarders. There is but one session of nine and a half months.

Pupils can enter at any time during the session, chargeable from the beginning of the month in which they commence, to the close of the session. No deduction will be made but at the discretion of the Principal.

The Principal, with his family, resides in the building. The female teachers also reside in the Seminary. Boarders in the institution are under the control of the Principal at all times. A Steward, in the employment of the Principal, of experience, urbanity of manners, and faithfulness to his duties, a Matron who constantly and kindly ministers to the private wants of young ladies, and especially in sickness, a Governess, who directs them in their exercises and amusements, superintends the order of their private apartments, instructs them in certain domestic duties, and guards their private, personal habits, manners and morals, always aided by the presence and active co-operation of the female teachers. The Principal and his lady secure to those committed to their charge every necessary and proper comfort and kindness. Here they are constantly exercised under a wholesome system of regulations respecting neatness, order, punctuality and economy. They have regular hours for study and recreation, for rising and retiring, for eating, domestic duties, and social enjoyment among themselves.

The institution is furnished with a new and superior apparatus in the departments of Chemistry, Natural Philosophy and Astronomy. There is also a large collection of Maps, Charts, Plates, Diagrams, Globes, etc., for simplifying the principles of Geography, Physiology and Astronomy.

In the department of Drawing, Painting and Embroidery there is a fine collection of Drawing Cards, Engravings, Pictures, Paintings, Patterns, and every other convenience important in the prosecution of these departments.

There is in connection with the institution a Library of more than one thousand volumes, and a Cabinet of several hundred specimens.

The institution is furnished with six Pianos, five Guitars, and one Harp.

MUSIC.—The Professor at the head of this department is equal to any in the country. He is a superior vocalist, a fine performer on the Piano, Harp, Guitar, Violin, Violincello, etc. He has enjoyed ten years experience as a teacher of music in the best institutions in the Union, is profoundly versed in the principle of harmony, and is a real amateur of the sublime science to which he has devoted himself.

LOCATION.—Its salubrity, intelligence, morality and public spirit are unsurpassed.

PERMANENCY.—Parents may send their daughters here with confidence in their completing their education under the same course of instruction and system of discipline. Every thing conspires to make the permanency of the Principal a matter of duty, pleasure and interest.

TEACHERS.—The Principal, himself a native of Alabama, surrounds himself with a corps of teachers of known efficiency and tried success, nearly all of whom have been reared in the South, thus ensuring a better acquaintance with Southern peculiarities and sympathy with Southern views and interests. Thoroughness is our motto in teaching. We ascribe this true importance to the harmonious development of the physical, intellectual and moral nature.

Reports are sent to patrons once every two months, which are a faithful showing of the scholarship and conduct of the pupil. In our system of merits and demerits scholarship and conduct are connected.

The Principal regards it as his most important duty to attend to the moral habits of his pupils and to imbuing their minds with proper religious principles.

The facilities for acquiring the French and other modern languages are superior.

There are daily exercises in Orthography, Reading and Writing. Great attention is bestowed on letter-writing and composition.

Lectures are delivered weekly to the junior and senior classes on various subjects of Science and Literature, on which they take notes and are subsequently examined.

The Principal will be assisted in the Collegiate department, the ensuing session, by a gentleman, a Professor of long experience, of the ripest scholarship, and the most superior qualifications as a teacher. He will take charge of the department of Mathematics and some of the higher English branches, and the control of the main study hall.

Visitors are not received by boarders except with suitable introduction to the Principal from patrons.

All jewelry is prohibited, except a plain breastpin.

No accounts will be opened in Marion. Money must be deposited or forwarded for all necessary and proper purposes. Let pupils be supplied from home as far as is practicable.

All sums of money for the use of pupils must be deposited with the Principal.

One hundred and forty-five dollars will pay the board and tuition of a young lady for the entire session in the collegiate course. $175 will embrace the languages. $235 will embrace board, tuition in the collegiate department, on the Piano, and in the languages.

Books, Stationery, Sheet Music, Drawing, Painting and Embroidery material is furnished by the Principal. The cost of these articles varies with the advancement of the pupil. Every effort will be made to secure economy in their use.

For further particulars or catalogues, apply to the Principal.

Marion, July 30, 1854.

University of Nashville.

THIS INSTITUTION was founded by the State of North Carolina in 1785 as Davidson Academy. It became Cumberland College in 1806, and University of Nashville in 1826.

THE LITERARY DEPARTMENT

Will be reopened under a new organization, and with new buildings, on the First Wednesday of October next.

Rev. Edward Wadsworth, D. D.,
Prof. of Ethics and Belles Lettres, and Chairman of the Faculty.
Rev. J. W. McClelland, D. D.,
Prof. of Ancient Languages.
James L. Meigs, A. M.,
Prof. of Mathematics and Natural Philosophy
Rev. J. B. Lindsley, M. D.,
Prof. of Chemistry and the Natural Sciences.
E. P. Da Zavallos,
Prof. of Modern Languages.

Tuition, $75 per annum—Matriculation fee, $5.

THE LAW DEPARTMENT

Will also be opened on the first Wednesday of October next.

Francis B. Fogg, Esq.,
William F Cooper, Esq., } Professors.
——, Esq.,

Fees for Lectures, $100 per annum.

THE MEDICAL DEPARTMENT

Closed its first Session with 121 Students and 33 Graduates; its second with 152 Students and 36 Graduates; and its third with 220 Students and 71 Graduates.

The Fourth Annual Course of Lectures will commence on Monday the 30th of October next, and continue until the first of the ensuing March

Robert M. Porter, M. D.,
Prof. of General and Special Anatomy.
J. Berrien Lindsley, M. D.,
Chemistry and Pharmacy, and Dean of the Faculty.
C. K. Winston, M. D.,
Materia Medica and Medical Jurisprudence.
A. H. Buchanan, M. D.,
Surgical and Pathological Anatomy.
Thomas R. Jennings, M. D.,
Institutes of Medicine and Clinical Medicine.
W. K. Bowling, M. D.,
Theory and Practice of Medicine.
John M. Watson, M. D.,
Obstetrics and the Diseases of Women and Children.
Paul F. Eve, M. D.,
Principles and Practice of Surgery.
William T. Briggs, M. D.,
Demonstrator of Anatomy.

The Anatomical rooms will be opened for Students on the first Monday of October.

A full Preliminary Course of Lectures, free to all Students, will be given by the Professors, commencing on the first Monday of October.

A Clinique has been established in connection with the University, at which operations are performed and cases prescribed for and lectured upon in presence of the Class.

Arrangements have been made to accommodate all patients requiring surgical operations.

Amount of Fees for Lectures in this Department is $105. Matriculating Fee (paid ones only,) $5; Practical Anatomy, $10; Graduating Fee, $25.

Good Board can be obtained for $3 per week.

The Annual Announcement, giving a full account of the several Departments of the University, may be had by applying to A. V. S. LINDSLEY,
July 29 3t* Sec'y Board Trustees.

Emory and Henry College,

WASHINGTON COUNTY, VIRGINIA.

THE Fall Session of this Institution will commence on the 17th August next.

TERMS:

Tuition per session of five months		$17 50
Board	"	16 75
Washing	"	5 00
Fuel	"	2 00
Contingent charge	"	1 25
		$52 50

It is believed that no College in the South is offering stronger inducements than this to young men desirous of a thorough collegiate education. Our location is in a quiet and beautiful valley, ten miles distant from town or village, and comparatively free from temptations to vice. Our Board of Instruction is filled with men of experience, ability and fidelity. Our course of study is extensive and thorough. Our Cabinet, Libraries, and Apparatus are ample. Any young man of limited means, with fair abilities and proper energy, can here acquire a superior, liberal or business education.

For further particulars, address

E. E. WILEY, President,
July 8, 1854. 6t Emory P. O., Va.

Cumnyuggee Female College.

The next Session will commence on the second Monday in July, and close on the first Wednesday in December.

FACULTY:

Rev. W. H. Ellison D. D., President.
John F. Ellison, A. B.
Miss F. Geraldine Rattle, Primary Department.
Mrs. Eugenia Rutherford, Instructress in Music.

Competent Teachers in the departments of French, Drawing, Painting, etc., will be provided.

RATES OF TUITION PER SESSION OF FIVE MONTHS:

Primary Department	$10 00
First Upperooms, Middle Classes, each	15 00
Junior and Senior Classes, each	22 50
Music—Piano or Guitar	20 00
Use of Instruments	5 00
Latin, Greek, French, or German, each	10 00
Drawing, Painting, or Embroidery, each	12 50
Wax Work, per Lesson	1 00
Incidental Expenses	1 00

☞ One half the tuition to be paid in advance.

Board can be had at from $10 to $12, including Washing, Lights, etc.

The College is located upon Chunnuggee Ridge, Macon county, Alabama, in the midst of an intelligent community. It has recently been provided with a new Philosophical and Chemical Apparatus, adequate to all the purposes of instruction; and no pains will be spared to secure the application of the best and most approved means of developing and training the mind. The President having been for twelve years in charge of the Female College, Macon, Georgia, the Trustees entertain no doubt, from his past success, of his entire ability to make this equal to any school of the same grade in the country.

A tri-weekly line of stages from Eufaula to the Montgomery and West Point Railroad, and semi-weekly line from Columbus, Ga., to Chunnuggee, make it accessible from all points.

RICHARD H. POWELL,
President of the Board of Trustees.
Chunnuggee [illegible] 1854—jy 18 6m

To Booksellers, Agents, and Peddlers.

BURNETT & BOSTWICK, Publishers,

15 Camp Street, 15

HAVE just issued from their press the following valuable works:

VOYAGE OF THE U. S. EXPLORING SQUADRON, commanded by Capt. Charles Wilkes of the U. S. N., together with Explorations and Discoveries made by Admiral D'Urville, Capt. Ross and other Navigations and Travelers, and an account of the Expedition to the Dead Sea under Lieut. Lynch, with numerous illustrations.

LIFE OF JOHN C. CALHOUN.

LIFE OF JAMES K. POLK, with a history of his Administration.

THE HEROINES OF HISTORY.
HEROINES OF THE CRUSADES.
PANORAMA OF NATIONS.
THE GREAT CITIES OF THE WORLD.
LIVES OF JOHN AND CHARLES WESLEY.
WILLIS'S WORKS—seven volumes.
THE MIRROR OF THE SOUL.
FARM AND FIRESIDE.
RURAL HOMES, &c. &c.

For the sale of the above and many other works, which are all very valuable and popular, we desire to establish an agency in every county and parish in the South; and therefore offer unparalleled inducements to country dealers, agents and peddlers.

A Catalogue of all our publications furnished on application, post paid, to

BUENETT & BOSTWICK, Publishers,
may 27 3m 15 Camp street, New Orleans.

Dr. J. T. Kennon,

Castilian Spring,
Holmes County, Mississippi,

Is now prepared to offer good accommodations to invalids who may desire to visit Castilian Spring, or place themselves under his care for treatment. This is one of the most desirable retreats for invalids in the South, located in an elevated healthy region of country, with abundance of fine Freestone water. The mineral water is composed very strongly of Iron, Sulphur, Magnesia and Soda, and contains largely of Carbonic Acid Gas.

The diseases which it has cured are Dyspepsia, Dropsy, General Debility, Affections of the Kidneys, Bladder, and the various functional and organic derangements of the Womb. This water is especially efficacious in Diseases of Females.

Board, per week—$7.

References—Ministers of Miss. Conference.
Rev. J. B. Walker,
Rev. H. N. McTyeire, } New Orleans.
march 4 3m

Price's Patent Texas Tonic.

☞ The claims of this new discovery are:

1. Its efficacy as an antiseptic, fortifying the System, and giving a healthy action to the Body and vivacity to the Mind, acting on the Blood, Kidneys, Bowels and Skin.

2. It is a certain antidote against Constipation of the Bowels, Torpor of the Liver, Palpitation of the Heart, Termination of Blood to the Brain, Indigestion, Pain in the Head, Chronic Head-ache, Vertigo, and is offered to the public as a remedy for Chills and Fevers, (see certificates Nos. 3 and 4,) and as a preventive to Yellow, Dilious and Congestive Fevers, when used as an antiseptic, (see certificate No. 5,) using it freely, keeping a lively action on the Bowels during the epidemic seasons.

The subscriber would deem it unnecessary to offer any testimonials in favor of this valuable medicine to those who have experimented with it, and only offers a few out of the many highly respectable citizens and others names whose are familiar to the community, for the benefit of those who have not made its acquaintance; and being assured that the TEXAS TONIC only has to be known to be appreciated, he therefore submits the following testimonials:

THO. K. PRICE, 59 Camp street.

THE BRITISH QUARTERLIES,

AND

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.

LEONARD SCOTT & CO., No. 54 Gold street, New York, continue to publish the following British Periodicals, viz:
THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW, (Conservative.)
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW, (Whig.)
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW, (Free Church.)
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW, (Liberal.)

AND

BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE, (Tory.)

—TERMS—

For any one of the four Reviews	$3 00	per annum.
For any two " "	5 00	"
For any three " "	7 00	"
For all four of the Reviews,	8 00	"
For Blackwood's Magazine,	3 00	"
For Blackwood and the three Reviews	9 00	"
For Blackwood and the four Reviews	10 00	"

Payments to be made, in all cases, in advance. Money current in the State where issued will be received at par.

Address, post paid, LEONARD SCOTT & CO.,
79 Fulton st., New York. Entrance 54 Gold st.

☞ Postage on Blackwood and the four Reviews, 72 cents a year. (Nov18-1y.)

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL

FOR THE CURE OF

COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, BRONCHITIS, WHOOPING COUGH, CROUP, ASTHMA AND CONSUMPTION.

FOR CROUP, give an emetic of antimony, to be followed by large and frequent doses of the Cherry Pectoral, until it subdues the disease. If taken in season, it will not fail to cure.

WHOOPING COUGH may be broken up and soon cured by the use of Cherry Pectoral.

THE INFLUENZA is speedily removed by this remedy. Numerous instances have been noticed where

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Publishing Committee Louisiana Conference, { J. C. KEENER, L. PARKER, J. B. WALKER.

H. N. McTYEIRE, Editor.

J. HAMILTON, D. D., T. W. DORMAN, W. MURRAH. } Publishing Committee Alabama Conference.

VOL. IV. NO. 29. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, AUGUST 19, 1854. WHOLE NO. 185.

A SHOWER.

BY REV. RALPH HOYT, A. M.

In the vallsy that I knew,
Happy scsnes!
There ere meadows sleping low,
Thers the fairest flowers blow,
And the brightest waters flow
All sereno;
But the sweetest thing to see,
If you nsk the dripping tree,
Or the-harvest-hoping swein,
Is the rain.

Ah, the dwellers of the town,
How they sigh,
How ungratefully they frown,
When the cloud-king shakes his crown,
And the pearls come pouring down
From the sky!
They descry no charms at all
When the sparkling jewels fell,
And such moment of the shower
Seeme an hour.

Yst there's something very sweet
In the sight,
When the crystal currents meet,
In the dry and dusty street,
And they wrestle with the heet,
In their might!
While they seem to hold a talk
With the stones along the walk,
And remind them of the rule,
To "keep cool!"

But in the quiet dell,
Ever fair,
Still the Lord doeth all things well,
When his clouds with blessings swell,
And they break a brimming shell
On the air;
Thers the shower hath its charms,
Sweet and welcome to the farms,
As they listen to its voices,
And rejoice!

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

CHRISTIAN EXPERIENCE.

THE STRUGGLES OF MRS. ELIZABETH DOWDING AFTER A CLEAN HEART; WITH HER REFLECTIONS THEREON.

NOMBER TWO.

After a protracted experience of the joys of my first love, I found my conflicts were not ended—that I had enemies larking within me unslain, and before unknown to me. The first root that sprouted was unbelief. The occasion of its appearance was thus: Being in company with two old professors in whom I had much faith, I heard them telling each other their doubts and fears. Satan instantly whispered in my ear, "now were you a Christian, you would have the same experience;" and I being unacquainted with his devices, instead of drawing the sword of the Spirit, and resisting him, began to reason with my enemy, until he had almost destroyed my confidence.

But, thanks be to God, who knoweth how to bring good out of evil; He turned this attack to my account. For this short stay in doubting castle, and my returning faith in Christ, impressed me with the necessity of seeking a clean heart, and made me willing to begin at once this great work. "Leave all," the Spirit seemed only to speak, and the promise of an instant and full acceptance of this consecration, "this day is salvation come to this house," was frequently before my mind. In the struggle to obtain this grace, my weakness and unwillingness to submit wholly to my Redeemer, were more plainly discovered to me.

At a quarterly meeting, November 1, 1783, I opened my mind to dear Sister Jones, who had a little before professed to obtain the grace of perfect love; and she dealt faithfully with me, which greatly increased my distress. This was on Saturday morning, and I neither ate nor drank until I got home late on the following Monday. Satan baffeted me with the temptation, that it would have been better for me not to have conversed with her about it.

I was in deep waters; my heart panted to be cleansed. At length the Scripture was opened to me, "the kingdom of Heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force." I saw that it was enthusiasm to expect the blessing without persevering diligently in the use of the means. One night I thought I would not sleep until the blessing of entire sanctification was bestowed on me; agonized until one or two in the morning, then being much spent, I lay down. With the day my distress returned, and while the family were at breakfast I withdrew into the silent fields, almost despairing of enjoying any more comfort in religion. About noon I retired as usual, still cast down; I picked up a blessed book, Doddrige's Rise and Progress, and cast my eyes on these words, "fear not, thy Captain is near to aid thee;" and glory to my adorable God! I immediately felt He was my Captain commanding the thick clouds to disperse; and my eyes streamed with tears of joy. I was lifted to a greater highth of love, and my heart was more filled with praise than ever before. I felt plunged in a sea of unspeakable bliss, and the light of mercy shone sweetly in my poor feeble soul. Nevertheless, I had not the witness of full salvation; nor could my foolish heart unwaveringly believe. In a little time I gave way to doubts and fears, and Satan again triumphed in my distress.

The providence of God now administered a bitter cup of affliction, which tended to prepare me for full consecration. It was the death of my dear old father, one of the best of parents, who is gone, I trust, to Abraham's bosom; he returns no more to me, but I will go to him. My Lord now taught me that I must come to Him with a firmer, more humble and cheerful reliance on his promises.

About this time, two dear preachers called on us; a night meeting was appointed, and a number of the neighbors came out. The King appeared in love, and my poor, weary, thirsty soul got a view of his beauty—glory lightened in his eyes, and paradise appeared. The clouds were gone; my longing soul was light in the Lord. I was so delighted with His adorable presence, that sleep departed from me; and God gave me then such a promise of my eternal salvation as hath ever since sustained me through all the storms of life's tempestuous sea. Glory to God! I am now happy in this assurance; "I do prize Him for all that is past, and I'll trust Him for all that is to come." With Salem's daughters, my song is new; and I, too, can say with humble confidence, "my beloved is mine and I am his." O, what a weight of riches is in full redemption, and how blessed its seal to the humble heart. Glory be to God for the abundant silver streams of life, and full salvation, which so richly flow along the path of the followers of Christ. O, ye dear believers! Come seek this pearl of great price—full redemption. It is purchased for you by the blood of Christ. O, rest not short of it; for the very air seems changed, and all creation is a delightful prospect to the soul that sees the Creator in all things. How long I remained in this happy state I can not now say, but it may be collected from my diary.

I remember, also, that in this fullness of Christ's Spirit communicated to my soul, I saw more clearly than ever before the imminent danger of sinners, and often felt such a concern for them, as was almost overpowering. In seeking this grace of holiness, the young convert is made to feel that the commandment is exceeding broad; his thriving soul hears and obeys; he feels he has much to do, he must therefore use wisely his few precious moments; for only "the diligent soul will be made fat." He is not like those who are content to cease striving for more grace; the more he has the more he wants. To his great grief, he often feels the remains of his evil nature. He diligently searches the Bible to know his duty and his privilege, and is convinced that a holy and just God requires that he should be pure in heart and just in life—that it is the will of God even his sanctification.

He sees a beauty in holiness—he pants for it; he is encouraged to press forward by the promise, "to him that believeth all things are possible." Now his enemies arise—worldly-minded professors say it cannot be obtained until death. The devil, who strikes at the doctrine of holiness as a rattlesnake at a man, uses every stratagem to dishearten him in the pursuit; his flesh shrinks, but the command, "be ye holy, for I am holy," urges him forward. He sees it is to be obtained by faith, but feels his own inability to believe; and out of a full heart cries out, O Lord, increase my faith; until God, who hath watched the struggle with infinite love, in a proper moment says: "I will; be thou clean;" and the happy soul is enabled by grace, through faith, to lay hold on the promise, and is saved from sin; humbled into the dust; and filled with the perfect love of God. It is now his delight to do and suffer the will of his Heavenly Father, and to grow in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ." Could he indulge a wish of his own, be "would rather be absent from the body and present with the Lord," but his cry is "not my will, but thine be done." He is now, like the full ear of corn, which must still wait the hardening action of the elements before it be gathered into the garner. He must endure hardness as a good soldier unto the end, that he may receive the crown of life.

May we lay hold on eternal life.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

COMING ROUND RIGHT.

PREACHERS WITHOUT DIPLOMAS!!

Happy are we to record evidences of this, in the movements of two leading Protestant Churches of these States. If the Methodists will only hold their ground firmly, despite evil prophecies as to their limit of existence and usefulness, we shall see a good deal more of coming round right. Reading sermons is giving way before the hearty and effective extemporaneous style. Pews are yielding to free seats. We clip this bit of news from the Christian Witness and Church Advocate, a pretty "high" organ, published at Boston:—

A WISE MOVEMENT.—We see it stated that the Vestry of Trinity Church, New York, have passed a resolution to make the pews in that magnificent edifice absolutely free as soon as their new chapel up town is completed—probably about the middle of September next. As it is, we believe, every fifth pew in the church is free already, as are also the most of those in the northern and southern wings.

The denominational statistics of the last Census are opening the eyes of Church politicians. A change of a people-adapting and world-reaching sort will come over them. Their good sense and piety will lead them in pursuit of lost sheep to quit rabrical paths for such legitimate ways and means as will reach them and restore. The best shepherd will be judged by the best flock, and not the size and shape and gilding of his crook. The Church organization that does not bring its doctrines and ordinances in saving contact with the masses of humanity, will be set down behind the times and Scriptures. Let not the Church that has acted in this policy relax it as it is about to succeed, and take up the faded flummery that others are flinging away; trappings that they, in our light, are beginning to be convinced are more ornamental than useful.

From the Christian Witness, 4th inst., above quoted, we take the following:—

Diocesan Bishops and Parish Priests have their appointed spheres of duty, where, if true to their calling, they may do great good to a great number; but, however faithful and devotedly laborious they may be—however exemplary in their lives, and untiring in their efforts to preach from the pulpit, and to warn the people from "house to house," yet a vast multitude of precious souls will, nevertheless, not hear the truth from their lips.

Under the conviction that there was in our Church a great lack in this particular, the General Convention at its session in 1847 passed a canon providing for the ordination of a class of persons who, with much less literary and theological qualifications than were required by the general canon, were allowed to be admitted to the Diaconate without being eligible to the Priesthood. This was intended for a class of pious laymen, who, with respectable talents and limited learning, might be very useful in the Church as Deacons, and who did not intend to be advanced to the second Order of the Ministry. The demand for this new measure came chiefly from the South and the West. The Canon was passed, and was regarded by many as the beginning of a better state of things. But the measure was a failure. Very few were ordained under it. It had a twofold defect, and that was enough to nullify the good it was designed to accomplish; it virtually created a fourth Order of the Ministry—a sort of sub-Deacon; since a broad distinction was made between those ordained under this Canon, and such as were ordained under the old Canon, with the intention and expectation of being advanced to the Priesthood; there were thus created two distinct classes of Deacons. Now, there is not, and is not to be in the Apostolic ministry, sub-Deacons, any more than there is to be sub-Priests and sub-Bishops. The people asked for Deacons—Apostolic Deacons, and the General Convention authorized the Bishops to answer this call by ordaining and sending them a supply of sub-Deacons. But, besides this, it was provided that before the Canon could go into effect, in any Diocese, the Diocesan Convention should first give its sanction to the measure, thereby requesting the Bishop to act under the Canon; and when this permission was granted, the Bishop had a right to refuse to ordain any to this sub-Diaconate. So that, however urgent the demand of the people—however willing the Convention—however pressing the necessity or the circumstances of any particular case—and however fit and well qualified the candidate—the Bishop had the power of his own will to frustrate the whole matter, and, in some instances, we are well aware that our Rt. Rev. Fathers were not very backward in exercising this prerogative.

But this movement, hailed by the Witness as one of the best signs of the times—"an indication of a conviction on the part of Churchmen, that they are not doing what the Church was designed to do, and what it is capable of doing, in the work of 'preaching the Gospel to every creature,'" was not abandoned so readily:—

In 1853 the General Convention repealed this Canon, and enacted another, by which both faults which distinguished and extinguished the Canon of 1847 were rectified by being excluded altogether.

This Canon provides that every person hereafter to be ordained Deacon, shall be examined by the Bishop and two Presbyters, whose duty it shall be to ascertain that he is well acquainted with the Holy Scriptures and the Book of Common Prayer; and who shall inquire into his fitness for the ministrations declared in the Ordinal, etc. Such person is required to be a candidate for one year. He is not allowed to be settled over a parish or congregation until he shall have satisfactorily passed the three examinations prescribed in the Canon "of the preparatory exercises of a candidate for Priest's Orders,"—and can not officiate in any parish or congregation, without the express consent of the Rector and the Bishop.

Now this lets down the dignity of the cloth! It is a step toward Methodism. These serious apprehensions are quieted in advance:—

But it has been objected, that such a lowering of the qualifications for the Diaconate, will flood the ministry with a multitude of unlearned men. We have no reason to believe that there is any ground for serious apprehension in this particular. If a tent-maker, or a tax-gatherer, or a fisherman or two should obtain Deacons' Orders, under this Canon, we have no fears that the Church "would be turned upside down," or that there would be any sensible loss of that dignity which belongs to true godliness and real greatness. If a blacksmith should become an Episcopal Deacon, it would not necessarily prove that all learning was discarded as a qualification for the ministry, since it is very well known that the most learned linguist in the land is a live, legitimate son of Vulcan, in this Bay State.

But is it apprehended that shoemakers will abandon their calling, and press into the lower order of the ministry! There is but little cause for fear in this quarter. What if a shoemaker should become a Deacon? He may, nevertheless, be a very good Deacon, and there is nothing in his business which necessarily forbids his being a very learned as well as a very acceptable minister.

St. Matthew and St. Paul, and St. Peter and others who may be allowed to have done some service in building up the Church, may be hinted at. We hope they take and feel that they have not been intruders! Meantime the Methodists, along with them, may be vindicated for allowing men to save souls without a diploma. The Witness concludes thus:—

There is more reason to fear disgrace from the sins of men than from the mere character of their callings. If we can find persons worthy and well qualified for the Ministry, the Lord, who is a jealous God, will see to it that His cause take no harm from the fact that the devoted ministers of the Church might have been once engaged in tent-making, fishing, or shoemaking.

Worthy conclusion! One hardly knows which most to admire, the sagacity that discovered so great a truth or the boldness, in this nineteenth century, that could announce it.

E.

August, 1854.

As the lovely cedar is green throughout the barrenness of winter, so shall the Christian alone flourish amid the winter of death, and bloom in immortality.

Christian benevolence, like the meal-barrel of her that refreshed God's holy prophet, ever ministereth comforts to the needy; and still the supply is undiminished.

THE GREAT MEN OF FRANCE—THEIR IRRELIGION.

BY LAMARTINE.

I know not when, but certain it is that the nation has an immense progress to make in serious thought, if she wishes to remain free. If we look at the characters, compared as regards religious sentiment, of the great nations of Europe, America, and even Asia, the advantage is not for us. The great men of other countries live and die on the scene of history, looking up to heaven; our great men appear to live and die, forgetting completely the only idea for which it is worth living and dying—they live and die looking at the spectator, or at most, at posterity.

Open the history of America, the history of England, and the history of France; read the great lives, the great deaths, the great martyrdoms, the great words at the hour when the ruling thought of life reveals itself in the last words of the dying. But cross the Atlantic, traverse the Channel, come to our times, open our annals, and listen to the last words of the great political actors of the drama of our liberty. One would think that God was eclipsed from the south, that his name was unknown in the language. History will have the air of an atheist, when it recounts to posterity these annihilations, rather than deaths, of celebrated men in the greatest year of France.

Look at Mirabeau on the bed of death. "Crown me with flowers," said he: "intoxicate me with perfumes. Let me die to the sound of delicious music."

Not a word of God, or his soul. Sensual philosopher, he desired only supreme sensualism, a last voluptuousness in his agony. Contemplate Madame Roland, the strong hearted woman of the Revolution, on the cart that conveyed her to death. She looked contemptuously on the besotted people who killed their prophets and sibyls. Not a glance toward Heaven. Only one word for the earth she was quitting—"O Liberty!"

Approach the dungeon door of the Girondins. Their last night is a banquet; the only hymn, the Marseillaise! Follow Camille Desmoulins to his execution. A cool and indecent pleasantry at the trial, and a long imprecation on the road to the guillotine, were the two last dying thoughts of this dying man on his way to his last tribunal.

Hear Danton on the platform of the scaffold, at the distance of a line from God and eternity. "I have had a good time of it: let me sleep!" Then to the executioner: "You will show my head to the people: it is worthy the trouble!"

His faith, annihilation; his last sign, vanity. Behold the Frenchmen of this latter age!

What must one think of the religious sentiment of a free people, whose great figures seem thus to march in procession to annihilation, and to whom that terrible minister, death itself, recalls neither the threatenings nor promises of God!

The Republic of these men without a God has quickly been stranded. The liberty, won by so much heroism, and by so much genius, has not found in France a conscience to shelter it, a God to avenge it, a people to defend it against that atheism which has been called glory. All ended in a soldier, and some apostate republicans can not be heroic. When you terrify it, it bends; when you would buy it, it sells itself. It would be very foolish to immolate itself. Who would take any heed?—the people ungrateful, and God non-existent. So finished atheist revolutions.

Difficulties are whetstones to sharpen our fortitude.

Poverty wants some, luxury many, and avarice all things.

The sun should shine on festivals, but the moon is the light for rains.

A man is in the sight of God what his habitual and cherished wishes are.

To compliment vice is but one remove from worshiping the devil.

Moderation is the silken string running through the pearl chain of all the virtues.

He who labors for mankind, without a care for himself, has already begun his immortality.

True prayer is not a human, but a celestial gift; the fruit of the Holy Spirit praying in us and with us.

If you meddle with Diana of the Ephesians, you must expect to lose the friendship of Demetrius.

No situation is so exposed to perils and evils as that of one who has to conduct others, unless he himself has God for his guide.

The vulgar mind fancies that judgment is implied chiefly in the capacity to censure; and yet there is no judgment so exquisite as that which knows properly how to approve.

Justice is the great but simple principle, and the whole secret of success in all government; as absolutely essential to the training of an infant as to the control of a mighty nation.

That audacity, which is one of the essentials of genius, has always laughed at what the conventional would describe as decorum. Genius is discovery! How should it submit the training of its eyes to those by whom no discoveries have yet been made?

A MISER.—An old doctor named Bolaino, who was supposed to possess neither money nor property, died recently in St. Louis, and on searching his premises $10,200 were found concealed in different places. It was also said that during the public sale of his effects a man was seen leaving the building in a hasty manner with two small bags, supposed to contain money.

TACT.—A lady who was noted for her placid temper being asked how she contrived to maintain such equanimity, said pleasantly, that she did not wish her face furrowed by untimely wrinkles. Think of this, ladies! Every time you scold your husband you add a wrinkle to your features!

Ascent of Mount Vesuvius from Pompeii, Afoot and Alone.

The curling smoke at Vesuvius for several days had seemed to invite me to try the ascent, and after "feeling up" and recruiting for the toil, I got ready for a start. I had got all the advice necessary from those who had been up, and fancied I could see my way clearly. One said I must have two guides, another said that I needed three and a donkey. I inquired the expense, and the time necessary, and the route, and thought that to pay from six to fifteen dollars for a little help on a journey that at farthest was but a few hours, or say one day, seemed to me a little uncalled for and extravagant. I had been in a number of places where few Christian men had been before, and I thought I could go in other places in a way of my own, and not as others did. So I took the railroad—Strada Ferrata—at 7 in the morning; stopped a moment at Procida, close to Herculaneum, left Castellamare on the right, and in half an hour the guard sung out "Com-pa-a-ye!"

There it was; not as in the days of Pliny the Elder, but after being exhumed from a burial of eighteen hundred years under the ashes of Vesuvius. But I came here to climb Vesuvius, not to describe Pompeii. The summit was 12 miles distant, and 4000 feet high. I took a bee-line as near as possible, but it was far from straight. Roads in different directions led me a zigzag march; now in sight of the mountain, and next out of sight behind high walls of lava. A word touching this lava. It is quarried out here for building-stone, and much resembles granite. It is far more solid and heavy, and less porous than any I had seen before. The walls or dykes by the road side were often twelve feet high. There was no regular road from Pompeii to the mountain top, but I took the general direction, and when I saw the mountain top to my right, I would take the next right hand road. I passed through one small, mean looking village, about four or five miles from Pompeii. Here I stopped, and added a little to my stock of provant, as Capt. Dugald Dalgetty would say. I got my wine bottle replenished, and bought a few apples.

The roads were all deep sand—black volcanic sand—thrown out of the mountain. The ground gradually began to rise, and soon I came in full view of the smoking summit, and did not lose sight it of again. From the level and well cultivated fields and vineyards about Pompeii, the ground became more broken, with a waste here and there, not enclosed, and then vineyards again, and little lig gardens. I met and passed many people, some riding on donkeys, but none spoke to me. At last I came to a little thicket of wood—oak and chestnut—where some women were gathering sticks. The roads dwindled into paths, and the paths grew less and less distinct, and soon I came to the last fence, having left the last house a little way back. Here I cut me a cane, a stout one, one destined to figure as a walking-stick in Yankee land. I used due caution in my theft, for, I presume, had I been seen, it might have cost me dear. I was somewhat practiced, and, of course, a rather expert thief—in the cane line I mean—for I had cut classic cudgels before, and I meant to "cut and come again." My oak was about five feet long, and it did me yeoman's service. I sat down by the side of a wall of lava, and overhauled my provender, and took a rest of half an hour. Except some scanty shrubbery, to be mentioned hereafter, there was not a bush, nor a single obstruction to the top of Vesuvius, now nearly four miles from me. Three-quarters of a mile over a gentle ascent, nearly level, with ridges of lava and hard sand, brought me to the mountain proper, just to its base. I had walked over eight miles from Pompeii and risen about a thousand feet.

To those who have not ascended volcanoes I will mention the steeper portion of the mountain is in two separate flights. Those volcanoes that I have seen—and Vesuvius, though not a lofty mountain, is a good type of the class—rise from the base two-thirds or three-fourths of the whole height in a pretty regular ascent, and there is a sort of shoulder or resting-place. This first ascent of Vesuvius is about 2000 feet, and, as a guess, nearly on an angle of 40 degrees with the perpendicular. This ascent was in alternate ridges and valleys, the edges being slightly covered with grass, and the valleys having a stunted growth of bushes. The ridges seemed to be worn into paths, and up one of them I took my way. There was mighty little variety in it, and one step followed another, with the long cane to push against and the grass to pull upon, till I surmounted the first and longest stretch of the mountain.

The view from here was magnificent; the deserted streets and roofless houses of Pompeii, the white cottages of Castellamare, the rocks of Sorrento, the whole city and bay of Naples, and the islands of the Mediterranean, being plainly in sight. On this shoulder of the mountain, which may be likened to the shoulders of a man, it was nearly level, and a walk over rough lava about a quarter of a mile brought me to the neck or foot of the cone. This cone or crowning summit of the mountain looks from Naples to be about 200 feet high, but I found it at least a thousand! You may believe it was steep. At the foot of it I rested for half an hour, and there I demolished the last of my solids, and had left about a pint of wine. It was a light, delicious beverage, and not the abominable mixture of logwood and mahogany juice and bad whisky that is so often sold for "wine" among us.

Far above me, near the summit, I could see several pedestrians, who appeared to have ascended far to my right. Of all slow traveling, this was the chief. I could not go more than ten or fifteen steps before I had to rest. The process of resting was easy. All I had to do was to fall down, or I should have said up, against the side of the mountain, and lay there until my fatigue was gone. The "ground" was generally smooth. It was a fine volcanic sand, packed hard and close by the wind. I had to strike my heels and toes in to keep from slipping. You can judge how steep it was when I tell you that in lying down against the side of the mountain, unless I stuck my toes in, or had my cane fast in the earth below me, I would often slide sidewise right down the mountain.

Time wore on, and my strength wore off; and I began to see some little abatement of the steepness of the mountain. Now came the peril. As I approached the summit, and, as it proved, near the fiery crater, the ground grew soft, smoke came out of it, a strong smell of sulphur was emitted, and it seemed as if there was danger of breaking directly through into the fiery bowels of the volcano. Such a fate would be like that of Empedocles, but in my case without his fame.

I could see tracks about, but where safety lay was more than I could tell. But I had gone voluntarily without a guide, and now I had to take it as I could find it. I picked my way carefully, now-and-then going nearly over-shoe deep, and saw the smoke burst out as I drew my foot away. The top was close at hand, and on arriving at the edge as it were, there yawned the horrible crater, at least five hundred feet deep. It was, I should judge, near a thousand feet across, and ran down to a point in the centre like a funnel. All through it could be seen fire, sulphur, flames and smoke; literally a pit of fire and brimstone. Let it not be thought I am describing what I believe of another world, but what I have seen of this one. I had accomplished my object, and stood on the edge of the crater of Vesuvius.

I had been alone all the way, and not a mortal could I distinguish, though my eyes took in a visible horizon of at least three hundred miles in circumference. After I was up it seemed striding, but the ascent had been nothing matter. My last drop of wine had disappeared long before I reached the summit, and I could not, as on the summit of Hecla, take a long pull and drink to all creation, or even to "the girl I left behind me." There I rested, and here we'll all rest, and next week I'll tell you how I got down again; and "thereby hangs a tale." [Boston Post.

TOUCHING INCIDENT.—The following is an extract from a letter written by a sailor in the Baltic fleet to his wife in England. The incident is narrated with that simplicity and purity of expression which conveys every idea and image in the most effective manner:

"Every man on board volunteered, so the captain picked a crew, and I was sent ashore with the marines. There were regular troops on the bank who fired on us as we pulled to land, but the broadsides of the ——, what with the shell and what with the smoke, covered our landing. We dispersed at a few hundred yards' distance from the beach to keep the coast clear while the boat's crew made prizes of the guns. The enemy had the advantage of the wood, and also knowing the country well, and a troop of them showed in advance. We were ordered to fire. I took steady aim, and fired on my man at about 60 yards. He fell like a stone. At the same time a broadside from the —— went in among the trees, and the enemy disappeared, we could scarce tell how. I felt as though I must go up to him, to see whether he was dead or alive. He lay quite still, and I was more afraid of him lying so than when he stood facing me a few minutes before. It's a strange feeling to come over you all at once that you have killed a man. He had unbuttoned his jacket, and was pressing his hand over the front of his chest where the wound was. He breathed hard, and the blood poured from the wound and also from his mouth every breath he took. His face was white as death, and his eyes looked so big and bright as he turned them and stared at me; I shall never forget it. He was a fine young fellow, not more than five and twenty. I went down on my knees beside him, and my breast was so full, as though my own heart would burst. He had a real English face, and did not look like an enemy. What I felt I never can tell, but if my life would have saved his, I believe I should have given it. I laid his head on my knee, and he grasped hold of my hand and tried to speak, but his voice was gone. I could not tell a word he said, and every time he tried to speak the blood poured out so, I knew it would soon be over. I am not ashamed to say that I was worse than he, for he never shed a tear, and I couldn't help it. His eyes were closing when a gun was fired from the —— to order us aboard, and that roused him. He pointed to the beach, where the boat was just pushing off with the guns which we had taken, and where our marines were waiting to man the second boat, and then he pointed to the wood where the enemy was concealed. Poor fellow! he little thought how I had shot him down. I was wondering how I could leave him to die and no one near him, when he had some thing like a convulsion for a moment, and then his face rolled over, and without a sigh, he was gone. I trust the Almighty has received his soul. I laid his head gently down on the grass and left him. It seemed so strange when I looked at him for the last time; I seme how thought of every thing I had heard about the Turks and the Russians, and the rest of them; but all that seemed so far off and the dead man so near."

DIGNITY OF LABOR.—We have heard among the idlers who float like drift-wood on the surface of society, contemptuous flings at those whose heritage is toil. They sneer at the hard and swarthy hand of labor, but they forget that, of all that is useful, luxurious or beautiful on this earth, toil has been the creator; that, from the marble palace to the "whits kids" of the tailor's most exquisite walking-rigs, all has been wrought out by human hands. Much of it, too, at a painful cost to human hearts far more sensitive to the real dignity of manhood than the most bedizzened and perfumed of these scorners of labor.

It is the toil of these hard hands, then pitiful idler and sneerer, that has reared empires in the old, and planted republics in the wildernesses of the new world; that has hewn the rock in the quarry and built the temples and monuments of nations; that has achieved whatever fame belongs to genius, with the sculptor's chisel, the painter's pencil and the poet's pen; that has winged the ocean with white sails and exchanged the products of every clime; that has measured the circuits of the stars, and plumed the lightnings to descend upon wires to be the new Mercury of the world.

Labor! why man of idleness, labor gave you being, rocked your cradle, and has nursed your pampered life. Without it, the woven silk and wool on your back would but be in the silk-worm's nest and in the fleeces of the shepherd's fold. For the meanest thing that ministers to human want, save the air of heaven, man is indebted to toil. It is only the drones who toil not, who infest the hives of activity like masses of corruption and decay. The lords of the earth, if they would but know it, are the working men, who can build up or cast down at their will, and who can retort the sneer of the "soft-handed," by pointing to their trophies wherever art, science, civilization and humanity are known. Work on, man of toil! thy loyalty is yet to be acknowledged, as labor rises toward the highest throne of power. Work on, and, in the language of a true poet, he

"A glorious man,' and thy renown shall be Borne by the winds and waters through all time,
While there's a keel to carve it on the sea,
From clime to clime,
Or God ordains that idleness is crime!"

[New York Mirror.

THE LUNAR WORLD.—Mr. Crampton, in a little book entitled "The Lunar World," draws the following interesting picture of the appearance which the surface of that satellite would present to a visitor from the terrestrial globe:

"Choose the period of the last quarter, and direct our way to that dark shadowy spot marked N in the map, and situate at the north-eastern portion of the lunar globe; it is the Mare Imbrium, or Sea of Showers, as it is called, though no water is to be found there and no shower ever cools or moistens its barren surface. It is about seven hundred miles in extent every way. Let us cast our eyes around, and what do we see? a boundless plain or desert, stretching away as far as the eye can reach on every side, save in one or two points, where a chain of lofty mountains can be perceived, whose brilliant, pointed summits, glittering in the sunbeams, just appear upon the distant horizon. The light that glares upon the plain is intense, and the heat of a tropical fierceness, for no cloud shelters us. By that light we may perceive, scattered over the plain, an infinite number of circular pits, of different sizes and depths, varying from a few yards to some hundreds in diameter, and sunk in the body or crust of the planet; some of them but a few feet and others to an unknown and immeasurable depth. Above the sky is black, out of which the sun gleams like a red-hot ball; and the stars sparkle like diamonds, for no atmosphere such as ours exists, to give by its refractive and reflective powers the delicious blue to its heavens, and the softened shade to its landscape. The lights and shades are indented upon its features deep and dark, or intensely bright; no softening away in the distance, no gentle and beautiful perspective; no lovely twilight, morning or evening, stealing over or away from the scene. All the shadows are abrupt, sudden; all the outlines sharp, clear; appearing eternally near even when really distant. No sound follows our footfall or is ever heard in that silent place; for there is no atmosphere to conduct it; no fresh breeze blows on its mountain tops, sighs through its burning deserts, ruffles through the brilliant green of forests or waves over meadows; the silence of death broods over its arid wastes and rocky shores, against which no tides or billows break."

To broil ham properly, the slices should be first soaked in hot water, dried in a cloth, and broiled on a gridiron over a clear fire.

THE NOBILITY OF LABOR.—This is a text on which eloquence may dwell, and argument sound and serious be deduced. It is a fact lamentably true—too true we fear for the good of the country—that there is a feeling, continually on the increase, that manual labor is ignoble, and worthy only of a slave. Gentlemen too frequently are judged by the texture of the coat they have on their back, by the delicacy of their hands, the fairness of their skin; while in truth it is the heart that constitutes the true gentleman, and the nearest a man were le no mbre a test af his gentility than the beard is an index of manhood. The meaning of the word "gentleman" is a meek man, being composed of the adjective gentle and the noun man. Society has so corrupted this word that its definition now depends upon the tastes of those defining it. Labor and gentility are not antagonistic. The connection between them, in their true significations, is so strong that they are almost inseparable. Every man who labors is not a gentleman, but no man can be a gentleman without labor in some way, though the spheres in which men labor are as various as the human face. Some of the greatest men were the hardest workers. It is by this means that they become great. Who would think of having fruitful crops without labor? The soil must be cultivated or it will not produce. So, great men are not a spontaneous production of Nature, but they are formed by the severest toil, the strictest self-denial, and the most active energy. Mechanics, laborers and farmers are often snarled at because their hands are horny, their clothes soiled; but do these men reflect that it is these very mechanics, laborers and farmers who mainly contribute to sustain the Government? It is upon them that our safety or honor rests; they are the strong arm of the State, the fortifications of the Republic. The man who sneers at them because of their calling in life, and derides manual labor and toil, is no honor to the race of humanity, a mere popinjay, whose mind is cramped by the foolish whims and caprices of fashion. Has one of these mock-gentlemen ever contributed his mite to the support of the great mass of humanity? Is the world benefited by his existence, or is he a burden and curse to it? All must come to the latter conclusion.

Labor is one of the first commands of God! Idleness is deprecated in Holy Writ—the one is honorable, the other dishonorable. Labor strengthens the physical constitution; it gives power to the mind; it ennobles the feelings; and makes great men and good citizens. Idleness, on the contrary, impairs the body, enervates the mind, destroys natural integrity, promotes dissipation, and is a source of incalculable evil. It will, on examination, be found to be the root of intemperance and debauchery, and in many instances of crime. It wrecks the physical system, debases the mental faculties, fills our prisons and poor-houses, and cumbers the earth with a race of beings who live upon the sweat of others' brows, and pass off the stage of life without benefiting others or developing themselves. Is not labor, then, more genteel than idleness? [Anderson (S. C.) Gazette.

THE EFFECT OF MUSIC ON ANIMALS.—Many well-substantiated stories are told of the effects of music upon the animal creation which seem to be deserving of the fullest credence. Some curious person once collected in a farm-yard a variety of animals, consisting of a cat, a dog, a horse, an ass, a hind, cows, small birds and fowls, and tried the effect of music upon them. The cat did not appear to be effected; the horse was sensibly influenced, raising up his head and showing evident signs of interest; the dog looked steadfastly at the player during the whole time of the continuance of the music; the ass showed no signs of being touched; the birds were in perfect ecstasy, while the cock and hens did not appear to be at all interested. Lizards are said to be affected by music, and a traveler in the island of Madeira relates that he has assembled a number of them by the power of a musical instrument. Negroes there, when they wish to catch them for food, accompany the chase by whistling some tune, which always has the effect of drawing large numbers towards them.

Stedman, in his "Expedition to Surinam," describes certain sybils among the negroes who can charm or conjure down from the trees certain serpents, and cause them to wreathe about their arms, necks and breasts, listening to their voices. The sacred writers speak of the charming of adders and serpents; and nothing is more notorious than that the East Indians will rid houses of the fiercest and most venomous snakes by playing on a flute, and thus drawing them from their holes. These anecdotes are fully confirmed by Sir William Jones, in his curious dissertation on the musical modes of the Hindoos. Mice are particularly susceptible to the charms of music, and instances have been related where they became almost frantic at hearing "the melody of sweet sounds." A French officer, confined in the Bastile, used to amuse himself by playing upon a musical instrument, and soon found that he drew an audience of mice, and even spiders about him. Another inmate of the same prison diverted himself by placing a fly near the web of a spider, and then playing on his bagpipe; when the insect would namn nut and feed. By removing the fly farther and farther off, he succeeded at last in attracting the spider close to his knee, and it never failed to appear at the first sound of the music.

Lions have been known to leave their prey to hear music, and instances are not unfrequent in England of drovers going before a herd of animals with bagpipe and violin, in order to attract them. All accounts, however, agree in stating that the ass is perfectly impervious to the influence of music, but that nearly if not quite every other animal is more or less susceptible of its power. Exercises also teaches us that this is the case. Horses have been trained to dance with almost faultless precision, and the powerful effect music has on human beings would, by a parity of reasoning, show that it must operate to some extent on brutes. Saul was soothed by the harp of David, and the fierceness of Achilles was allayed by a similar power. Shakspeare says music can

"——ravage savage ears,
And plant in tyrants mild humility."

The fabulous stories of Orpheus, when he touched his harp, is but descriptive of the animating effect of music. Congreve thus describes it in the two following lines, which, by the way, have been brutally parodied:

"Music hath charms to sooth the savage breast;
To soften rocks, or bend the knotted oak."

[New York Sunday Times.

LITERARY FAME.—A correspondent of the Weekly News tells a story of a Parisian author, the sale of whose productions always produced him a profit. At last he became jealous of his wife, and dogged her steps. One day he gave out that he was going to Versailles, but suddenly he entered his wife's dressing-room. His unexpected entrance confounded his wife; she blushed and turned pale alternately; he was persuaded he was about denouncing that his happiness was for ever blasted; for, as he entered the room, his wife hastily locked a closet door, and thrust the key into her pocket. After a long scene, he at last forced the key from her. Unlocking the closet door, he bade his rival to come forth. No one budged. He repeated his command. No answer. He madly threw open the door, and saw—every copy of every edition of his works, uncut, unbound, untouched, piled up to the ceiling, filling every chink and corner of the closet! His wife, whom he had so wronged by his suspicions, had devoted her pin-money to the gratification of his vanity; she had for years been the "discerning public," and she had all along been the "courteous reader" to whom he never appealed in vain.

While the heathen had their gods many, and their lords many, their god of wisdom, their goddess of beauty, their god of courage, and so on, they had no god of holiness.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Christian Advocate.

Terms: $1 50 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:
SATURDAY, AUGUST 19, 1854.

HEALTH.—There is yellow fever in the city. Though not prevailing to any great extent, it is on the increase; and strangers, just now, should be very careful.

COMMUNICATIONS.—Some interesting ones on hand. Letter from Dr. P.; A Methodist: Report of Visiting Committee to Macon (Mi.) Female College, and others, will appear next week. Our Correspondents are waking up to duty.

☞ We have been put under obligations frequently for Congressional favors from our Congressman, Hon. J. PERKINS, and Senator BENJAMIN. To Senator Benjamin we are this week indebted for a folio volume, pp. 1022—"STATISTICS OF U. S. CENSUS OF 1850."

DEATH OF REV. G. L. PATTON.—A letter from Rev. P. Moelling, dated Galveston, Texas, 9th August, says: "Our beloved Brother PATTON, pastor of the Methodist Church here, died last night, after being sick only three days. Disease, inflammation of the bowels. He leaves a sorrowing and destitute wife and one little son."

Bro. GILLESPIE says: No danger was apprehended, nor even a severe attack of sickness, during Sunday and Monday; and late Monday afternoon he remarked that he thought he was improving. On Tuesday, however, his symptoms were worse. He expressed himself as certain that he would not live, and said he was not afraid to die, but was distressed at the thought of leaving his helpless family, and asked his friends to pray that he might be enabled to have more confidence in the good Providence of God in reference to them, stating that he knew he ought to trust more implicitly in the promises of God to take care of the widows and orphans of his servants.

About nine o'clock at night we went in and found him just recovering from a fainting fit, or spasm, brought on, as we supposed, by having, just before, got up from the bed. He took the writer by the hand and remarked, "I am still here, but I have been away up yonder." About an hour afterwards another spasm came on, which was very violent, and while we were holding him, he became quiet, and we found that the spirit had fled.

DEATH OF DR. PATTON.—The Holston Advocate, of 8th August, comes to us in mourning for the death of the Editor, Rev. SAMUEL PATTON, D. D, of Knoxville, Tenn. After a painful illness of two weeks, he died of Diarrhœa on Tuesday before.

ICE-BERGS OF CALV——. The Church Herald reviews, with allowable severity, our review of its Bishop's Journal, wherein a special force is brought from Vicksburg to work the "Apostolic service" at Mt. Hebron, a Presbyterian meeting house. Stress of the occasion is alleged! The Christian folks at Mt. Hebron there, must be a cool and kind folk, to stand all this:—

"This proves that the service is cumbrous and complicated! Would unt our Brother of the Advocate, supposing him to be clerical, and the super-abundance of the "odium theologicum" in his article, makes us infer it, be very glad, however competent he might be to get on very well without them, to be assisted by the pious ejaculations and ready fervor of his Methodist brethren, were he thus thus caught among the ice-bergs of Calvinism! He would, we trow, and be right thankful."

HISTORICAL SKETCHES.—The Methodists of Alabama will not fail to give heed to a call in another column, for historical and statistical materials. For such a work as Mr. BLUE will put forth, it is both a privilege and duty to furnish the required information. The preachers and members of the oldest Churches, doubtless, could gather up interesting reminiscences. So history is made up, afterward to be quoted as authority, and made the basis of various comparisons, reflections and theories, and valuable knowledge. To the courteous secretary of the Conference, Rev. T. W. Dorman, Mr. Blue will of course refer, with advantage; but much is not written in his book, that ought to appear in this Blue-book.

EXAMPLE TO LITERATI.—The late Commencement at Dickenson College passed off with unusual eclat. Professor Wentworth resigned his chair for the purpose of carrying out a long-cherished purpose of devoting himself to the missionary work in China. He will be accompanied to the Celestial Empire by two graduates, Messrs. Otis Gibson and J. B. Perrie, who are reputed to be young men of fine talents, scholarship, piety and promise.

The plan of endowing Dickenson College by the sale of scholarships, has been successful; sales having been made to the amount of $100,000.

SKETCHES OF WESTERN METHODISM; Biographical, Historical and Miscellaneous. Illustrative of Pioneer Life: By Rev. J. B. FINLEY.

This book, forwarded by mail, has reached our table with a welcome. It is what it purports to be, and consequently has the elements of a fresh and strong interest and a heroic moral tone. The names of Learner Blackman and James Axley arrest the attention of a South-western reader. It seems Natchez, Miss., was the point at which Methodism was begun to be introduced in the South-west. Some valuable memorials of past men and things might be gathered up there for the Advocate? We should like to have them.

OUR LOVE-FEASTS.

Such is the name of a simple and impressive practice of the Methodists. It was recommended by Wesley, but it is older than Wesleyanism.

The best elements of Class-meetings are in them, and if ever the former cease, Love-feasts will, by necessity, increase, to supply the spiritual demand. No one speaks but as the Spirit moves. His speaking takes its own direction unto edification. Every one counts it a privilege to be admitted. For when once the heart-things, both new and old, begin to be brought out of the various treasuries, all will be interested; and those who are slow to speak will be swift to hear.

We have never taken our seat in one of these meetings without realizing, in its innermost and pleasantest form, the family religion of the Church. This is such a company Jesus manifests himself to, so as he does not unto the world. Only those are present who are children of God or trying earnestly to be. The pledge of mutual love is given in bread and water partaken of—the pledge plain yet striking, that all bitterness and anger and wrath and envy and malice are put away. The most stammering tongue ought to feel loosened, the most timid heart assured. None are here but friends. The purpose of the meeting, as well as the precautions under which it gathered, disarms criticism. No corner has a seat there. The spirit of prayer and sympathy is all around you. Now tell what God has done for your soul.

Our Love-feasts have suffered much by neglecting these precautions. Carelessness of the Discipline, or a contempt of it, in the affectation of doing things openly, has led to this. Prompted by a false estimate of their rights, or a vulgar curiosity, some, who are not members, call for open doors. Loose members respond to this. The pastor, under an outside pressure, shrinks from his duty, and no door-keeper is appointed. So a promiscuous company is at the Love-feast. This appears, may be, in the opening prayer—many not kneeling, or by the listless gaze, or whisper, or sneering smile. They have no part in this matter, except as spectators. They refuse even the tokens that are handed them, though the implied pledge is only good-will. In what does this meeting differ from others? The preacher might as well ascend the stand and begin the ordinary services—for the congregation is present.

"But," says some red republican, "I don't like these private meetings—this closing of doors." He is so far gone we can not have hope or patience in reasoning with him. Of course his family affairs belong to the neighborhood; and every body ought to be admitted to the sacrament in this free country. And all the world is turned out doors, by turning all the world in.

There are those who object more plausibly, but their objection is no sonndor. "If the meeting be good, let the largest number share it. Sinners need it most. Those who come to mock, may go away to pray." If the meeting be good! But have you not overlooked important conditions for a good meeting of this sort—a good Love-feast? Fire can act on water, if they be brought together under proper conditions. Otherwise, the fire may be put out. Where is that confidence that should be provided for in a Love-feast? It is gone—all gone. Those who on ordinary occasions are heard, will now make up the staple of speaking. Even they will hesitate before a promiscuous company, to go deeply into the peculiar phases of their experience. The delicate, the distrustful, the desponding, the consciously ignorant—many who would find a blessing in witnessing for Christ and contribute to the grace of others—are silent. This class, when their utterance is encouraged, impart to our Love-feasts a charming freshness, and make new and often deep revelations of God's dealings. But these nicely strung harps are hushed: these fountains sealed. We must follow the Discipline in the constitution of our Love-feasts, if we would have good Love-feasts.

Love-feasts are for narrative and not doctrine; for giving experience and not preaching. A disposition to fall off into a general exhortation to the Church, or to untie a theological knot, is indulged to their damage, and should be checked. Every heart has its peculiar knowledge; the humblest Christian's life, its incidents and movings under the great and various conflicts between the Spirit and the powers of sin. They ought to be told for the glory of God's grace. If speakers would confine themselves to this, they would always interest and make a contribution to the knowledge of others. One would not run into another, except as the streamlet into the river. Individuality would maintain an unflagging interest and a widening circle of acquaintance with spiritual things. Every converted soul is a distinct wonder; and so it is felt when we come to know its history. By what strange ways God has brought that soul to salvation and now keeps it! The mourner hears and is instructed. The doubting find comforting coincidences of experience. Love flows apace, and the whole body is knit together.

The propriety of Christians going back of conversions, is doubted on the supposition that one's experience previous to conversion is almost invariably wrong, and the effect of telling a wrong experience would be to cause the anxious inquirer to strive after the same experience

It is sufficiently answered that such would be the effect, if Christians should urge their experience as indispensably necessary; if they should tell mourners that, in order to obtain salvation, they must remain weeks and months in a state of deep conviction, mourn a long time over their sins, and perform many good works.

We like to hear of the beginning, the setting out. And so eventful does every redeemed soul feel that crisis to have been, it is hard to make up the narrative without it. When and where awakened—converted? By what instrumentality? At the home altar, under a sermon, by a Providential dispensation? Many a parent has there resolved so to live that his children may be brought to Christ by the same means. The Minister hearing how that heart was reached, takes a hint thereby to point his own arrows, and feels increased confidence in the efficacy of the preached word. The turns, the lights, the shadows, the helps and hindrances—bring them forth. "Thus far the Lord has led me on." We never know a Love-feast to progress far in this direction before the hearts of all were burning, and tears flowing, and witnesses rising up as fast as they could be heard. And all felt it irresistibly—this is Religion: it is of God.

How much good has the "Pilgrim's Progress" done, by showing the workings of the natural heart and the power of the means of grace! It is as if one had gone before and learned the way, and had come again to shew the way to others wishing to go. So far was Bunyan from withholding his experience previous to his conversion, that he dwells upon it at length, giving in detail each difficulty that he met with on his way to the Celestial City.

The Love-feast recognizes the preciousness and individuality of every Christian's experience; and by confidence and sympathy would draw it forth, for God's glory and the Church's edification. In the unfoldings of such experience we have the best diagnosis of the depraved heart and a near view of the remedy and creed. Religion after all is a personal matter. It can not be carried beyond experience. It therefore becomes the Church to keep in view experimental religion: religion not in the abstract but concrete: religion as it is seen taking hold of and operating upon man under all the aspects and influences of this real life of ours.

Often proposing this personal test may be unpopular with those who can not abide it, but the practice is wholesome. It will keep doctrines sound, put a point and an edge on preaching, and maintain a pervading vitality. Hence the value of Class-meetings and of that kindred means of grace we are upon.

Christianity as enacted in the individual, grace contemplated in its objective reality—these are the Love-feast developments. Cultivated apart from this, a theology becomes sickly, sentimental, morbid, impracticable. It is like the dissecting room and clinical lectures to medical science.

We would, therefore, magnify personal experience, and whatever economy of the Church provides for its study and manifestations. Keep prominent the experimental feature of religion. Neglect not the LOVE-FEASTS.

ENGLISH METHODISM.

ONE HUNDRED AND ELEVENTH CONFERENCE.

The Watchman, 27th ult., is before us.

The Committee Meetings, preliminary to the opening of Conference, began on 19th, at Birmingham. The Committees are numerous and able, composed jointly of Ministers and influential laymen; much the same as the Joint Committees of the Louisiana Conference. In them is shaped and pretty definitely settled the business afterward submitted to and ratified by Conference.

The Watchman speaks of the present a a transition-period in Methodism. It is so in two senses. It is a period of transition, in the first place, from the exhaustion following agitation to fresh life and increased energy. In the second place, its financial plans are undergoing a change. The debt and credit system is being abandoned; and henceforth no expenses are to be contracted in any department beyond what means are at once forthcoming to pay. "No debt, on any account," is to be, from this time, the maxim.

The bold conception, a year ago, to raise £100,000, as a Relief and Extension fund, for the absolute enfranchisement of the Church, in all its interests and departments, is near success. But for the war, its completion would perhaps now be reported. Up to this period, £84,000 have been promised to the Fund, and a fortnight before the Conference, until the meeting of which the second instalment of the sums promised did not fall due, about £56,000 of this sum had been actually paid over to the Treasurors of the Fund.

It appears that Wesleyan Methodism has now 447 Day Schools, of which 246 are taught by trained Teachers, and in which 42,076 children receive instruction, at an annual cost in salaries to Teachers of £19,228 0s. 10d., of which no less a proportion than £15,098 3s. 6d. has been supplied by the children's pence. These items show an increase upon the previous year of 82 schools, of 41 trained Teachers, of 2,860 scholars, of £1,664 13s. 11d. paid in salaries, and of £740 2s. 1d. received from the children. They number now 4,099 Sunday Schools, 401,763 Scholars, taught by 70,655 Teachers, at an annual cost of £24 652 17s. 9d., of which number of Scholars 159,648 are reported to attend other Day-schools.

The relation of the Church to Education, in this country, is an open question as yet. Not so with our trans-atlantic brethren. They are not satisfied at that last figure and fact, and aspire to furnish education comprehensively.

On 26th July the Conference opened. Dr. Farrar was elected President, and Dr. Hannah, Secretary. This was the one hundred and eleventh Annual Assembly. After the devotional exercises, the first business is necessarily the ascertaining what vacancies the year has caused in the "legal hundred"—the sonnte of Methodism.

Ten vacancies, two by resignation, five by death, and three by superannuation. Into these vacancies of the corporate body, two Ministers only, according to rule, could be chosen by nomination, against eight by seniority.

Setting off the Mission Churches of France and Australia into independent organizations, has succeeded so well, it appears analogous arrangements are determined on in regard to the Missions in Eastern Canada, and that the principle of that arrangement is to be ultimately applied to other British North American Missions.

The Church is wiser than the State in this matter, or it acts easier. The Watchman says:—"We are strongly tempted to indulge in some speculation, as to the probable bearing of these movements for the ecclesiastical independence of our older Mission Churches, not only on those churches themselves, but on the Society's ability to enter more fully upon the work of evangelizing strictly heathen countries, and grappling more worthily with the necessities of the great continents of heathenism."

Methodist Press.

The Baptist Church practices close communion; i. e., admits only its own members to the Lord's Supper. The Editor of the Richmond Advocate discusses this policy in its bearings upon success. He asks—

Is close communion a cause of the success of the Baptist Church?

Are its members multiplied, and its denominational interests strengthened and augmented by its adherence to this practice?

Would it continue to increase and multiply if it were to abandon close communion?

The first two he would answer with a qualified affirmative, the last negatively. An article of a Baptist paper is the basis of remarks, in which it appears that in England, where free communion was introduced by the liberal soul of ROBERT HALL, and continues considerably to this day, the Baptists have not increased as in Wales, where close communion prevails, and has; though their English brethren have, otherwise, superior advantages. The inference in favor of the close practice is doubted by Dr. LEE:

Two facts are presented for consideration: First, Free communion Baptists decline: Second, Close communion Baptists grow and prosper. Their relations to the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper is the assigned cause of this difference. It is singular, but it is presented as a fact, that a class of Baptists who recognize a common christian right to the holy Sacrament, who, in that solemn service, recognize the fellowship of the saints, and joyfully partake with Christ's people, not of their own communion, in commemorating his death—that these derive from this practice, or the religious principles which prompt it, the elements of denominational decay, and do actually decline in number, strength and efficiency: while another class of Baptists, whose principles disavow the religious character of "other evangelical denominations," and who deny their right to the Sacrament, and refuse to commune with them, do, nevertheless, find in, or derive from this sectarian exclusiveness, a source of continually augmenting power and expanding success. These grow in proportion to their adherence to the principle of non-communion with other evangelical denominations: the others decline in proportion as they practice intercommunion with other evangelical churches. If these be facts, and they are so presented, we repeat it, they are very singular.

Doubtless the spiritual instincts and sympathies of religion prompt the practice of free communion among those who love the Lord Jesus Christ. We believe our Baptist friends deny themselves much in carrying out this policy. It is a yoke that lies heavily. They would get rid of it, if they could. But the immersion dogma forces them into isolation, against their better feelings, their deeper convictions and their usual practice. Our Richmond cotemporary does not leave the subject as "singular." He asserts, to our mind, that close communion, per se, cannot be the cause of the success of those who practice it, if their success be the success of the pure gospel. Premising that it may seem hard, he offers as a solution of "these singular facts," a prevalent opinion:—

We refer to the opinion that the principle of close communion has stronger affinities for sectarianism than for christianity, and affiliates more closely with denominational success than with christian unity, or the general identity and brotherhood of true believers in Christ. It is a Baptist rather than a Christian principle, appealing more strongly to the selfishness of sect than to the sweet charities inspired by the love of Christ. It is a nostrum, kept secret for the purpose of restricting the profits to the proprietor. It is to the Baptist, what apostolical succession is to the Protestant Church, a scheme of augmentation by high pretensions and exclusive claims.

We hope the day will come before the day of judgment, when this wall of partition may be taken away; and that less exclusive and as we think more scriptural views, of baptism may come to the relief of the close communionists. To our relief as well as theirs, for it is a mutual deprivation of fellowship. If views are unchanged, then may a liberal denominational policy take the place of the present one.—A Baptist and an Episcopal clergyman once lived neighbors. Being sensible and pious men, they lived peaceably. It fell on a time, the Baptist held a communion, and his Episcopal brother was present. He hastened to him to apologise, for not inviting him to commune: believed him to be a christian and all that—"but we do not consider that you have ever been baptised." "Pray don't give yourself any uneasiness," replied High Church, reciprocating the christian assurances fully—"for had you invited me I could not have gone, as we do not consider that you have ever been ordained."

If there be a German newspaper about Charleston, the Southern Advocate is in a fair way to stir up its wrath. The Staats-Zeitung of this city belches forth upon the article that appeared in this paper written by "A German," exposing the false and hurtful character of the self-styled Reformers. Yet that article represents the well meaning, sober and safe class of our foreign born citizens. The loger beer sort, infidel headed, pig headed, and hot headed denounce this better class, because they will not go their excesses. Our Charleston cotemporary thus scents these Reformers and the OBJECT set forth in the platform—to reform representation and put down slavery and Jesuitism:—

Object! to reform popular representation! We are obliged to them—we have not yet learned that it needed reformation, except it might be in a way that would perhaps exclude many of them from direct representation. Slavery is under ban, because a white man does not like to do what he sees a negro do—work—and if he does, he loses his dignity! Slavery tends to create an aristocracy. This, of course would be ruinous; and we must accept a German-ocracy or an Irish-ocracy, or some other Foreign-ocracy in its stead. The party is opposed to Jesuitism: of course—all infidels are—because they hope thus to blind Protestants to their ulterior designs; but they are not opposed to it as Jesuitism merely—but as one form of christianity. They hate Christ and his Gospel, and no less, every form of his religion.

Dr. RYERSON, an eminent Wesleyan Minister of Canada, was reported to have left the Church. It appears that he retired from the ministry to its lay ranks! Zion's Herald explains the case and expresses its regret that he could not have felt satisfied with the toleration afforded to his opinions, and have remained in the ministry:—

The reasons which led him to this important step, we were unable to learn, until they were sent to us the other day, in a pamphlet published by the Dr. himself. This pamphlet contains a brief statement and defence of the peculiar opinions he entertains, together with the correspondence which passed between him and the President of the Conference, in relation to his retirement from the ministry. From these documents it appears that Dr. Ryerson believes, that the baptized children of our people, are properly members of our Church, and ought to be acknowledged and treated as such. He also believes that attendance on class meetings ought not to be made a condition of membership in the Church of Christ. As his reasons for this latter opinion, he assigns, 1. The absence of any such condition in the Scriptures; 2. Mr. Wesley's never having made, or intended to make, attendance on class meeting a condition of church membership, he having expressly asserted the class meeting to be a "prudential help, not essential, not of divine institution;" and 3. that the general rules of the Society do not make such attendance a condition of membership.

These views Dr. Ryerson has for some years past pressed on the attention of the Conference, but has not succeeded in convincing his brethren of their soundness. Failing in this, and feeling that he cannot conscientously enforce the rule on class meetings, he retires from the ministry, frankly and kindly stating his convictions, and without the least alienation of affection from the Wesleyan body, of which he still remains a member, and to whose theology and general usages he is as strongly attached as ever. He does not even eschew the class meeting as a useful and profitable means of grace; but pleads for it earnestly, provided, only, attendance upon it be not made a condition of membership in the Church.

TEMPERANCE IN TEXAS.

The "No-License" law has triumphed in Texas. From every part of the State from which we have had the pleasure of hearing, there has been a large mejority in its favor—many who were in the habit of drinking, and others who sold such liquors, nobly sustained the "No-License" law.

Now will this law be sustained? We hope it will. Good citizens will abide by the publicly expressed will of the mejority. The State is too democratic to admit of a doubt on that subject. Texians are law abiding. Those who were opposed to the law, had the privilege of using their influence against it.

But the law has received the sanction of the people, and it must and will be sustained. Those engaged in the traffic might and ought to set a noble example of obedience to the laws of the land.

Revival Intelligence.

GLENVILLE CT., ALA. CON.—Rev. J. W. SHORES, Pastor, August 11, writes: "We have had an interesting meeting at Anthony Chapel—more than ordinarily interesting. The Church was greatly revived and blessed. Some eight or ten conversions and accessions to the membership. Bros. CROWELL, JORDAN and BARNET, local preachers, and Bros. EWBANK and WILLIAMSON, of the Conference, labored with us faithfully."

WARSAW CT., ALA. CON.—Rev. R. Y. REW, pastor, writes 9th inst.: "We have just closed a protracted meeting at Memphis. We had a time of great power, and there were added to the Church twenty-six whites and nine blacks. To God be all the praise."

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

THE STATEMENT.

WOODVILLE, Miss., Aug. 9, 1854.

MR. EDITOR—Instant upon the reading of the "Statement" in the Advocate of the 5th, I noticed important omissions, and hasten to correct them. The statement should have appeared as the Report of a Committee appointed under a resolution of the Joint Board of Trustees and Visitors of Centenary College, to take into consideration the matter and the manner of Dr. Barker's acceptance and resignation of the Presidency of the College.

Another resolution, ordering the publication of the report in the N. O. Christian Advocate, should have been referred to.

By the publication of this you will relieve the statement somewhat of its present bald and rather unintelligible appearance.

Respectfully, JOHN W. BURRUSS.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

CORRESPONDENCE UP THE RIVER.

August 10.

Baton Rouge, which being interpreted is red stick; the only place of the name in the world, and important to children learning geography, as the Capital of Louisiana. The State House is the first thing you see, whether going up or coming down the river. Ascending, it may be seen from the hurricane roof more than nine miles. As the French say of queer man, the architecture is bizarre. It is unique here in this country. There is one mark of true art about it as seen in the distance and from the river; it seems to be without foundations, and to grow out of the ground it stands on, as naturally as the heath-like eminence it occupies. This feature and some others are Gothic, but I have never met any one who could tell me what the style should be called as a whole. With its towers, four in number, its fantastic windows, and gingerbread work generally, it reminds us of "the house that Jack built," and with its new white stucco, it is either a burlesque or imitation of those old castles that were in the brain and days of good Don Quixote, and upon which young school misses expend no small amount of dullness and crayons. The building has more faces then the old double-countenanced god of the Romans. It apparently fronts every way, looking out at all points of the compass; a decided don't-care sort of vigilance, as if it cared little which end it stands on, or on what side it is approached. The interior is spacious enough and fine enough, and dark enough. Real comfort and convenience have in many instances been sacrificed to architectural whims. The different offices and the legislative chambers, however, are very well fitted up, affording our public functionaries pleasant accommodations for the transaction of business.

The town gives evidence of physical improvements in the new buildings going up; some of them are large brick blocks; others, unostentatious dwellings and cottages. A stranger is not a loss to know what sustains the place. Of business, there appears to be little; the back country is poor, unproductive, and for the most part uncultivated. Still it lives and grows, like mistletoe and moss on the oak; and like certain social parasites, without any visible means of subsistence.

The License question, as they have recently decided it here, is rather on the fence. There are two wards; in the lower the vote was in favor of "No license;" in the upper, there was a tie. In the latter a reelection was ordered, which resulted in a considerable majority for license. So it stands half one way and half the other. The upper ward takes its juleps and cock-tails; the lower ward has banished them from the street corners at least. This partial success is almost a defeat to the true temperance cause, and to be regretted by its advocates. Next time they may do better. Various reasons were assigned for this result. Some ascribed it to the temperance champions themselves, whom they charge with resorting to abuse rather than reason, with indulging in violent and harsh declamation, rather than calm, dispassionate persuasion. Perhaps there is truth in this; and that generally the principles of "no license" have suffered from injudicious advocacy. So many friends of the cause have thought; that the worst way to mend the world is to abuse it; that national appeals to the good sense and conscience of the people would be better; and that the success of political temperance depends less upon the conversion of rum drinkers than upon bringing the sober-minded, who are always in the majority, to think rightly and act justly. However much of plausibility and candor these views may embody, we suspect the true cause of defeat in this case to be that interested, masterly inactivity for which Meroz was cursed, and which, notwithstanding every pretext and extenuation, redounds to the discredit of those who are guilty of it.

The United States Barracks claim a moment's notice. Beautiful for situation, they are presenting their best face to the river, but not seen in all their extent and detail. Twenty-four soldiers are all the standing army Uncle Sam keeps here. Enough to take care of the property and keep up military appearances. The buildings are extensive and rather imposing; sufficient to accommodate at least half the regular army of the nation. A few soldierly-looking fellows were standing guard, with gay uniform and bright guns; their coats buttoned up to the chin, with the thermometer ranging about 90°. All this for grandeur and for discipline! Every thing about reminds you of war. At the gates the fender posts are cannon planted muzzle downward, and all the fence posts have large balls or shells for tops. In the ordnance department we are introduced to long rows of big guns of every length and caliber. Paixan guns there are, 72 pounders, weighing many tons, for ships and fortifications; and smaller pieces of six, twelve and eighteen pound caliber, going on wheels, and for field service. Enormous quantities of balls and shells are here and there piled up in the same manner as your fruit dealers pile up their apples and oranges on the stand of the market house. This sort of ammunition Capt. Hollins threw into Greytown lately, and about which the papers make so much ado. In the Barrack grounds a little old house with two rooms in it is pointed out as the quondam residence of Gen. Taylor. This on his part was a voluntary humility, which can scarcely be said to add any thing to his fame. The house is now closed, either too sacred or too indifferent for occupation.

Among other public things here the Penitentiary is prominent. A wall of brick buildings extend all around, windows filled with iron bars, and the whole looking gloomy and dingy. Obtaining tickets just across the way, we approach the north side. The entrance is a singular affair. It looks like one of your wooden cisterns set up in the door-way. Knocking, instead of being opened, it turns on a pivot, until we are brought face to face with an opening, into which we step; and in a moment and with another turn, find ourselves inside. We are met by a door-keeper, who, with rather equivocal politeness, displays a well burnished revolver, takes our tickets, and delivers us to a stout man who carries a stout stick, and who kindly and patiently conducts us through the whole establishment. Within is an open court of an acre's extent or more, where the pure air and the blessed sunshine come to gladden these poor children of crime. The convicts are chiefly engaged in the manufacture of Cottons, about which they all are busy as bees, and seem to have acquired great skill in the management of the complicated machinery. Here they are all on a dead level; clothed alike and treated alike. The only distinction is the length of time for which they are imprisoned. No one is permitted to speak, and not a word was heard whilst we were with them. This, to some temperaments, is no small part of the punishment. The convicts have their heads shaved close, and wear little skull-caps, which make them look exceedingly sharp and roguish. The cells where they sleep and eat are about three feet by seven, of solid masonry with iron doors. A wooden stool, mattress, musquito bar, blanket, and a few books and pictures made up the furniture and contents of these cheerless places. To spend a life time in such a place is surely worse than death.

Glad to get out of this university of dungeons, let us take a Monday morning journey. On the right bank of the Amite, and sixteen miles from Baton Rouge, directly east, is Greenwell Spring. A ride of three hours brings us to the spot, and a choice one it is for pleasantness every way. Mr. Marks, of the Harney House is the host, who can satisfactorily to the taste of visitors, spreads a table here in the wilderness which excelled by your first class city hotels; attentive servants, good beds, cool water and agreeable company. If fond of sporting, the woods abound in game, and the river in fish. The Amite for bathing purposes is hardly to be surpassed; the water is pure and clear, with the banks and bottom covered with shells and pebbles. The mineral spring at this place has already acquired deserved celebrity for its medicinal and tonic properties. The following analysis of its water was made by J. L. and W. P. Riddell, of the University of Louisiana:—

Density of the water, 10,000, distilled water being assumed as 10,000.

One hundred litres of the water (each 100,000 grammes by weight) contain the amount of saline, mineral and other matter weighing 25,375 grammes. Upon analysis the following named ingredients, in the proportions stated, are found present:

Soda	603 Grammes
Lime	228 "
Protoxide of Iron	139 "
Potassa	030 "
Magnesia	054 "
Chlorine	076 "
Carbonic Acid	166 "
Sulphuric Acid	127 "
Silica	110 "
Traces of Iodine, Bromine,
Organic matter and loss	0045 "

The Springs and 250 acres of ground around it are the property of Rev. W. H. Crechale and Mr. W. S. Pike, of Baton Rouge. A large number of lots have been already sold and about twenty families have built in the vicinity, or are about to do so. A new and splendid Hotel will be built during the coming winter, capable of accommodating a number of visitors and in the best style.

WOODSMAN.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

THINGS IN WATERPROOF, LA.

A GOOD MEETING—PROGRESS OF TEMPERANCE—TENSAS, A "NO LICENSE" PARISH—STRIKING GENTLEMAN—STRANGE CONSEQUENCES OF THE COMING—THINGS IN GENERAL.

MR. EDITOR—We have had an interesting protracted meeting at this place. What help that we expected, did not come. The day before our meeting was to begin, we received a note stating that our P. E., Brother Thompson, was just recovering from a severe spell of sickness, and that he could not be at the meeting;—that was rather discouraging. Yet we expected that those Bro. T. promised to bring with him, would come, but he also, we were disappointed. But the meeting had been given out, and it must go on. Providentially, Dr. Harmon, from your city, was some business here at that time. He preached for us several times, very acceptably, and bored otherwise in such a way, that his visit to Tensas parish, will not soon be forgotten. Rev. Thos. Ford, of Mississippi, was here on a visit to one of his sons, and preached for us some excellent sermons, but he had to return home soon, which we all very much regretted. Dr. Harmon, too, had to leave, and we were left without any ministerial aid. We had a fine prospect for a sweeping revival—congregations good, day and night, and many seeking religion. Our meeting was kept up for a week—twelve joined the Church. We thanked God for what was done, but had we had sufficient laborers, much more would have been accomplished.

Our parish is now legally a temperance parish—every precinct having voted "No license." In some places the contest was close; in others, the "No License" had an overwhelming majority. Before the election Dr. Harmon gave us some of his eloquent and telling lectures. It is hard for any man to listen to him and afterwards go and vote for "License," He did a good work up here, and when he will be needed, I hope that he will visit us again. The grocery keeper of the place left no stone unturned—made out that he was going to change his business, and how," and all that kind of stuff; but his object was to throw the temperance people off their guard. He would send in every direction to those he thought his friends, to come in and vote. Sometimes his zeal would overdo the matter. He sent to two gentlemen that were at work some distance in the woods, try to be sure to come in—a very important election was to take place—he would pay their expense, etc. They came and voted "No License." But after the election went over with him, he was no longer cool and pliable, his wrath boiled over. He cursed every thing that was lovely and of good report." The same grocery keeper kept ice for sale, and you know, ice is often necessary this hot weather, specially in sickness; and to give vent to his meanness, as he could do nothing else, he swore that no one who voted against him should have any ice. The other day a child of one who voted "No License" was taken very sick—the brain was affected—the doctor prescribed ice—and under these circumstances he refused to sell ice for the child! "The tender mercies of the wicked are cruel."

A Division of the Sons has been established in this place, which has the prospect of being very prosperous; and I hope that as the flag temperance now, waves over our parish, they will always keep it unfurled. The people are waking up in our State, and are rising in their might against this license system, which has destroyed many of our most promising young men, brought our daughters with broken hearts to an early grave, and taxed us heavily to support the paupers made by it, and to adjudicate the crimes which it has caused. Let other parishes follow one after another, till the destroying demon will have no place to set down the sole of his foot within the bounds of Louisiana.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

The time we were all in excitement about the license system, a stranger landed on our shore. It was immediately asked, Who is he? Nobody knew. He was a fine commanding looking gentleman, and good many of the young ladies asked questions about him, but no one could give the least satisfaction. He would not be a preacher, for he was not dressed like one. Yet he must believe in religion, for he attended Church, and sung finely. Again the question would go the rounds: "Who is that fine looking strange gentleman?" and the same "I don't know," would be as often repeated. In a day or two, we noticed an unusual gathering of our friends from all parts of the parish, with all the stranger gentleman was social and affable. His name was known, he did not appear to be ashamed of it. But what did he come here for? Nobody knew, and, of course, we were all too polite to ask him. It was not long till we noticed our substantial citizens going to the Masonic Lodge, and it was ascertained that this strange gentleman was among them. Somebody asked, "Are all those Masons?" We were relieved on that point. A gentleman assured us that, though there were some Masons among them, that not a tithe of those who in the Masonic Hall, belonged to that ancient brotherhood. "What are they doing up there, then?" "I dont know," was all the satisfaction we could get. We thought that they could not be doing anything that was wrong, up there, for they were men "good and true." They could not be devising anything against the Government, for they were all lovers of our political institutions, and the very best of our native citizens. "What then are they about?" When we were making up our minds that we did not know what they were up there for, some wiseacre suggested that they were "Know Nothings." With increased eagerness, we asked, "What are the Know Nothings?" "Where did they come from?" "What are they going to do?" All the answer we could get, was, "I don't know." At last an Irishman, by the name of Patrick Lacbrity, who is a reader of the Freeman's Journal, declared, with a rich Irish brogue, that he could tell us all about the "Noo Nothins"—they were friends of the British Government—that they were forming societies all over the United States to overthrow our liberties. Some one suggested that what he said was improbable, for all those "Know Nothings" up here were Native Americans, and would be the first to fight for our liberties. Yet, he declared that it was so; and besides that, these "Know Nothings" were anti-Christian. We thought that assertion as strange as the other, for some of the best members of the Church were among them. Yet Pat positively declared that it was "all thrue"—that he knew the strange gentleman very well, having often seen him in Philadelphia, acting as carriage driver to the British Consul, that he was now paid by the British Government, to establish the "Noo Noothins." And, moreover, we would see a parcel of the the British ship of line coming here to help these "Noo Noothins" to take the country. It is said that the "Know Nothings" are numerous in our parish. We hope that they will be found always "right side up." Between the Protracted Meeting, the "No License" Election, and the "Know Nothings," our town presented a very livery appearance. The "Know Nothings" did not hinder our meeting, for they would adjourn at the "Sound of the church-going bell,"

and those who felt disposed, attended Church. So, we have come to the conclusion that Pat was mistaken in saying that they were anti-Christian. From the fact that an Irish Catholic, and a reader of the Freeman's Journal, pronounced them anti-Christian, we would rather conclude that the Irish priests of our country thought them anti-Jesuit, and that they fear them as such. We hope that the "Know Nothings" will overthrow the machinations of the Jesuits against our public schools and other institutions of our free country.

ITINERIS.

August 9th.

HARPER for August is worth having, and to be had of McGinnis & Carver, 36 Camp st.

CONFERENCES.—Bishop KAVANAUGH appoints Indian Mission Conference to meet at Tracy Chapel, Cherokee Nation, October 25, 1854.

Ouachita Conference to meet at Washington, Hempstead county, November 22, 1854.

Notices.

Notice.

There will be a Camp-meeting on Gainesville Circuit, Mississippi Conference, eighteen miles below Columbia, on Pearl River, commencing on Thursday before the fourth Sunday in October.

ARCHIBOLD NICHOLSON, P. C.

Methodism in Alabama.

The andersigned is anxious to present, in his forthcoming "Historical Sketches and Statistics of Alabama," a SATISFACTORY HISTORY OF EACH DENOMINATION OF CHRISTIANS IN ALABAMA. With the view of eliciting full, explicit and accurate information, he has sent out a large number of appropriate circulars to members of each denomination. He would also take this method of soliciting items in order to render the portion of the work alluded to as full and truthful as possible. Any thing of interest or importance connected with the introduction of Methodism into any county, its early struggles, hardships, and success, sketches of the early pioneers, present position, statistics, etc., will be most thankfully received. The undersigned trusts that the Methodists of Alabama will feel sufficient interest in his enterprise, and Church pride, too, to aid him very generally, so as to insure a complete history of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Alabama.

Address M. P. BLUE,
"Advertiser Building," Montgomery, Ala.

HYMENEAL:

MARRIED—On the 27th July, by Rev. R. Randle, GEO. W. TIGNOR and Miss ANN C. WILSON; all of Claiborne parish, La.

On the 27th July, 1854, by Rev. Stephen L. Davies, in Waterproof, La., W. P. MASON and Miss PHERIBA PITTMAN; both of Waterproof.

"Take her, her earliest love was thine,
And next thy heart the bright gem wear;
And let her ne'er regret the hour
She placed her young hopes blushing there.
Take her, and when in after years,
The storms of life blow dark and shrill,
Be thine the voice to soothe her fears,
Be thine the hand to comfort still."

August 10th, by Rev. James W. Shores, ENWIN T. SHERRAN and Mrs. LOUISA M. CONNEA; all of Barbour county, Ala.

OBITUARY:

DIED—In Tensas parish, La., on the 9th of August, 1854, in the sixth year of her age, ELLA, youngest child of Eben. Miller, Esq.

Our little Ella was lovely and amiable. We loved her much; but He, who, while on earth, took little children in his arms, has taken her to himself to await our arrival in the mansion of Heaven.

"Let sickness blast, let death devour,
If Heaven but recompense our pains;
Perish the grass and fade the flower,
If firm the word of God remains."

Mrs. ANN DAWSON, daughter of William and Ann Lemon, was born in Louisiana on the 4th of January, 1831. About four years since she became engaged about the salvation of her soul, and united herself to the Methodist Church as a seeker. Although she had sought earnestly the salvation of her soul, she did not obtain a clear and satisfactory assurance of her conversion until after her affliction began; but then the Lord assured her; and throughout her affliction, which was of the sorest character, and lasted two months, patience had its perfect work. Her disease was of such a character that she was confined to one position in the bed for about six weeks; yet she murmured not, but rejoiced. Every Christian grace seemed to ripen rapidly into maturity.

A few days before her death she assisted to arrange the funeral ticket of a Christian lady who had died suddenly (after visiting her and talking with her upon the subject of death,) with as much composure as she would have done in perfect health. She presented one of the most striking and beautiful illustrations of the power of the Christian religion over sin, suffering and death.

Her sun of life went down behind a cloudless horizon, on the 23d of June last, to rise in eternal day. May her Christian example and dying conversation allure, through the grace of God, her bereaved husband and relatives to that bright and immortal home whither she has gone. Amen. W. B. H.

We record the death of one who died within the bounds of our circuit, Sister SPEARS, daughter of Joel and Malinda Snider.

She was born in Alabama, 1835. She joined the M. E. Church some four years before her death. She departed this life on the 20th of June, 1854. On her death bed she felt that she would soon be from pain and sorrow. Before she died she exhorted all her friends to meet her in Heaven, for she know it would not be long till she should shake hands with her friends who had gone before.

M. C. SIMPSON.

Shelbyville Ct., July 26, 1854.

DIED—In the 26th year of his age, in Crawford county, Ga., 23d April, 1854, JAMES N. DUNWOODY, a son of Rev. James Dunwoody of Georgia Conference.

Though raised by pious parents, he did not embrace religion until about seven months before his death. He joined the Church as a seeker of religion two years previous. We have good hope he has gone to rest. He gave evidence a few nights before his death, while leading family prayer, that he had peace with God. He leaves an aged father and mother, and others, to mourn him. L. G. EVANS.

WILLIAM LEMON, Sr., was born, reared to manhood, and married in Ireland. There, too, he commenced his religious career, and attached himself to the Presbyterian Church. He subsequently emigrated to the United States; and after remaining a short time in the Northern States, removed to the South and settled at Laurel Hill, West Feliciana parish, La. There being no Presbyterian Church near him, he attached himself to the Methodist Church, in which he lived a faithful member. The Lord prospered him in the world, and his house was and is a pleasant resting place for the weary Itinerant. He was a pillar in the Laurel Hill Church, and has left behind him that sweet memorial—a good name.

For some time previous to his death, and while in apparent health, the world, with its cares and interests, seemed to loose its hold upon him, and his mind to be absorbed in thoughts of spiritual and eternal things. He met death calmly and peacefully; and on the 16th January last, exchanged his place in the militant for a place in the Church triumphant—being 64 years of age.

May the Lord, by His grace, bring the bereaved ones to join him in that happy and immortal home. Amen!

Wilkinson, Miss. WM. B. H.

He is gone! HENRY EMEREY MERRITT died in the vicinity of Vicksburg, Miss., August 3d, aged twenty-nine years.

He was the oldest son of J. W. F. and MARY J. MERRITT, formerly of Brunswick county, Va., of which place HENRY was a native.

In the death of this young man, we have another and very striking verification of the adage, "death loves a shining mark." He was a man of most lovely disposition—rare qualities of mind and heart; to know him was to admire him—yea, to love him.

The family all, and especially his aged parents, are very deeply afflicted; and well they may be, for without disparagement to the surviving ones, it may be said, that he was the brightest ornament of the interesting group. Yet in their cup of affliction there is much to mitigate its bitterness—he died in peace—yes, he left the world triumphantly. His last words were, "Happy! happy! happy!"

"With his song let us follow his flight,
And mount with his spirit above;
Escaped to the mansions of light,
And lodged in the Eden of love." H.

Richmond Advocate please copy.

General Intelligence.

INTERMENTS.—The following is the report of the number of interments in the different cemeteries of the city for the week ending at 6 o'clock, A. M., on Sunday the 13th inst:

Protestant	9	Catholic No 1	6
Cypress Grove, No. 1	4	" 2	14
" 2	25	St. Vincent de Paul	31
Charity Hospital	40	Lafayette, 4th District	28
St. Patrick's	37	Hebrew, 4th District	4
Total	207

The report last week was 212, thus showing a decrease. This week we find 43 cases of yellow fever. Last week there were 29.

CURIOUS CASE.—The Coroner yesterday held an inquest on the body of a child named Julia Engel aged five days, found dead at the house of its parents in the Third District. The jury after hearing the evidence returned a verdict of "Death from convulsions, caused by its mother having been greatly frightened, and her breast-milk thus poisoned, by her husband." The husband, whose name is Theophile Engle, and who is a notorious character, it appears had assaulted and brutally treated his wife, threatening to kill her, and all that sort of thing; the fright she experienced from these threats, the physician who examined the child stated, had operated as a poison on her milk, which being imbibed by the child, convulsions and death ensued. On the strength of this verdict Engel has been arrested and awaits an examination on a charge of having caused the death of his own child. The mother, too, is not expected to live.

CONGRESS ADJOURNED AT LAST.—After a session of about eight months, Congress has adjourned. On Monday, the 7th instant, the two Houses met at the early hour of 8 o'clock in the morning, but without the transaction of any business, adjourned to the first Monday in December, in pursuance of a resolution previously adopted.

The following are the most important bills before Congress that were either lost or await a further consideration:

The Homestead Land Bill; the Texas Debt Bill—appropriating $8,500,000; the River and Harbor Bill $2,700,000 vetoed; French Spoliation Bill, $5,000,000; Ramsay California Mail Route Bill; Shanghai Steamship Bill; Weekly Mail to California Bill; Ocean Steamship Bill, $850,000; Pacific Telegraph Bill; Pacific Railroad Bill; to Increase Rates of Postage; Capt. Duncan Ingraham's Resolutions; Minnesota Railroad Bill, repealed.

No bill making land grants for railroads was passed.

The Steamer Appropriation was lost on account of Mr. Pennington's amendment, which put the contract within the power of a triumvirate of hostile Ministers.

By a law on pensions, passed on the last night of the session, if the widow of a soldier marries she loses her claim; but if that husband dies, she again becomes entitled to her pension as formerly. The amount of the new act is: that whenever the lady is a widow, the Government holds itself bound to protect her. One Notary Public is now empowered to take an acknowledgment as well as two Justices of the Peace. Hereafter, the testimony taken before a Notary Public is of the same legality as if taken before a commissioner. The necessity for a special commissioner, therefore, no longer exists.

The stockholders of the New Orleans and Washington Telegraph Company, at their annual meeting last month, declared a dividend of three per cent. for the six months; but the new administration have thought proper to postpone indefinitely the payment of it.

THE ISRAELITE.—This is the name of a new paper just commenced in Cincinnati, devoted to the interests of the Jewish community, to the discussion of questions connected with their history, poetry, literature, religion, political and social position, and to the affairs of their schools, congregations, and other institutions. It is well printed, and will doubtless prove an able advocate of that portion of our population whose sentiments it represents.

SOUR GRAPES—VERY.—The change which has lately taken place in the opinions of the English press concerning the importance of the Austrian and Prussian alliance, in the existing Eastern difficulties, is singular enough to excite a smile, even if it should not bring to memory that one of Esop's fables which speaks of foxes and sour grapes. Three months ago words were hardly sufficient to express the favorable feelings entertained by England for Austria and Prussia, or to tell the immense influence these two Kingdoms would exert on the condition and counsels of Russia. Their greatness was largely talked of, and the occupation of the Principalities by the Austrian army was prophesied as a close of the war. It has since been learned that Austria refuses to invade the Principalities, and that Prussia refuses to attack the Czar. On learning this important news the English press suddenly comprehended that Austria was without power, and Prussia wholly destitute of influence! How rapid and how singular! Those who were valuable friends yesterday are discovered to be worthless accessories to-day.

LIGHT UNDER WATER.—At the depth of 720 feet, through sea water, according to Bougour, light ceases to be transmitted; and probably at three times that depth there is perpetual darkness. Only one hundred thousandth part of the vertical rays of the sun can penetrate below forty-seven fathoms. The depths of the ocean are, consequently, involved in total darkness, so far as the present means of scientific penetration extend.

SUPREME COURT OF GEORGIA.—We perceive from our Georgia exchanges that Judge Benning decides that the Supreme Court of Georgia is coequal and coordinate with the Supreme Court of the United States, and not inferior and subordinate to that Court. That as to the reserved powers, the State Court is supreme; that as to the delegated powers, the United States Court is supreme; that as to powers, both delegated and reserved—concurrent powers—both Courts, in the language of Hamilton, are "equally supreme;" and that, as a consequence, the Supreme Court of the United States has no jurisdiction over the Supreme Court of Georgia; and cannot, therefore, give it an order, or make for it a precedent.

The important post of Fort Atkinson has been re-established on the Arkansas. The Secretary of War has ordered two companies to be stationed there, and it is presumed they have reached their destination by this time. A small force there will do much towards keeping the Indians of the Plains quiet, and also will be of much service to the train which are now on their way to New Mexico.

LATER FROM JAMAICA.—We have received papers from Jamaica to the 26th ult., but find no news of importance, except that the cholera at Barbadoes had greatly abated after destroying from 12,000 to 15,000 people. The papers say nothing of the extent to which the disease prevails in Jamaica.

Mr. Wm. Payne, editor of the Jewish Chronicle, in Kingston, had committed suicide by shooting himself with a pistol. The cause was supposed to be pecuniary embarrassment.

Old Papers.

On the day of its publication there are few things more interesting or more generally sought for than the daily newspaper. Few things are more valueless the day after.

Age has, however, some such effect upon news papers as upon wine—increasing the value, the flavor and the importance. Journals published a century ago are rare; even those issued fifty years since are far from abundant. They command immense prices in the literary market, and are sought for with some such avidity as an old edition of Milton, an ancient copy of Shakespeare, or a Bible published in the first years of printing. Time has given renewed interest to what was originally of little importance, and what was twelve months after, publication wholly valueless. Old advertisements, old notices, old editorials about matters and things long since forgotten, are eagerly read when years have intervened and given to them a historical character and consideration. The learned lucubrations of editors, the reviews, the criticisms and notices, the rebukes and commendations, which were expected to die within the week after their birth, come into a fresh life after being for a time buried, and are repernused with even greater interest and avidity than when they were new and fresh.

Old letters are supposed to have a peculiar charm—recalling a recollection of things forgotten, renewing a period long past, and bringing back in clear colors pictures which had faded and died away. Old papers have something of the same charm, though less personal and direct. Like a magician's mirror, they recall and vitalize the occurrences of the past, and set clearly before the reader a view of the daily life of a time which he, perhaps, never saw and only knows of indistinctly. In their columns it is chronicled how some brave old ship went forth on her voyage, and his memory reminds him that she was captured, or lost, or never heard of after. It is to be noticed that on such a day a marriage was celebrated, which the departed editor hoped might be ever pleasant; and the reader recollects a gray headed man walking the streets who was the bridegroom on that occasion, or some descendant of his, now covered with honors. The old paper prophesies, perhaps, some war whose tremendous results are now a matter of history; or the inauguration of some reign which long since closed, and has been long since judged; or the completion of a treaty which is to-day a precedent in the formation of other treaties. It shows how this and that thing were regarded in their commencement and nonage; what this and that man did and said before fame had taken hold of their names; what discoveries were then new, what doctrines were then novel. Indeed, an old paper has something of freshness in it as well as the one that is just wet from the press, and is doubtless far more suggestive than its later rival.

We were prompted to these reflections and remarks by the sight of an old file of city papers, published long before we were born; chronicling occurrences that Baucroft has since re-written; printed and edited by men to whom Camp and St. Charles streets were unknown, and who have long since been freed from cries for copy or any of the anxieties of journalism. Their works, however, live after them; and we pored, not without interest, over old editorials on forgotten subjects; over notices of matters and events long since departed into oblivion.

IS DICKENS A BANKRUPT?—The story that Dickens had dissipated his large fortune has been contradicted very confidently in this country. The correspondent of the New York Times, however, reiterates the story that the great humbug is exceedingly hard-up, and that it is entirely owing to his vanity, love of display, extravagance and bad management. He has, it seems, retired to the continent, either to escape the importunity of creditors or the prospect of still more embarrassing and disagreeable difficulties. The Times correspondent states that for some years his income from the sale of his works has been constantly diminishing; while his expenses have as constantly increased; that he has sold all his copyrights and receives little or nothing from "Household Words," the sale of which was not increased by the publication of his latest work, "Hard Times."

THE SITKA HOMICIDE.—A dispatch from Washington to the New York Tribune declares the story that Russia was about to sell Sitka to the United States, or that the Czar made an offer to cede it on any conditions, is a pure invention. No such proposal has been made to the State Department, and what is more, no instructions to make it had been received by the Russian Legation here, either by a recent messenger, or by any other conveyance, up to this day at noon. There is such a thing as what the French call blague and the English mystification. This rumor is a composition possessing all the peculiar qualities of both.

REVENUE OF THE UNITED STATES.—The revenues of the United States for the fiscal year ending on the 30th of June, amounted to $73,549,700, which is an increase of $12,212,126 over the previous year. The total foreign imports into the United States for the year reached $316,000,000 against $267,978,347 last year.

HEALTH OF NORTHERN CITIES.—The following statement gives the comparative mortality of the four great Atlantic cities during the week ending on the 6th:

	N. York.	Phila.	Boston.	Balto.
Cholera	302	88	23	—
Infantum	49	70	12	20
Morbus	30	12	1	2
Dysentery	65	29	10	19
Diarrhœa	70	16	1	3
Consumption	48	31	16	12
Convulsions	88	22	8	4
Marasmus	55	20	4	—
Other diseases	471	181	57	93
Total	1,148	489	151	153
Under five years of age	614	232	62	90

In New York there has been an increase in the number of deaths over the previous week of 9; in Boston of 23; in Philadelphia a decrease of 104; and in Baltimore of 59.

There has been an increase of deaths from cholera, as compared with the previous week, viz: In New York of 61 deaths, and in Philadelphia of 18 deaths; in Boston a decrease of three deaths from this disease is reported. No deaths from cholera have been reported to the Board of Health this week, as occurring within the limits of Baltimore. At the Alms House 41 cases and 50 deaths have occurred. The deaths among children under five years of age continue extraordinarily large, amounting in all the cities except Boston to more than one-half of the entire mortality.

The Providence Journal thus happily hits off the great victories the Turks are always winning (if the veracious correspondents of the London newspapers are to be credited) over the Russians:

"A good old lady was sick, one time, and her grand daughter forwarded daily accounts of her health to the members of the family in a neighboring town. The notes generally ran, 'Grandmother feels a little better to-day,' and sometimes it would be, 'Grandmother feels decidedly better,' but the tenor of the advices were always 'feuorable.' Still the old lady did not get well. At last a reply came to the pretty author of all these favorable bulletins—'Think your grandmother must be, by this time, in the enjoyment of such health as no other mortal was ever blessed with, for she has been, every day, a little better than she was the day before; and my wonder is that with such an accumulation in health, she should still persist in keeping her bed.'"

COMMANDER HOLLINS.—The following sketch of Commander Hollins is from the Albany Argus:

"Commander George N. Hollins is a native of Maryland, but now a citizen of Florida. He entered the United States navy as midshipman on board the frigate Guerriera on the 1st of February, 1814, and next served two years in the Mediterranean on board the Washington, 74 was transferred thence to the newly built ship Columbus 1819. He went on furlough in 1822, and obtained his commission as lieutenant on the 13th of January, 1825, was with the West India squadron in the schooner Grampus in 1827, and again in the Mediterranean on board the sloop Ontario from 1829 to 1833, when the vessel returned to Norfolk. He then had two years leave, and in 1835 sailed to the East Indies in the United States ship Peacock, commanded by Com. Kennedy.

"He went on leave in 1838, and in 1839 was put in command of the receiving ship at Baltimore. On the 8th of September, 1841, he was promoted to the rank of commander and sent to the navy yard, Pensacola. In 1843 he was flag captain to the Pacific squadron, and in 184 again on duty at the navy yard, Pensacola; in 1849 on leave of absence, and in 1849 again attached to the navy yard; in 1852 he was put in command of the Cyane, an American-built craft, named after a sloop-of-war taken from the English in the last war, and in this vessel recently destroyed Greytown. Commander Hollins has been forty years and six months in the navy. He has been sixteen years at sea, about ten on duty ashore, and fourteen years unemployed."

DEATHS BY LIGHTNING IN VIRGINIA.—The Culpeper Observer states that Mr. William Richards, overseer of Mr. J. W. George, above five miles east of Culpeper Court-house, was struck by lightning and instantly killed, during a storm on Monday last.

Miss Cordelia Gathright was the name of the young lady killed by lightning a few days ago, in Goochland county.

On Wednesday last two negroes, belonging to Mr. William Palmer, of Mecklenburg county, were killed by lightning, while engaged with nine others, together with their overseer, in a barn assorting tobacco. The balance of the party were severely stunned, but are said to be recovering. The lightning struck one of the negroes on the head, ran down the spine and right leg, splitting his toes in pieces, and making a hole like that of a bullet in the sole of his shoe, passing to the ground. The skin of the other negro was not broken. Also, on Friday following, Dr. George Jefferson, of the same neighborhood, had a team of five horses killed instantly by the same cause. The driver had fortunately left the team, and taken shelter from the shower in an old house, but for which circumstance he would doubtless have been killed.

These facts we gather from the Clarksville "Tobacco Plant."

On the property of Thos. Whitlock, of Chesterfield, about five miles from Petersburg, a negro girl, while engaged in stacking wheat, was killed by a lightning flash on Thursday evening last.

DEATH OF COMMODORE DOWNES.—In our telegraphic column this morning, will be found recorded the death of Captain John Downes, whose name, according to priority of original entry, was near the head of our Navy list.

He was a native of Massachusetts, and entered the service under a Midshipman's warrant on the 1st of June, 1802, and rose by promotion to the highest rank recognized in our Navy, the commission for which bore the date of March the 5th, 1817.

In 1815, then being a Lieutenant, he commanded the war sloop Epervier, attached to the squadron under Decatur, which carried the tribute demanded by the Algerines, although in a form not so agreeable as that in which they hoped to extort it from an infant country, then coming out of a struggle with the greatest naval power of the world. Com. Decatur's demonstrations soon elicited a treaty, which was brought home by Capt. Lewis, on board of Lieut. Downes's sloop, as a special detail.

As a Lieut Commanding, we find the subject of this notice in command of the fine ship Macedonian, on the South American station. The difficulties between Chili and Peru, and the presence of a strong Naval force from England, in aid of the former, led to a correspondence between Lieut Downes and Lord Cochrane, Admiral of the British fleet.

The correspondence, however, was of an amicable character—the Admiral sending extracts from the laws of nations on the character and obligations of neutrals, and requesting the American opinion on them. Lieut. Downes replied that he had no authority from his Government to settle such matters, but sent in return extracts from Lord Stowell, with some pertinent application against the assumed privileges and consequences of paper blockades.

The first important command of Capt. Downes, after his attaining the highest grade, was the Pacific squadron, the frigate Potomac being his flag-ship. He was transferred in 1834, since which period he has been reported as waiting orders. [Charleston Courier, 12th.

THE CHRISTIAN IDEA OF WOMAN.—Rev. W. H. Milburn, Chaplain of the United States House of Representatives, delivered an eloquent discourse last evening, in the Sands street Methodist Church, Brooklyn, on "Christian Ideas of Woman." He spoke of the position occupied by woman under the old Jewish dispensation—of the place awarded her in cultured Greece and martial Rome—and said that there they were but the mere playthings or drudge of man. He drew a strong picture of the fair but frail Aspasia, who, by the combined charms of her manners and conversation, completely won the affections of the great Pericles. But though Aspasia was the most beautiful and accomplished of Athenian women, and acquired for herself great renown, and was finally made a priestess of Diana of Ecbatana, yet she was nothing more or less than a brilliant courtezan. The speaker also alluded to Sappho; but she, too, fell far short of his idea of the true woman. It was not till the dawn of Christianity that woman's influence was justly recognized and made available. In speaking of woman's proper sphere, the speaker said that pre-eminently by her nature, by her physical and moral conformation, is she made for home. The field of maternity is sufficiently broad for her. Maternity is her heritage and her patrimony. The sacred name of mother, with all its hallowed connections, its inspiring thoughts—the name of mother tells us where she is, where she belongs, and where, of right, is her position and her privilege. To maintain intact the delicacy of her organization; to maintain the broad sweep of her love; to maintain the sway over the passions: these are her duty and sphere, and the field where they are to be cultivated is home. [Journal of Commerce.

SAMUEL FOOTE.—Shakspeare makes Falstaff not only witty, but the cause of wit in others; and Goldsmith said that no man could be in Caleb Whitefoord's company without catching the itch of punning. The English Aristophanes, as Foote was called, was one of these; and no greater proof can be given of his comic powers than in the following anecdote, related by Dr. Johnson: "The first time," said he, "I was in company with Foote was at Fitzherbert's. Having no good opinion of the fellow, I was resolved not to be pleased; and it is very difficult to please a man against his will. I went on eating my dinner pretty evilently, affecting not to mind him; but the dog became so irresistibly comic, that I was obliged to lay down my knife and fork, throw myself back in my chair, and fairly laugh it out. Sir, he was irresistible!"

A JOLLY PRIEST.—The lower orders of the Russian clergy must be rather a hard set, if all accounts be true, and have much need of the spiritual advisings of Father Mathew. The Paris Pays tells a story of a Russian traveler, who, while passing through a village, saw a crowd of peasants rolling a reverend gentleman into a barn and barring the doors after him. On inquiring the cause, one of them said: "Oh, it's only the priest, whom we are locking up in the stable!" "And why do you serve him in that way?" "Because it is Saturday." "And why on this particular day?" "Because he is a drunkard, and we always lock him up on Saturday, in order that he may be able to perform divine service on Sunday. On Monday he can begin his spree again, and keep it up through the week!" Fair drinking men are the Russian priests.

FOREIGN NEWS BY THE ARABIA.

The steamship Arabia, from Liverpool, July 29, arrived at New York on the evening of the 8th. In consequence of the failure of the New York mail on Tuesday last, her accounts were received in this city one day later than due.

The War in the East—The Danube.

The little news we have from the Danube and the Black Sea, is so confused that it is difficult to form a clear idea of the operations either of the Russians or their allies. It is said that the Russian General Gortschakoff, having discovered that the body of the Turkish army is not, as was supposed, at Giurgevo, is withdrawing part of his army to Bucharest, and it is believed that his right and left wings are retreating to the Sereth line of operations.

Omar Pasha was at Giurgevo on the 27th. The Turkish outposts are at Parapaji, where a sanguinary engagement was fought on the 19th. A Russian camp of 60,000 men is to be formed at Urzitseni. A courier from St. Petersburg met Gortschakoff at Bucharest on the 12th, with a letter from the Czar approving of the plan of the campaign submitted to him by the General. The Russians are to resume offensive operations. They are said to have completely evacuated the Dobrudscha, carrying their sick with them to Galatz.

On the 13th, Russian engineers surveyed the Austrian frontiers at Hochow, took sketches, and measured the breadth and depth of the Vistula, which is there the boundary between the two countries.

The Russians are fortifying Brailow in the strongest manner, but have destroyed the fortifications on the island of Ghedabhil. The Turks have at length completed their entrenched camp at Sophia; the works consist of six redoubts, two regular forts with moats, intrenchments and heavy batteries.

Omar Pacha, has in the name of the Sultan, proclaimed a general amnesty to the Wallachians who have been engaged in the present war against the Porte. On the 16th, a deputation of Bayards from Little Wallachia passed through Widdin on their way to Giurgevo. Their mission was to present to Omar Pacha a document in which the white population of the province offers homage to the Sultan.

The Paris Constitutionel states that the immediate entry of the Austrian troops into the principalities must be considered as formally decided on. A portion of the Russian army, under Gen. Liprandi, was moving toward Fokshani, in consequence of the Austrians marching from Transylvania northward for concentration in the Bukowina.

On the 23d, the Danubian Company's steamer returned from Rutschuk to Orsova. The navigation of the river is free down to Giurgevo.

A letter from Constantinople states that 80 siege pieces from England had been landed at Varna. The allied forces concentrated on that point are estimated at 60,000 French, 30,000 English and 10,000 Turks.

It is quite within the scope of possibility that the allied armies are being kept purposely at Varna, or within a day's march of that port, so as to keep it doubtful whether they intend to march into the Principalities, or by suddenly transporting a vast force over to Sebastopol, strike a severe blow in that quarter.

CONSTANTINAPLE, July 16.—Reports having just come in that Russlahus asked for an armistice, Omar Pacha has gone to consult with the French and English Admirals about it.

Advices from Constantinople of the 11th, state that some deaths from cholera had occurred in the fleet and among the French troops. Some disturbance had taken place at Gallipoli and Athens.

The latest telegraphic intelligence of operations on the Danube is that Omar Pacha has reached Rustchuk. Thirty English sailors have taken the direction of the Turkish flotilla at Giurgevo. Thirty English pioneers are assisting in completing the fortifications of Giurgevo. Eighteen thousand English troops were to reach Rutschuk on the 8th. Until their arrival the Turks had suspended offensive operations.

THE BLACK SEA.—The combined squadrons had left Baltschik. It was said they had gone in search of the Russian fleet, which was reported, we presume falsely, to have left Sebastopol. The Turkish fleet had returned to the Bosphorus without having engaged in any important service.

Three thousand men and fifteen cannon have been sent by Turkish steamers to Ilatoum, and 8000 men for Ischiurak.

The exchange of 180 officers and sailors lately forming the crew of the Tigor, has taken place at Odessa, but the number of Russians to be exchanged fell short of the English by thirty, and accordingly so many of the crew of the Tiger remained in captivity.

The death of Capt. Hyde Parker took place while ascending the river Danube in his gig on the 7th inst. He was fired at from an ambush of the Russians, posted behind a stockade, the presence of the enemy not being anticipated. With the boat's crew which accompanied the gig, he landed to attack the enemy, and received a mortal wound through the heart. Capt. Powell took the command, drove the enemy from their stronghold, and the two Russian officers who directed the attack were picked off by the British sailors, as they stood quietly at the embrasures urging on their men. Capt. Parker was buried with military honors at Constantinople, the Turks being much interested in the ceremonial.

THE BALTIC SEA.—A telegraphic dispatch from the Hague, states that Admirals Napier Advices have been received that Her Majesty's steam gun vessel Cuckoo had taken and destroyed a Russian gun-brig in the Gulf of Bothnia.

The Danish Government refuses to permit the allies to establish a cholera hospital on Danish territory.

The expedition of troops to the Baltic will comprise 36,000 men, namely, 30,000 French and 6000 English troops.

Her Majesty's steamer Archer has captured the Wilmina, Vorman, master, off Pillau. She has been sent home in charge of a prize crew.

THE WHITE SEA.—By advices received from the White Sea it appears Her Majesty's squadron had captured some Russian vessels, corn laden, as also a war schooner called the Wolga, which have been sent home to England for condemnation.

SPAIN.—In Spain the insurrection is triumphant, but it is extremely uncertain what the result will be. For the present, the star of Espartero appears to be in the ascendant. The following are some of the most recent reports:

Madrid, July 22.—The city is quiet but the citizens are still under arms, and continue to build barricades. On the other hand, the troops maintained their positions at the Retiro and around the Palace. The ex-Ministers continue to hold their portfolios until the arrival of Espartero. M. Pozos, sub-director of the secret police, had been seized and shot by the people. No news had been received of the movements of O'Donnell, but it was said he had an interview with Espartero, and would enter Madrid with him.

Tuesday, July 25.—Madrid was quiet. Espartero would arrive on the 28th. Gen. Manuel Concha had arrived, and acted cordially with the Captain-General.

ITALY.—The insurrection in Parma is suppressed. There is great uneasiness in Modena. An outbreak is expected. Elsewhere throughout Italy much discontent prevails. The French garrison of Rome is to be reinforced.

INDIA AND CHINA.—The latest news from Cabul bears date of the 18th of May.

Mahomed Afzul Khan has informed the Ameer that a Kokanee army, 12,000 strong, lately marched against the Russian force in the dependency of Heorgunj, which amounted only to 4000 men. A battle took place, in which the Kokanee army was defeated.

Piracy is said to have increased in the straits to such an extent as seriously to injure the trade of Singapore.

We have dates from Shanghai to the 30th May. The city still continued to be held by the rebels. Some fighting between the rebels and Imperialists had taken place, in which one of the foreign vessels employed by the Imperialists was engaged. She had five men killed, and received considerable damage. There does not appear to have been any communication yet entered upon between the rebels holding Nanking and those in the possession of Shanghai.

From the North China Herald we learn that on the 25th of May an unsuccessful attempt was made upon the city by the Imperialists, who penetrated some way within the walls, but were ultimately driven out, and compelled to retreat. And Deschenes have agreed to permit neutral vessels to come out of blockaded ports.

THE RECIPROCITY TREATY.—The Morning News, at St. John, N. B., in speaking of the Reciprocity Treaty, between the United States and Great Britain, expresses its opinion as follows:

"Now that the American Government have ratified the Elgin Treaty, there is no other alternative left but to accept it in the Provinces. Jonathan has got the best of the bargain, but notwithstanding this, we look upon the measure as an opening for the brightest future New Brunswick has ever known.

"Instead of being confined to Great Britian with trade, to suffer with her reverses, we have the whole continent of North America for a market.

"We, therefore, go in for the treaty 'hook and line, hob and sinker.'"

GREYTOWN RECLAMATIONS.—The French Minister, it is said, has made a claim of $600,000 on behalf of French subjects who had property destroyed at Greytown. M. de Marrouelle, whose warehouses there was some attempt to spare amid the general sack, for the reason that he had protested against the bottling of Borland, comes in for $300,000. The amount of English reclamations, it is supposed, will be much larger than that claimed by the French.

DEATH OF MRS. SOUTHEY.—Caroline Southey, widow of Robert Southey, the poet-laureate, died on the 20th instant, at Buckland, near Lymington. She was a daughter of the Rev. Dr. Bowles, a canon of Salisbury cathedral, and was highly graced with intellectual accomplishments. She was married to Dr. Southey in 1839, about a year and a half after the death of his first wife, Edith Fricker, to whom he was united on the day he left England for a six months' sojourn at Lisbon.

MELANCHOLY ACCIDENT.—A friend in Assumption furnishes us with the following particulars of a most melancholy accident, which took place in that parish during the past week. Mr. D. Lewis, a carpenter and engineer engaged on the Texana farm of Col. W. W. Pugh, while employed in sawing lumber with a circular saw, stooped down for the purpose of ascertaining whether the saw was hanting, which generally occurs when sawing heavy timber. While in this attitude it so happened that the teeth of the saw caught the rim of his hat and jerked his head sideways in contact with the saw, severing a piece of the skull-bone 2½ inches in depth by about 3½ in length, tearing away at the same time a part of the brain. Most singular to relate that in this situation he lived for nearly thirty-six hours, and most of the time in his perfect senses. The deceased bore the reputation of a sober, upright and exemplary man; and his melancholy end is deeply deplored by his employer, his fellow mechanics and numerous friends. [Thibodaux (La.) Minerva, 12th inst.

A SILENT SEA CAPTAIN.—Capt. Stone, of the steamer Canada, now in this port, is probably the most silent man afloat. Sailors who have been with him many months say they never heard him speak. He writes his orders to his officers, and if they fail in carrying them out, he reprimands them in writing. Yet he has the reputation of being one of the most skillful and prudent captains of the Cunard line, and remarkable for his powers of personal endurance. When at sea he rarely leaves the deck, night or day, more than an hour at a time, and nothing appears to escape his notice. Still he does not speak, either to his officers or passengers.

On a recent passage two

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Why He Didn't Propose.

BY THE SLY.

"Why did you never think of marriage?" asked I of my friend Lyman Robbins, who is some two years older than myself, and a confirmed bachelor.

"I have thought of it," said he.

"Well, why didn't you marry, then?"

"I will tell you. You know Frank Palmer, don't you?"

"Yes; he failed last week to the tune of twenty thousand dollars. But what has that to do with your story?"

"Some thing, as you will see. I was never seriously tempted to make a proposal but once and that was to Frank's wife—before she was married, you understand."

"Oh!" said I growing interested. "And why didn't you?"

"You shall know. I was young and romantic at the time—she beautiful and accomplished. We were thrown much together in society, and I was just then of an age to yield to her fascinations. Though I had never expressed my love in words, I suppose my looks betrayed me, and I am quite sure that she was aware of my feeling towards her. Our families being somewhat intimate, we were on the same footing, and she treated me in much the same confidential manner as she would a favorite cousin."

"Do you think," I inquired, "that she was in love with you?"

"No," said he; "I never thought that. I presume, however, she would like to have led me on to a declaration, and then would have acted as fancy dictated. One day, when I had made a morning call and was about retiring she told me that she was going out shopping, and laughingly proposed to me to go with her and carry the bundles. Having nothing of importance to take up my time, and not being averse to the proposal, partly on account of its novelty, and considerably, I rather suspect, on account of the agreeable character of the company I should have, I consented in the same spirit, and in a few minutes we were fairly en route."

"I have but little to buy," said my companion. "You may congratulate yourself upon that, as you will have the less to carry."

We made our first visit at a drygoods establishment.

"Have you any lace collars?" inquired Caroline. A large quantity were displayed, but they were only five dollars in price, and they were too cheap. At length one was found at seven dollars, with which, being declared to be the best in the store, my companion at length professed herself satisfied, and decided to take it.

"I suppose," said she on going out, "that I don't really need it, but it was so beautiful I could not resist the temptation."

A beautiful shawl at the door of a store next caught Caroline's attention. "I must certainly go in and look at their shawls," said she. "I never saw any prettier than them."

"New kind," said the clerk. "Yes, miss, just imported from France, warranted to surpass in fineness of texture and durability any now extant. Will you have one?"

"The price?"

"Seventy-five dollars, and cheap at that."

Caroline was startled at this announcement. "That is high," said she.

"Not for the quality. Just feel of it, see how soft it is, and you will not call it expensive."

"I did not think of getting one to-day; however, I think I must. You may charge it to my father."

The shawl was folded, enveloped and handed to me by the clerk.

"I suppose papa will scold," said Caroline; "but it's such a beauty."

We reached, ere long, another drygoods store, the placard over which, "selling off at cost," proved so seductive that we at once stayed our steps and entered. Caroline rushed to examine the silks, the first specimens offered, which to my unpractised eye seemed of a superior quality, were cast contemptuously aside, and she desired to see the very best they had in the store. Some were shown her at two dollars and a half per yard. After a while, she ordered twelve yards to be cut off for her. This was done, and the bundle handed to me. The bill, of course, sent to her father.

What with the shawl and silk, each of which made a bundle of no inconsiderable size, I was pretty well weighed down, and began to be apprehensive of the consequences in case my companion should make many more purchases. She, however, relieved my anxiety by saying that she intended to purchase nothing more. She was only going to stop at a jeweler's to have a locket repaired. Accordingly, we repaired to the store of a fashionable jeweler. The locket was handed over with the necessary directions.

But that was not all. A lady at the counter was engaged in examining a very costly pair of ear-rings which she was desirous of purchasing, but demurred at the price. At last she laid them down reluctantly, saying: "They are beautiful; but I do not care to go as high as twenty-five dollars."

"Let me see them, if you please," asked Caroline. They were handed to her. She was charmed with them, chiefly, I imagined, on account of the price, for they had little beyond that to recommend them, and decided to take them. "Now, I must absolutely go home," said she, "without purchasing any thing more."

For once she kept her word, and I was released from my attendance. But the thought that she had expended one hundred and thirty-five dollars in a single morning's shopping, and that on objects of none of which, by her own confession, she stood in need, could not help recurring to me, and I decided that until I could find some more rapid way of obtaining money, such a wife would be altogether too expensive a luxury for me to indulge in. How far I am right you may judge by Frank Palmer's failure. At all events, that is the reason I didn't propose!

Coronation of George IV.

In the life of the unhappy artist, Haydon, there is a fine specimen of word-painting. It describes the coronation of George IV. We quote it as a specimen of Haydon's powers of description. As to the scene itself, it illustrates the folly of human pride; for, of those who figured in that magnificent display of pomp and grandeur, the larger number now furnish food for worms! And where is the glory of him who figured most in that scene? As saith the poet:

"Twas there! I look for it—'tis gone; a globe of glass,
Cracked, shivered, vanished, scarcely gazed on,
Its silent change dissolves the glittering mass.

But let us turn to Mr. Haydon's account:

"I got my ticket," says Haydon, "on Wednesday at two, and dearest Mary and I drove about to get all that was wanted. Sir George Beaumont lent me ruffles and frill, another friend a blue velvet coat, a third a sword; I bought buckles, and the rest I had. I went to bed at ten, and rose at twelve, not having slept a wink. I dressed, breakfasted, and was at the hall door at half past one. Three ladies were before me. The doors opened about four, and I got a front seat in the chamberlain's box, between the door and the throne, and saw the whole room distinctly. Many of the door-keepers were tipsy; quarrels took place. The sun began to light up the old Gothic windows, the peers to stroll in, and other company of all descriptions to crowd to their places. Some took seats they had no right to occupy, and were obliged to leave them after sturdy disputes. Others lost their tickets. The hall occasionally echoed with the hollow roar of voices at the great door, till at last the galleries were filled; the hall began to get crowded below. Every movement, as the time approached for the king's appearance, was pregnant with interest.

"The appearance of the monarch has some thing in it like the rising of a sun. There are indications which announce the luminary's approach; a streak of light—the tipping of a cloud—the singing of the lark—the brilliance of the sky, till the cloud-edges get brighter and brighter, and he rises majestically into the Heavens. So with a king's advance. A whisper of mystery turns all eyes to the throne. Suddenly two or three rise; others fall back; some talk, direct, hurry, stand still, or disappear. Then three or four of high rank appear from behind the throne; an interval is left; the crowds scarce breathe. Some thing rustles, and a being buried in satin, feathers and diamonds, rolls gracefully into his seat. The room rises with a sort of feathered, silken thunder. Plumes wave, eyes sparkle, glasses are out, mouths smile, and one man becomes the prime object of attraction to thousands. The way in which the king bowed was really royal. As he looked towards the peeresses and foreign ambassadors, he showed like some gorgeous bird of the East.

"After all the ceremonies, he arose, the procession was arranged, the music played, and the line began to move. All this was exceedingly imposing. After long waiting, during which the attempted entrance of the queen agitated the hall, the doors opened, and the flower-girls scattered, strewing flowers. The grace of their action, their slow movement, their white dresses, were indescribably touching; their light milky color contrasted with the dark shadow of the archway, which, though dark, was full of rich, crimson dresses, that gave the shadow a tone as of deep blood; the shadow again relieved by a peep of the crowd, shining in sunlight beyond the gates, and between the shoulders of the guard that crossed the platform. The distant trumpet and shouts of the people, the slow march, and at last, the appearance of the king, crowned and under a golden canopy, and the universal burst of the assembly at seeing him, affected every body. As we were all hozzaing, and the king smiling, I could not help thinking this would be too much for any human being if a drop of poison were not dropped into the cup ere you tasted it. A man would go mad if mortality did not occasionally hold up the mirror. The queen was to him the death's head at this stately feast.

"After the banquet was over, came the most imposing scene of all, the championship and bringing in of the first dishes. Wellington and his coronet walked down the hall cheered by the officers of the guards. He shortly returned, mounted, with Lords Howard and Anglesea. They rode gracefully to the foot of the throne, and then backed out. Lord Anglesea's horse was restive. Wellington became impatient, and, I am convinced, thought it a trick of Lord Anglesea's to attract attention. He never paused, but backed an, and the rest were obliged to follow him. This was a touch of character. The hall doors opened again, and outside, in twilight, a man in dark shadowed armor appeared against the shining sky. He then moved, passed into darkness under the arch, and suddenly Wellington, Howard and the champion, stood in full view, with doors closed behind them. This was certainly the finest sight of the day. The herald read the challenge; the glove was thrown down. They all then proceeded to the throne.

"I did not know till afterward that the crown at the coronation was not bought, but borrowed. Rundell's price was £70,000, and Lord Liverpool told the king he could not sanction such an expenditure. Rundell charged £7000 for the loan, and, as it was some time before it was decided whether the crown should be bought or not, Rundell charged £8000 or £4000 more for the interval."

Further from Nicaragua.

The steamship Star of the West, Captain Tinklepaugh, arrived at New York on the morning of the 7th from San Juan de Nicaragua, which place she left on the 29th ult.

The inhabitants of San Juan have commenced rebuilding their town, but most the infinentiai men have left for other places.

Immediately after the Cyane left, on the 18th, (says the Herald,) Commender Joliy, of the British brig Bermnde, proclaimed the town under martial law, and established a blockade of the port. The English ship-of-war Espeigle holds Punta Arenas, and her commander says the Point is a part of San Juan, and he will hold it as security until something can be arranged between the two Governments. Altogether, a lively state of things is likely to grow nnt of the Greytown exploit.

This statement is denied by Captain Tinklopangh, in the following note to the editor of the Herald:

"The report in the Herald this morning that the port of San Juan, or Greytown, Nicaragua, is in a state of blockade, and that Point Arenas is held by the British commander, for any purpose whatever, is entirely unfounded. On the contrary, when the Star of the West left, all excitement had subsided, and every thing was in as quiet and satisfactory a condition as could be desired. E. L. TINKLEPAUGH.

Commander of steamship Star of the West."

A correspondent of the Herald, writing from Point Arenas, July 20, says:

H. B. M. war schooner Bermuda, which left here on the afternoon of the bombardment, in tow of the Dee, arrived at this place on the morning of the 16th, and remained perfectly quiet until after the departure of the Cyane. That same day, (the 16th inst.,) A. D. Jolly, commander of the Bermuda, went to San Juan, and put up two proclamations, copies of which are annexed;

PROCLAMATION.—It having been brought to my notice, that in consequence of the late cruel outrage committed by the United States sloop-of-war Cyane, that many depredations and thefts have been committed on the property necessarily left unguarded, I hereby proclaim that any person brought before me with sufficient proofs of having committed such thefts or depredations, shall be severely flogged on board H. B. M. ship Bermuda, under my command.

Given on board H. B. M. ship Bermuda, at Greytown, this 18th day of July, 1854.

(Signed) A. D. JOLLY, Lieut. Com'dg.

PROCLAMATION.—In consequence of the non-existence of all civil authority in this city of Greytown, (caused by the late outrage,) I being charged, as far as my power extends, with the protection of lives and property, do hereby proclaim the city and territory of Greytown, as described by its constitution, under "martial law."

Given under my hend, on board H. B. M. schooner Bermuda, at Greytown, Mesquito, this 18th day of July, 1854.

(Signed) A. D. JOLLY, Lieut. Com'dg.

On the 19th he came here and left two; but one of them worded different from the one put up in San Juan. Instead of "cowardly and wanton," he had "cruel." He also informed us he would send after the brass piece that was taken from San Juan, and placed here by Capt Hollins, of the Cyane. The same day he went to San Juan, and with a pencil altered the proclamation there, so as to correspond with the one left here; and signed his name in pencil, as having been altered by him. On the 20th he sent a force of marines to take the cannon, which he says belongs to Great Britain, and was left for the protection of the town. He took it, under protest of the United States Commercial Agent.

He has proclaimed martial law, and blockaded the port. He was about to put the pilot, an American, in irons, for going out to bring in the American brig Reveille, which arrived here on the 20th; and also told him he was risking his life by going out to bring any vessel in without his permission.

Lieut. A. D. Jolly says he came down to make peace. And well he has acted his part; drinking, carousing, and playing billiards, and walking arm in arm with the very ringleaders of all the outrages committed upon American citizens, and furthermore gave them refuge on board of his vessel the day of the bombardment. If British officers do not understand their business and know their places letter than that, they had better stay at home and not come here to delude these poor ignorant people, and lead them to suppose that England will protect them in all the outrages they may feel disposed to commit on American citizens. It is the opinion of many here, had it not been for Lieut. Jolly and his "Bull boat," the demands would have been complied with, and the town of San Juan would not have met the fate it has; but after all, it is the best thing that could have happened to it; for the town would never have been cleared had it not been burned.

The English man-of-war Espeigle arrived here yesterday afternoon, with some of the refugees who were at Kingston, Jamaica. The Argus (English war steamer) left Kingston on Monday last for Halifax. It is rumored she has gone after a fleet, which is coming to arrest all the Americans here. A Baltimore pilot boat, which arrived here from Kingston with provisions, says the town is in a great state of excitement. The officers of the Bermuda have also reported that the English and French Admirals have each sent a frigate after the Cyane.

The Kingston Morning Journal says that "Great Britain has no alternative but to avenge the insult offered to her flag and the injury done to her ally. She is bound to do it on every principle of honor and justice. If she shrink from the task, then is her vaunted protection of the weak against the oppression of the strong, as in the case of Turkey, an empty boast. She has ships in sufficient numbers laid up in ordinary, which, with a little expense, may be soon equipped and commissioned, with which to bombard New York, Philadelphia, Boston, or any of the American seaports; as a just measure of retaliation for the outrage committed on Greytown. The bombardment of Odessa was an act of retribution for the Sinope massacre, and nothing less than a successful attack on some large American seaport will teach the Americans that they must abstain from attacks similar to that on Greytown, unless they be in accordance with the laws of nations."

P. S.—In haste: steamer just in, and will sail in two hours. We have just received a dispatch from the British war vessel Espeigle, after commander says he holds the Point as security for the conduct of Capt. Hollins, and that he will protect it until some thing can be arranged between the two Governments. He says the Point is a part of the city of San Juan.

Later from Texas.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAMSHIP NAUTILUS.

The steamship Nautilus, Capt. Thompson, arrived from Brazos Santiago, via Galveston, yesterday morning, bringing dates to the 12th inst.

The Austin State Times of the 5th inst. says:

We understand that the only legal bid made for the building of the Pacific Railroad through Texas, was by Messrs. Walker & King and their fifteen associates in this State, as follows:

CITY OF AUSTIN, July 29, 1854.

To his Excellency, E. M. Pease,
Governor of the State of Texas:

SIR: We hereby propose to enter into a contract with your Excellency, by which we will obligate ourselves to construct the Mississippi and Pacific Railroad from a point on the eastern boundery line of the State of Texas, not north of the town of Fulton, in the State of Arkansas, to a suitable point on the Rio Grande, at or near the town of El Paso; to cross the rivers Trinity, Brazos and Colorado as near the 32d degree of North latitude as practicable. This we will undertake to do on the terms and conditions, and for the considerations expressed in the act of the Legislature of the State of Texas, passed for that purpose, and approved December 21, 1853.

We will agree and bind ourselves to commence the work within thirty days after the execution of the contract, in case it will be awarded to us; we will undertake to finish, and piece in running order, fifty miles of said road within eighteen months from the date of said contract, and to finish and place in like running order, one hundred miles of said road each and every year thereafter, until the whole shall be completed.

And we will undertake that this shall be of the first class of railroads.

We further propose to deposite in the treasury of the State of Texas, per stocks to the amount of three hundred thousand dollars—to be forfeited to said State, in case fifty miles of said road shall not be completed within eighteen months from the date of the contract proposed.

Signed R. J. Walker, T. Butler King, and others.

Sufficient returns had not yet been received from the elections throughout Texas for State officers. The contest in many places was between native and foreign organizations, and the former in every case prevailed.

TURKISH PREJUDICES MELTING.—A correspondent of the Boston Traveler gives an interesting account of the manner in which the prejudices of the Turks are compelled to yield in the presence of their Christian allies. At a grand review, in the neighborhood of Constantinople, he witnessed the following, among other strange things:

"First, I saw the Sulten so much exhilerated by the occasion, as actually to put his horse upon the gallop, a thing quite incompatible with the dignity of the Sultan! Second, the lady of Marshal St. Arnaud drove in her carriage directly in front of the Sultan, and was there introduced to him, he coming forward on his horse to speak with her; a stranger proceeding, and even more revolting to the feelings of rigid Mussulmans, then it was to see Lord Stratford help their Imperial Master into his boat on the day of the English review! And last of all, and to cap the climax, I saw a Turkish young lady walking, arm in arm, with a Turkish gentleman! a sight, so far as I know, entirely new for Turkey. He may have been her husband, for aught I know, but, according to Turkish notions, that would not mend the matter in the least. Strictly, a husband cannot with any propriety allow his wife oven to walk by his side in the street. Rarely are they seen to go out together at all, and when they do, the wife must keep at a respectful distance behind!

Up to this day, green is a sacred color with the Turks, and no Christian subject is allowed, on any account, to wear it. It is a distinctive mark of a Mussulmen, and especially, and above all things else, in the turban. Green turbened Turks, even, are rare, and it is understood that the man who aspires to such a distinction is a peculiarly holy man—indeed, a lineal descendant of the Prophet. Just imagine, then, what must be the feelings of the good old Mussulmans, to see regiments of French troops all wearing the green turban! These soldiers have gone through all the streets of the capital, sometimes singly, and sometimes in companies of five and ten, and have attracted universal attention and remark. At first the common Turks supposed them to be Mussulman Frenchmen. Several of them wore passing St. Sophia one day, and some Turks invited them to go in and say their prayers. The Frenchmen, not knowing the language, did not at first comprehend the nature of the invitation; but a person was soon found to act as interpreter. When they learned that they were expected to go through the Mussulman prayers, 'Why,' said they, 'we are Catholic Christians, not Mussulmens.' 'How then,' said the other, 'do you wear these turbans?' 'O,' replied they, 'we wear whatever color we like.'"

A FRENCH STORY.—We are indebted to the Paris correspondent of the New York Times for the following anecdote, which began twelve years ago, and the denouement of which but lately occurred:

The Café Foy has, or had, a standing rule never to call back or ask an explanation from any individual leaving the establishment without paying. The doctrine was, if the gentleman is merely forgetful, he will rectify his error the next day; if the omission is a swindle, it is better to suffer the loss than provoke publicity, and perhaps unpleasant consequences. For five years an individual had breakfasted regularly at the Café Foy, and as regularly had acquitted his each morning's indebtedness. At last he omitted to do so, but no notice was taken of it. He went on in the same way for a week, but as he was an habitué of so long standing, it excited no uneasiness. The waiter finally asked the proprietor if he should remind the gentleman of his delinquency. "By no means," was the reply. "He has been punctual in his payments for five years; and if he is less so now, it is perhaps that he is in want of money. At any rate, do not let him suppose, by a word or look, or any want of attention, that his recent irregularity has been noticed." At the end of eight months the gentleman disappeared, leaving his bill unsettled. It was put down to profit and loss, and in five years more had almost passed from the recollection of the master of the house. Not long ago he received from a distant port a shipment of genuine Moka, worth about $1000, and a draft upon a Paris banker for 1100 francs, the approximating amount of 250 breakfasts. The latter was a reimbursement, the former "a recognition of an act of delicacy, rare in any station of life."

RUSSIAN AMERICA.—The Russian Envoy ad interim is sojourning at Newport, and it is mentioned as a curious fact that the Newport News contradicts the rumor of a proposition from Russia to sell Sitka to the United States. This paragraph being supposed to be prompted by the Envoy, it may, perhaps, be worth while to copy, for what it is worth, the following extract therefrom:

"Such a suggestion was neither made nor thought of by the Russian Legation in this country; and well-informed persons consider it was a hoax invented in England, and readily swallowed by the press of America. We doubt if this matter was for a moment seriously considered in St. Petersburg, as it is wholly contrary to the character of the Russian Government and that of the Czar."

The Egyptian Railroad is in good working order, and answers exceedingly well. The trains do not run on it at present at any stated periods. It is chiefly used when European or Indian passengers arrive in Egypt. English engine-drivers are employed on it. The speed is about 20 miles an hour. The railway the whole distance between Alexandria and Caire will soon be open. It passes through a level and most fertile country. The Arabs do not know what to make of the locomotive. They were dancing before it some time since, and having no conception of its speed, they did not get out of the way in time, and an Arab woman was killed. [London Daily News.

The Ericsson steamship left the foot of 13th street, New York, on a trial trip, at 10½ o'clock on the morning of the 8th. Captain Ericsson was on board, and one or two friends. She left, using only the forward engine, the other not being ready, and it is said was making about nine or ten miles an hour as she passed the Battery. The steamer is laden with coal for a voyage to Europe, and 150 tons of iron. She draws seventeen feet and two inches of water, and has her wheel four feet and two inches deep.

Hardinsburg Female High School.

Under the patronage of the
LOUISVILLE ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

Conducted by Rev. R. O GARDINER and LADY, Who are assisted by experienced Teachers of the very best qualifications for teaching both the solid and the ornamental branches, including the higher Mathematics. Ancient and the Modern Foreign Languages, Music, the various kinds of Drawing, Painting, Embroidery, etc.

Located in Hardinsburg, Breckenridge county, Kentucky—decidedly one of the most healthy places in the United States—convenient to a number of excellent mineral Springs; and of easy access, being but ten miles from the Ohio, at Cloverport, where conveyance at all times can be obtained.

The proprietor is determined this shall continue one of the best and cheapest Female Schools in the country. Situated where provisions are cheap and abundant; his buildings large and commodious; no rent to pay; he is prepared to accommodate a large number of boarders at $1 50 per week. Tuition, exclusive of the languages and the ornamental branches, from $7 to $12 per session of five months. Music $18 per session. Use of instrument $2. All other charges equally low.

One half of the price of board and tuition required in advance. The Sessions will commence the first Monday of September and February. aug. 19. 29

Alabama Centenary Institute.

THE EXERCISES of this long established and popular institution will commence on

THE FIRST MONDAY OF OCTOBER NEXT.

FACULTY .... FEMALE COLLEGE.

Rev. A. H. MITCHELL, D. D., President and Professor of Mental and Moral Science.
Rev. B. F. LARRABEE, Professor of Mathematics and Belles Lettres.
——, Professor of the Natural Sciences.
MONS. JULES BEAUV, Member of the Royal Academy of Paris, Professor of Music and French.
Mrs. LUCINDA FERGUSON, Assistant Teacher of Music.
Miss ELLEN E. LARRABEE, Teacher of Drawing and Painting.

MALE DEPARTMENT.

Rev. E. D. PITTS, A. M., Principal.
JOHN T. DURKIN, A. M., Associate.

PREPARATORY SCHOOL.

THOS. C. BEAGH, A. B., Principal.
——, Assistant.

This institution is situated in Summerfield, Alabama—as healthy a location, we believe, as there is in all the South. It is under the guidance and instruction of an able and experienced Faculty. No one of the Professors or Teachers, whose names appear above, needs the support of a Recommendation.

Heretofore all the departments have been under the superintendence of Dr Mitchell: but it has been thought best by the Trustees and Faculty to place each department under a separate jurisdiction. Accordingly, Dr. Mitchell will hereafter devote his whole time and his distinguished talents to the Female College. With him will be associated three experienced Professors, and as many Ladies as the circumstances may require.

One of the Professorships is now vacant, but it is certain to be filled before the beginning of the ensuing session, by some gentleman of established reputation.

The Trustees most confidently invite a comparison of the advantages thus presented to parents for the education of their daughters, with those afforded by any Female College in the South.

The Male Academy, under the direction of Professor Pitts, aided by Professor Durklin, (and others if necessary,) cannot fail to secure and retain a large share of the public patronage.

The Preparatory School has been placed under the charge of Professor Bragg, in order that the children may be properly trained and prepared to enter the higher departments of the institute. A new building for it is already under contract. The buildings of the Female College are also being greatly enlarged and improved. Some ten or twelve thousand dollars will be expended in perfecting and furnishing them.

The Trustees and friends of the institute have resolved to leave nothing undone to place it above every similar institution in the country.

B. J. HARRISON, Secretary of the Board.

N. B.—The Trustees have thought proper, from motives of economy, to require the young ladies to dress in uniform, except in the school-room, and strictly forbid the wearing of any jewelry, except a plain breastpin.

The uniform for winter is green worsted; for summer, white muslin. aug6—6m28

Marion Female Seminary,

MARION, PERRY COUNTY, ALA.

THE EXERCISES of this Institution will be resumed on Monday, the 2d day of October, under the charge of the Rev. Jas. K. Armstrong as Principal, assisted by nine Professors, Teachers and Officers.

It has just closed its present session with one hundred and thirty-three students, seventy-seven of which number were boarders. There is but one session of nine and a half months.

Pupils can enter at any time during the session, chargeable from the beginning of the month in which they commence, to the close of the session. No deduction will be made but at the discretion of the Principal.

The Principal, with his family, resides in the building. The female teachers also reside in the Seminary. Boarders in the Institution are under the control of the Principal at all times. A Steward, in the employment of the Principal, of experience, urbanity of manners, and faithfulness to his duties; a Matron who constantly and kindly ministers to the private wants of young ladies, and especially in sickness, a Governess who directs them in their exercises and amusements, superintends the order of their private apartments, instructs them in certain domestic duties, and guards their private, personal habits, manners and morals, always aided by the presence and active cooperation of the female teachers. The Principal and his lady secure to those committed to their charge every necessary and proper comfort and kindness. Here they are constantly exercised under a wholesome system of regulations respecting neatness, order, punctuality and economy. They have regular hours for study and recreation, for rising and retiring, for eating, domestic duties, and social enjoyment among themselves.

The institution is furnished with a new and superior apparatus in the departments of Chemistry, Natural Philosophy and Astronomy. There is also a large collection of Maps, Charts, Plates, Diagrams, Globes, etc., for simplifying the principles of Geography, Physiology and Astronomy.

In the department of Drawing, Painting and Embroidery there is a fine collection of Drawing Cards, Engravings, Pictures, Paintings, Patterns, and every other convenience important in the prosecution of these departments.

There is in connection with the institution a Library of more than one thousand volumes, and a Cabinet of several hundred specimens.

The institution is furnished with six Pianos, five Guitars, and one Harp.

MUSIC—The Professor at the head of this department is equal to any in the country. He is a superior vocalist, a fine performer on the Piano, Harp, Guitar, Violin, Violoncello, etc. He has enjoyed ten years experience as a teacher of music in the best institutions in the Union, is profoundly versed in the principls of harmony, and is a real amateur of the sublime science to which he has devoted himself.

LOCATION.—Its salubrity, intelligence, morality and public spirit are unsurpassed.

PERMANENCY.—Parents may send their daughters here with confidence in their completing their education under the same course of instruction and system of discipline. Every thing conspires to make the permanency of the Principal a matter of duty, pleasure and interest.

TEACHERS.—The Principal, himself a native of Alabama, surrounds himself with a corps of teachers of known efficiency and tried success, nearly all of whom have been reared in the South, thus ensuring a better acquaintance with Southern peculiarities and sympathy with Southern views and interests. Thoroughness is our motto in teaching. We ascribe the true importance to the harmonious development of the physical, intellectual and moral nature.

Reports are sent to patrons once every two months, which are a faithful showing of the scholarship and conduct of the pupil. In our system of merits and demerits scholarship and conduct are connected.

The Principal regards it as his most important duty to attend to the moral habits of his pupils and to imbuing their minds with proper religious principles.

The facilities for acquiring the French and other modern languages are superior.

There are daily exercises in Orthography, Reading and Writing. Great attention is bestowed on letter-writing and composition.

Lectures are delivered weekly to the junior and senior classes on various subjects of Science and Literature, on which they take notes and are subsequently examined.

The Principal will be assisted in the Collegiate department, the ensuing session, by a gentleman, a Professor of long experience, of the ripest scholarship, and the most superior qualifications as a teacher. He will take charge of the department of Mathematics and some of the higher English branches and the control of the main study hall.

Visitors are not received by boarders except with suitable introduction to the Principal from patrons.

All jewelry is prohibited, except a plain breastpin.

No accounts will be opened in Marion. Money must be deposited or forwarded for all necessary and proper purposes. Let pupils be supplied from home as far as is practicable.

All sums of money for the use of pupils must be deposited with the Principal.

One hundred and forty-five dollars will pay the board and tuition of a young lady for the entire session in the collegiate course. $175 will embrace the languages. $235 will embrace board, tuition in the collegiate department, on the Piano, and in the languages.

Books, Stationery, Sheet Music, Drawing, Painting and Embroidery material is furnished by the Principal. The cost of these articles varies with the advancement of the pupil. Every effort will be made to secure economy in their use.

For further particulars or catalogues, apply to the Principal

Marion, July 29, 1854.

University of Nashville.

THIS INSTITUTION was founded by the State of North Carolina in 1785 as Davidson Academy. It became Cumberland College in 1806, and University of Nashville in 1826.

THE LITERARY DEPARTMENT

Will be reopened under a new organization, and with new buildings, on the First Wednesday of October next.

REV. EDWARD WARNWORTH, D. D.,
Prof. of Ethics and Belles Lettres, and Chairman of the Faculty.
Rev. J. W. MCPHEETERS, D. D.,
Prof. of Ancient Languages.
JAMES L. MEIGS, A. M.,
Prof. of Mathematics and Natural Philosophy
Rev. J. B. LINDSLEY, M. D.,
Prof. of Chemistry and the Natural Sciences.
E. P. DE ZEVALLOS,
Prof. of Modern Languages.

Tuition, $75 per annum—Matriculation fee, $5.

THE LAW DEPARTMENT

Will also be opened on the first Wednesday of October next.

FRANCIS B. FOGG, Esq.,
WILLIAM F. COOPER, Esq., } Professors.
——, Esq.,

Fees for Lectures, $100 per annum.

THE MEDICAL DEPARTMENT

Closed its first Session with 121 Students and 33 Graduates; its second with 102 Students and 30 Graduates; and its third with 220 Students and 71 Graduates.

The Fourth Annual Course of Lectures will commence on Monday the 30th of October next, and continue until the first of the ensuing March.

ROBERT M. PORTER, M. D.,
Prof. of General and Special Anatomy.
J. BERRIEN LINDSLEY, M. D.,
Chemistry and Pharmacy, and Dean of the Faculty.
C. K. WINSTON, M. D.,
Materia Medica and Medical Jurisprudence.
A. H. BUCHANAN, M. D.,
Surgical and Pathological Anatomy.
THOMAS R. JENNINGS, M. D.,
Institutes of Medicine and Clinical Medicine.
W. K. BOWLING, M. D.,
Theory and Practice of Medicine.
JOHN M. WATSON, M. D.,
Obstetrics and the Diseases of Women and Children.
PAUL F. EVE, M. D.,
Principles and Practice of Surgery.
WILLIAM T. DALOSE, M. D.,
Demonstrator of Anatomy.

The Anatomical rooms will be opened for Students on the first Monday of October.

A full Preliminary Course of Lectures, free to all Students, will be given by the Professors, commencing on the first Monday of October.

A Clinique has been established in connection with the University, at which operations are performed and cases prescribed for and lectured upon in presence of the Class. Arrangements have been made to accommodate all patients requiring surgical operations.

Amount of Fees for Lectures in this Department is $100. Matriculating Fee (paid once only) $5; Practical Anatomy, $10; Graduating Fee, $25.

Good Board can be obtained for $3 per week.

The Annual Announcement, giving a full account of the several Departments of the University, may be had by applying to A. V. S. LINDSLEY,
July 29 6t* Sec'y Board Trustees.

Emory and Henry College,

WASHINGTON COUNTY, VIRGINIA.

THE Fall Session of this Institution will commence on the 17th August next.

TERMS:
Tuition per session of five months	$17 50
Board " "	30 70
Washing " "	5 00
Fuel " "	2 00
Contingent charge "	1 25
	$62 50

It is believed that no College in the South is offering stronger inducements than this to young men desirous of a thorough collegiate education. Our location is in a quiet and beautiful valley, ten miles distant from town or village, and comparatively free from temptations to vice. Our Board of Instruction is filled with men of experience, ability and fidelity. Our course of study is extensive and thorough. Our Cabinet, Libraries, and Apparatus are ample. Any young man of limited means, with fair abilities and proper energy, can here acquire a superior, liberal or business education.

For further particulars, address
E. E. WILEY, President,
July 6, 1854. 3t Emory P. O., Va.

Chunnynuggee Female College.

The next Session will commence on the second Monday in July, and close on the first Wednesday in December.

FACULTY:

REV. W. H. ELLISON, D. D., President.,
JOHN F. ELLISON, A. B.
MISS F. GERALDINE BATTLE, Primary Department.
MRS EUGENIA RUTHERFORD, Instructress in Music.

Competent Teachers in the departments of French, Drawing, Painting, etc., will be provided.

RATES OF TUITION PER SESSION OF FIVE MONTHS:

Primary Department	$10 00
First, Sophmore and Middle Classes, each	18 00
Junior and Senior Classes, each	22 50
Music—Piano or Guitar	20 00
Use of Instruments	0 00
Latin, Greek, French, or German, each	10 00
Drawing, Painting, or Embroidery, each	12 50
Wax Work, per Lesson	1 00
Incidental Expenses	1 00

☞ One half the tuition to be paid in advance.

Board can be had at from $10 to $12, including Washing, Lights, etc.

The College is located upon Chunnynuggee Ridge, Macon county, Alabama, in the midst of an intelligent community. It has recently been provided with a new Philosophical and Chemical Apparatus, adequate to all the purposes of instruction; and no pains will be spared to secure the application of the best and most approved means of developing and training the mind. The President having been for twelve years in charge of the Female College, Macon, Georgia, the Trustees entertain no doubt, from his past success, of his entire ability to make this equal to any school of the same grade in the country.

A tri-weekly line of stages from Eufaula to the Montgomery and West Point Railroad, and semi-weekly line from Columbus, Ga., to Chunnynugger, make it accessible from all points.

RICHARD H. FGWELL,
President of the Board of Trustees.
Chunnynuggee [illegible] 1854—jy 10 8m

To Booksellers, Agents, and Peddlers.

BURNETT & BOSTWICK, PUBLISHERS,

15 Camp Street, 15

HAVE just issued from their press the following valuable works:

VOYAGE OF THE U. S. EXPLORING SQUADRON, commanded by Capt. Charles Wilkes of the U. S. N., to the Antarctic Explorations and Discoveries made by Admiral D'Urville, Capt. Ross and other Navigations and Travelers, and an account of the Expedition to the Dead Sea under Lieut. Lynch, with numerous illustrations.

LIFE OF JOHN C. CALHOUN.

LIFE OF JAMES K. POLK, with a history of his Administration.

THE HEROINES OF HISTORY.

HEROINES OF THE CRUSADES.

PANORAMA OF NATIONS.

THE GREAT CITIES OF THE WORLD.

LIVES OF JOHN AND CHARLES WESLEY.

WILLIS'S WORKS—seven volumes.

THE MIRROR OF THE SOUL.

FARM AND FIRESIDE.

ROBAL HOMES, &c &c.

For the sale of the above and many other works, which are all very valuable and popular, we desire to establish an agency in every county and parish in the South; and therefore offer unparalleled inducements to country dealers, agents and peddlers.

A Catalogue of all our publications furnished on application, post paid, to

BURNETT & BOSTWICK, Publishers,
may 27 0m 15 Camp street, New Orleans.

Dr. J. T. Kennon,

Castilian Spring,
Holmes County, Mississippi,

Is now prepared to offer good accommodations to invalids who may desire to visit Castilian Spring, or place themselves under his care for treatment. This is one of the most desirable retreats for invalids in the South, located in an elevated healthy region of country, with abundance of fine Freestone water. The mineral water is composed very strongly of Iron, Sulphur, Magnesia and Soda, and contains largely of Carbonic Acid Gas.

The diseases which it has cured are Dyspepsia, Dropsy, General Debility, Affections of the Kidneys, Bladder, and the various functional and organic derangements of the Womb. This water is especially efficacious in Diseases of Females.

Board, per week—$7.

Reference—Ministers of Miss. Conference.

Rev. J. B. Walker, } New Orleans.
Rev. H. N. McTyeire, }

march 4 0m

Price's Patent Texas Tonic.

☞ The claims of this new discovery are:

1. Its efficacy as an anticeptic, fortifying the System, and giving a healthy action to the Body and vivacity to the Mind, acting on the Blood, Kidneys, Bowels and Skin.

2. It is a certain antidote against Constipation of the Bowels, Torpor of the Liver, Palpitation of the Heart, Termination of Blood to the Brain, Indigestion, Pain in the Head, Chronic Head-ache, Vertigo, and is offered to the public as a remedy for Chills and Fevers (see certificates Nos 3 and 4,) and as a preventive to Yellow, Bilious and Congestive Fevers, when used as an antiseptic. (see certificate No. 5,) using it freely, keeping a lively action on the Bowels during the epidemic seasons.

The subscriber would deem it unnecessary to offer any testimonials in favor of this valuable medicine to those who have experimented with it, and only offers a few out of the many highly respectable citizens and others names whose are familiar to the community, for the benefit of those who have not made its acquaintance; and being assured that the TEXAS TONIC only has to be known to be appreciated, he therefore submits the following testimonials:

THO. K. PRICE, 59 Camp street.

THE BRITISH QUARTERLIES,

AND

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.

LEONARD SCOTT & CO., No. 34 Gold street, New York, continue to publish the following British Periodicals, viz:

THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW, (Conservative.)
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW, (Whig.)
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW, (Free Church.)
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW, (Liberal.)

AND

BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE, (Tory.)

—TERMS—

For any one of the four Reviews	$3 00 per annum
For any two " "	5 00 "
For any three " "	7 00 "
For all four of the Reviews,	8 00 "
For Blackwood's Magazine,	3 00 "
For Blackwood and the three Reviews	9 00 "
For Blackwood and the four Reviews	10 00 "

Payments to be made, in all cases, in advance. Money current in the State where iss

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Publishing Committee Louisiana Conference, { J. C. KEENER, D. D., L. PARKER, J. B. WALKER.

H. N. McTYEIRE, EDITOR.

J. HAMILTON, D. D., T. W. DORMAN, W. MURRAH. } Publishing Committee Alabama Conference.

VOL. IV. NO. 30. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, AUGUST 26, 1854. WHOLE NO. 186.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

LETTER FROM DR. PARSONS.

CASE OF A MAN WITH HIS HEAD OFF—EDITORIAL MEDIUMISM—NEWS—BUSINESS AND PLEASURE SEEKERS—CHOLERA AFTER BOTH—CHRISTIANS ON PAROLE—RELIGION ON DEPORT—THE BEAST AND HIS RIDERS THROWN BY A NEW POWER—STATE OF THE CHURCHES—THE ITINERANT CHAPEL ROLLING ON—REMOVAL OF BOOK CONCERN—EFFECT OF IT.

LOUISVILLE, KY., Aug. 9, 1854.

MY DEAR BRETHER McTYEIRE:—Many calls for professional courtesy, etc., for which the Editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate is always proverbial. But he is "a man with his head off," and the mercury at 103 in the shade, to be expected, a fortiori, to follow his excommunicated vocation? As the Venetian Jew would say, "Tell me that?" This writing for the press—under a pressure—is a kind of "picking up crumbs" business after all. "Do you not find it so? And yet when one's hand has been impulsively driven, through a course of years, to the tune of so much matter per day, the habit grows into a kind of second nature, which looks for the toil, and counts the removal of its necessity as a sort of loss sustained. The prisoner of years—when on the expiration of his sentence he was turned out of Newgate—begged to be re-admitted to his cell. The prison had grown to be the home of his affection. There is in the supervisorship of the periodical press a sort of editorial "medium"-ism, or something like it, which impulsively, at fixed periods, sets the head and pen agoing, and the mind and ink flowing, seemingly whether they will or not.

But let me tell you something about matters and things "up here." As we are at the other end of your string, perhaps a vibration, though from the border extremity, will prove unacceptable, or be disagreeably hot. Louisville, at the present time, is hot, healthy and happy. I think in matters of heat, as in strokes, and the like, we have as much as our neighbors this year, not even excepting the far-famed "Crescent City." Business, though sufficiently active to keep up a healthful commercial circulation, is not pressing in its demands upon time and mind, as to set aside the invitations to "Nine-pins," or rob the green woods of "Drennon" of their cool attractions. Our fashionable have for the most part left the crowded thoroughfares of the city, and gone to the various summer haunts, where pleasure is sought.

But in some instances, instead of realizing pleasure, they have been greeted with the presence of suffering, pain and death. It is not a little remarkable, that the history of this year will show some of these resorts have been among the least healthy of the land. But why should not this be the case? Why should not the cholera, whose erratic strikes seem to be governed by no circumstances of location or condition, go with the throng and the gay to the saloons of pleasure, as well as remain with the lowly and the sad, in the halls of want. It is a matter of astonishment, with some, that this pestilent destroyer should have found its way to the pleasant groves of enjoyment; but is it strange? Could there be a more proper place for its ravages than amongst those, of whom it might be said, "God was not in all their thoughts." The picture is more startling than true, that this dark pestilent has more than once entered the gay saloons of Terpsichore this season, and assisting the "Directour" vocation, has pointed the reckless measure of the dance down to the dismal hall of death. Surely God has a rod in this, and has made the dreadful scourge his instrument of rebuke against the vices and follies, which are too prevalent at all these places.

Professing Christians, too, (that is, they are professors at home,) are sometimes found in these circles, strange as it may appear, like speckled birds in a black flock—marring the scene, disgracing themselves and dishonoring God. I have one in my mind at this moment; but let his name sleep. I fear that with some others, he is "of the baser sort." Why cannot Christians wear their religion every where? Is it a garment to be ashamed of? The conduct of some would seem to say so. There is a saying of our Saviour on that subject—"He that is ashamed of me," etc. There are some who, when they leave home for their summer tour, seem careful, also, to leave their God with their cares behind. To "lay aside every weight" of Christian responsibility—with the morning of the class, the closet, and the prayer meeting—which per-possibility might "so easily beset them," in their end career—that they may "run with" no compunctious visitings of conscience, the race of ruin they have chosen. They place their religion, as it would seem, on deposit with their pastor, and, about latterest, and on their forged 'parole' of pleasure, step back into the world again for a season's debauch. Is it a wonder that Babylon should be stricken down? "God is not mocked."

Among the singularities of the city—and the country too, I believe—which, by the way, is not so much a singularity either, as it is a mystery, is the "Know Nothing" influence. It is perfectly overwhelming. It has Spiritualism out and out, with Biology and Mesmerism, Homeopathy and the "water cure" thrown in as make weights in the scale. Of course I know nothing of its philosophy or its person; but its pressure and effects are every where distinguishable upon the popular mind. I must however say, if "the tree is known by its fruits," there is nothing in this strange power, that, to the mind, strongly recommends it to the calm consideration of every protestant Christian and true patriot. It seems purely political in its character, and to have for its object the preservation and permanent safety of our Republican institutions. To this all true Americans should say (so I think,) Amen. Our municipal election is just over, having taken place yesterday. I hear it whispered on the streets, and elsewhere, that it is to be considered another "Know Nothing" victory. Whether this be so or not I cannot say; but certain it is no Roman Catholic has been chosen, though 'tis said the Papal Bishop and his priests used unwearied diligence and zeal to consolidate the foreign vote, and secure it to candidates belonging to the hierarchy. But both the "Beast" and his rider, though clothed with Pontific infallibility, were placed "hors du combat" on this occasion, by the quiet workings of this secret and mysterious power among us. Success to the "Know Nothings," say I; that's my sentiment. If I am not mistaken in their principles, my prayer is that they may every where prevail. The old political parties are all striking at them; but they are like the blind man beating the post, their wrath is spent in vain. Their attacks are as little regarded by the invisible power, as the barking of a dog by a passing steamboat or locomotive.

In religion, our churches are not so far gone into a state of spiritual congestion, as to stop the vital flow altogether, nor are there so many religiously defunct among us, that there are not enough of the living left to bury the dead, and yet there is little whereof to boast. There has been a sort of half-way camp meeting held of late, in the outskirts of the corporation, by the church extension society, under the direction and management of that indefatigable missionary, Rev. D. Welburn. This meeting has resulted in much good. Many conversions have taken place, and the churches generally have been greatly revived. This is the society that owns the "Itinerant Chapel," which you noticed last winter. A church on wheels. An ingenious concern. But great as may be the novelty of such a contrivance, its interest has been much greater; more than a hundred conversions have already taken place within its walls. May it "roll" on to glory.

The removal of the church establishments from this city, (the book concern, etc.,) caused some excitement of feeling for a while, and, of course, the result was a correspondent depression of Methodist zeal. But the storm is all past, and I reckon it was all right, and for the best, especially in view of the handsome donation of Nashville, $75,000. The fine prosperity of the "concern" while located here, which under embarrassing circumstances, (being without capital,) netted to the church, in eight years, a clear profit of more than thirty-five thousand dollars, and the anticipation of what it would achieve for Zion in the future, in this department, when a proper capital should be had, was productive, perhaps, of a state of pride which needed to be humbled. Well, humility is a cardinal virtue, and may be profitably bought; that is, if the price is not too high.

Please accept my acknowledgments for the continuance to my address of the New Orleans Christian Advocate. Yours,

C. B. PARSONS.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

BISHOP GREEN AT MOUNT ALBION, MISS.

DEAR BROTHER McTYEIRE—Bishop Green, whose visit to the Mount Hebron Presbyterian place of meeting was the subject of a note in your columns recently, made a grand visitation to our neighborhood during the past week; and on last Sabbath performed divine service in our Methodist place of gathering together. Two or three things are noteworthy in connection with the visit of this clergyman to the neighborhood and church.

The first is that there are no Episcopalians in the region round about, unless he has persuaded some restless, gay, fashion loving Methodist to acknowledge a backslidden heart, and a boundless passion for a worldly life, by promising to join him if he will organize a church.

But, you will inquire, how came he to have such interviews with the members of other Christian churches? I will tell you. This same Bishop Green is the prince of proselyters. As to abounding sin and unconverted sinners, they seem to give him little or no distress, not even a decent concern. But the force of his office seems to have no other aim than to undermine and overturn the Methodist Church, seduce its members into his Puseyite or semi-Papal establishment (I seriously question whether it be a Christian church, if it is to be judged by their own standard,) on the ruins of Methodism. It looks like a questionable matter, but is nevertheless true, that the Bishop makes no hesitation in going into the wealthy and influential families belonging to other churches, and unblushingly tell them they ought to join THE CHURCH!!! He asks to be permitted to "baptize their children"; tells them their beloved Zion, the church of their fathers, the church of their choice, where they were turned from darkness to light, and from sin to the service of the true God, is falling away, her numbers decreasing, and her glory departing. He tells them he has a plan on foot for uniting the two churches—the Methodist and Episcopal—that it can easily be done, etc., etc. So it can easily be done; if the Mississippi river can easily get into a gallon jug, or the Gulf of Mexico easily get into the Bishop's hat. Look at it. How would it seem for Cuba to prate about annexing the continent of North America, or the Sandwich Islands to propose to "take the United States in and have us done for?" Don't laugh! It is only a mistake; it must be. Surely the Bishop is not so weak, so vain, so wanting in judgment. For where was his plan in May last, when the General Conference met at Columbus? That was the time, and that the proper body before which to have heaved the mountain with the throes of such a birth. But perhaps the plan has only just been matured, and will be forthcoming at your Annual Conference next autumn. Well, we shall see what we shall see. Meantime let me tell you that in the highly intelligent and influential families belonging to the Methodist Church at Mount Albion, I don't believe there is one so hopelessly verdant as to entertain such a notion with any other feeling than that at least of derision.

We also hear of Methodist clergymen joining the Puseyites. No doubt. And let me tell you that we have a few more of the same sort to spare them. There are several Methodist preachers we know of who would make prominent men in Bishop Green's establishment, and we have tried hard to get them to go over, but they won't budge. In twenty-five years I have known one Methodist minister to join that party, who was deemed a loss to the Methodist Church, and but one, and he will be martyred by them before they get done with him. After they get proselytes they despise them. Perhaps it is for not being consistent, and going to mother church at once. And I say to all Protestants who wish for HIGH EXTENSION CHRISTIANITY—sigh for the church and ignore the Saviour, and are listening to the whispers of proselyting clergymen, be consistent, go to Rome, and be done with it. And if you think me inconsistent, get "Bishop Ives's Trials of Mind," in worrying over the road from High-Churchism to the Pope's great toe, read it well, and you will change your mind; you will say I am right, you must be a Protestant or a Papist. But say some, I can't fellowship certain men and women in the Baptist, Presbyterian, or Methodist churches, and therefore I will join the Episcopal people, or church. Very well. In less than twelve months you will open your eyes; and then you will learn that the tares and wheat grow together every where, and ten to one you find that you ran from a briar to be torn by a cactus. Will you remember and tell us five years hence?

But the chief cause of changes from Evangelical churches to High Churchism is found in the loose discipline they find in the latter. Trained up to regard religion as a solemn affair, and its experience and enjoyment a sensible matter, imposing constant restraint upon worldliness, vanity, pride, ambition and fashion, they no sooner backslide and lose the keen relish for true Christian piety and communion with God, than they look round for some place of refuge from the rebukes of conscience—a sort of "half-way house between an Evangelical church and a Godless world"—and forthwith, having got along enough under the auspices of the good old church of their fathers to ride in a fine carriage, they drive up to the Episcopal Church and try to feel at home. Now they can dance, go to fashionable amusements, attend the opera; use, in common with the Onderdonks, the Doanes, and the good clergy and laity, as much good brandy and wine as they wish, and with the whole church oppose the great Temperance movement, and live as they list. We have seen not a few such cases. But the Bishop, in his visit to Methodist families, had to tell them that Methodism "was running out." Well, it always was running out. They know that. It ran out of Jerusalem at an early day. It ran over the world, and subjugated kingdoms and people, and the world bade fair to be entirely converted to Christ, and in the ministry of the apostolic Methodism of those early times. But a spurious sort of Christianity sprang up, much like the creeping in of Puseyism, and the many other isms, that now distract the Episcopalians—and Methodism, like a lost river, flowed on in secret, covered up with the forms, ceremonies, parades, robes, mitres, and pretentions of the usurpers of Christ's kingdom. At the Reformation Methodism made its appearance again, but was not allowed to appear in full strength and primitive glory, converting nations to God, until good John Wesley arose, and like a resurrected Paul, showed unto the people the true way of Christianity. Then it "ran out" to America, and got here long before the Episcopalians did, and became the first settler, and now while that small body of people—less than a hundred thousand—are wrangling about unsettled controversies, within its own bosom, Methodism has not heard a discordant note for a century on her doctrines; and, but for the abolition party of the North, would not have felt any jarring on matters of discipline worth naming, and is now rapidly sweeping on to embrace, in a short time, two millions of communicants in the American Church alone. Running out!!! Her colleges and academies are constantly increasing in number, and she is now the chief educator among the American churches, and in twenty-five years will hold the sceptre of scholarship over them all. Already she has contributed more learning and more valuable and lasting standard theological works, than any church in christendom during the past century. Methodism was never so strong and permanent as at this present time. "Running out!".

Now I ask one question as I close; it is merely repeated, however, from a lady eminent for her good sense and consistent Christian character: "How would the venerable Bishop Soule, or the apostolic Andrews, look going round among the selected families of other churches, and boldly, and with such arguments attempting to proselyte them to their cause?" How would they look!

Now I say not a word against the Bishop for doing his work, and preaching his heresies of baptismal regeneration amongst his own flocks, or for preaching and trying to convert sinners from the errors of their way, but I do deem it offensive to Christian charity and common courtesy, and very undignified withal, to leave the multitudes of the wicked and prayerless, and lay out all his time and strength for the subversion of the church of Christ—the ancient Christianity, the "Christianity in earnest" of the nineteenth century.

Are there no swearers, Sabbath-breakers, cruel masters, drunkards, worldly, prayer-neglecting, God hating sinners, to excite his compassion and employ his time? Or does he consider Methodism the chief sin of the age—the original sin, the only damning sin?

In conclusion, we may notice the Bishop's Sermon at another time, but he intends to make the liberal Methodists build him a church near this place, and then we shall hear strange things indeed. And some of us will give to build the church, on condition that it ours, in which he has been preaching, is burnt down, or is undergoing repairs, or for any temporary cause cannot be used, we shall have the Bishop's pledge that his church shall be opened for the use of our ministers. Not otherwise. A METHODIST.

Miss., August.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

WOFFORD COLLEGE—SPARTANBURG, S. C.

On Tuesday, the 1st inst., Wofford College was opened by President Wightman and Professors Duncan and Carlisle, with a Freshman and a Sophomore class.

By the close of the year the buildings will be finished, and all the Faculty will be at their posts by the beginning of next year, except Prof. Shipp, whose services will not be demanded before the first of 1856.

The terms of tuition per annum will be fifty dollars, and boarding can be had at from $9 to $12 a month.

Thus, then, Wofford College, though all canvass is not yet spread, is fairly under weigh; and we may, "by the good hand of our God upon us," expect a pleasant and a prosperous voyage.

The College is earnestly commended to the sympathies and prayers of those who desire the promotion of sanctified education.

H. A. C. WALKER,
President Board Trustees.

CHARLESTON, Aug. 10, 1854.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

THE EXAMINATION OF MACON FEMALE COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE.

These exercises have just closed; and on the part of the committee of visitation appointed by the Conference, (being the only one present,) I proceed to make a report of the same.

The exercises were satisfactory to all, whose opportunities enabled them to judge, and peculiarly gratifying to the immediate friends of the institution.

There was no effort at ad captandum display. The occasion was not degraded, as it too often is, into an opportunity for showing off brilliant parts and superficial accomplishments. Effort was made to present a fair and candid view of the progress made by the students, in all that pertains to real education. Fairness and candor characterized all the recitations. The design seems to have been, to present a fair average of the ordinary recitations during the session. There was consequently no previous repetitions of certain detached passages—no previous drillings especially for the occasion. Of course, under such circumstances, the pupils sometimes failed to answer correctly. But a discriminating mind could easily perceive that the failures arose more from embarrassment than from a want of acquaintance with the subject. Teachers and students had evidently not been idle, to accomplish so much, and to accomplish it so well.

While all did well, there were some, especially the Latin, French, Geometry and Algebra classes, whose performance deserves particular notice. The last two evinced a thorough acquaintance with these branches of mathematics, working out equations and demonstrating theorems, with admirable correctness and facility. Indeed, we were impressed with the idea that several young ladies had not only applied themselves closely, but were naturally possessed of good mathematical powers. We would be glad if, in all our institutions of learning, more attention were paid to these higher and more difficult branches—languages and mathematics. Better than any other studies, are they calculated to discipline the mind into habits of thought and attention.

We are glad to see that the Principal of the Institute sympathizes with this view; for he and his accomplished assistants have sought to make the classes in these branches thoroughly proficient.

The recitation room was adorned with some very beautiful specimens of the skill and progress of several young ladies in oil and water painting. They reflected great credit on Miss Scudder, who had charge of this department, and on the application and artistic talent of her pupils.

On Monday night, a large audience was entertained with a musical concert, under the direction of Prof. Gleffer. The pieces selected were happily adapted to evince the proficiency of the pupils in the principles of music and the brilliancy of their execution, as well as to please those whose ears were not sufficiently educated, to appreciate a very high style of operatic music. We say, sincerely and honestly, Prof. Gleffer is one of the best teachers of music we have ever known.

On Sabbath, the commencement sermon was preached by Rev. T. J. Koger, to the comfort and edification of a large congregation. The sermon was forcible, instructive and practical, in no ordinary degree.

On Monday evening, at the close of the examination, the annual address was delivered by Thos. A. Hopkins, Esq., a young gentleman of Macon. We do not deem it extravagant praise to say it was all we could have wished for in such a discourse, on such an occasion. We have not heard many addresses surpassing it, in manly independence, in practical point, in suggestiveness and in eloquence. His unsurpassing criticism of fashionable vices and improprieties will not soon be forgotten by the audience, who listened to it with an interest which manifested their approval and delight.

The next session of the institution will open on the fifteenth of September. In addition to the Principal, who too is well known as a successful teacher to need any additional praise, a numerous and well selected corps of assistant teachers has been secured. Improvements will be made on the premises during the vacation, additional apparatus will be procured, and every effort made to place Macon Female Collegiate Institute on a sound and elevated basis.

The Institution is denominational, but not sectarian. While it commends itself to the country at large, it has especial claims to the patronage of members of the Methodist E. Church, South. With such an institution in our midst, there is no necessity, whatever, to send our daughters to distant schools to be educated. THOS. H. FOSTER.

July, 1854.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

THE JUDSON FEMALE INSTITUTE.

MR. EDITOR—A friend has put into my hands a copy of your paper of the 5th inst. It is with no little surprise that I have read the article signed "Observer," under the caption, "The Promise and its Fulfillment." The writer richly merits a severe castigation, but I shall confine myself to a calm and temperate statement of facts, as a sufficient reply to his groundless and calumnious assertions.

Quoting from the catalogue of the Judson, the paragraph relating to attendance at church, Observer remarks: "The impression which the above language is calculated, and is intended to convey to the public is, that the pupils attending the Judson are at full liberty to attend church where they please, provided the place is indicated by the parents or guardians." Exactly so, Mr. Observer; that is precisely what we mean, and I challenge Observer to point out a single instance, during the sixteen years the Institute has been in operation, in which a young lady has not been permitted to attend church, as "indicated by the parents or guardians."

Again, Observer says: "We venture the affirmation that not one such (that is, whose parents belong to other communions than the Baptist,) has ever attended any church regularly, but the Baptist." I pronounce this affirmation wholly untrue in point of fact. In all cases, without a solitary exception, the instructions of parents and guardians on this subject have always been conscientiously and faithfully obeyed.

Observer continues: "Without intending to impeach the veracity of the author of the passages at the head of this article, I affirm that it sets forth an assurance which is not expected to be complied with, the spirit of which never has been met; and which it is impracticable to meet." Here is a charge of willful duplicity and deception, brought against the conductors of an institution which has been distinguished by the highest marks of public favor, without abatement or interruption, for a period of sixteen years! I scorn to reply to such an attack. The Catalogue of the Marion Female Seminary, under the care of Rev. J. K. Armstrong, a Methodist minister, containing the same regulation as ours, in the following words: "Pupils are allowed to attend such church as is designated by Patrons." Will Observer accuse Mr. Armstrong of setting forth before the public an assurance which he does not expect to comply with? Will he charge the same crime on Mr. Poindexter, the Methodist Principal of the Gainesville school?

Finally, Observer more than insinuates, "that very great and constant efforts" are made in the Judson to proselyte pupils of other denominations to the Baptist faith. I spurn the insinuation with contempt. Of the Board of Visitors appointed to attend the late examination, eight members were not Baptists. Of the fifteen Professors, Teachers, and other officers, seven were Methodists, Presbyterians, Episcopalians, and Lutherans. Of the two hundred pupils, fifty-five were from families not Baptists; and one-half of these were Methodists. Now, I confidently appeal to the gentlemen on the Board of Visitors, to my colleagues of the Faculty, and to ALL MY PUPILS, without regard to denominations, for the truth of the declaration, when I solemnly affirm that the charge of proselytism is UTTERLY WITHOUT FOUNDATION. If the Principal was influenced by so higher motives, a simple regard to his own interest would protect every Methodist pupil against any attempt to wean her from the faith of her parents.

In conclusion, it will be readily perceived that Observer's object is to persuade Methodist parents to patronize their own schools alone. In opposition to this, I have not a word to say; but, when he attempts to accomplish his object by an unjust, ungenerous, and slanderous attack on a sister institution, I do protest against his course, as invidious, mean, and unworthy of a Christian gentleman. If Observer wishes to drive all Methodist girls from the Judson, he can do it by satisfying their parents that the schools under the patronage of their own denomination are as good as the Judson; and he can never do it in any other way.

M. P. JEWETT,
Principal, etc.

MARION, Ala., Aug. 15, 1854.

Rev. Mr. Montsalvage, a converted Spaniard, has been ordained by the Presbytery of Brooklyn, to go out as a missionary to South America, for the American and Foreign Christian Union.

The Green Horn and the Poet

The following incident of a distinguished Philadelphian teaches a lesson of love and kindness which it will be well for all literary men to copy:

Once on a time I went to see Willis Gaylord Clarke, then editor of the Philadelphia Gazette. I remember the clothes I wore, and how I arranged them and brushed them to "take off" the country, but it would stick to them. That gray linsey-woolsey coatee, made capacious to invite growth, with huge pockets outside for chesnuts and apples; the thick woolen mitten, trowsers of the same material, rough inside as a rasp, to promote counter irritation and dilute the blood, made of ample dimensions, with tucks, so as to last for Sundays two winters, and for 'common' indefinitely; a waistcoat somewhat short but wide, to compensate, with staring brown figures, big and bold, as a compromise with a cravat of the same color; commodious high boots, heavy and hob-nailed, emitting a compound of leather and grease, when near the fire; a wool hat of aspiring crown and diminutive brim, and a shilling cotton handanna, to display on occasion of emotions.

"So attired, I went to the city of Brotherly Love with forty pairs of chickens, six turkeys, and two 'possums, the latter harpooned in the hen roost with a pitchfork, and their carcasses, otherwise contraband, to be sold to pay for the depredations, with the provender to sell on account of my guardian, and a poem in those trowsers pockets to exhibit on my own account, I went. The marketing sold, not to the best advantage either, for the poem and Mr. Clarke were in my mind. I called at the office, inquired for the editor, stated my business was "personal and private," and was ushered into the sanctum amid the smiles of clerks and others.

Mr. Clarke was alone and deeply absorbed; and there I was in the presence of a real live poet. I slid quietly along to the nearest chair, holding my wool cap between my knees and the bandanna in my hand, awaiting him to look up. He did so in a few moments, and the pensive, almost melancholy beauty of his face lit up with a faint smile as he saw the rustic apparition. I was all eyes, for there sat the man who edited "our paper," and writ the verses I had cried over in the barn and cornfield, and tried to imitate, on Sunday mornings, when our folks had gone to church. My earnestness, I suppose, interested him. He did not laugh, as I feared, but gently said:

"Did you wish to see me, sir?"

I said "Yes." And I trembled, and my eyes filled in spite of myself. "I come to ask your advice about some lines I have written."

"You write verses, do you?" he said pleasantly; and added, "it's a poor business."

"Not if I could write such as yours," I replied.

"Perhaps you may," said he; "allow me to see yours. What do you call them?"

"The Home of the Poets," said I, handing the paper. It was a substantial foolscap, and well tumbled.

"Poets have no home on earth," he said; and the terrible pathos thrilled me like an arrow.

"I have made their home in Heaven," I said; "and have given them a superior place, for I think that exalted nature must reach a higher place in whatever sphere they attain to."

He looked at me steadily for a moment, and then read the poem of thirty verses twice over, during which I watched his face, so pale, with such deep lines of thought and suffering; a nature so purely emotional, forced into a sphere so wholly executive, fitted to dream and glow, but compelled to work and suffer, till my heart went out to him with a bound. Finishing the poem, he said:

"My young friend, Nature made you a poet; there's no denying that; and it will puzzle man to unmake you. I'll give you ten dollars for this, and publish it."

"Thank you," said I, as well as I could; "I do not want to publish it." Then he handed me some of his own manuscripts, which I read; and I passed a never to be forgotten hour or two with him. I recur to it always with the greatest pleasure; it was noble in him to receive a green, gawky boy, and read my crude rhymes. And a thousand times since, when the promise of life has turned to ashes and the victory not worth the battle, I have recurred to that interview and resolved to struggle. I left Mr. Clarke, threw the rhymes into the desk, with hundreds of others, plunged into commerce and reform, graduated through Quakerism to some spiritual faith, but rejected and disbelieved in gift of poesy—scarcely believe it now; but occasionally I look back to Mr. Clarke's generous words and then the rhyming impulse carries me out of "trade and tumult," to the sweet, still places, far inward and upward.—[Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

The Shadow of Life.

We have rarely met with any thing more beautiful than the following, which we find in the New York Mirror of a recent date:

"All that live must die,
Passing through Nature to Eternity."

Men seldom think of the great event of Death until the dark shadow falls across their own path, hiding for ever from their eyes the face of the loved one whose living smile was the sunlight of their existence. Death is the great antagonism of Life; and the cold thought of the tomb is the skeleton in all our feasts. We do not want to go through the dark valley, although its passage may lead to paradise; and, with Charles Lamb, we do not wish to lie down in the mouldering grave, even with kings and princes for our bedfellows. But the fiat of Nature is inexorable. There is no appeal or reprieve from the great law that dooms us all to dust. We flourish and fade like the leaves of the forest, and the fairest flower that blooms and withers in a day has not a fruller hold on life than the mightiest monarch that ever shook the earth by his footsteps. Generations of men appear and vanish like the grass; and the countless multitudes that swarm the world today will to-morrow disappear like footprints on the shore:

"Soon as the rising tide shall beat,
Each trace will vanish from the sand."

We do not recur to the great fact for the purpose of making ourselves or our readers gloomy. We believe the light of immortality shines eternally behind the dark cloud. No one knows how a soul feels an hour after death. God has but vaguely revealed the great secret of the future life. The longing to live is the strongest evidence that individual existence does not end with mortal life; and the everlasting hope of something better to come, which buoys up the weary, world-worn pilgrim in his journey through life, implies a promise of its own fulfilment. Death is but a change. It can not be an "eternal sleep."

In the beautiful drama of "Ion," the instinct of immortality so eloquently uttered by the death-devoted Greek finds a deep response in every thoughtful soul. It is nature's prophecy of the life to come. When about to yield his young existence as a sacrifice to fate, he betrothed Clemantha asks if they shall not meet again. To which he replies: "I have asked that dreadful question of the hills that look eternal; of the flowing streams that lucid flow for ever; of the stars amid whose fields of azure my raised spirit hath walked in glory. All, all were dumb. But while I gaze upon thy living face I feel there's something in the love which mantles through its beauty that can not wholly perish. We shall meet again, Clemantha."

We believe this conviction of the soul's endurance after death to be as universal as the soul itself, the hollow professions of the skeptic to the contrary notwithstanding. Who would consent to live a day in misery and pain, if he "could his quietus make with a bare bodkin?"

Knowing that death is always imminent, and ultimately inevitable, men who only toil and suffer would gladly lie down and die at the end of the first day's work. But they live on and struggle on, fighting against the "common enemy" with all their might; and even the wretched miser, whose heart is wedded to his golden god, will give millions on his death-bed for one short hour more of life, when every motion is a pang and every breath a groan.

It seems harder now than ever for our poor human race to become reconciled to the universal doom. Very few can say with the poet, on approaching life's last mile-stone, that "Resignation gently slopes the way."

They would "fain lay their ineffectual finger upon the spokes of the great wheel," and stop where they are. Even the world-weaning discipline of years of sickness can scarcely bring the poor patient to think of the "narrow house," and of the sable omnibus that never brings a passenger back, without a shudder of reluctance. Little children try to keep their eyes open at night for fear of dying before morning; and the tottering old man, who has outlived all his kindred, is not yet ready to go. Husbands and wives, parents and children, brothers and sisters, how closely they cling together in the death chamber, or when, in time of pestilence, the "death angel spreads his wings on the blast!" How sad to part with those we love, with but the dim assurance of re-union in another state of existence! For how, or where, or what we shall be when the breath ceases, and the heart stops beating, and the body grows cold, neither the voice of Nature nor the Book of Revelation is sufficiently explicit to remove all doubt even in the minds of the most docile believers.

ANECDOTES OF FASHION.

A volume on this subject might be made very curious and entertaining, for our ancestors were not less vacillating, and perhaps more capriciously grotesque, though with infinitely less taste, than the present generation. Were a philosopher and an artist, as well as an antiquary, to compose such a work, much diversified entertainment, and some curious investigation of the progress of the arts and taste, would doubtless be the result.

The origin of many fashions was in the endeavor to conceal some deformity of the inventor; hence the cushions, ruffs, hoops and other monstrous devices.

Patches were invented in England, in the reign of Edward VI., by a foreign lady, who thus ingeniously covered a wen on her neck.

When the Spectator wrote, full-bottomed wigs were invented by a French barber, one Duvillier, whose name they perpetuated, for the purpose of concealing an elevation in the shoulder of the Dauphin. Charles VII of France introduced long coats, to hide his ill-made legs.

Shoes with very long points, full two feet in length, were invented by Henry Plantagenet, Duke of Anjou, to conceal a large excrescence on one of his feet.

Others, on the contrary, adopted fashions to set off their peculiar beauties—as Isabella of Bavaria, remarkable for her gallantry and the fairness of her complexion, introduced the fashion of leaving the shoulders and part of the neck uncovered.

Fashions sometimes originate in some temporary event, as after the battle of Steenkirk, where the allies wore large cravats, by which the French frequently seized them (a circumstance perpetuated on the medals of Louis XIV.), cravats were called Steenkirks; and after the battle of Ramillies, wigs received that denomination.

In the year 1735 the men had no hats, but a little chapeau de bras; in 1745, they wore a very small hat; in 1755, they wore an enormous one, as may be seen in Jeffrey's curious "Collection of Habits in all Nations." Old Puttenham, in his very rare work, "The Art of Poesie," page 239, on the present topic, gives some curious information: "Henry VIII. caused his own head and all his courtiers to be polled, and his beard to be cut short; before that time it was thought more decent, both for old and young, to be all shaven, and weare long haire either rounded or squére. Now again at this time (Elizabeth's reign) the young gentlemen of the court have taken up their long haire trayling on their shoulders, and think this more decent; for what respect I would be glad to know."

It is observed by the lively Viguent de Marvillie, that there are fingrant follies in fashion which must be endured while they reign, and which never appear ridiculous till they are out of fashion. In the reign of Henry III of France, they could not exist without an abundant use of comfits. All the world, the grave and the gay, carried in their pockets a comfit-box, as we do snuff-boxes. They used them even on the most solemn occasions. When the Duke of Guise was shot at Blois, he was found with the comfit-box in his hand.

Fashions, indeed, have been carried to so extravagant a length as to have become a public offence, and to have required the interference of government. Short and tight breeches were so much the rage in France, that Charles V. was compelled to banish this disgusting mode by edicts, which may be found in Mizeray. It is curious that the very same fashion was the complaint in the remoter period of Chaucer.

In the reign of Elizabeth of England, the reverse of all this took place; then the mode of enormous breeches were pushed to a most laughable excess. The backs of the day stuffed out their breeches with rags, feathers, and other light matters, till they brought them out to a most enormous size. They resembled the wool packs, and in a public spectacle they were obliged to raise scaffolds for the seats of these poudrone beaux. To accord with this fantastical taste, the ladies invented large hoop farthingales. The two lovers could have surely never taken one another by the hand aside. In the preceding reign of Mary, the fashion ran on square toes; insomuch that a proclamation was issued that no person should wear shoes above six inches square at the toes. Thus succeeded picket-pointed shoes.

The nation was again, in the reign of Elizabeth, put under the royal authority. "In that time," says honest John Stowe, "he was held the greatest gallant that had the deepest ruff and longest rapier; the offense to the eye of the one, and hurt unto the life of the subject that came by the other. This caused her Majesty to make proclamation against them both, and place selected grave citizens at every gate, to cut the ruffes, and break the rapier points of all passengers that exceeded a yeard in length of their rapiers, and a nayle of a yeard in depth of their ruffes."

A shameful extravagance in dress has been a most venerable folly. In the reign of Richard II, the dress was sumptuous beyond belief. Sir John Arundel had a change of no less than fifty-two new suits of cloth of gold tissue. Inventories of Elizabeth, Queen of Philip II. of Spain, that she never wore a gown twice. A luck of the reign of Henry IV has been made out by the laborious Henry. I shall only observe, that they wore then long-pointed shoes, to their knees with chains. Luxury improving on this ridiculous mode, these chains the English beaux of the fourteenth century had made of gold and silver; but the grotesque fashion did not finish here; for the tops of their shoes were carved in the manner of a church window. The ladies of that period were not less fantastical.

The wild variety of dresses worn in the reign of Henry VIII is alluded to in a print of a naked Englishman, holding a piece of cloth hanging on his right arm, and a pair of shoes in his left hand. It was invented by Andrew Borde, a facetious wit of those days. The print bears the following inscription:

"I am an Englishman, and naked I stand here,
Musing in my mind what raiment I shall wear;
For now I will wear this, and now I will wear that;
And now I will wear what I cannot tell what."

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Christian Advocate.

Terms: $1 50 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:
SATURDAY, AUGUST 26, 1854.

"THE ADVOCATE."

Labor is high. Living is high. Materials are high. We are publishing the Advocate at a heavy weekly cash expense. We need heavy weekly cash receipts. Much can be done in extending our circulation and keeping us in funds at the approaching fall meetings. Bring the paper before the meeting. Collect and remit.

YELLOW FEVER.—We visited the Charity Hospital on Thursday evening. Patients under treatment 716; died of yellow fever on 21st inst. 14; 22d 15; 23d 9; and on 24th, up to 12 M., 7. There are two definitions of epidemic. One, that when a form of disease prevails so violently as to control all other forms, it is epidemic. As it was last year, when a bowel affection, bilious fever, or crazy bolt, or a sore throat, ran into yellow fever. The other, that when the deaths from any one disease exceed the aggregate deaths from all others, it is epidemic. According to this last definition, yellow fever is now epidemic here. For the last few days the Hospital physicians informed us it has been at a stand, and that cases taken in time generally yield readily.

We were pained to find our friend Mr. Young, a resident student from Arkansas, who showed us through the wards on our previous visit, in the last stages of the disease, with black vomit.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.—By decease of Hon. Mr. Downs, Custom-Collector of New Orleans, this office, the most valuable and responsible in the South, without Federal bestowment, has become vacant. Instant upon his death, President Pierce appointed as his successor Col. Thos. C. Porter, whose acceptance has been signified. A judicious and popular appointment. When it is considered that about twenty others were standing applicants for the place, and that Col. Porter was not an applicant, this unsolicited and prompt appointment of the President becomes a compliment, highly appreciated by the friends of Col. P., and due to his merits.

EDUCATION.—To those ADVERTISEMENTS which tell where and on what terms the best Education may be obtained, we invite special attention. Two more are added this week. The Catalogue of Pickensville Female Institute has been received, which gives gratifying evidence of prosperity.

RYERSONIAN.—The Lima N. Y. Visitor, under date of July 29th, has the following announcement: "We understand that Rev. B. F. Tefft has surrendered his ministerial parchments to the authority of the Methodist Episcopal Church."

His reasons are not stated. We hope this "surrendering" is not becoming epidemic in the North and Canada. So far, its two victims are shining marks. Dr. T. was late President of Genesee College. He now resides in central New York, on his farm.

R. H. RIVERS, D. D.—The numerous friends of Dr. Rivers will be pleased to learn that his own health is good, and that Mrs. R., in North Alabama, has recovered hers. Lagrange is doing well; about thirty new students, and more arriving; se a letter 16th inst. informs us.

"GOD CAN SAVE SOULS IN HAYING TIME." Such is the announcement in one of our Eastern Exchanges, prefacing the account of a good meeting. It is worth thinking over, though you believe it already. God can save souls in fodder pulling time, cotton picking time, sugar rolling time.

METHODISM IN FRANCE.—At the third session of the French Methodist Conference, lately held at Nismes, it was reported that there had been a net increase of 267 in the membership. The whole number of members reported was 1098.

DEATH OF BAPTIST MINISTERS.—The Texas Ch. Advocate publishes the death of Revs. Mr. Hopkins and Thos. Chilton. The latter, late of Greensboro, Ala., was a zealous and superior man. Once a lawyer and a politician, he threw himself into the ministry at great worldly sacrifice and great spiritual success. The wisdom of winning souls was his. The editor accompanies the announcement with these well bestowed and discriminating remarks:

"He possessed one combination that should distinguish every Protestant minister: he was energetic in building up his own Church, as the best way in which he could serve the cause of Christ; at the same time he appreciated a similar course on the part of ministers of other communions, regarding it as the best way in which they could serve that cause. He was thus an example of that philosophy so important to be understood and practiced by the churches in these times: energetic denominationalism without sectarianism, and catholic charity without latitudinarianism."

A MODEL UNIVERSITY.—Michigan is entitled to the honor of being the first State in the Union, offering the student from all portion of the United States complete courses of collegiate instruction free of charge. The income from her University fund is now $25,000 per annum and is increasing.

THE FRUITS OF CONGREGATIONALISM.

We become attached to a reasonable and guarded connexionalism as the fruits of congregationalism appear. In the former there is, as to progress, a fly-wheel principle in operation. The motion of the large body keeps every part going, and bears it over obstacles to which, isolated, it would be unequal. As to doctrine, there is no mistaking its conservative power. Whereas extreme independency, or congregationalism, is without a balance or a bend.

In the present religious state of New England this is seen. Preachers popular with their parishioners, cannot be put out or silenced, though convicted of arrant heresy. It is wearisome amusement to read the trials of Dr. Bushnell in the associations and consociations of Connecticut. It has been well said that instead of Bushnell, Congregationalism itself was on trial. It hadn't power enough to get rid of him!

Every sovereign bunch of believers being at liberty to follow their own notions—in a land where notions abound—what is to keep them to the Bible? They are at the mercy of every epidemic heresy and local influence.

The Congregationalists of New England have suffered themselves to become so excited on the subject of slavery that they seem to have forgotten every thing else. A correspondent of one of our exchanges states that, at the meeting of the Rhode Island consociation, which was very fully attended by most of the leading clergymen of the State, Slavery was the great topic before the body, and there appears to have been much excitement in the meetings, and, so much time was occupied in this discussion, that the Narrative of the State of Religion was omitted, together with the closing sermon, and the celebration of the Lord's Supper!

We should like to hear a sermon from the leaders of that body on the text from Paul, "God forbid that I should glory in any thing save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ," or "I determined to know nothing among you save Jesus Christ and him crucified."

See how Puritanism has fared in their keeping. Puritanism had its birth in the Established Church—was nurtured awhile by the Presbyterian, and strangled to death in the Congregational. Though they boast of Puritan blood and principles, Congregationalism did not come into existence until a century after Puritanism took its rise, and it became connected with it only to damage.

The New York Times, which may be allowed impartial in this testimony, presents a sad picture:

"Our old men remember when there was no Infidelity in New England. Everybody believed the Bible, loved the Bible, honored the Bible. It was the Puritan's Book; that was enough. It had been laid wide open on Plymouth Rock; that was poetry in itself. But of late New England has had more Infidels, of one sort and another, than all the rest of the country. There is no end to her Latitudinarianisms. And then her most popular author, Hawthorne, shows off her earlier Puritanism in its severest features, and the children turn pale for gladness, that they are escaped from its terrific sway. In the times of our Fathers, Infidelity was supposed to be enthroned at the University of Virginia and College of South Carolina. Jefferson and Cooper were dreaded. But what a wonder! These schools are now foremost in the land, alike for numerical strength, splendid abilities, and Christian teaching. The old leaven, if it ever worked at all in them, has been thoroughly purged out, and to-day they rank deservedly high among the conservative agencies of religious and national freedom. The Puritan stock has certainly, in some respects, degenerated, while the cavilier, Scotch-Irish and Huguenot, have maintained and augmented their power. If the North is asked now for her jewels, what can she say?"

READING, (VS.) PREACHING.

After all said and to be said on the forms of the pulpit, it is decided on this principle: "That government is best which governs best." To the extemporaneous (or rather manuscriptless,) speaker are conceded great natural advantages; among others that which Curran so highly prized and used, styled by himself "feeling the eyes of the people."

One of the largest Southern Conferences a year ago formally took this action—"Resolved, That this Conference wholly disapprove of the practice of reading sermons."

Public opinion has been shrewdly described as the average prejudice of mankind. The public opinion of the Methodists, and those who make up their congregations, is correctly indicated in that resolution. Too copious notes, even, are out of order, or they must be handled cleverly. A manuscript sermon does seem, in the very face of the prayer, just breathed for help to the preacher! Many would even hold back from good frames and feelings, while such illegitimate influences are at work. This is one of the forces—public opinion—to be overcome by one who ventures a reading. He must, on the one hand, be strikingly destitute of natural advantages, and on the other, calculate largely on the factitious ones of accurate expression, connected thought, and reach of closely linked arguments, to expect a nett gain.

The sermons of the divines of the Established Church, just before and after the Restoration, were models of style and argument, and dulness. Their excellence never rose to eloquence, arousing the dormant feelings of the heart. A writer of the time published some truthful, though not polished satirical verses:

"For what's a sermon, good or bad,
If a man reads it like a lad?
To hear some people when they preach,
How they run o'er all the parts of speech,
And neither raise a word or sink;
Our learned Bishops, one would think,
Had taken school-boys from the rod,
To make Embassadors of God.

"In point of sermons, 'tis confest,
Our English clergy make the best;
But this appears, we must confess,
Not from the PULPIT, but the PRESS.
They manage, with disjointed skill,
The matter well, the manner ill;
And what seems paradox at first,
They make the best and preach the worst."

If a sermon were written after it was preached, and studied before, with all the care needed to write it, then it seems the best conditions for composition and delivery would be met. In the life of that eminent and admirable man, Dr. Alexander, occurs a passage in this connexion, both instructive and interesting:

"While itinerating, I studied my sermons in my mind; and seldom preached without intense application of my thoughts beforehand. Texts of scripture would often open to my view, and these I would seize upon for discourses. The necessity of thus composing, in the evening and morning where I lodged, or as I rode along the way, proved a good discipline, as it accustomed me to close thinking, and to going over and over the same train of thought. I was, however, often greatly disappointed and mortified; for when I had great freedom in pre-meditation, I naturally expected the same in preaching. But this was sometimes far from the case. On some occasions a text would strike my mind shortly before speaking, accompanied with a strong aversion to the subject proposed. I commonly ventured on the new topic, and in such cases almost always had better success than usual. Not unfrequently, while I was preaching, my subject would present itself in new lights, much more favorable than preceding ones, so that I have often changed my whole plan of treatment. Though the thought was often suggested to me, 'That is very good,' yet when I was done, I was greatly humbled, and sometimes so discouraged as to feel as if I could never venture in the pulpit again. I have commonly felt that the people who admired my preaching were deceived."

Is not the experience of the Reader just otherwise. He "commonly feels" that the people underrate the sermons. They have not met his careful elaborations with appreciation; and he is at a loss to account for such disproportionate effect.

We repeat that writing the sermon after preaching it, and studying it before preaching, with the closeness needed for writing, would, as far as we are acquainted, fulfil the conditions that meet the approbation of Methodists and Methodist congregations. Are there any better conditions?

NEW FIRE POLICE.

There is a growing conviction among our citizens that utility, economy and safety demand the substitution of the volunteer system for a corps of able and picked firemen, under the control and pay of the Corporation. Under the volunteer system many are enrolled who, in times of peril, know nothing but the public good. Their labors are herculean, their daring heroic. But along with these are youths and "fast men," of no service but for confusion.

The moral aspects of this subject are serious. In some American cities the fire companies, with their all sorts of society, and engine houses for evening and Sabbath day rendezvous, their dinners and celebrations, have proved sources of evil to young men, and given to this important class of the population a reckless character.

We believe this is a very general opinion, which has not been advocated publicly, from an apprehension that it would excite the hostility and prejudice of a powerful organization. The custom, among the papers and politicians, is to court the firemen. The Bulletin has hinted for reform. The Delta, of 23d inst., boldly proposes a change of the volunteer for the pay system:

"The experiment has exceeded the most sanguine expectations of its advocates in Cincinnati and Boston, whilst the promptitude, efficiency and perfect order with which the Fire Police of London and Paris handle a fire, is a marvel to those who have witnessed the confusion, tumult and disorder of one of our large conflagrations. As a consequence, the people of London and Paris pay one-eighth of one per cent. insurance on buildings, whilst we in New Orleans pay one and a half per cent. Here is an enormous tax upon the labor of our city. Millions upon millions are thus withdrawn from our city in the shape of insurance.

To what is this high rate of insurance in New Orleans due but to the frequency and destructiveness of fires? It is customary to boast of our volunteer firemen, their gallantry, their efficiency, their devotion to humanity, etc. To all these praises we cheerfully assent, but we think the position will hardly be questioned that an organized, disciplined force, composed of picked and experienced firemen, of mature age and strength, with a proper chief and lieutenants, and of half the numerical force of the present department, would be more reliable and manageable.

The Lynchburg Virginian says that there are now in that city three Bishops, all of whom are natives of Bedford county, Va., but who now live in different States. They are the Right Rev. N. H. Cobbs, Bishop of the P. E. Church in Alabama, the Rt. Rev. Jas. H. Otey, of the P. E. Church in Tennessee, and the Rt. Rev. John Early, of the Methodist Church South. The latter resides in Lynchburg. Each is an honor to his native county and State.

Book Notices.

The following books are furnished our table through McGinnis & Carver, 36 Camp street, where they are for sale, with a large assortment of other publications and stationery, old and new:

ENMONDSON'S SHORT SERMONS.—Among the publications of the late John Ball, was this one. Mr. B. never degraded or demoralized himself as a publisher, by bringing out merely paying books: he published only books really useful. We always admired his sound and consistent morality in this matter. He is dead, and his publications live after him, and none doing more good than this octavo volume of sermons. By Dr. Durbin's recommendation, who furnishes an excellent preface, they were republished. The author is a Wesleyan Minister of England. This American republication has been successful—the present edition being the fifth. It is neatly printed, bound in muslin, and cheap. The sermons are terse and short; practical, spiritual, devotional, and spited widely. They are a treasure in a Christian family.

THE SANDWICH ISLANDS: Notes by A. Heale, Harper & Bros. 1854.

The writer is an Annexationist—annexation to U. S., of course. He thinks the islands worth having; and more, that they are "absolutely essential to the protection and advancement of American commerce." Just now this most important of the groups that stud the Pacific is worth looking after. We have here a lively and minute account. The writer refers to missions, and their state and effect, with a respect and appreciation in pleasing contrast with the sneering notes of some others. In strictness, the mission churches are ahead of ours. One of them is anti-tobacco! Chewers and smokers are turned out. And there, as it would be here, many are not wanting to be turned out. We have derived information and pleasure from the volume.

LIFE OF PYRRHUS: By Jacob Abbot. Harper & Bros. 1854.

Though much romance is mixed up with these ancient lives, they are worth reading, and for juveniles are especially attractive. Mr. Abbot does not pretend to sift and correct a history, whose very myths are consecrated by antiquity and classical taste. The illustrations add to its attractiveness.

HARMONY OF THE GOSPELS IN GREEK: By James Strong, A. M. New York, 1854. Published by John C. Riker.

By mail we have a copy. It is in the received text, and after the method of the English Harmony—a book by the same author that has been well received. Notes, various readings and Chronological items, are given in the lower margin, calculated to assist the student to a thorough understanding. Also, a copious synoptical and textual index. The arrangement is lucid. The work is a real constitution to sacred philology. We purpose to use it much, in our study of the Gospels, and recommend it to biblical students and ministers. It ought to have a place in the library, and will not be out of place in the saddle bags. In the latter case the Harmony would be rendered vastly more convenient with a dictionary attached. Its size would not be made cumbrous thereby, and the author is so well qualified, we hope he will supply this in another edition.

THE SOUTHERN QUARTERLY REVIEW.—The last number, delayed by Dr. Doggett's absence, is by this time before its patrons. Of mournful interest is an article by Dr. S. Patton on the existence and characteristics of angels. He reasoned then: he sees and knows now.

HARPER'S GAZETTEER.—Numbers two and three of this largely designed and valuable work, in course of semi-monthly publication, have been received. The maps, accompanying, are arranged to the latest discoveries and changes. Price fifty cents a number, to be completed in ten; forming a large book.

OPEN-AIR PREACHING.—We are happy to learn, says the Edinburgh Witness, that this good work is advancing. In the Free Presbytery of Irvine, at its late meeting, arrangements were made for carrying out the desires of the Assembly's Home Mission Committee, which was represented at the Presbytery by the Rev. Mr. Somerville of Glasgow. Open-air services are to be conducted in five very necessitous districts, viz: Kilbirnie, Dalry, Kilwinning, Stevenson, and Hurlford, by several of the most excellent ministers of the Church. On Sabbath night the Rev. Mr. Blake of the East Free Church, Pollokshaws, preached a sermon in the open-air, near the Maxwell Arms Inn. A considerable crowd was congregated, who appeared to listen attentively. A new feature will be introduced during the Glasgow Fair holiday, in the delivery of a sermon each evening on the Green, by clergymen of various denominations.

THE BIBLE IN ALABAMA.—A letter from a clergyman in Alabama, to the New York Advertiser, of July 22d, says: "We have just had a visit from the Rev. Mr. Atkinson, agent of the American Bible Society. He understands his business, and feels the importance of his work. His Bible discourse yesterday stirred up the people. When told that there are in the State of Alabama six thousand families destitute of the Bible, all seemed astonished. One old bachelor rose up and said he would send them forty copies, and a gentleman, an aged man, pledged himself for four hundred copies of the Bible."

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

MORE COMING ROUND-RIGHT.

ZACCHEUS, COME DOWN.

How hard it is to unbend when a haughty attitude has become habit and pride a chronic disease. Last week we noticed some well-meant but abortive attempts in one of the American Churches, to come down to the level of usefulness. The English Establishment shews signs, in many of its members, of a struggle to get down to the people. In these masses, unwashed and uncombed, are the purchase of Jesus' blood. Among the people—the common people—the great people are the jewels to be gathered and fitted for the heavenly coronation. The implements that can upheave and delve and do the work are in demand. The following extract seems to be authentic:

"The Rev. John Allen, Archdeacon of Salop, has addressed a letter to the Archbishop, urging, as a pressing need of the Established Church, 'the formal recognition of our pious laymen as fellow-laborers with the clergy in visiting the sick, ministering the Word in private, and other acts of spiritual mercy.' He adds: 'It seems to me to be one chief cause of the weakness of the English Church that, practically, she has so labored as to repress what happily is irrepressible—the desire of Christians to communicate their religious feelings to their fellow-men. Many a hopeful youth grows up in the parish school under the pastor's influence, to become in manhood the dissenting teacher, alienated from his early spiritual guide only because the Church seems to frown if he attempts, what he feels he cannot refrain from, to do all that he can to lead others to the knowledge and love of his Master. I wish that our bishops would encourage the minister and churchwardens of a parish to look out men of honest report, full of wisdom and of the most precious influences, who might, after inquiry, be recognized within the limits of that parish as publicly engaged with the pastor to fight against these common evils by which we are well-nigh vanquished. Such would be a sort of deacons, without irrevocable vows, and not forsaking their secular callings, similar to the lay elders of the Kirk of Scotland, or the local preachers among the followers of John Wesley.'"

These movements are with good intent, and in the right direction. We hope they will come round right.

A felt want is shown—a yearning desire for usefulness, that in time will lead to something. This spirit will supply its own forms, and not rest till they are supplied. Wesley would have rejoiced to see this day. What an impulse will be imparted to the work when churches and ministries, rich in learning and means and influences, begin to find aptitudes for humble usefulness, and put out their latent power!

Zacchæus has been up in a pretty tall tree, but he must come down. Zacchæus is coming down, rather awkwardly, it is true. The Master calls him. The heaving multitude is below there. He must come down, and stand on a level with the Master and the multitude.

August, 1854. E.

Revival Intelligence.

CRAWFORD CT., ALA. CONFERENCE.—All that is necessary to a revival is to use the means employed by the disciples of Christ, when the first really Holy Ghost revival that ever was, commenced. A model for all revivals. What means were used? First—They obeyed the command of Jesus—waited to be annointed from on high. Second—They were in one place, not scattered. Third—They were of one accord; that is, they all agreed as to the blessing they wanted, which was the Holy Spirit. Fourth—They continued in prayer. What was the result? Answer—They received the promised blessing, and it was greater than they expected. It was a blessing containing all other spiritual blessings. They were qualified to preach; they had a congregation; the Word took effect, and three thousand were converted. And so it has been with us on this circuit, and will be so with any that shall try the same means in simplicity and godly sincerity.

We commenced anew some four weeks ago, using all those means we had been using; part of them all the time. But we commenced and continued in prayer. We removed all difficulties as fast as possible, and sought them whether they existed or not, so as to be of one accord; and we met together in one place; and our cry was continually power, power, from on high—not of man or of eloquence, but of the Holy Spirit. And we did not pray in vain; the power of God came down. Backsliders were reclaimed; lukewarm professors warmed, and the whole Church spake the wonderful works of God. We had congregations; and sinners were convicted and converted, and joined to the people of God.

1. At Shady Grove, there were eight converted and eleven joined.

2. Lebanon—1 left; don't know the result finally; but three had joined and several professed.

3. Mt. Zion—Was not there, but learn they had a good meeting.

4. Olivet, (Hurt's) forty whites joined, and as many we think converted.

5. Waccochee now going on; forty-four whites and ten colored; thirty converts already, and from twenty to forty penitents at the altar. Glory be to God.

The preachers that have attended generally these meetings with me are Bros. Chas. Hays and Wardlaw (the missionary.) Others have done us good service. At Lebanon, Bros. Lockhart and Mezell, and Bro. G. R. Tally, from Auburn. At Mt. Zion, Bros. Hays, Wm. Robinson, B. Crop, Dr. Brown and Lynch. At Olivet, we had Bro. Lyne from Apalachicola, Bro. Crowell from Glenville, Brother Thomaston and Jackson in the neighborhood. I should be glad to give you an account or description of several very remarkable occurrences and conversions.

August 15, 1854. WM. P. MILLER.

MONTGOMERY, ALA.—The Weekly Mail of 17th inst. says:

"We had the pleasure of hearing a very excellent discourse from Rev. Mr. Blue, last Sunday night, in Methodist Church. His theme was—"Be ye reconciled unto God." This subject is one which most frequently, in its substance at least, engages the labors of this man of God. On the present occasion, the speaker was warmed and animated by a holy zeal, and his words were searching, earnest, impressive. He explained that the idea of reconcilement involved the idea of previous hostility between those, as to whom the term was used. In this case, God was the party offended—offended by SIN. He offered terms of pardon, of reconcilement to man. To embrace these terms was Life; to neglect them was Death eternal. The speaker, in the most affectionate and persuasive manner, implored his hearers to accept the terms of pardon, and to be reconciled to their offended God.

"A considerable revival feeling has existed for some days in this Church, and we entertain little doubt but that a beginning has been made which will go on to increase greatly. One or two have been added to the Church, and great seriousness pervades all classes of hearers."

YAZOO CT., MISS. CON.—We have been blessed on the Yazoo Circuit. At a meeting held at Dover, there were thirty conversions and as many additions to the Church. At Shiloh, (a meeting held by the Local Brethren,) about twenty found peace, and as many added to the Church. At Benton, we have been holding a meeting for several days, and the Lord has been with his people. Fifty have professed to find peace in the Saviour, and forty-six have joined the Church. This has been the most overwhelming visitation of God's Spirit witnessed in this country for many years. May the work continue to spread until the pathway to hell shall be desolate, and the road to Heaven be thronged with happy travelers.

I feel greatly indebted to Bro. Pearce of Yazoo City, and Bros. Abbey, Purvis and Cooper, for their efficient labors.

Aug. 17. R. T. JONES.

BISHOP ANDREW ON CALIFORNIA.

It is known from the published plan of Episcopal visitations, that this department of the work is committed to my care for the next year. I shall probably (God willing) leave for that part of my work about the first of February next, and it is very desirable that I carry with me some eight or ten efficient men to labor in that important field; besides these we want a man who is well educated, competent, and apt to teach, to take charge of our literary institution at San Jose. This is a very important department of our work, which it is of the utmost consequence that we should attend to promptly and energetically. For the charge of this institution we should prefer a Methodist preacher. There is no doubt that the situation would not only be honorable, but profitable to one well qualified, prudent and industrious. But the grand consideration is, that it will be a position of great usefulness to the church and the world. The educational destinies of California must be in the hands of sound Protestants, or the Romanists will control the destinies of that beautiful country to an extent which must be greatly injurious. Already they have a large and flourishing institution of learning in San Jose, as well as at other points, and scores of Protestant children are sent to their institutions, just because there are no Protestant schools to which they can be sent. Ought these things to be so; can we permit its continuance and be guiltless before God? Our colleges are annually sending out scores of young men, pious and gifted, who think of devoting themselves to the service of the church as preachers and teachers; let them wake up and look abroad to the distant as well as the home fields, and let them be assured of one thing—the Lord hath need of not a few of them in places far distant from the smoke of their fathers' chimneys.

I know that several preachers tendered their services to Bishop Soule during the late General Conference; I know not how many of them were accepted, and as the Bishop is gone East, and I know not where to direct a letter to him to inquire especially, I shall be glad if any preacher who has been distinctly accepted would inform me promptly of the fact, and also of the time at which it is understood he leaves for his new field of labor; or if this notice should meet the eye of Bishop Soule, I should be greatly obliged to him for the desired information. The reason for desiring it at once will be obvious. I wish to know on whom I can count for California, so that I may bestir myself in obtaining the necessary reinforcement for the Pacific Conference. Brethren who wish to go sooner than the time of my sailing, can make arrangements to go out with Brother Wynn, who expects to leave for home about the first of October.

And now a few words before we dismiss this subject. I have heard it rumored since the General Conference that we intend to abandon our work in California. I shall not stop to ask how this report originated; my object now is to give a most emphatic contradiction. We have not the remotest intention of abandoning California, but it is our settled purpose to press our work there with redoubled energy. If the authorities of the Church have any notion of abandoning the work on the shores of the Pacific, they have made a capital blunder in sending me there next year. Abandon that great country, which is the key to China, all South America, and the thousands of islands of the Pacific! Is not Japan already opening to us; and is it at such a time as this that there is a whisper of retracing our steps? I blush that such a whisper should have been breathed from a Southern Methodist lip. I sincerely hope that no such discouraging words will be heard again in our ranks. Give up California! No, never, never! and it much better becomes us to repent in sackcloth that we have done so little than to breathe a whisper about backing out from the grounds already gained. It is probable, Mr. Editor, that you will hear from me again on this subject.

JAS. O. ANDREW.

OXFORD, GA., August, 1854.

[S. C. Adv.

HYMENEAL:

On the 18th July, at the residence of Mrs. E. H. Dickson, Bossier Parish, La., by the Rev. Jas. L. Wright, Mr. ROBERT W. NEWPORT, Jr., of East Feliciana, and Miss MARTHA E. DICKSON, of Bossier Parish.

On the 9th August, by the Rev. James L. Wright, at the residence of Mr. John Hamiter, Mr. ROBERT EMMET WYCHE and Miss KATE HAMITER, all of Bossier.

OBITUARY:

DIED.—On the 6th inst., in this county, Miss ANASTASIA CONFER, aged 17 years 7 months and 16 days. She was not blessed with pious training, her parents not being religious; but was amiable and affectionate in her disposition, and obedient to her parents at home, and her teachers at school. During her attendance at school in Jackson, La., under the supervision of Rev. H. Jones and W. H. Scales, a revival of religion occurred in the Methodist church in that town, two years since, at which, it is thought, she obtained religion. After her return from school, though surrounded by untoward circumstances, she gave strong indications that the work of grace commenced in her heart was genuine. She taught all her brothers and sisters to pray, by precept and example.

One of her little sisters, near six years of age, preceded her, about two weeks, to the spirit land. This was Sarah Josephine. The happy spirit of little Sarah escaped its clay tenement in the very breath of prayer, and sped its way to swell the song of praise with the redeemed on high.

The same disease that thus invaded the family, made Miss Anastasia its victim. On the morning of the day on which she died, she told her parents that she was going to die, and asked them to pray for her, but they not being religious, and thinking her not ill as she thought, declined. She then commenced to pray, and a younger brother, though not religious, joined in prayer with her, and while they prayed together, the Lord blessed them powerfully, with an assurance of his favor, and visions of his glory, and while entirely rational, she told them around her that she saw her little sister beckoning her to that bright abode. She exhorted parents and all about her to meet her in heaven, so that all were astonished at her manner and language. She requested her father to have her death published, that her school mates and associates might know how she died, and that she had gone to Heaven. In a few hours after this her happy spirit fled to its home with God. God blessed this afflictive dispensation to the present and eternal good of the bereaved ones.

WM. JAMES.

WILKINSON COUNTY, MISS.,
August 14, 1854.

Notice.

The Lauderdale Camp Meeting will commence on Friday, before the third Sabbath in October. Ministering brethren from adjacent appointments are affectionately solicited to attend. J. W. ELLIS, P. C.

August, 1854.

Negro Management.

For the benefit of our planting friends, we make the following extracts from an essay of Robert Collins, of Macon, Georgia.

The writer has been accustomed to slaves from his earliest days, and for thirty years has been much interested in their management, both on plantations and public works, and has heretofore been prompted by his own interests, as well as inclination, to try every reasonable mode of management, treatment, living and labor; and the result of a long experience has fully satisfied him, and proved beyond doubt that the best interests of all parties are best promoted by a kind and liberal treatment on the part of the owner, and the requirement of proper discipline and strict obedience on the part of the slave. We subjoin the extracts:

NEGRO HOUSES.—Among the first objects that occupy the attention of the planter in the settlement of a new place is the selection of a proper location for his buildings. This should always be done with great care, and with an especial view to health. Good water is indispensable, and should be obtained at almost any cost, as without it there can be no permanent health. It should be obtained from wells or springs, if possible; but if that cannot be done, then provide cisterns should be constructed, and placed to receive the rain water from the buildings, which means a constant supply of healthy water may be kept on hand.

The houses should be placed, if possible, in the shades of the native forests; but where that cannot be done, the China, or mulberry, or some quick growth, should be immediately ordered planted, so as to cover the buildings in a degree from the rays of the sun. The buildings should be placed about two feet above the ground, so that the air can pass freely under them, and also be well ventilated with doors and windows. They should be sufficiently large, say about sixteen by twenty feet, and but one family should be put in a house; there is nothing more injurious to health or demoralizing to feeling, than crowding them together. They had much better sleep in the open air than in crowded tight houses. Each house or family should be furnished with suitable bedding and blankets, for while a proper outfit costs a few dollars in the beginning, they save twice as much in the end; they add greatly to the comfort and health of the slave, and enable him much better to perform the labor required.

FEEDING OF SLAVES.—In former years the writer tried many ways and expedients to economize in the provision of slaves by using more of the vegetable and cheap articles of diet, and less of the more costly and substantial. But time and experience have fully proved the error of this stinted policy; for many years the following uniform mode has been adopted, with much success and satisfaction, both to the owner and to the slaves.

The allowance now given per week to each hand, men, women, boys and girls, that are large enough to go into the field to work, is five pounds of good clean bacon, and one quart of meal, with as much good bread as they require; and in the fall or sickly season of the year, or in sickly places, the addition of one pint of strong coffee, sweetened with sugar, every morning before going to work. These provisions are given out on some designated night of each week, and for families it is put together; but to single hands it is given to each separately, and they then unite in squads or messes, and have their meat cooked for them by a woman who is detailed for that purpose, or keep it themselves as they please. Their bread is baked daily in loaves, by a woman who is kept for that duty. Each house or family should have a garden attached for raising their own vegetables.

This mode of allowance also relieves the overseer from much trouble in daily supervising the provisions, and is much more satisfactory to the slave. Under this system of treatment a word of complaint in relation to their living is seldom heard. Some planters, however, differ on this subject, and prefer the plan of cooking and eating at one common table; and it is possible that with a small number of hands, and where the owner is willing to devote a good deal of attention to that matter, that he may save a small amount. But it will not be so satisfactory, and he will probably not gain enough to pay for ceable. Children, of course, must be fed and attended to as their wants require; they are not likely to be neglected, as they pay a good interest upon the amount of care and expense bestowed upon them.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

NEGRO CLOTHING.—The proper and usual quantity of clothes for plantation hands is two suits of wollen for winter; four pair of shoes and three hats, which, with such articles of dress as the negro merits, and the owner chooses to give, make up the year's allowance. Neatness in dress is important to the health, comfort as pride of a negro, which should be encouraged by the owner. They should be induced to think well of themselves: and the more pride and self-respect you can instill into them the better they will behave, and the more serviceable they will be; so they should always be aided and encouraged in dressing, and their own peculiar fancies indulged to a reasonable extent.

HOURS OF WORK.—In the winter time, and in the sickly season of the year, all hands should have breakfast before leaving their houses. As they can do and get to work by sunrise, and stop no more until twelve o'clock; then one hour for dinner, then work until night. In the spring and summer they should go at work, and stop at eight o'clock for breakfast, then work until twelve o'clock, and two hours for dinner, and work from two o'clock till night. Hands stop on Saturday at twelve o'clock, and take the afternoon for cleaning up their houses and clothes, so as to make a neat appearance on Sunday morning.

TASK WORK.—The usual custom of planters is to work without tasks during the cultivation of the crop; but in gathering cotton, tasks are common, and experience has proven that when their work is of that kind or character, that it much better to do so. If the overseer has judgment, he will get more work, and the negro will be better satisfied; he will generally make more effort to gain time to devote to his own jobs or pleasures.

NEGRO CROPS.—It was at one period much the custom of planters to give to each hand a small piece of land, to cultivate on their own account. Many chose to do so; but this system has not been found to result well. It gives an excuse for tardiness, and encourages a trade on their own account, and presents a temptation and opportunity, during the process of gathering, for an unscrupulous fellow to mix a little of his master's cotton with his own. It is much better to give each hand, whose conduct has been such as to merit it, an equivalent in money at the end of the year; it is much less trouble, and more advantageous to both parties.

DISCIPLINE.—In regard to the general management, or discipline on plantations or public works, it is of great consequence to have perfect order and regularity, and a strict adherence to the rules that may be adopted for the government of the place. Each hand should know his duty, and be required to perform it; but, as before intimated, the owner has nothing to gain by oppression or over driving, but some thing to lose, for he can not by such means extort more work. But still, if it become necessary to punish the negro for not doing his duty, or the breaking of rules, it does not make him revengeful, as it would an Indian or white man, but it rather tends to win his attachment and promote his happiness and well being. Slaves have no love or affection for the master who indulges them over much, or who, from fear or false humanity, fails to assume that degree of authority necessary to promote industry and enforce good order. At the same time proper and reasonable indulgences and privileges should be granted for the gratification and amusement of the negro; but they should always be exercised by special permission, for they are a people ever ready to practice upon the old maxim of "give an inch and take an ell."

Negroes are by nature tyrannical in their relations; and if allowed, the stronger will be the weaker: husbands will often abuse their wives, and mothers their children, so that it becomes a prominent duty of owners and overseers to keep peace, and prevent quarreling and disputes among them, and summary punishment should follow any violation of this rule.

Slaves are also a people that enjoy religious privileges. Many of them place much value on it, and to every reasonable extent that advantage should be allowed them. They are never injured by preaching, but thousands become better and better people, and more trustworthy and valuable by their attendance at church. Religious services should be provided and encouraged on every plantation. A zealous and vehement style, both in doctrine and manner, is best adapted to their temperament; they are good believers in mysterics and miracles, ready converts, and adhere with much pertinacity to their principles when formed.

No card playing or gambling of any description should be allowed under severe penalties. And the Maine Liquor Law should be rigidly enforced on every estate.

MARRYING AMONG SLAVES.—Taking wives or husbands among their fellow servants at home should be as much encouraged as possible; although intermarrying with those belonging to other estates should not be prohibited, yet it is always likely to lead to difficulties and quarrels, and should be avoided as much as possible. They cannot live together as they ought, if they are constantly liable to separation in the selling of property. It is true they usually have but little ceremony in forming these connections; and many of them look upon their obligation to each other slightly; but in others there is fonad n degree of faithfulness, fidelity and affection, which owners admire, and hence always dislike to separate those manifesting such traits of character.

SICKNESS.—Proper and prompt attention, in case of sickness, is n vastly important matter among slaves. Many plantations are inconvenient to medical aid, therefore owners and overseers should always understand the treatment of such common cases as usually occur on places under their charge. This is easily done, and many times a single dose of some mild and well advertood medicine, given at the beginning of the complaint, removes the cause and effects n a short time, when delay or neglect might result in a serious case.

A bountiful supply of red pepper should be prepared and kept on hand, and used freely in all sections, where sore throats are apt to prevail, and also in fall complaints. It acts by causing a glow over the whole body, without narcotic effect; it produces general arterial excitement, and prevents in a considerable degree that languor and apathy of the system which render it so susceptible to chills and fever; it may be given in any way or form that their taste or fancy may dictate.

HALLUCINATIONS OF GREAT MEN.—Spinello, who had painted the "Fall of the Angels," thought that he was haunted by the frightful devils which he had depicted. He was rendered miserable by this hallucination that he destroyed himself. An artist, who was much engaged in painting caricatures, became haunted with the distorted faces he drew; and the deep melancholy and terror which accompanied these exhibitions caused him to commit suicide. Another, who executed the copper-plate of the Divine Madonna, had more lovely visions. Towards the close of his life the Virgin appeared to him, and thanking him for the affection he had shown towards her, invited him to follow her to Heaven. To achieve this, the artist destroyed himself to death. Beethoven, who became completely deaf in the decline of life, often heard his sublime compositions performed discordantly. It is related of Ben Johnson that he had the whole of one night in regarding his great toe, around which he saw Tartars, Turks, Romans and Catholics climbing up, and struggling and fighting. Goetho, when out riding one day, was surprised to see an exact image of himself on horseback, dressed in a light-colored coat riding towards him.

CROWD NATCHED.—The following advertisement appeared in a Montreal paper:

"The person who, by a pardonable absence of mind, took a light colored silk velvet Mackinaw from the second flat of the Ottawa Hotel is informed that, by calling at the same place, he will have a very good cape, which belongs to the coat, and is now of no use to the owner."

MODERN ARMOR.—They are now experimenting at St. Etienne upon a new cuirass or breastplate for the army. The weight is very light, and it is said to be capable of resisting bullets even short distances. The Loire manufacturers are again turning their attention to the casting of iron cannon.

General Intelligence.

MORTUARY.—The following is a correct return of the number of interments in the several cemeteries of the city for the seven days ending at 6 A. M., on Sunday, the 20th inst.:

	Yellow Fever.	Other Dis.	Total
Protestant (Girod street)....	2	0	8
Hebrew (Ridge).....	0	1	1
Odd Fellows' Rest.....	1	6	7
Cypress Grove No. 1.....	4	3	7
" " 2.....	8	16	24
Charity Hospital.....	54	26	80
St. Patrick's.....	13	21	83
Catholic No. 1.....	3	8	11
" 2.....	2	14	16
St. Vincent de Paul.....	22	25	47
Lafayette (4th District).....	7	20	27
Hebrew (4th District).....	2	0	2
Total.....	118	140	258

The United States sloop-of-war Marion, Commander H. Y. Purviance, sailed from Mederia, July 10, on a cruise down the coast of Africa. Officers and crew all well.

The Grand Jury of the U. S. Court for the District of North Carolina have presented the State of Massachusetts as a nuisance, for a want of alacrity in surrendering fugitive slaves.

THE GREYTOWN AFFAIR AT HAVANA.—The Havana papers are filled with denunciations of the American Government for the destruction of Greytown, over which they exult as certain to involve the United States and Great Britain in war. They have a story that Capt. Hollins, of the Cyane, seeing the steamer Dee approaching, suspended the bombardment for over an hour, believing her to be a British ship-of-war. The story is just absurd enough to find credit with the gobemouches of Cuba.

CUBAN OFFICIALS.—The Portland State of Maine publishes a statement made by Jenness, Cheso & Co., of that city, to the effect that when their bark C. B. Hamilton arrived at Havana, last February, after delivering the manifest to the boarding officer, the Captain discovered some discrepancies between that and the freight list, which he asked of the Collector leave to correct, but which was refused and delayed, so that when he received back his manifest and made his correction, the time for correcting the document had passed by, to the amount of twenty minutes, but recently the consignees of the vessel, (Messrs. Drake & Co.,) have transmitted drafts on Jenness, Chase & Co., for the sum of six thousand and eighty dollars claims, and thirteen hundred dollars expenses, which they have been obliged to deposit in Havana, to await the further action of the Cuban Courts and authorities in this case!

MAINE LIQUOR LAW.—B. Porter, landlord of of the Market Hotel in Cambridge, was arrested on the 11th inst. and tried before the Justices' Court for eighteen violations of the liquor law, and found guilty on all the counts. On the first he was fined ten dollars and costs, with one thousand dollars bonds; on the second he was fined twenty dollars and costs; and on the sixteen other counts, each twenty dollars and costs, with three months in jail, amounting in all to a fine of three hundred and fifty dollars, and four years imprisonment. Mr. Porter appealed, and gave bonds in six hundred dollars to prosecute his appeal.

RIOTOUS.—On Monday night, about 12 o'clock, a party of about sixty rowdies, said to belong to Fire Company No. 10, assembled together and marched in procession through the streets of the Second District, accompanied by a band of music. From threats that had been made during the early part of the evening, it was thought this rallying of the boys was for the purpose of "washing out" the house of Acting Recorder Filleul, who had fallen under their displeasure by fining their foreman for a breach of the peace: as also to liberate several of their brother firemen from the Parish Prison. The entire disposable police force of the city had been concentrated in the Second District, fully armed and prepared, with the Chief at their head, in anticipation of a disturbance. The procession moved around through various streets in a very quiet manner, with drums beating, and started for the Parish Prison, for the purpose, it is said, of serenading the prisoners there; but when they arrived in front of Jackson Square, the police, who were collected in great force at the station, made a sudden attack on them and arrested twenty-six. The others ran like quarter horses, and the riot, if any had been contemplated, was thus nipped in the bud. The following are the names of those who were arrested: James Curry, Tom Howard, Charley Fry, John Tate, Joe Keller, J. P. Grinner, C. N. Tounter, Wm. Reid, Hunter Sample, William Castle, Martin Long, Mike Fershing, M. Peesler, Pete Dowd, Charles Birack, Jake Lise, Charles Dougle, Charles German, Bill Shear, C. Throw, John Jingle, Phil Monaghan, John Fensey, G. W. Hyde, Ed. Millen and James Leobs. Yesterday about noon they were brought before Acting Recorder Filleul, for examination, and as a crowd of a couple thousand persons had gathered around the Old City Hall, his Honor feared a demonstration might be made in favor of the prisoners, and accordingly sent to the Chief for a reinforcement of police; but their services were not required—every thing passed off very quietly. The Recorder sentenced each of the prisoners to pay a fine of $100, and give bonds in the sum of $1000 to keep the peace for six months—failing in which, they were all committed to the Parish Prison for thirty days.

John Puneky, foreman of No. 10, was arrested on the affidavit of Capt. Baldwin, for inciting his men to riot, and in default of giving $2000 bail for his appearance, was committed to jail.

A warrant was issued on the complaint of Capt. Baldwin, for the arrest of Peter Lesslie, foreman of No. 16, who le charged with leading the attack on the house of Emeline Gibson, last Saturday night.

A STRANGE FREAK.—A most singular affair and of quite a grave nature, occurred about noon on Sunday, the 13th inst., in Hanover street, Baltimore. Just about the time that the churches closed their exercises, and the streets were filled with people, a man appeared in the street in question, bearing under his arm a coffin about four feet long. He seemed to be laboring under a mania of some kind, probably from the effects of excessive indulgences in strong drink, and manifested a desire to find some place where he could obtain a body for his coffin. A large crowd of boys gathered around him, and by pointing first to one house and then another, the residents were considerably annoyed by his inquiry for a dead body. At last, becoming tired of his burden, he laid it upon a cellar door, until he should be able to find the object of his search. At this time so great a crowd had gathered, that officer Veruun, who was passing at the time, thought it prudent to take him to the Watch-House, and at least produce quiet, while it would afford the coffin man an opportunity to recover from his delirium. Surely the effects of the fire-water is strange in its influence upon the human mind.

ITS FIRST APPEARANCE.—The first appearance of Asiatic cholera in this continent, was in Quebec, Lower Canada, on the 8th of June, 1832.

LARGE LETTUCE.—A California editor received a head of lettuce, which measured six feet in circumference (two feet in diameter) and was as closely packed as a drum-head cabbage.

Indian Troubles.

We rejoice to learn by the late news from Texas that energetic measures are at last being prosecuted to put an end to the Indian difficulties along the western frontier of Texas. The Governor of the State has been called upon to raise six companies of mounted men, and has signified his approval of the measure and his belief in its necessity. As we predicted some time ago, the hostile demonstrations of the savages have increased in frequency and boldness until they have assumed a character of preconcerted warfare, and leave no doubt of the combination of many tribes for the purpose of waging a desperate contest. The delay of the Government in affording aid to the suffering settlers has not only inflicted harm upon individuals, but doubtless greatly injured Texas in the check which the prospect of an Indian war has imposed upon immigration into those sections likely to be affected by it, and in the general shock to the progress of their civilization and improvement.

We are confident, however, that steps will now be taken which will prove entirely successful, and that, with the support they will receive, the hardy Texans will be enabled to drive the whooping red-skins back into their fastnesses and deserts, where they will certainly be very willing to remain if the proper punishment be inflicted upon them.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.—The English church journals anticipate great benefits from the results of the Convocation of Canterbury. The results, which have been arrived at with remarkable unanimity by that Convocation, do not relate to doctrines, but to the details of public worship. The services are to be shortened; the Morning Prayer to be divided and sub-divided; and services to be multiplied instead of conglomerated. Exclusive allotments of seats are to be discouraged. The Convocation brought together the most eminent divines of the Church of England, and the representatives of different and opposite theological views, but their counsels were conducted with great harmony and fraternal feeling.

PUBLICATION OF CRIMES.—The Tribune, in an editorial, discusses at length the policy of publishing crimes and outrages in detail, in the public journals, and concludes thus:

"It is a sheer falsehood to say that society is made worse by the publication of the details of crimes in the daily papers. It is made better. Society abounds most in crime where newspapers are wanting. The deed then is done in secret. Crime is organized as an order. Witness the Thugs of India, where murdering is part of a creed, and the head murderer invested with the sacred dignity of a Pope or a Bishop. Take the bons bouchers of France, an order of Christian murderers, as much a fact as Napoleon. Besides these combinations of villainy, the private crimes are boundless. Those of a Borgia, a Henry VIII, a Louis XV, but show the crimes of society. The King reflects the People."

The Post, on the same subject, says:

"It is urged that the publication of atrocious crimes has an immoral tendency. The writers of the Bible—both of the Old Testament and of the New—seem to have thought differently. We respectfully recommend to such persons as are very captious about the publication of crimes by newspaper, a more careful and thorough study of the Scriptures."

COVENT GARDEN THEATRE IN AN UPROAR.—Mr Gye, manager of Covent Garden Theatre, London, recently announced a morning concert, for his benefit, with the names of Grisi and Mario conspicuously displayed, to attract an audience. The house was crowded. Grisi was "indisposed," and was excused; and Mario arrived at the theatre an hour and a half after the performance was announced to commence. The auditory was in a frightful bad humor with every body, and especially with Mario. At last Mario, with his music book in hand, proceeded to sing his Cujus Animam as though nothing had happened. The audience, reserved and haughty, icy, frowning eyed him without uttering a word, until a spectator—a just man, according to the description of Horace—finding that, after all, the artiste had gallantly extricated himself, conceived the unfortunate idea of applauding. On the instant, the fiercest, most merciless, piercing hisses, such as never issued from any wasps' nest in a fury, rent the ears of the astounded artiste. Mario seemed not to know where he stood. A thunderbolt falling at his feet could not have so overwhelmed him with surprise and consternation. He hastened off the stage like a man who no longer had the use of his senses, and hurriedly asked who had aroused the public displeasure.

An explanation was then made of the scene that had occurred before he came, but it was too late. Never was a human face so completely distorted, in every feature, as Mario's at this recital. His eyes looked as though they were starting from his head, his forehead became blue and purple by turns, his teeth fairly chattered together, and he paced up and down like a wounded lion in his cage, neither seeing nor hearing another word: "Where's Gye? Bring me Mr. Gye!" were the only words he could manage to render intelligible in his paroxism of fury.

Then followed a scene, in which the infuriated tenor knocked down a Monsieur Maray; split a tumbler of water over Madame Basio, and then disappeared, swearing, from the theatre. In the meantime, the audience shouted and hissed and Mr. Gye was at last compelled to inform them that their money would be returned at the box office. When the crowd reached the office it was closed—no money was visible—and upon endeavoring to retrace their steps, the various entrances to the theatre were fast. The exasperation of the audience who had not received their money, and could not even get back to their places may be imagined! They uttered the most terrible cries of rage, and accompanied with kicking, blows of the fist, etc. against the doors, the closing bars of the "William Tell" overture, which the orchestra were executing mechanically. At length all the defences gave way, the doors were beaten in and the crowd yelling, wild and furious, invaded every corner of the house: "Money!" "The money!" was the shout in every direction, "The money; give us back our money!" with epithets which may readily be divined.

However Mr. Gye did not lose his self-possession. After a thirtieth speech, and while his cashier was gone to look up the money required, he brought forward his reserve, composed of Mesdames Bosio, Maray and Viardot. Madame Bosio at length succeeded in disarming the crowd and calming the disturbance. She sang the air of "Ernani" in admirable style, and was tremendously applauded; she was recalled, too, and made to sing the air again.

At 6½ o'clock the crowd silently dispersed.—The cashier kept his office open for payment until 10. Mr. Gye gave back one-third more than he received, and had a singular benefit truly!

A curious phase of the affair is, that the same evening Mario sang his romance in t.a Favorita divinely, and made his peace with the public. After his romance he was was greeted with three rounds of applause. Funny institution, the public!

The New York Express thus speaks of the favors and blessings we enjoy over other nations:

"A nation highly favored of Heaven surely is ours. Wars and their horrors, convulsing the Old World, are things happily unknown to us. To famine we are utter strangers. Pestilence, indeed, has been among us, but it has not laid its heavy hand upon us, as has been the case in some portions of France, the West Indies and elsewhere. Our columns, from time to time, of late have borne sad testimony of its appalling ravages at Marseilles and in the Island of Barbadoes. Compared with the experiences of men, there, ours have been as naught. Hence, we repeat, there is no people under the sun that has had—nay, is now having—so many manifestations of Divine favor, as those whose happiness it is to inhabit the United States of America. We are not sure that our deservings are better than mankind elsewhere; but we are quite sure that we are infinitely better rewarded. Let this conviction come home to the heart of each and all of us, bringing forth its proper fruits there, gratitude to God and compassion to the less fortunate among men."

Later from Havana—Arrival of the Crescent City.

The United States mail-steamship Crescent City left New York at 2 P. M. on the 12th inst., and arrived off the Moro Castle on the evening of the 18th. After landing her passengers and mails, she sailed at 10 A. M. for this port, and arrived yesterday morning.

The Crescent City landed sixty-five passengers at Havana, and brings 88 passengers and a very large cargo for this place. In Havana the weather was warm, with frequent showers. Great anxiety was manifested for further intelligence of the insurrection in Spain.

Two Spanish war vessels arrived on the 28th, with seven hundred soldiers for the Island of Cuba.

The Junta de Fomento had made propositions to construct a railroad of 58 miles from La Maragua as far as Villaclara, paying $10,000 per league, and being the term for the construction of three years.

On the 16th the ship Soberano and the frigate Villa de Bilboa arrived here, bringing four companies of the regiment of the Union.

The Ayuntamiento of Havana had opened a subscription among the people to erect a monument worthy to preserve the ashes of Columbus.

The Captain General has issued a proclamation to the people of Cuba, declaring that the administration of the government of the island would be in no wise affected or influenced by the state of politics in the mother country, and assuring them that there would be no alteration in the policy of the Government, under whatever incumbent.

The Diario de la Marina publishes a sort of manifesto of the Spanish Immigration Junto, in which they strongly denounce the attempt of these speculators, who, they say, desire to keep the industry of the island in the hands of the negro race, and propose instead the employment of white labor.

[Correspondence of the Baltimore Sun.]

WASHINGTON, August 15.

The recent events in Spain lend to the Cuban question a fresh and momentous interest. It is extremely doubtful whether the Government of the Queen, in any form, will be able to sustain itself.

It is not easy to sustain a throne which has been tottering for nearly half a century, or to inspire faith in a Government which has so often and so wantonly broken its pledges.

On the other hand, it is equally clear that the Spaniards, in common with other Romanic races, are unfit for a republican government, and that if such a government is established it will be of short duration.

A change of dynasty, therefore, is most likely to ensue. To the Oriental question in Europe, will thus be added the accidental question: Will the new Government of Spain be more favorably disposed toward the sale of Cuba than the old one? That is doubtful; but it may be more embarrassed. The new Government will undoubtedly want money, and it will not dare to levy new taxes on the people, for fear to lose its popularity. What then, is to be done?

Cuba is desirous of being independent, but the Cubans to not wish to be bought and sold. What if they were to make a bid for their independence, paying either so much money or an annuity for so many years? The new Government of Spain might accept such a proposition from its own colonies without degredation, in the spirit of liberty.

Cuba having no ready money, the Cubans might ask the United States to advance it to them, or we might undertake to guarantee its punctual payment. This would lead to negotiations with Cuba, and finally to a treaty of annexation, against which no European power would have the slightest pretext to protest.

A MOUNTAIN CAVE IN VIRGINIA EXPLORED.—A curious cave on the top of the Long Lick Mountain, near Purgettsville, Hampshire Co., Va., has, from time immemorial, been known to exist, but no one has ever had the courage to explore it, until a few days ago, when Professor George Jordan, in the presence of a number of gentlemen, having let down a candle, and fastened one end of a rope to a sapling, and the other end round his body, descended into its mysterious regions. The Romney Argus says:

"The entrance bears some resemblance to the crater of a volcano, only smaller. The aperture at the mouth is not more than three or four feet in diameter, but enlarges as you descend, like an inverted funnel, the descent being perpendicular the whole distance. Mr. J. descended some sixty-four to sixty-five feet, when he came to the bottom of a spacious chamber, from which several passages led off in various directions. These passages are sufficiently large to admit a four horse wagon. On arriving at the bottom, says Mr. J., and taking an upward view, the scene is truly appalling. Large craggy rocks seems ready to tumble down upon your head, and so terrific is the sight that a universal tremor imperceptibly creeps over the whole system. This cavern does not seem to be inhabited by any living being save a race of cheiroptera (the common bat) which infest these regions by millions, and, for aught we know, may be winged messengers of Pluto. They uttered a horrid cry and seemed disposed to dispute the right of the unwelcome and curious adventurer. We learn that Professor J. intends making a more minute examination of this wonderful cave."

DEATH OF GENERAL DOWNS.—We received, n day or two since by telegraph, an announcement that Solomon W. Downs had been succeeded in the office of Collector by Col. Porter. The cause of this change was not then known here, but we now learn that General Downs died at Crab Orchard, Kentucky, on the 14th instant. From an extendrd notice in yesterday's Evening Delta, we extract the following:

"Solomon W. Downs was born in Tennessee, and emigrated in early manhood to Louisiana, locating himself, for the practice of law, at Bayou Sara. There he lived for some years; but receiving a handsome legacy from his father, removed to the new and rich parish of Ouachita, where he has ever since resided, cultivating a large cotton plantation, practising law and participating very actively and conspicuously in politics. It was as Senator from this District (General Downs made his first appearance in public life. Possessed of great energy of character, studious and thoughtful, of ready, though ungainly address, ardent and fearless in his bearing, General Downs soon assumed a prominent position in the political arena. He became the chief and leader of the new political party which has since acquired so large a control in the politics of the State—the Red River Democracy, as it was called."

OLD ENGLISH POETRY.—The romantic episodes of English history are chronicled in the loves of her poet. Surrey's attachment to Geraldine, and Wyatt's devotion to Anna Boleyn, are among the recollections that haunt the visitor to Windsor Castle; and if we turn from the annals of those times, to the verse of those bards, we find a charming illustration of the sentiment, the diction, the woes and chivalry of that day. The very quaintness of the diction endears these mellow sentiments of primitive verse. In the cheap and beautiful edition of the British Poets in the course of publication by Little & Brown, we are glad to find a well annotated and complete reprint of the Poems of the Earl of Surrey and Sir Thomas Wyatt. The comparative rarity of copies will render these volumes very acceptable. [Boston Transcript.

ANTIQUATED.—In 1822 Lewis Withrow caught a terrapin on the farm of Zadock Richards, in Jackson county, Ala., and cut his name and the date on its back. This singular animal has been seen on the same farm for a number of times every year since; and only a few days ago it was examined, and the name and date carved on its back are quite plain. Though thirty-two years have elapsed since the mark was made, the animal has seemingly undergone no change. He plods along as ever, showing no more signs of old age than he did when first seen.

Louisiana Items.

The Thibodaux Minerva complains of hard times and high prices for provisions. Eggs are selling in the country at 25 cents per dozen.

The same paper says:

"A balloon, measuring fifteen feet in circumference and twelve in height, was discovered floating in the air on Wednesday last, and descended gradually until it reached the ground, at the extreme end of Messrs. J. M & A. V. Williams's plantation, about eight miles below this place. From whence, or for what purpose, came this strange visitor, we know not. The balloon is in the possession of Mr. Americus V. Williams."

We learn, says the Minerva of the 19th, that all work has ceased on the line of the New Orleans, Opelousas and Great Western Railroad, except on that portion lying between the Lafourche and Algiers, which is to be completed in the shortest possible delay—in time for the transportation of the present sugar crop to market. Mr. G. W. R. Bally, the present superintendent of the work, is using every means in his power for the early completion of the work, which will be on or about the first of the coming month.

The Bayou Sara Ledger of Saturday says that ten insane persons were landed at that place the day previous, to be sent to the asylum at Jackson.

THE MOSLEM.—Dr. Dage, in his lecture on the Turkish power, relates the following amusing anecdote:

"A story is told of the Sultan by a countryman of ours, who was called to Constantinople to superintend the launching of some of the royal ships. The Turks do these things by hand, and by the main strength of hundreds of them. But our American went to work, and built his ways and props after the American fashion, so as to let the vessel launch itself. When he had got his operations nearly completed, the Sultan, who was present and noticed the small number of his workmen, sent word to know if he did not want more help. "No," he replied, "he had enough." Thinking he had been misinformed, the Sultan sent a second time to offer a hundred men from the Royal Dockyards. Again he refused, and being busy, answered rather sharply this time. At that moment the signal was given, the props were knocked away, and the vessel starting without the aid of hands, slid smoothly and gracefully along the frame-work—then off—off into the waters of the Golden Horn. Lifting his hands and eyes in amazement, 'Mashallah!' exclaimed Abdul Medjid, 'God is great! God helps him—if he is an infidel!' So say I of Abdul Medjid. When he links his fortunes with humanity and freedom, may God help him, if he is an infidel."

UNEXPECTED ELEVATION.—The vicissitudes of human life are very strange. In 1840, President Taylor, then a Colonel in the army, wrote a letter to Gen. McNiel, who had just been appointed Surveyor of Boston, from which we make the following extract:

I am fully aware that it is impossible for us to pursue any profession—particularly that of arms—for fifteen or twenty years without forming strong attachments to it in various ways, and of course, must abandon them with considerable reluctance, but there are circumstances which should reconcile us to doing so, and to justify us, not only in our own eyes, but that of the community. Could I get a civil appointment as respectable, with half the emolument attached to it as there is to the one you have received, and where I could be located so as to superintend the education of my children, I would resign forthwith; for, after serving twenty-two years and upwards in the army, all of which time on duty, with the exception of a few months, without being stationed two years together at one post, during that time, I begin to think that I need repose, but as I do not possess influence enough to procure a civil appointment of any grade, I consider my doom fixed.

Here is a plain, modest officer of the United States army, who, in 1840, expressed a sincere wish that he could retire from his labors upon some office with half the emolument that Gen. McNiel received, and declared that he did not possess influence enough to procure a civil appointment; and yet this same man became a world-renowned General, and President of the United States, in less than 20 years from that time. [Portland State of Maine.

DEATH OF A MURDERER.—The Chickasaw Intelligencer, published in an Indian nation, and edited by an Indian, gives the following account of the death of the Indian Lequahah, alias Polecat, alias Morgan, the last surviving murderer of Messrs. Stem and Leppleman. Morgan, pursued by his tribe, traveled almost two hundred miles to the tent of a distant brother, which he entered at night, and, in reply to inquiries propounded to him, repeated a truthful narration of his crime, pursuit and escape. His brother heard the tale, reminded him of former admonitions, and requested him to promise to surrender himself to justice. He refused, and in a few moments fell dead by the hand of a man noble enough to sacrifice even a brother upon the hallowed altar of public justice. We regret that we have not his name, that it might be inscribed on the altar at which he worshipped, in golden letters, to be read and revered by the votaries of Roman fame. Here, doubtless, many are prepared to smile at the comparison between an American Indian and an ancient Roman; but we will ask those fond of pursuing such questions, wherein did the ancient Romans, of the time of the elder Brutus, for instance, display better moral traits and qualities than the Kickapoos? Was it their religion, their morals, their social institutions, or form of Government? Some weeks ago a man was sent into Fort Arbuckle, who stated that this murder was the result of a premeditated plan by two Kinkapoos, besides Okeyot and Morgan. He said that he did not know their names, but could identify them. All the tribe but two—the suspected ones—were then assembled, and the absentees being sent for, again were said to have fled.

JUVENILE RASCALITY.—A few days since a countryman was passing down North street with his wagon, when one of the wheels came off, and he discovered that the lynchpin was gone. After searching for it for some time, he offered the boys who congregated around a shilling to whoever should find it. They then joined in the search, and in a few minutes one of the boys brought him what he supposed to be the lost pin. Having adjusted the wheel, he paid the shilling and started off, but had not gone more than half a square before a wheel on the other side of the wagon came off, when he discovered that the young rascal had stolen the pin from one of the other wheels, to obtain the reward. [Baltimore Clipper.

PREVALENCE OF BALDNESS.—From some cause or other, baldness seems to befal much younger men than it did thirty or forty years ago. A very observant hatter informed us a short time since, that he imagined much of it was owing to the common use of wearing silk hats, which, from their impermeability to the air, keep the head at a much higher temperature than the old beaver structures which, he also informed us, went out principally because he had used up all the beavers in the Hudson Bay Company's Territories. The adoption of silk hats has, however, given them time, it seems, to replenish the breed. This fact affords a singular instance of the influence of fashion upon the animals of a remote continent. It would be more singular still, if the silk-hat theory of baldness has any truth in it, as it would then turn out that we were sacrificing our own natural nap in order that the beaver may recover his. Without endorsing the speculative opinion of our hatter, we may, we believe, state it as a well ascertained circumstance, that soldiers in helmetted regiments are oftener bald than many other of our heroic defenders. [Quarterly Review.

MUMMIFYING PLANTS.—Madame de Beaufort, a grand-daughter of the former Secretary of Louis XVI, is said to have discovered a mode of perpetual and instantaneous preservation of plants, trees and flowers; keeping trees ever green, and flowers ever fresh and brilliant, so that in the depth of winter the gayest flowers may be obtained in all their Summer luxuriance. Madame de Beaufort is said to be an artiste of high rank in flower-painting.

TO CHOOSE A GOOD MILCH COW.—Select from a good breed. We prefer the Devons—bright boy red. The Durhams are roan, red, white, and mixtures of these colors. Ayrshire cows are generally red and white spotted. Herefords, red or darker colored, with white faces. Alderneys, pale red and mixed with white. These are the principal colors of the several breeds, of which the Durhams are the largest and the Alderneys the smallest. Different individuals will contend for each breed being the best and only one that should be selected for their milking qualities. But animals of each breed, and of crosses of them, often prove remarkable milkers, and so do some of the native stock of the country. Two families of cows, one owned by Col. Jaques, of Ten Hills Farm, near Charlestown, Mass., and one owned by Maj John Jones, of Wheatland Farm, near Middleton, Del., were called native breed.

If we were about selecting a milch cow, we would endeavor to get one out of such a herd of good milkers; one with a soft, velvety-feeling skin, slim neck, fine legs, broad stern, with what is called a large escutcheon, that is, the hair of the stern pointing inward; a large udder, slim teats and large veins, commonly called milk veins, on the belly. Above all things, select your cow of a gentle, pleasant countenance, because a first-rate milker may be so vicious as to be worthless. Do not look for flesh, as the best cows are seldom fat; their hip bones are often very prominent, and they have the appearance of being low in flesh. A beefy cow is seldom a good milker.

The next thing is, what is a good milker? That is, how much milk will she yield per day? A cow that will average five quarts of milk a day through the year, making 1825 quarts, an extraordinary good cow. One that will yield five quarts a day for ten months is a good cow, and one that will average four quarts a day during that time is more than an average quality. That would make 1200 quarts a year, which, at three cents a quart, is $36. We believe the Orange county milk dairies average about $40 per cow, and the quality of the cows is considerably above the average of the country. It is as important to keep a cow good as it is to get her good. This can never be done by a careless, lazy milker. Always milk your cow quick and perfectly clean, and never try to counteract nature by taking away her calf. Let it suck, and don't be afraid "it will be her death." It will distend the udder, and make room for the secretion of milk. Be gentle with your cow, and you will have a gentle cow. Select well, feed well, house well, milk well, and your cow will yield well. [New York Tribune.

POWER OF THE IMAGINATION.—Dr. Noble, in a very able and analytic lecture at Manchester, "On the Dynamic Influences of Ideas," told a good anecdote of M. Bontibeuse, a French savant, in illustration of the power of imagination. As Dr. Noble says: "M. Bontibouse served in Napoleon's army, and was present at many engagements during the early part of last century. At the battle of Wagram, in 1809, he was engaged in the fray; the ranks around him had been terribly thinned by shot, and at sunset he was nearly isolated. While reloading his musket he was shot down by a cannon ball. His impression was that the ball had passed through his legs below the knees, separating them from the thighs; for he suddenly sank down, shortened, as he believed, to the extent of about a foot in measurement. The trunk of the body fell backwards on the ground, and the senses were completely paralyzed by the shock. Thus he lay motionless among the wounded and dead during the rest of the night, not daring to move a muscle, lest the loss of blood should be fatally increased. He felt no pain, but this he attributed to the stunning effect of the shock to the brain and nervous system. At early dawn he was aroused by one of the medical staff, who came round to help the wounded. 'What's the matter with you, my good fellow?' said the surgeon. 'Ah! touch me tenderly,' replied M Bontibouse, 'I beseech you; a cannon ball has carried off my legs.' The surgeon examined the limbs referred to, and then, giving him a good shake, said, with a joyous laugh, 'Get up with you, you have nothing the matter with you.' M. Bontibouse immediately sprang up in utter astonishment, and stood firmly on the legs which he had thought lost for ever. 'I felt more thankful,' said M. Boutibouse, 'than I had ever been in the whole course of my life before. I had not a wound about me. I had, indeed, been shot down by an immense cannon ball; but instead of passing through the legs, as I firmly believed it had, the ball had passed under my feet, and had plowed a hole in the earth beneath, at least a foot in depth, into which my feet suddenly sank, giving me the idea that I had been thus shortened by the loss of my legs.'" The truth of this story is vouched for by Dr. Noble. [Athenæum.

THE SAILOR AND THE ACTRESS.—"When I was a poor girl," said the Duchess of St. Albans, "working very hard for my thirty shillings a-week, I went down to Liverpool during the holidays, where I was always kindly received. I was to perform a new piece, some thing like those pretty little affecting dramas they get up now at our minor theatres; and in my character I represented a poor, friendless orphan girl, reduced to the most wretched poverty. A heartless tradesman prosecutes the sad heroine for debt, and insists on putting her in prison, unless some one will be bail for her. This girl replies: 'Then I have no hope; I have not a friend in the world.' 'What, will no one be bail for you to save you from prison?' 'I have told you, I have not a friend on earth,' was my reply. But, just as I was uttering the words, I saw a sailor in the upper gallery springing over the railing, letting himself down from one tier to another, until he bounded clear over the orchestra and foot-lights, and placed himself beside me in a moment. 'Yes, you shall have one friend, at least, my poor young woman,' said he, with the greatest expression in his sun-burnt countenance; 'I will go bail for you to any amount. As for you (turning to the frightened actor) if you don't bear a hand and shift your moorings, it will be worse for you when I come athwart your bows.' Every creature in the house rose; the uproar was perfectly indescribable; peals of laughter, screams of terror, cheers from his tawny messmates in the gallery, preparatory scrapings of violins from the orchestra; and amid the universal din there stood the unconscious cause of it, sheltering me, the poor, distressed young woman, and breathing destruction and defiance against my mimic persecutor. He was only persuaded to relinquish his care of me by the manager happening to arrive, and rescue me with a profusion of theatrical bank notes."

LABOR AND LIFE.—When Man was driven from the Garden of Eden, it was decreed that he should earn his bread by the sweat of his brow. If the history of the ages is credible, that edict has never been altered. Either from the corruption of man's primitive taste, or the force of wants consequent upon the change, the earth, though mellow and generous to toil, has steadily refused to yield spontaneously the fruits of Eden. To satisfy hunger and thirst, to defend the body from heat and cold, and to shelter it from storm and danger, man has been obliged to tax an invention and to exert powers, which his original simplicity might have avoided. God did not turn him from his earthly paradise without making good provisions for his new wants. Sterile as the unbroken turf seemed, it yielded to the stick and the iron; and, when the dry seed was cast into it, the rains, dews, and sunshine, nourished them into plentiful harvests. But necessity—the ever recurring calls of human wants, which are as angel infirmities—have allowed him no cessation from labor.

To live, to generate and fulfil a being "faded, but not lost," he has been forced to toil from day to day, providentially permitted, in the average, to accumulate little beyond supplying immediate wants. In the perpetual summer of Eden, nature provided all things; out of that, man came as a savage, without plan or

Tom Hood describes an intended duel which was prevented by an amicable arrangement made upon the ground. The parties—Mr. Brady and Mr. Clay—rivals for the affections of Miss Lucy Bell, find it necessary to appeal to arms:

But first they found a friend apiece,
This pleasant thought to give—
That when they both were dead, they'd have
Two equals yet to live.

To measure out the ground, not long
The seconds were forbore;
And having taken one dash step,
They took a dozen more.

They next prepared each pistol pan,
Against the deadly strife;
By putting in the prime of death,
Against the prime of life.

Now all was ready for the fun:
But when they took their stands,
Four made them tremble so, they found
They both were shaking hands.

Said Mr. C. to Mr. B.,
"Here one of us may fall,
And, like St. Paul's Cathedral now,
Be doomed to have a ball.

I do confess I did attach
Discomfort to your name;
If I withdrew the charge, will then
Your removal do the same?"

Said Mr. B., "I do agree;
But think of Beauty's scorns,—
If we be off without a shot,
There will be strange reports.

But look! the morning now is bright,
Though cloudy it began;
Why can't we aim above, as if
We had called out the sun?"

So up into the heavens air
Their bullets they did send;
And may all other deeds have
That spoke in the end.

BALLOU'S HISTORY OF CUBA.

We make a few extracts from this new work, recently issued from the press of Messrs. S. G. Courtenay & Co., New York:

A CUBAN MILKMAN.

Few matters strike the observant stranger with a stronger sense of their peculiarity than the Cuban milkman's mode of supplying that necessary aliment to his town or city customers. He has no cart filled with shining cans, and they in turn filled with milk, (or what purports to be milk, but which is apt strongly to savor of Cochineate or Cretea,) as there can be no deception as to the genuine character of the article which he supplies. Driving his sober kine from door to door, he deliberately milks just the quantity required by each customer, delivers it, and drives on to the next. The patient animal becomes as conversant with the residence of her master's customers as he is himself, and stops unbidden at regular intervals before the proper houses, often followed by a pretty little calf, which amuses itself by gazing at the process, while it wears a leather muzzle to prevent its interference with the supply of milk intended for another quarter. There are doubtless two good reasons for this mode of delivering milk in Havana and the large towns in Cuba. First, there can be no diluting of the article; and second, it is sure to be sweet and fresh—this latter a particular desideratum in a climate where milk without ice can be kept only a brief period without spoiling. Of course the effect upon the animal is by no means salutary, and a Cuba cow gives but about one-third as much milk as our own. Goats are driven about and milked in the same manner.

EXAGGERATION OF SPANISH MANNERS.

The Spaniards receive credit for being a very hospitable people, and to a certain extent this is due to them; but the stranger soon learns to regard the extravagant manifestations, which too often characterize their etiquette, as quite empty and heartless. Let a stranger enter the house of a Cuban for the first time, and the host or hostess of the mansion says at once, either in such words or their equivalent, "All that we have is at your service; take what you will and our right hand with it." Yet no one thinks of understanding this literally. The family volante is at your order, or a saddle horse, and in such small kindnesses they are indeed polite; but when they beg of you to accept a ring, a book, a valuable toy, because you have happened to praise it, you are by no means to do so. Another trait of character which suggests itself in this connection, is their universal habit of profuse compliment. The ladies listen to them, as a matter of course, from their countrymen, or from such Frenchmen as have become domesticated in the island; but if an American takes occasion to compliment them, they are at once delighted, for they believe them to be sincere, and the matter is secretly noted to be reported.

The Cuban ladies, with true feminine acuteness, estimate correctly the high-flown compliments of their countrymen and the kindred French, Castilian and Parisian politeness is of about equal value, and means the same thing—that is, nothing. To strangers it is very pleasant at first, but the moment it is apparent that these profuse protestations of friendship and offers of services are transparent devices, and that if you take them at their word they are embarrassed, perhaps offended, that you must be constantly on your guard, and be very careful to consider every fine phrase as a flower of rhetoric, it becomes positively disagreeable. Good manners go a great way; and if a person does you a favor, the pleasure you experience is much enhanced by the grace with which the obligation is conferred; but there is a vast difference between true and false politeness. The former springs only from a good and true heart; the latter is especially egotistical. Both the French and Spanish are extremely gallant to women; and yet the condition of women in both France and Spain is vastly inferior to that of our fair countrywomen, notwithstanding the Spanish caballero and the Parisian elegant can count their heartless compliments in terms our plain people would vainly attempt to imitate. But what cares a woman for fine phrases, if she knows that the respect due to her sex is wanting? The condition of the women of Cuba is eminently Spanish, and she is here too often the slave of passion and the victim of jealousy.

NATURAL PRODUCTIONS.

Cuba has been justly styled the garden of the world, perpetual summer smiling upon its favored shores, and its natural wealth almost baffling the capacity of estimation. The waters which surround it, as we have already intimated, abound with a variety of fishes, whose bright colors, emulating the tints of precious stones and the prismatic hues of the rainbow, astonish the eye of the stranger. Stately trees of various species, the most conspicuous being the royal palm, rear their luxuriant foliage against the azure heavens, along the sheltered bays, by the way-side, on the swells of the haciendas, delighting the eye of the traveler, and diversifying the ever charming face of the tropical landscape. Through the woods and groves flit a variety of birds, whose dazzling colors defy the palette of the artist. Here the loquacious parrot utters his harsh natural note; there the red flamingo stands patiently by the shore of the lagoon, watching in the waters, dyed by the reflection of his plumage, for his unconscious prey. It would require a volume to describe the vegetable, animal and mineral kingdom of Cuba. Among the most familiar birds, and those the names of which even the casual observer is apt to learn, are the Cuba robin, the blue bird, the cat bird, the Spanish woodpecker, the gaudy-pinned parrot, the pedoreva, with its red throat and breast and its pea-green head and body. There is also a great variety of wild pigeons, blue, gray and white; the English lady-bird, as it is called, with a blue head and scarlet breast, and green and white back; the indigo-bird, the golden-winged woodpecker, the ibis, the flamingo, and many smaller species, like the humming bird. Parrots settle on the sour orange trees when the fruit is ripe, and fifty may be secured by a net at a time. The Creoles stew and eat them as we do the pigeon; the flesh is rather tough; and as there are plenty of fine water and marsh birds about the lagoons, which are most tender and palatable, one is at a loss to account for the taste that leads the people to eat the parrot. The brown pelican is very plenty on the sea coast, like the gull off our own shores, and may be seen at all times sailing lazily over the sea, and occasionally dipping for fish. Here, as among other tropical regions, and even in some southern sections of this country, the lazy-looking bald-headed vulture is protected by law, being a sort of natural scavenger or remover of carrion.

Considerable space is devoted to the Administration of Tacon. In accomplishing his purposes, life was counted of little value, and many of the first people were sacrificed to his unscrupulous zeal. A story which was related to the author in Havana illustrates his romantic love of justice, and will bear repeating:

During the first year of Tacon's Governorship there was a young creole girl, named Miralda Estalez, who kept a little cigar store in the Calle de Mercaderas, and whose shop was the resort of all the young men of the town, who loved a choicely made and superior cigar. Miralda was only seventeen, without mother or father living, and earned an humble though sufficient support by her industry in the manufactory we have named, and by the sales of her little store. She was a picture of ripened tropical beauty, with a finely-rounded form, a lovely face, of soft, olive tint, and teeth that a Tuscarora might envy her. At times, there was a dash of languor in her dreamy eye that would have warmed an anchorite; and then her cheerful jests were so delicate yet free, that she had unwittingly turned the heads, not to say hearts, of half the young merchants in the Calle de Mercaderas. But she dispensed her favors without partiality; none of the rich and gay exquisites of Havana could say they had ever received any particular acknowledgement from the fair young girl to their warm and constant attention. For this one she had a pleasant smile, for another a few words of pleasing gossip, and for a third a snatch of Spanish song; but to none did she give her confidence, except to young Pedro Mantanes, a fine-looking boatman, who plied between the Punta and Moro Castle, on the opposite side of the harbor.

Pedro was a manly and courageous young fellow, rather above his class in intelligence, appearance and associations, and pulled his oars with a strong arm and light heart, and loved the beautiful Miralda with an ardor romantic in its fidelity and truth. He was a sort of leader among the boatmen in the harbor for reason of his superior cultivation and intelligence, and his quick-witted sagacity was often turned for the benefit of his comrades. Many were the noble deeds he had done in and about the harbor since a boy, for he had followed his calling of a waterman from boyhood, as his fathers had done before him. Miralda in turn ardently loved Pedro, and when he came at night and sat in the back part of her little shop, she had always a neat and fragrant cigar for his lips. Now and then, when she could steal away from her shop on some holiday, Pedro would hoist a tiny sail in the prow of his boat, and securing the little stern awning over Miraldn's head, would steer out into the Gulf and coast along the romantic shore.

There was a famous rouse, well known at this time in Havana, named Count Almonte, who had frequently visited Miralda's shop, and conceived quite a passion for the girl; and, indeed, he had grown to be one of her most liberal customers. With a cunning shrewdness and knowledge of human nature, the Count besieged the heart of his intended victim without appearing to do so, and carried on his plan of operations for many weeks before the innocent girl even suspected his possessing a partiality for her, until one day she was surprised by a present from him of so rare and costly a nature as to lead her to suspect the donor's intentions at once, and to promptly decline the offered gift. Undismayed by this, still the Count continued his profuse patronage in a way to which Miralda could find no plausible pretext of complaint.

At last, seizing upon what he considered a favorable moment, Count Almonte declared his passion to Miralda, besought her to come and be the mistress of his broad and rich estates at Cerito, near the city, and offered all the promises of wealth, favor and fortune; but in vain. The pure-minded girl scorned his offer, and bade him never more to insult her by visiting her shop. Abashed, but not confounded, the Count retired, but only to weave a new snare whereby he could entangle her, for he was not one to be so easily thwarted.

One afternoon, not long after this, as the twilight was settling over the town, a file of soldiers halted just opposite the door of the little cigar-shop, when a young man, wearing a lieutenant's insignia, entered and asked the attendant if her name was Miralda Estalez, to which she timidly responded.

"Then you will please to come with me."

"By what authority?" asked the trembling girl.

"The order of the Governor-General."

"Then I must obey you," she answered, and prepared to follow him at once.

Stepping to the door with her, the young officer directed his men to march on, and getting into a volante, told Miralda they would drive to the guard-house. But, to the surprise of the girl, she soon after discovered that they were rapidly passing the city gates, and immediately after were dashing off on the road to Cerito. Then it was that she began to fear some trick had been played upon her, and these fears were soon confirmed by the volante turning down the long alley of palms that led to the estate of Count Almonte. It was in vain to expostulate now; she felt that she was in the power of the reckless nobleman, and the pretended officer and soldiers were his own people, who had adopted the disguise of the Spanish army uniform.

Count Almonte met her at the door, told her to fear no violence, that her wishes should be respected in all things, save her personal liberty; that he trusted, in time, to persuade her to look more favorably upon him, and that in all things he was her slave. She replied contemptuously to his words, and shrugged him with the cowardly trick by which he had gained control of her liberty. But she was left by herself, though watched by his orders at all times to prevent her escape.

She knew very well that the power and will of Count Almonte were too strong for any humble friend of hers to attempt to thwart; and yet she somehow felt a conscious strength in Pedro, and secretly cherished the idea that he would discover her place of confinement, and adopt some means to deliver her. The stiletto is the constant companion of the lower classes, and Miralda had been used to wear one even in her store against contingency; but she now regarded the tiny weapon with peculiar satisfaction, and slept with it in her bosom.

Small was the clue by which Pedro Mantanez discovered the trick of Count Almonte. First this was found out, then that circumstance, and these, being put together, they led to other results, until the indefatigable lover was fully satisfied that he had discovered her place of confinement. Disguised as a friar of the order of San Felipe, he sought Count Almonte's gates at a favorable moment, met Miralda, cheered her with fresh hopes, and retired to arrange some certain plan for her delivery. There was time to think now; heretofore he had not permitted himself even an hour's sleep; but she was, that is, not in immediate danger, and he could breathe more freely. He knew not with whom to advise; he feared to speak to those above him in society, lest they might betray his purpose to the Count, and his own liberty, by some means, be thus jeopardized. He could only consider with himself; he must be his own counsellor in this critical case.

At last, as if in despair, he started to his feet, one day, and exclaimed to himself, "Why not go to headquarters at once? why not see the Governor-General, and tell him the whole truth? Ah! see him? How is that to be effected? And then this Count Almonte is a nobleman! They say Tacon loves justice. We shall see. I will go to the Governor-General; it cannot do any harm if it does not do any good. I can but try." And Pedro did seek the Governor. True, he did not at once get audience of him—not the first, nor the second, nor third time; but he persevered, and was admitted at last. Here he told his story in a free, manly voice, undisguisedly and open in all things, so that Tacon was pleased.

"And the girl?" asked the Governor-General, over whose countenance a dark scowl had gathered, "is she thy sister?"

"No, Excelencia, she is dearer still; she is my betrothed."

The Governor, bidding him come nearer, took a golden cross from his table, and handing it to the boatman, as he regarded him searchingly, said,

"Swear that what you have related to me is true, as you hope for heaven!"

"I swear," said Pedro, kneeling and kissing the emblem with simple reverence.

The Governor turned to his table, wrote a few brief lines, and, touching a bell, summoned a page from an adjoining room, whom he ordered to send the captain of the guard to him. Prompt as were all who had any connection with the Governor's household, the officer appeared at once, and received the written order, with directions to bring Count Almonte and a young girl named Miralda immediately before him. Pedro was sent to ante-room, and the business of the day passed on as usual in the reception hall of the Governor.

Less than two hours had transpired when the Count and Miralda stood before Tacon. Neither knew the nature of the business which had summoned them there. Almonte half suspected the truth, and the poor girl argued of herself that her fate could not but be improved by the interference, let its nature be what it might.

"Count Almonte, you doubtless know why I have ordered you to appear here?"

"Excelencia, I fear that I have been indiscreet," was the reply.

"You adopted the uniform of the guards for your own private purposes upon this young girl, did you not?"

"Excelencia, I cannot deny it."

"Declare upon your honor, Count Almonte, whether she is unmarried, whom you have thus kept a prisoner."

"Excelencia, she is as pure as when she entered beneath my roof," was the truthful reply.

The Governor turned, and whispered something to his page, then continued his questions to the Count, while he made some minutes upon paper. Pedro was now summoned to explain some matter, and as he entered the Governor General turned his back for one moment as if to seek for some papers upon his table, while Miralda was pressed in the boatman's arms. It was but for a moment, and the next, Pedro was bowing humbly before Tacon. A few moments more and the Governor's page returned, accompanied by a monk of the church of Santa Clara, with the emblems of his office.

"Holy father," said Tacon, "you will bind the hands of this Count Almonte and Miralda Estalez together in the bonds of wedlock."

"Excelencia!" exclaimed the Count in amazement.

"Not a word, Senor; it is your part to obey!"

"My nobility, Excelencia!"

"Is forfeited!" said Tacon.

Count Almonte had too many evidences before his mind's eye of Tacon's mode of administering justice and of enforcing his own will to dare to rebel, and he doggedly yielded in silence. Poor Pedro, not daring to speak, was half crazed to see the prize he had so long coveted thus about to be torn from him. In a few moments the ceremony was performed, the trembling and bewildered girl not daring to thwart the Governor's orders, and the priest declared them husband and wife. The captain of the guard was summoned and dispatched with some written order, and in a few subsequent moments Count Almonte, completely subdued and broken-spirited, was ordered to return to his plantation. Pedro and Miralda were directed to remain in an adjoining apartment to that which had been the scene of this singular procedure. Count Almonte mounted his horse, and with a single attendant soon passed out of the city gates. But hardly had he passed the corner of the Paseo, when a dozen muskets fired a volley upon him, and he fell a corpse upon the road.

His body was quietly removed, and the captain of the guard, who had witnessed the act, made a minute upon his order as to the time and place, and, mounting his horse, rode to the Governor's palace, entering the presence-chamber just as Pedro and Miralda were once more summoned before the Governor.

"Excelencia," said the officer, returning the order, "it is executed!"

"Is the Count dead?"

"Excelencia, yes."

"Proclaim in the usual manner, the marriage of Count Almonte and Mirnlda Estaletz, and also that she is his legal widow, possessed of his titles and estates. See that a proper officer attends her to the Count's estate, and enforces this decision!"

Then, turning to Pedro Mantanes, he said: "No man or woman in this island is so humble but they may claim justice of Tacon!"

The story furnishes its own moral.

Mr. Ballou closes his volume with a lively picture of the benefit which would accrue to Cuba from her annexation to the United States.

A Wonder Sonnet.

BY BARRY BRAGE.

There 's a tippy little sonnet, on a jaunty little bonnet,
With a myrtle wreath upon it, that I ear-ai chanch to-day!
With a wealth of curls below, in many a golden ringlet flowing,
On the lightest breeze out blowing, in wavy, 'wilessing play;
'Twas a sweet bewitching face in it, with wondrous charming grace in it,
And not the faintest trait in it, of—any thing sapleasant;
Pale the forehead was, and fair, under two soft waves of hair,
Not too high, and not too square; just arched like a crescent;
The brown eyes that shone below it were as bright as dream of poet;
(Ah! I'm half afraid they know it, by their merry-glancing wiles,)
Cheeks with rose and lily blended; mouth like Cupid's bow unbended,
Or like dewy tulips rended, when it parted in its smiles;
All within* that little bonnet,
With the myrtle wreath upon it.

* By "within," in this connection, I mean "in the vicinity of;" not intending to convey the impression that the "little bonnet" was so horribly un stylish as to be capable of containing a face.
[Knickerbocker.

Trial of William Penn.

Miss Mitford has been reading through "Hargrave's State Trials," and thus relates some thing very amusing and interesting she found therein:

One of these trials relates to a man about whom much has been written lately; and who, certainly, although no doubt he had faults in plenty, was puffed up with vanity, as your professors of humanity seldom fail to be, and took no small delight in courts and princes, as was to be expected from the leader of a sect whose chief tenet was an ostentatious renunciation of the pomps and vanities of the world—must be admitted to have had his merits also—among which I shall always include the manner in which he turned the Mayor and Mr. Recorder round his fingers. I am talking of William Penn, and the process in question is the trial of William Penn and William Mead for a tumultuous assembly, 22d Charles ii. (1670) before the Mayor, Recorder, and divers Aldermen of the Old Bailey.

I do not know any cause pleasanter to read than this, because from first to last the parties with whom our sympathies go have the best not only of the reasoning but of the result; such arrant blunderers were the whole of the court. To begin at the beginning:

Clerk: Bring William Penn and William Mead to the bar.

Mayor: Sirrah! Who bid you put off their hats? Put on their hats again.

Whereupon one of the officers putting the prisoners' hats upon their heads, pursuant to the orders of the Court, brought them to the bar.

Recorder: Do you know where you are?

Penn: Yes.

Recorder: Do you not know it is the King's Court?

Penn: I know it to be a Court, and I suppose it to be the King's Court.

Recorder: Do you not know there is a respect due to the Court?

Penn: Yes.

Recorder: Why do you not pay it, then?

Penn: I do so.

Recorder: Why do you not pull off your hat, then?

Penn: Because I do not believe that to be any respect.

Recorder: Well, the Court sets forty marks a piece upon your heads, as a fine for your contempt of Court.

Penn: I desire it might be observed, that we came into the Court with our hats off (that is taken off) and if they have been put on since, it was by order from the bench, and therefore not we but the bench should be fined.

Then Penn, finding the advantage he had got, began to ask questions of the Recorder, much to the discomfiture of that learned official. Here is a sample:

Recorder: Sir, you are a troublesome fellow, and it is not for the honor of the Court to suffer you to go on.

Penn: I have asked but one question, and you have not answered me, though the right and privilege of every Englishman be concerned in it.

Recorder: If I should suffer you to ask questions till to-morrow morning, you would never be the wiser.

Penn: That is according as the answers be.

Finally, although the real offence (that of preaching in Grace-church street) was, I suppose, pretty clearly established, it was found absolutely impossible to get the jury to convict. They brought in a temporizing and modified verdict, which deprived the Court of the few wits with which they seem to have been originally gifted. The Mayor scolded, the Recorder stormed. The jury were locked up, sent back; sent back again, locked up again for something like two days; and must have been made of very stubborn stuff to have resisted the starvation. They did resist, however. The more they were pressed, the more favorable the verdict became, and the bench were at last compelled to accept a complete and triumphant acquittal.

Marg'a Elopement.

[Nahum Fay, of Mass., was, in early life, married to a young, gay and beautiful, but high spirited girl, with whom he lived but a year or two, their dispositions being but ill fitted to render each other happy. Among his papers, after his death, which happened about ten years since, was found the following, which, as a curiosity, is worthy of preservation. Boston Mail.]

Just eighteen years ago this day,
Attired in all her best array,
For she was airy, young and gay,
And loved to make a grand display,
While I the charges would defray,
My "cara sposa" went astray—
By night eloping in a sleigh,
With one whose name begins with J,
Resolved with me she would not stay,
And so subjected to my sway;
Because I wished her to obey,
Without reluctance or delay,
And never it expose her nay,
Nor any scorn is e'er betray.
But wives will sometimes have their way,
And cause, if possible, a fray,
Then who so chollerick as they?
Sho therefore left my bed for aye,
Before my head had changed to gray,
Or I'd sustained the least decay,
Which caused at first some slight dismay,
For I considered it foul play.
Now, where she's gone I can not say,
For I've not seen her since the day
When Johnson took her in a sleigh,
To his seductive arts a prey,
And posted off to Canada,
Now, when her conduct I survey,
And in the scale of justice weigh,
Who can blame if I inveigh
Against her to my dying day?
But long as I live, and live I may,
I've always purposed not to pay,
(Contract whatever debts she may,)
A shilling for her; but I'll prey
That when her body turns to clay,
As soon it must, without gainsay,
If mourning friends shall her convey
To yonder graveyard, they'll not lay
Her carcase near mine— NAHUM FAY.

NATIONAL CHARACTERISTICS.—Some extracts from the "Unpublished Journals of Travel" of a very original thinker and shrewd observer are given in a recent number of an English magazine. Among them is the following, in reference to the characteristics of several nations:

"Once upon a time, I lost my way in New York. Asked Yankee: he immediately stopped, turned his hook to me, put his hands into his pockets, and began to whistle. I was just going to ask some one else, when I heard him say, through his nose, that if I would follow him, he would show me the way. He did, too, though it took him some half a mile out of his road. Once upon a time, I lost my way in London. Asked Englishman: he stopped exactly the fifteenth part of a second, said, 'first turn to the left, second turn to the right, and there you are, sir!' Once upon a time, I lost my way in Paris. Asked Frenchman: he was very voluble and explained very politely. Once upon a time, I lost my way in the town of Augeburg. Asked a German: off went his hat, and off went his tongue with a volubility of warmth and benevolence that was quite delightful and most confusing. But where is the difference between the Frenchman and the German? True, they are, at first sight, much alike; but look closer, and you will see the motive is utterly different. In the German it is eagerness to please you; in the Frenchmen it is a desire you should be pleased with him. It is as plain as if they said so, in so many words."

THE BEARD IN THE PULPIT.—Francis the First, disgusted with the prevailing practice in his day, of the clergy retaining their beards, obtained from the Pope a brief by which all ecclesiastics throughout France were compelled to shave, or pay a large sum for the privilege of appearing with a board. The highest and richly beneficed clergy readily paid the prohibitory fine, but the poorer sort, unable to comply, were reduced to the grievous necessity of surrendering this ornament of the chin. The license, obtained by compliance with the terms of the papal brief was, however, secondary to the statute regulations of the Church, which in some instances were directly inhibitory of the Bishop himself performing the service, unshaven; and of this fact, Duprat was in his person no a prelate, a remarkable instance.

Duprat, son of the Chancellor of that name, had naturally a beard that excited general admiration; and shortly after his return from the Council of Trent, where he had displayed his eloquence, and distinguished himself by his writings, was appointed to the see of Clermont. On Easter Sunday he appeared at the cathedral to take possession, but found the doors closed. Three dignitaries of the Chapter awaited him at the entrance; one held a razor; another a pair of scissors; and the third, a book containing the ancient statutes of that Church, in which with his finger, that officer pointed out to the would-be bishop the words barbis rasis—no beard. In vain did Depret endeavor to avoid that despoilment, and argued the sinfulness of doing any work on so solemn a day; but was inexorably determined, those who held the razor and the scissors resisted his entering, and protruded their weapons in such guise, that the non-inducted bishop, to save his beard, fled in dismay, abandoned the honor, and grief in a few days rendered him for ever insensible to the advantages of a prelatical position, or the vain solicitude created by the unusual elegance of a beard.

To Booksellers, Agents, and Peddlers.

BURNETT & BOSTWICK, PUBLISHERS,

15 Camp Street, 15

HAVE just issued from their press the following valuable works:

VOYAGE OF THE U. S. EXPLORING SQUADRON, commanded by Capt. Charles Wilkes of the U. S. N., together with Explorations and Discoveries made by Admiral Dutrville, Capt. Ross and other Navigations and Travelers, and an account of the Expedition to the Dead Sea under Lieut. Lynch, with numerous illustrations.
LIFE OF JOHN C. CALHOUN.
LIFE OF JAMES K. POLK, with a history of his Administration.
THE HEROINES OF HISTORY.
HEROINES OF THE CRUSADES.
PANORAMA OF NATIONS.
THE GREAT CITIES OF THE WORLD.
LIVES OF JOHN AND CHARLES WESLEY.
WILLIS'S WORKS—seven volumes.
THE MIRROR OF THE SOUL.
FARM AND FIRESIDE.
RURAL HOMES, &c. &c.

For the sale of the above and many other works, which are all very valuable and popular, we desire to establish an agency in every county and parish in the South; and therefore offer unparalleled inducements to country dealers, agents and peddlers.

A Catalogue of all our publications furnished on application, post paid, to

BURNETT & BOSTWICK, Publishers,
may 27 6m 15 Camp street, New Orleans.

Dr. J. T. Kennon,

Castilian Spring,
Holmes County, Mississippi,

Is now prepared to offer good accommodations to invalids who may desire to visit Castilian Spring, or place themselves under his care for treatment. This is one of the most desirable retreats for invalids in the South, located in an elevated healthy region of country, with abundance of fine Freestone water. The mineral water is composed very strongly of Iron, Sulphur, Magnesia and Soda, and contains largely of Carbonic Acid Gas.

The diseases which it has cured are Dyspepsia, Dropsy, General Debility, Affections of the Kidneys, Bladder, and the various functional and organic derangements of the Womb. This water is especially efficacious in Diseases of Females.

Board, per week—$7.

References—Ministers of Miss. Conference.
Rev. J. B. Walker, } New Orleans.
Rev. H. N. McTyeire, }

march 4 6m

THE BRITISH QUARTERLIES,

AND

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.

LEONARD SCOTT & CO., No. 54 Gold street, New York, continue to publish the following British Periodicals, viz:
THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW, (Conservative.)
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW, (Whig.)
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW, (Free Church.)
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW, (Liberal.)
and
BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE, (Tory.)

—TERMS—

For any one of the four Reviews ..... $3 00 per annum
For any two " " ..... 5 00 "
For any three " " ..... 7 00 "
For all four of the Reviews, ... 8 00 "
For Blackwood's Magazine, ... 3 00 "
For Blackwood and the three Reviews, 9 00 "
For Blackwood and the four Reviews, 10 00 "

Payments to be made, in all cases, in advance. Money current in the State where issued will be received at par.

Address, post paid, LEONARD SCOTT & CO.,
79 Fulton st., New York. Entrance 54 Gold st.

☞ Postage on Blackwood and the four Reviews, 72 cents a year. [Nov18-1y.]

Pickensville Female Institute.

R. BRADSHAW, A. M., PRINCIPAL.

THE next regular session of this Institution will, with a full corps of able and experienced Teachers, commence on Monday, the 2d of October. Catalogues containing every necessary information can be had by applying to the Principal. PEYTON KING.
August 19-3t President Board of Trustees.

Hardinsburg Female High School.

Under the patronage of the
LOUISVILLE ANNUAL CONFERENCE,

Conducted by Rev. R. G. GARDINER and LADY, Who are assisted by experienced Teachers of the very best qualifications for teaching both the solid and the ornamental branches, including the higher Mathematics, Ancient and the Modern Foreign Languages, Music, the various kinds of Brewing, Painting, Embroidery, etc.

Located in Hardinsburg, Breckenridge county, Kentucky—decidedly one of the most healthy places in the United States—convenient to a number of excellent mineral Springs; and of easy access, being but ten miles from the Ohio, at Cloversport, where conveyance at all times can be obtained.

The proprietor is determined this shall continue one of the best and cheapest Female Schools in the country. Situated where provisions are cheap and abundant; his buildings large and commodious; no rent to pay; he is prepared to accommodate a large number of boarders at $1 50 per week. Tuition, inclusive of the languages and the ornamental branches, from $7 to $12 per session of five months. Music $18 per session. Use of Instrument $2. All other charges equally low.

One half of the price of board and tuition required in advance. The Sessions will commence the first Monday of September and February. aug. 19. 29

Alabama Centenary Institute.

THE EXERCISES of this long established and popular Institution will commence on

THE FIRST MONDAY OF OCTOBER NEXT.

FACULTY.... FEMALE COLLEGE.
Rev. A. H. MITCHELL, D. D., President and Professor of Mental and Moral Science
Rev. B. F. LARRABEE, Professor of Mathematics and Belles Lettres.
....., Professor of the Natural Sciences.
Mons. JULES BEADY, Member of the Royal Academy of Paris, Professor of Music and French.
Mrs. LUCINDA FERGUSON, Assistant Teacher of Music.
Miss ELLEN E. LARRABEE, Teacher of Drawing and Painting.

MALE DEPARTMENT.
Rev. R. B. PITTS, A. M., Principal.
JOHN T. BURNLIN, A. M., Associate.

PREPARATORY SCHOOL.
THOS. C. BEADY, A. M., Principal.
....., Assistant.

This Institution is situated in Summerfield, Alabama—as healthy a location, we believe, as there is in all the South. It is under the guidance and instruction of an able and experienced Faculty. No one of the Professors or Teachers, whose names appear above, needs the support of a recommendation.

Heretofore all the departments have been under the superintendence of Dr. Mitchell: but it has been thought best by the Trustees and Faculty to place each department under a seperate jurisdiction. Accordingly, Dr. Mitchell will hereafter devote his whole time and his distinguished talents to the Female College. With him will be associated three experienced Professors, and as many Ladies as the circumstances may require.

One of the Professorships is now vacant, but it is certain to be filled before the beginning of the ensuing session, by some gentleman of established reputation.

The Trustees most confidently invite a comparison of the advantages thus presented to parents for the education of their daughters, with those afforded by any Female College in the South.

The Male Academy, under the direction of Professor Pitts, aided by Professor Burnlin, (and others if necessary,) cannot fail to secure and retain a large share of the public patronage.

The Preparatory School has been placed under the charge of Professor Bragg, in order that the children may be properly trained and prepared to enter the higher departments of the Institute. A new building for it is already under contract. The buildings of the Female College are also being greatly enlarged and improved. Some ten or twelve thousand dollars will be expended in perfecting and furnishing them.

The Trustees and friends of the Institute have resolved to leave nothing undone to place it above every similar institution in the country.

B. J. HARRISON, Secretary of the Board.

N. B.—The Trustees have thought proper, from motives of economy, to require the young ladies to dress in uniform, except in the school-room, and strictly forbid the wearing of any jewelry, except a plain breastpin.

The uniform for winter is green worsted; for summer, white muslin. aug6—6m26

Marion Female Seminary,

MARION, PERRY COUNTY, ALA.

THE EXERCISES of this institution will be resumed on Monday, the 2d day of October, under the charge of the Rev. Jas. K. Armstrong as Principal, assisted by nine Professors, Teachers and Officers.

It has just closed its present session with one hundred and thirty-three students, seventy-seven of which number were boarders. There is but one session of nine and a half months.

Pupils can enter at any time during the session, chargeable from the beginning of the month in which they commence, to the close of the session. No deduction will be made but at the discretion of the Principal.

The Principal, with his family, resides in the building. The female teachers also reside in the Seminary. Boarders in the institution are under the control of the Principal at all times. A Steward, in the employment of the Principal, of experience, urbanity of manners, and faithfulness to his duties, a Matron who constantly and kindly ministers to the private wants of young ladies, and especially in sickness, a Governess who directs them in their exercises and amusements, superintends the order of their private apartments, instructs them in certain domestic duties, and guards their private, personal habits, manners and morals, always aided by the presence and active cooperation of the female teachers. The Principal and his lady secure to these committed to their charge every necessary and proper comfort and kindness. Here they are constantly exercised under a wholesome system of regulations respecting neatness, order, punctuality and economy. They have regular hours for study and recreation, for rising and retiring, for eating, domestic duties, and social enjoyment among themselves.

The Institution is furnished with a new and superior apparatus in the departments of Chemistry, Natural Philosophy and Astronomy. There is also a large collection of Maps, Charts, Plates, Diagrams, Globes, etc., for simplifying the principles of Geography, Physiology and Astronomy.

In the department of Drawing, Painting and Embroidery there is a fine collection of Drawing Cards, Engravings, Pictures, Paintings, Patterns, and every other convenience important in the prosecution of these departments.

There is in connection with the Institution a Library of more than one thousand volumes, and a Cabinet of several hundred specimens.

The Institution is furnished with six Pianos, five Guitars, and one Harp.

MUSIC.—The Professor at the Head of this department is equal to any in the country. He is a superior vocalist, a fine performer on the Piano, Harp, Guitar, Violin, Violoncello, etc. He has enjoyed ten years experience as a teacher of music in the best institutions in the Union; is profoundly versed in the principle of harmony, and is a real amateur of the sublime science to which he has devoted himself.

LOCATION.—Its salubrity, intelligence, morality and public spirit are unsurpassed.

PERMANENCY.—Parents may send their daughters here with confidence in their completing their education under the same course of instruction and system of discipline. Every thing conspires to make the permanency of the Principal a matter of duty, pleasure and interest.

TEACHERS.—The Principal, himself a native of Alabama, surrounds himself with a corps of teachers of known efficiency and tried success, nearly all of whom have been reared in the South, thus ensuring a better acquaintance with Southern peculiarities and sympathy with Southern views and interests. Thoroughness is our motto in teaching. We ascribe the true importance to the harmonious development of the physical, intellectual and moral nature.

Reports are sent to patrons once every two months, which are a faithful showing of the scholarship and conduct of the pupil. In our system of merits and demerits scholarship and conduct are connected.

The Principal regards it as his most important duty to attend to the moral habits of his pupils and to imbuing their minds with proper religious principles.

The facilities for acquiring the French and other modern languages are superior.

There are daily exercises in Orthography, Reading and Writing. Great attention is bestowed on letter-writing and composition.

Lectures are delivered weekly to the junior and senior classes on various subjects of Science and Literature, on which they take notes and are subsequently examined.

The Principal will be assisted in the Collegiate department, the ensuing session, by a gentleman, a Professor of long experience, of the ripest scholarship, and the most superior qualifications as a teacher. He will take charge of the department of Mathematics and some of the Higher English branches, and the control of the main study hall.

Visitors are not received by boarders except with suitable introduction to the Principal from patrons.

All jewelry is prohibited, except a plain breastpin.

No accounts will be opened in Marion. Money must be deposited or forwarded for all necessary and proper purposes. Let pupils be supplied from home as far as is practicable.

All sums of money for the use of pupils must be deposited with the Principal.

One hundred and forty-five dollars will pay the board and tuition of a young lady for the entire session in the collegiate course. $175 will embrace the languages. $225 will embrace board, tuition in the collegiate department, on the Piano, and in the languages.

Books, Stationery, Sheet Music, Drawing, Painting and Embroidery material is furnished by the Principal. The cost of these articles varies with the advancement of the pupil. Every effort will be made to secure economy in their use.

For further particulars or catalogues, apply to the Principal.

Marion, July 29 1854.

Emory and Henry College,

WASHINGTON COUNTY, VIRGINIA.

THE Fall Session of this Institution will commence on the 17th August next.

TERMS:

Tuition per session of five months	.....	$17 50
Board " "	.....	36 75
Washing " "	.....	5 00
Fuel " "	.....	2 00
Contingent charge "	.....	1 25
		$62 50

"It is believed that no College in the South is offering stronger inducements than this to young men desirous of a thorough collegiate education. Our location is in a quiet and beautiful valley, ten miles distant from town or village, and comparatively free from temptations to vice. Our Board of Instruction is filled with men of experience, ability and fidelity. Our course of study is extensive and thorough. Our Cabinet, Libraries, and Apparatus are ample. Any young man of limited means, with fair abilities and proper energy, can here acquire a superior, Liberal or business education.

For further particulars, address

E. E. WILEY, President,
July 6, 1854. 6t Emory P. O., Va.

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL

FOR THE CURE OF
COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS,
BRONCHITIS, WHOOPING COUGH,
CROUP, ASTHMA AND CONSUMPTION.

FOR CROUP, given a emetic of antimony, to be followed by large and frequent doses of the CHERRY PECTORAL, until it subdues the disease. If taken in season, it will not fail to cure.

WHOOPING COUGH may be broken up and soon cured by the use of CHERRY PECTORAL.

THE INFLUENZA is speedily removed by this remedy. Numerous instances have been noticed where whole families were protected from any serious consequences while their neighbors, without the CHERRY PECTORAL were suffering from the disease.

SALEM, Ohio, 11th June, 1851.

Doct. J. C. AYER:

I write to inform you of the truly remarkable effects of your CHERRY PECTORAL in this place, and in my own family. One of my daughters was completely cured in three days of a dreadful Whooping Cough by taking it. Dr. Means, one of our very best Physicians, freely states that he considers it the best remedy we have for pulmonary diseases, and that he has cured more cases of Croup with it than any other medicine he ever administered.

Our clergyman of the Baptist Church says that during the run of Influenza here this season, he has seen cures from your medicine he could scarcely have believed without seeing. Yours respectfully,

J. B. SINCLAIR, Deputy Postmaster

*From the

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Publishing Committee Louisiana Conference, { J. C. KEENER, D. D., L. PARKER, J. B. WALKER.

H. N. McTYEIRE, Editor.

J. HAMILTON, D. D., T. W. DORMAN, W. MURRAH. } Publishing Committee Alabama Conference.

VOL. IV. NO. 31. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 2, 1854. WHOLE NO. 187.

...IN AND END EVERY DAY WITH GOD.

...Let prayer be the key to open the heart to ...d in the morning, and lock it against all ...e enemies at night. Let no Christian say ...e can not pray; for prayer is as necessary ...him as breath. Let none say they have no ...e for prayer. Think with yourself, "This ...rning may be my last morning, or this ...ht my last night;" for certainly that ...rning cometh of which you will never see ...night, or that night of which you will ...ver see the morning. Let the conclusion ...every day put you in mind of the conclu...n of all your days, by the long night of ...th, which will put an end to all your ...rk, and bring you to an account with your ...st Master about it.

O, to lie down to rest every night reconciled to Him! O, that we could lie down and have our hearts with Christ, and compose our spirits, as if we were not to awake till we heavene he no more!

Since none knoweth what a day may bring forth, spend every day as if it were your last. Look on yourself as standing every day at the door of eternity, and hundreds of diseases and accidents ready to open the door and let you in. No doubt you have sometimes apprehended yourself nearer death than you are at present now—yet it is certain that death and judgment were never so near you as at present. We who stand every hour at the door of eternity, should spend our precious hours with the greatest frugality, seeing that the work we have in hand is soul work, and work upon which eternity depends, and the time we have to do it in is very short, and can not be recalled.

This short life, being only a passage to eternity, should be spent as a continual preparation for it. Surely, those who have immortal souls so near eternity, have other work to do than to trifle time away in tipling, idle talking, gaming, and such diversions.

Sojourn in this world as travelers, keeping loose from the world as to be able to pack up and be gone from it on short warning. We have no continuing city, nor certain abode here; therefore let us always be ready to rise and depart; and, if we would be right travelers toward Zion, we must have Christ in our hearts, heaven in our eye, and the world under our feet. We must take God's Spirit for our guide, God's word for our rule, God's glory for our end, God's fear for our guard, God's people for our companions, God's praise for our recreation, God's promises for our cordials. We must make Religion our business, prayer our delight, holiness our way, and heaven our home.

O, Zion's travelers, distinguish yourselves from the men that dwell upon the earth! Let Christ always be precious to you; the world sweet, sin bitter; the world a wilderness, and death welcome. Let Christ's will be your will, Christ's dishonor your affliction, Christ's cause your concern, Christ's cross your glory, Christ's sufferings your meditation, Christ's wounds your refuge, Christ's blood your balm, Christ's presence your heaven: and so shall you come to his eternal joy:—

"Floods of everlasting light
Freely flash before him;
Myriads, with supreme delight,
Constantly adore him:
Angel trumps resound his fame,
Lutes of shining gold proclaim
All the music of his name,
Through eternity the same.

"Hark! the thrilling symphonies
Seem, methinks, to seize us;
Answer we their heavenly lays,
Jesus! Jesus! Jesus!
Sweetest note in seraph's song,
Sweetest note on mortal's tongue;
Sweetest carol ever sung,
Jesus! Jesus! flowe along."

SWEET THOUGHTS.

We often meet with selections of sublime and beautiful thoughts from the works of men of genius. But there are thoughts suggested by the Bible, infinitely more precious than the choicest creations of genius.

How sweet the thought, that Jesus sympathizes with all our joys and sorrows! The great demand of human nature is the demand for sympathy. Man must have it or they can not be happy, however extensive their possessions or high their rank. But how little sympathy is to be found among men! How precious the thought, that our Saviour sympathizes with every joy and every sorrow! Christian, do you sometimes feel that you are alone, and that there are none who care for you? You are mistaken. You forget that Jesus is ever by your side; that He approves every innocent smile, and notices every falling tear, and feels for you a love and sympathy that no finite mind can measure.

How sweet the thought that God reigns! The nations are perplexed and troubled, the foundations of the earth are out of course, the wisdom of the wise seems to be of no avail, and the strong man is as a child: still we can look upon the troubled scene without fear; for God reigns. Amid all the confusion and uproar, His counsel shall stand, and He shall do all His pleasure. Not only is He the Governor of the nations, but He governs and directs in all matters pertaining to our individual interest. Not a hair of our head falls to the ground without his notice, and the resources of Omnipotence are pledged to cause all things to work together for our good.

How sweet the thought, that death is going home! He who has been an exile in a strange land, who has dwelt among people of a strange tongue, rejoices at the sight of the vessel which is to bear him to his native shores, where he shall enter again the paternal mansion, and receive the welcome of loved ones there. Death, rightly viewed, is the messenger who is to conduct us to our home in heaven, where our brethren who have gone before us are awaiting to welcome us—where Jesus, who has gone to prepare a mansion for us, is waiting to receive us. How sweet the thought, that in a few years more, perhaps in a few days, I shall be safe in heaven!

Surely, with thoughts like these, for constant themes of meditation, the Christian may well obey the command of the apostle, "Rejoice evermore; and again I say rejoice."

[Presbyterian.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

NOTES OF A RAMBLER.

Mr. Editor—I send you some notes from Gotham.

AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY HOUSE.

This is one of the largest buildings in the city. It fronts four streets. Its total front is over 700 feet. The hight of the buildings from the side-walk is over 70 feet, divided into six stories. It is substantially built of brick, with brown-stone trimmings, and has cost between $250,000 and $300,000. It is divided into four distinct parts by fire-proof walls and doors. The building is commanding in appearance; occupying a block by itself, it is safe from exposure to fires, and from damage to books in the process of manufacture, by duet, smoke, or vapor from other buildings, as none are adjoining. It has every facility of light and air; and from it is had a most commanding view of the surrounding city and country, land and water. The principal entrance is decorated by four round columns, with Corinthian capitals and moulded bases resting upon panneled and molded pedestals, and semi-circular arches are placed between the columns to form the heads of doors, etc.; and all surmounted with a heavy cornice and segment pediment. The ornamental work reaches to the hight of five stories. In a niteh in the fourth story of this rich work stands a large-sized draped female figure, carved in brown stone, representing Religion, pointing with one hand to Heaven, and with the other to an open Bible—the guide to immortality. I was conducted through this extensive building, and saw the whole process of making Bibles, from beginning to end. The whole number of hands employed in the building is about 580. Since its organization in 1816, the Society has received about $4,500,000, and has put into circulation an aggregate of about 9,000,000 Bibles and Testaments.

METHODIST MINISTERS' MEETING.

By invitation I attended one of the weekly meetings of the Methodist Ministers of New York city. The question proposed for discussion was—"What can be done for the emancipation of the slaves of our country?" Dr. Bangs, brother of Nathan, remarked, that the weather was too warm to discuss that question—that the smell of negroes was too strong to approach them in such hot weather. The discussion was postponed. When the meeting closed, I was introduced to the Ministers present. They treated me kindly and brotherly. I was invited to preach in the Mulberry and John street Churches. I was agreeably surprised and much gratified with the brotherly feeling manifested by them.

TRAVELING IN THE CITY.

Omnibuses and cars, drawn by horses, run to every portion of the city. You can ride any distance you wish for five and six cents. Some of the omnibuses have reduced the fare to three cents. These conveyances are always crowded, and the proprietors, no doubt, make money.

TRINITY CHURCH.

This is the principal Episcopal Church in the city, and the most costly of all the churches. Its cost was $338,000. The material of the building is a redish sandstone, nicely dressed. It covers a large space of ground, measuring, with the tower, buttresses, etc., not much short of 200 feet long, and is more than 80 feet wide; and yet so much of the space is occupied by the tower at the east end, and vestry at the west end, and space for the chancel, etc., and having no galleries, it will not accommodate in the pews more than 8 or 900 persons, not all of whom are able to hear distinctly either prayer or sermon—thus demonstrating the impropriety of erecting such a building for the uses of a Protestant Church. The walls of the house are about 40 feet high, and are highly ornamented. The tower and steeple are the principal objects that engage the eye of the beholder; and whether we consider its comely proportions, or its style of finish, or its immense hight, towering as it does 284 feet into the air, it must be considered a noble specimen of architecture. I attended service there on Sabbath. It was a grand occasion—ordination of Elders and Deacons. The ceremonies were numerous and imposing; the music grand; the tremendous organ, ever and anon, would send forth peals of musical thunder, one after another, which rolled through the arched building and died away as gently as "weary worn out winds along the shore;" and then its soothing, melting strains would fall like a shower of musical rain on the delighted audience.

A NOVEL SIGHT.

I relate one of the thousand sights I saw in the streets of New York. I heard music one day, and looked from my window and saw a regular negro military company—all dressed in full uniform, with muskets and bayonets—a banner floated above them. A giant, black as midnight, waved his sword and issued orders in regular military style. A brass band, composed of whites, played for them. They attracted considerable attention.

More anon. Rambler.

CELEBRATING THE FOURTH.

There are some points in North and West Louisiana and Texas, from which a letter is as long coming to us as from London. Let not our friends be discouraged. The way to keep the route open and smooth is to use it often. The following, though out of date, has not lost its virtue.—[Ed.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

Ma. Editor: Would it not be well for us as Christians and citizens of a happy republic, to inquire how we ought to spend or celebrate the fourth day of July, our national Sabbath. Is it not the best evidence that we are celebrating it properly, when we receive the greatest evidence of God's love?

I have celebrated it on the bank of the Connecticut river, also on the bank of the Rio Grande, and many intermediate places; and enjoyed myself best when engaged in a religious meeting or a Sabbath School procession—to hear an address appropriate for the occasion.

In our parish there were five public dinners on the 4th, one of which I attended. It was opened with reading the Scriptures, singing, prayer, Declaration of Independence read, and an address on the subject of Education generally, with argument in favor of the necessity of moral training, without which education has a tendency to infidelity. It is true, every thing seemed to go off well, except one man suffered his feelings to be ruffled a little. Another dinner, some six miles distant, with an address on the subject of temperance, also passed off well. Two others passed off well, except some feelings mixed with jealousy and envy. But a fifth wound up with a row, drinking, drawing deadly weapons on one another, even after listening to a temperance speech. But they had wine on the table! There were also several fish fries in the parish, and one of these was gotten up with the view to wind it up with a dance. But as is often the case, the devil let out the secret, so a few of the leading members of the Church, thinking to save some of our young brothers and sisters from temptation, resolved to have a prayer meeting that day. The news was hurriedly circulated; some twenty-five or thirty persons were present. Good feeling generally prevailed. As the meeting progressed their happiness increased. The class leader, (a man with a stammering tongue,) was called on to pray. The congregation commenced kneeling—by the time one-third had knelt, he was on his feet, and remarked that he had something to say. He commenced, and to the astonishment of those present, his tongue was loosed; he spake clearly and distinctly, and, says my informant, "he got happier than I ever saw him before, and joy seemed to thrill the whole congregation." Such a celebration is acceptable to the Lord. Oh! that all Christians would engage in them more, with reverence to Him, from whom our independence came as a nation. Then might not we look forward with pleasing anticipations that our land would long be the home of the free—the asylum of the oppressed, in place of these fears of anarchy, civil commotion, blood-shed and disunion.

E. W. Gaiswold.

Farmersville, Morehouse parish, La.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

CONDITIONS OF THE MATURITY AND UNITY OF THE CHURCH.

In the official sermon of Rev. J. Lomas, ex-President of the Wesleyan Conference, 31st ult, we find some wholesome and suggestive reflections on this subject:

"But then, again, the Church of God, collectively, like individual Christians separately regarded, reaches its adult state, (if I may use such an expression,) and its manly growth, as the fruits of sanctified discipline, sanctified teaching, sanctifying influence. And the conditions—what are they? First, uninterrupted union with the Head of the Church. Now, no part of the body will have vitality simply in virtue of its union with any other part, except there be bonds and joints to connect it with the head. Let me put it to you, whether or not you can stand this test of true Church membership or not—faith in Christ. A man is not a true member of the Church of Christ, because he has faith in its ordinances, or faith in its preaching, or faith in its ministry, or faith in its sacraments, or faith in any thing, except Christ. It is an intolerable assumption to interpose any thing between Christ and the sinner. An intolerable assumption!—we assert it. Faith in Him is personal, and must always be so. We do not undervalue, much less discard, aids to faith. When in their proper place, as landmarks to the Church, let us honor them. It is well when, in addition to good and seasonable formularies, there may be Ministers who are really guides; but let the Minister take care that he is a guide that leads to Christ. The Minister is not the object of faith. Christ has instituted holy sacraments, signs and seals, by a covenant ratified in all things and sure; these, in their proper places, may be subsidiary to faith.

What are the conditions of the Church attaining its maturity? Reverence for the truth is one. The distinction between the child and the man is seen in the intellect—not in the grasp of intellect only, but in the sobriety of it; not in the sobriety of it only, but in the steadiness of it; not in the steadiness only, but in its retentive power. We are children if we have received little of the truth; and men, if we have received much. We are children if we are "tossed about with every wind," and by the "sleight and craftiness" of men lying in wait to deceive us. We are men, if we have a sanctified will; if we can say, "I won't," to the solicitations of evil. The capacity of a man to digest and appropriate truth is, by St. Paul himself, laid down as a distinctive mark of an approach to manhood—"I have fed you," and it is a term of reproach—"hitherto with milk," because ye are babes, and not able to take in the strong meat of the Gospel. Milk is the food of children. It is not to be despised. He says, again, of the doctrines of Christ, "Let us go unto perfection."

"Unity is another mark. He sins greatly who sins against the unity of the Church. Unity is wisdom in council; unity is the strength of battle; unity is the bliss of home; unity is the strength of the Church; and discord is its disgrace. He that sins against the unity of the Church, incurs a heavy doom. Now, he sins against the unity of the Church who infringes on the liberty of its members, by imposing unchristian and unauthorized terms of communion, making it impossible for the honest and conscientious student of the truth to be a member of the Church without compromising his word and his conscience. He sins against the unity of the Church who sins against the proper liberties and just rights of its members. Yes; and that may be done by confounding things non-essential with things essential; and so establishing a stern Christian fellowship with things that Christ has left indifferent or circumstantial in the Church. St. Paul pleads against that carnestly in his Epistle to the Romans—because there were differences of judgment in the Church of Rome upon matters of holy days, holy meats, ceremonial usages and so on. St. Paul did not go about authoritatively to settle these little matters; but he pleaded for freedom.

"The unity of the Church is interfered with when there is not a proper liberty of action in the Church, as well as a just liberty of conscience. You must not fetter the foot, nor fetter the hand, nor fetter any power, or salutary and lawful action, any where. The perfection of the Church is contributed by that which every joint supplieth. And a liberty of action, regulated by a due regard to Christ's orders—a liberty of action, rendering all the spiritual talents, means and powers of the whole Church available for the common edification and the common right of all,—is essential to unity."

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

"NO LICENSE" IN DE SOTO.

Mansfield, La., Aug. 17, 1854.

The cause of temperance has at last had a signal triumph in De Soto parish. It had a long and laborious campaign. For three successive years the contest has been going on. In two former elections the votaries of King Alcohol gained the day, and each time in their moments of exultation, during the shades of night, hung in effigy on the public square, some advocate of temperance. But the 7th day of the present month was fixed upon by the authorities for another contest. This, the third test, was looked to by many with great interest. The advocates of temperance, the friends of humanity, could not but feel that this election would result in a thousand woes or blessings. On the other hand, the liquor dealer, as Demetrius, the silver-smith, felt that his craft was in danger. But victory has declared on our side by twenty-two votes in favor of "No License." Now we see nothing to prevent De Soto from becoming one of the most desirable parishes in North Louisiana, and Mansfield will no doubt be a place of permanent and popular schools.

John Pipes.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

SALE OF SCHOLARSHIPS.

La Grange, Ala., Aug. 16.

Ma. Editor: As many letters have been received, making inquiries concerning La Grange College, I beg the use of your columns to reply to them.

1st. No purchaser of a scholarship can avail himself of its benefits until seven hundred and fifty shall have been sold.

2d. No purchaser of a scholarship can send more than one scholar at a time, without a specific arrangement to that effect.

3d. The prospects are good to complete the endowment during the present collegiate year, and I have little doubt that the new system will go into operation in July, 1855.

4th. The prospects of the College are brightening; the Faculty at their posts and in high spirits; new students constantly coming in; the crisis is passed, and we hope in one year to say the endowment is complete and the College permanent.

5th. The College is on a mountain, only four miles from the great central railroad leading from Charleston to Memphis. Students will meet with no deception from Memphis to this point.

6th. As no agent is now in the field, all that desire scholarships can write to me, and I will immediately send them certificates. In conclusion, let it be understood that the present Faculty are determined to do all in their power to make the College worthy the Church and the country.

R. H. Rivers.

Mr. Brooks, of the New York Express, writing to his paper from Berlin, remarks, that the railroads and telegraphs are, in Europe, the friends of despotism; for they give the central authority such an enormous power, that a whole army of thousands or tens of thousands can be brought to a point in a single night.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

WHAT BECOMES OF ALL THE LILY WHITE!

In visiting our fancy and perfumery bazars we notice an array of small, round and oblong boxes marked "Lily White." The inquiry arises, in what way is this Lily White used; for removing soil out of silks, broadcloths, etc.? Oh, no! the times are quite in advance of that; it is superseded by the Excelsior Soap. For what, then, is it prepared?

Go to the opera, theatre, or a social party; you notice the complexion of the fair of our land; there are many with classic features, illuminated with Italia's dark eyes, and shaded by beautiful raven tresses; but you find no brunette complexion to correspond with these; the complexions of both flaxen and dark haired lasses rival for whiteness their snowy robes. Do you not now begin to discover for what these numerous little boxes are imported?

Oh! that I could, by persuasion or argument, influence our young ladies to discontinue the use of this slow poison. "Poison!" you exclaim. Yes, that which injures the constitution is a poison. It is well known that the human body throws off, in every twenty-four hours, through the pores, an immense amount of its fluids. If, by having your pores perfectly filled with whiting, you prevent this rejecting process, the perspiration must return and injure the system. I have seen this pearl powder, or Lily White, so buried in the skin that it would require no ordinary vapor bath of the Hot Springs to exhume it. With my dear young friends who are just entering society, and have not yet become initiated into this occult custom, I would affectionately remonstrate. Maidenhood into womanhood, how imperceptibly it glides!

"Like a well of some sweet tune,
Morning rises into noon,
May glides onward into June"

As imperceptibly we glide into the follies of the world of fashion. You have bid adieu to your Alma Mater, and returned once more to your loved homestead. The world is bright and alluring. You have said to your Legendre:

"Go, then old, tattered book;
We lay thee now aside,
Without one lingering look,
And yet, with rising pride.

We've scanned thy pages o'er,
And learned what each contains,
And stored the cumbrous lore
Within our aching brains."

Let us contemplate for a moment our society; do we devote as many of our golden moments to literary attainments as to the toilet? Fredrika Bremer, in her "Homes of the New World," gives the need that is due to our institutions of learning and those for the indigent and afflicted, and as far as her former prejudices will allow, she does justice to our institution of Slavery. Does she do us injustice when she says: "Artifice and vanity exercise no less power over our sex in this country than in the great cities of Europe, and far more than in our good Sweden"? If she is just, let us determine that this shall no longer be our characteristic. Let us throw off all artificial thraldom, we daughters of our free and beautiful America. Let us be as natural and as lucid as our pure mountain rivulets.

Do you desire a beautiful complexion? Obtain from your father a few garden implements, tend with your own hands your flowers, and you will receive from them, as in grateful return, the blending of their loveliest hues. And many sweet lessons will they teach your heart, in their silent language, causing your spirit to be as sweet as their fragrance. Rise early, and let your orisons and songs of praise ascend in concert with those of the warblers of the grove.

By way of securing a fine, elevated chest and healthful lungs, arrange your own apartment; don't fear the broom nor dusting-brush; the beauty that using them will give to the whole form will counterpoise the injury your tiny hands may sustain. By doing this you give an hour of leisure to your maid, for which, I am sure, she will be very thankful.

To my young friends who are addicted to the use of Lily White, I would say: "Leave it off now, if you desire to be handsome when you are old." Don't try to leave off by degrees, as the inebriate does from his wine. Use no cosmetic but cold water, pure from the fountain. Take exercise in the fresh air, and, as an auxiliary, abstain from all beverages that excite the nerves; such as tea, coffee, etc., (of course, you never touch wine or cordial in this age of Temperance Reform).

A friend of mine visited a young lady who was dying; she presented the worst aspect, and so shocked was she at her own appearance that she requested no one should be admitted to her chamber but particular friends. Her skin was discolored, and perfectly scaly; caused by the excessive use of Lily White, which her physicians said had caused her death.

We will view a brighter picture. There resides in A. a lady nearly seventy, who, though not exactly a Rosicrucian, has almost rejuvenated herself by exercise, temperate diet and cold bathing. Her cold baths are taken during cold as well as warm weather, and I imagine her spirits and mind are as elastic and youthful as her limbs.

I fear my young readers are desirous of a truce to diet, baths and Lily White. Ella.

Open-air Preaching at Sheffield.—The Rev. T. Sale, Vicar of St. Mary's, having read in the Service on Sunday morning the passage occurring in the Gospel, "Go out into the highways and hedges, and compel them to come in, that my house may be filled," acted literally upon the injunction so far as to go forth in the afternoon and preach to the multitude in one of the most frequented parts of the town. The spot chosen was the center of the widest part of Westbar. Taking his stand upon a convenient elevation, the Vicar began to read a passage of Scripture. A number of stragglers, such as may be seen on any fine Sunday afternoon loitering about in the leading thoroughfares, soon gathered around him; and when a crowd had assembled, the Vicar began to preach to them from the parable of the prodigal son, seasoning his discourse with several apt illustrations of a very touching nature. The open-air congregation increased until there were several hundreds present; but, though it was a very promiscuous assembly, there was no departure from the most perfect good order. The touching narrative of Scripture was evidently quite new to many in the crowd, and the lessons which the text suggested, were presented and enforced in a manner which moved many to tears. The experiment, for such it was deemed, proved so decidedly successful, that we have no doubt it will be repeated soon, and frequently. [Sheffield Times.

The savans of Paris are going to introduce the Dioscorea Japonica as a substitute for the potato. It is a tuberculur vegetable with a more delicate flavor than the potato. It will be funny, till we get used to it, to ask Betty to "peal the dioscorea japonicas" for dinner, went it?

Paper from Grass.—The Philadelphia Ledger says that Mr. Collins, at Waterford, N. J., has discovered a process by which he can manufacture an excellent quality of writing paper from a certain kind of grass, which is said to grow in abundance at that place.

A Leaf from Indian History A Century Ago.

The following is copied from a MS., "History of New England," written by the Rev. Jacob Bailey, who for nineteen years was a minister in the region where the events which he has related took place. He went to that part of the country in 1760, and as he became acquainted with some of the persons of whom he speaks, he must have received the materials of the story from their own mouths. This narrative has never before been published. The Life of Mr. Bailey has been published under the title of "The Frontier Missionary," by Ide & Dutton of Boston:

A night attack upon the Indians by the Whites—The Murderers apprehended; but escape punishment—Alliance between the Norridgewock and Penobscot Tribes—Fort Richmond reinforced—The Indians attack Capt. Whidden's family on Swan Island, and take thirteen prisoners—Capt. Whidden escapes—He hails the Garrison at the Fort—A Soldier sent to take him from the Island—Fright of the Messenger and his ludicrous report—The Indians besiege the Fort, but soon withdraw—Business of Jenkins, who is captured by the Indians and carried to Canada—Noble and his Family enslaved—His infant Daughter adopted by a distinguished French Family and educated by them—Ransomed afterwards and returned to her home—Finds that her Mother has died, and her Father is in extreme poverty—The Daughter marries.

In the beginning of 1750, a number of Indians, arriving among the settlers upon Sheepscot River, and being warmed with spirituous liquors, boasted of their exploits in a former war, which so provoked a number of young fellows that they determined from that moment to effect their destruction. After the Indians had withdrawn to their wigwams, these adventurers, taking advantage of the dark and silent night, paid them a visit, and while they were in profound sleep fired into their houses. Several were killed and others wounded by this unexpected and barbarous action, and before the survivors could recover from their amazement, the perpetrators of this bloody scene had fled. Upon a complaint made by the Indians these fellows were apprehended by authority, but had the good fortune to obtain their liberty without the infliction of any punishment, but one or more of these persons seen after received a violent death, being attacked in a canoe by a monstrous bear, and either torn in pieces or drowned.

The Indians, provoked at this denial of justice, and grievously afflicted at the loss of their friends and relations, determined to retaliate upon the enemy the injury they had received. And for this purpose the Norridgewock people were active in stirring up the Penobscot Indians to favor their designs, and while Mr. Goodwin (afterwards Maj. Samuel Goodwin, of Dresden,) was at Pemaquid to gain some intelligence of their motions, Capt. Phipps, son to the Lieut Governor, received an express from Mr. Jabez Bradbury, commander of St. Georges, that seventy Indians had already marched from Penobscot to invade, as was imagined, the inhabitants of Sheepscot River. An alarm quickly spread through all the adjoining settlements, and Goodwin proceeded immediately to arouse the people at Kennebeck. On the seventh of September he touched at Swan Island and earnestly requested Capt. Whidden and his family to repair into garrison, but they were deaf to his persuasions, and despised the power of their enemies. In the evening Mr. Goodwin arrived at Fort Richmond with eight men, which gave Capt. Lithgow an opportunity of putting the garrison into a posture of defense.

The next morning, a little after the appearance of daylight, Whiddee's family, with some of his neighbors who were engaged in a frolic, became suddenly alarmed by a number of Indians, who rushed without ceremony into the house, and changed their gaiety and merriment into terror, lamentation, and the utmost distress. Noble (Capt. Whidden's son-in-law) ran up stairs and fired at the Indians, without doing any execution, and the latter prevailed in the conflict, who, after plundering the house and destroying nine feather beds, led thirteen persons into captivity. One fellow who was at the burn after eggs escaped without their observation, and the Captain and his wife took advantage of the first tumult and consternation which seized both parties, to conceal themselves in the cellar till the Indians retreated with their plunder and captives. When the former conceived themselves to be out of danger, they traveled about three miles through the thickets to the northern extremity of the island opposite to Richmond.

Captain Lithgow, commander of the fort, hearing them call for assistance, but ignorant of their situation, sent over a man in a canoe to fetch them into garrison. Captain Whidden, who had secreted his wife among the bushes till some relief should appear, acquainted the fellow with his misfortune, and hastened to fetch his companion, but the other was so terrified at the report of an enemy that he returned with the utmost precipitation to the fort, leaving the distressed persons behind. Lithgow demanded the occasion of this disturbance, but the man answered with hurry and affright, "that the Indians had murdered Captain Whidden and his whole family." "You are certainly mistaken," replied Lithgow, "tell me how you came by your intelligence." "It is certain," answered the fellow, "for I received the news from Capt. Whidden's own mouth!"

The same day the Indians, to the number of one hundred and fifteen, surrounded Richmond Fort, and would easily have taken it, had not Mr. Goodwin reinforced it the evening before, which they had received some notice of by the following accident: One Jenkins, a noted enthusiast, could not be restrained from venturing abroad that morning in defiance of the enemy alleging that he proceeded in full confidence that he God, in answer to his prayers, would protect him from being molested by the Indians. But the event proved that he was mistaken; for, as he was beginning his usual employment of shaving shingles, the Indians rushed upon him, and carried him away to Canada, where he died in a French prison. This Jenkins gave them intelligence that Goodwin had entered the garrison with a large number of men.

This information abated their courage, and induced them after a very short siege to withdraw, having first killed nine head of cattle, which they reserved for future provisions.

In their retreat they halted at a pleasant point of land about a mile from the fort, and almost opposite to the place where the Court House was afterwards erected. Here they rendezvoused with their captives till the next morning, and then continued their route directly for Canada. They suffered greatly in their journey for want of provisions, but treated their prisoners with gentleness and humanity, and several soon after obtained their liberty.

Noble was obliged to leave three of his children in captivity, one of whom a son, afterwards married and settled in Canada; one daughter continued with the Indians, and another, then about two or three years old, was purchased by M. St. Aage, brother-in-law to Governor Vaudreuil. This gentleman was not only eminent for his wealth and station at Montreal, but a person of distinguished merit, sincere piety and singular humanity; his lady was one of the most amiable character, and endeared herself to many unfortunate captives by her obliging condescension. The helpless infant was taken into the protection of this excellent family, where she received the most kind and friendly treatment. At a proper age they placed her in the nunnery at Montreal, and spared no expense to give her a genteel and refined education, and her natural genius conspired with their generous endeavors to render her a polite, accomplished and agreeable creature. When she was about fourteen years of age, towards the close of 1761, a gentleman from New England procured an order from the English Government for her return, but it was with extreme reluctance this virtuous family resigned their beloved child, and she departed from their tender patronage with the most exquisite regret. The gentleman into whose protection she was delivered was offered two thousand dollars, if he would consent to leave her behind, but neither tears, entreaties, nor the powerful temptation of money, which he greatly needed, could prevail over his inflexible honesty. He was determined in this affair by religious motives, and concluded that nothing could preserve her soul from religious destruction unless she was rescued from the implous influence of Roman Catholics. When this unfortunate young creature arrived among her friends in Kennebeco, her situation demanded the utmost pity.

Her mother had died some years before, and her father, melancholy and distracted, lived in a miserable hovel, with wretchedness and poverty. She was immediately shocked at his appearance, and instead of feeling that affection which is natural in children towards their parents, she was rather moved with aversion and disgust. Her father expired soon after her arrival, and she, after having passed through a variety of uncommon and affecting scenes, is now happily married.

THE LIFE-TIME OF MAN.

When the world was created, and all creatures assembled to have their life-time appointed, the ass first advanced and asked how long he would have to live.

"Thirty years," replied Nature; "will that be agreeable to thee?"

"Alas!" answered the ass, "it is a long while. Remember what a wearisome existence will be mine; from morning until night I shall have to bear heavy burdens, dragging corn sacks to the mill, that others may eat bread, while I shall have no encouragement, nor be refreshed by any thing, but blows and kicks. Give but a portion of that time, I pray!"

Nature was moved with compassion, and presented but eighteen years. The ass went away comforted, and the dog came forward.

"How long dost thou require to live?" asked Nature. "Thirty years were too many for the ass, but wilt thou be contented with them?"

"Is it thy will that I should?" replied the dog. "Think how much I shall have to run about; my feet will not last for so long a time, and when I shall have lost my voice for barking, and my teeth for biting, what else shall I be fit for but to lie in the corner and growl?"

Nature thought he was right, and gave twelve years.

The ape then appeared.

"Thou wilt doubtless willingly live the thirty years," said Nature; "thou wilt not have to labor as the ass and the dog. Life will be pleasant to thee."

"Ah, no!" cried he, "so it may seem to others, but it will not be! Should puddings ever rain down, I shall excite laughter by my grimaces, and then be rewarded with a sour apple. How often sorrow lies concealed behind a jest! I shall not be able to endure for thirty years."

Nature was gracious, and he received but ten.

At last came man, healthy and strong, and asked the measure of his days.

"Will thirty years content thee?"

"How short a time!" exclaimed man; "when I shall have built my house and kindled a fire on my own hearth—when the trees I shall have planted are about to bloom and bear fruit—when life shall seem to me most desirable, I shall die. O, Nature, grant me a longer period!"

"Thou shalt have the eighteen years of the ass besides."

"That is not enough," replied man.

"Take likewise the twelve years of the dog."

"It is not yet sufficient," reiterated man; "give me more."

"I give thee, then, the ten years of the ape; in vain wilt thou claim more."

Man departed unsatisfied.

Thus man lives seventy years. The first thirty are his human years, and pass swiftly by. He is then healthy and happy. He labors cheerfully, and rejoices in his existence. The eighteen of the ass come next; burden upon burden is heaped upon him; he carries the corn that is to feed others; blows and kicks are the rewards of his faithful service. The twelve of the dog follow, and he loses his teeth, and lies down in the corner and growls. When these are gone, the ape's ten years form the conclusion. Then man, weak and silly, becomes the sport of children. [Translated from the German.

The Filial Love of an Indian.—A correspondent of the Stockton Journal, writing from Don Pedras Bar, Toulumne county, Cal., relates the following touching incident which exhibits in a strong degree the Indian:

"A few days since an accident occurred here. A party of Indians, having struck a good lead, commenced, in imitation of their white brethren, excavating the bank, but had not proceeded very far when, from their ignorance of this mode of mining, not having left sufficient supports, the upper part of the bank caved in, and two men of their number were killed, and a little girl very badly crushed. The child was properly cared for by the American miners in the vicinity, and the remains of the victims were attended to by their Indian friends, who built a funeral pyre, while all hands, white, red or black, Europeans, Africans, Chinese, Kanakas and Indians, who mustered to attend the fiesta. And now occurred an instance of devotion unlooked for among a race who stand so low in the scale of humanity as the poor Cawilles (Ka-we-gas. When the flames were at the height, a son of one of the objects of those funeral rites, in an agony of grief, rushed into the blazing pile, to take one last fond embrace of his old father, and was with difficulty rescued by the bystanders."

Captain Klockgether, of the ship Windsor, which arrived at Baltimore from Bremen a few days since, met with quite an incident on the passage over. When forty days at sea, the weather being clear, an open boat was descried in the distance, with, as it was supposed, no one in it. The captain immediately bore down upon it, when, on examination, it was found to contain four human bodies, or, in other words, skeletons, as the flesh had been entirely stripped from the bones. The boat was filled with water, but being of a light, airy structure, had continued to float for days, perhaps months, upon the turbulent deep. In the boat were a large number of fish, which no doubt preyed upon the bodies. A few remnants of clothing were found in the frail bark, but so much torn as to preclude the possibility of telling whether they belonged to seamen or passengers. There can be no doubt that the bodies were those of some of the many unfortunates who were wrecked in some of the missing vessels.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Christian Advocate.

Terms: $2 50 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:
SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 2.

"THE ADVOCATE."

Labor is high. Living is high. Materials are high. We are publishing the Advocate at a heavy weekly cash expense. We need heavy weekly cash receipts. Much can be done in extending our circulation and keeping us in funds at the approaching fall meetings. Bring the paper before the meeting. Collect and remit.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

On and after the 1st November next, the subscription price of the New Orleans Christian Advocate will be $2 per annum in advance; if payment be delayed six months, $2 50; at the end of the year, $3.

After a fair and full experiment of two years, it is ascertained that the paper can not be supported at $1 50 per annum. This will be to all our friends and patrons, and to every reasonable person, a sufficient cause for the change. In labor and material there has been a change to higher rates. The price of printing is now 25 per cent. higher in this city than it was a year ago.

This arrangement has the unanimous recommendation of the Publishing Committees. It puts the New Orleans Advocate at the same rates with the family of Advocates, and cheap still.

YELLOW FEVER.—From Saturday, 6 P. M. to Wednesday, 6 P. M., there were 82 deaths by it in the Hospital.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT.—"J." writing from Camden, Ala., sends us by letter $5—"For Bro. LAFFERTY, at Corpus Christi, to go to reimbursing the Southern Aid Society, or aid in building the new church." The money has been forwarded with these alternate directions.

BOOK STORE.—We ask attention to the notice of H. D. MCGINNIS. Those who have been supplied from the popular establishment, 36 Camp street, will be glad to know that it will be kept up by this efficient and accommodating gentleman.

RAYMOND FEMALE SEMINARY.—A friend, whose communications we always receive with pleasure, has given us some items, but in pencil mark, and almost illegible.

By an act of the Legislature, the sale of ardent spirits is prohibited in the town of Raymond, and for some miles around. The buildings, though not the best in all the land, are said to be comfortable and well arranged. It was opened last fall, and 95 young ladies were in attendance the first session. The second opens first Monday in September. The property was purchased by a few brethren and friends of the Methodist Church. Prof. LAURENCE is at the head of the corps of teachers. The boarding department will be for the present under the management of Rev. H. J. HARRIS.

THE CHRISTIAN OBSERVER.—Many of our readers would like to know what is being done in California—they would know well and directly. Then let them patronize the Observer—of which, see Dr. BORING's prospectus in another column. Some have sons, brothers there. Would it not be well to subscribe for them, and have them furnished weekly with this Christian monitor?

SOUTHERN PATRONAGE!—Professor Goodrich made a speech at Milwaukee during the grand excursion, in which he stated that Yale College was opposed to slavery, and the Faculty all of one mind on the subject, and wished the fact to be known North and South. It is said that an unusual number of Southern students have offered themselves this year.

ANABAPTISTS IN MISSISSIPPI.

The Southern Churchman, of Virginia—organ of the Protestant Episcopal Church—copies from the N. York Baptist Recorder our Editorial of July 15, "for the information it contains relative to occurrences in our own Church and the light in which they appear to other denominations. It is something new to have the charge of 'anabaptism' retorted upon us; but what can we say in reply? According to Bishop WHITE, such practices not only repudiate valid Church baptism, but renounce the fundamental principles of the American Episcopal Church."

We may now turn over, for proper handling, our Anabaptist High-church brethren of Mississippi, to their own kith and kin. When a matter of this sort becomes family, propriety suggests that we retire. The Churchman contends that though Anabaptists be a hard name—so hard we did not feel free to use it in commenting upon the rebaptisms going on under "the Bishop of Mississippi"—it is not misput in this connection:

"They (Anabaptists) do repeat Christian baptism which has been validly administered. We regret that a few among us are doing the same thing, although doubtless with the conscientious belief that they are performing a duty. Alas, for Christianity, and its influence upon the world, if none are members of the Church of Christ but those who elevate its incidental features, decide as we may about their nature, into essential characteristics, and refuse communion with all who think differently! 'The Kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteousness, peace and joy in the Holy Ghost.'"

CRIME AMONG PREACHERS ON THE INCREASE.

The "degeneracy of the pulpit" affords a theme for a serious editorial to the Chambers (Ala.) Tribune—Is crime among the preachers on the increase? If it is so, why? It it is not, how has the belief got abroad? The Tribune says:—

"It seems that the pulpit, in point of good morals, is sadly degenerating, and in the estimation of the world, we fear, is fast losing that dignity which has heretofore been accorded to it. Were not Christianity infinitely purer than its professors, and sustained and controlled by a higher power, it would soon disappear from the world.

"It is a fact, however mortifying, that we can scarcely glance over a paper, now-a-days, without noticing where some Minister of the Gospel has been guilty of vile acts. This, in connection with many other cases we have lately read of, leads us to believe that crime among Preachers is on the increase. We take it for granted that the men of this class, who commit these crimes, have never been truly converted, or they could not lend to the opposers of Christianity such strong arguments, as they think, against its authenticity. But, really, such instances are no argument either for or against it. They merely prove that the Church, as well as every other body of men, has its blacklegs. Bad men will creep into every society. To exclude them from the pulpit, would be to shut its doors against every candidate for the Ministry who has not been "tried in the furnace." Of all men on earth, Ministers of the Gospel should, in their bearing toward society, be most circumspect. If from no other motive than a regard for the cause which they pretend to espouse, they should be the last to bring reproach upon it. The effects of one single instance of crime committed by a preacher of the Gospel, are deep and damning; and in view of this they should reflect upon the consequence before they recklessly give a blow to the cause of Religion, and lend to its opposers an argument (!) against it, which they will not fail to make work in their favor."

It was one of the pious thoughts of Nevin, that Ministers of the Gospel were like statues upon their pedestals. On account of their elevation, they must be larger than common men to appear of the same size. If this charge, then, result from a jealousy for a pure ministry and an exalted estimate of its position, it is an indication of a healthful public sentiment. It would be a sad but sure sign of a degenerate Christianity, when the people are satisfied with a degenerate ministry.

We would not set down a respectful warning as croaking. Yet there is such a principle deeply imbedded in human nature, and it has in every age and country, kept up a strain of lament and rebuke after the above style. Much that we hear may be set down to this. It is refreshing to hear such an old veteran as Rev. J. B. Finley speak thus—"If we despise any body, it is the croaker, who is ceaselessly howling about the Church having lost her primitive simplicity, and power, and influence in the world. We believe this day, under God, she is doing more for the conversion of the world than she ever did; and while there is quite as much zeal as was manifested in olden time, there is a thousand fold more liberality."

A fact or a rumor of fraud, murder, crim. con., elopement or imposture, that has the pulpit or Church for its theater and a minister for chief actor, is so shocking to all our ideas, the sensation is long and painful. These occurrences stand out conspicuously from their very rarity. Thousands may do the same or worse things, and it never travels beyond a local record: it is punished or pardoned, and ceases to be talked of. But a reverend has done this! Who would have thought it! The papers pass it round. The very contrast of the deed to his profession or previous character makes what, in many other cases, would be a tame criminal item, an interesting one in his. Add to this, that there are not a few conductors of the press who hate Christianity and make every occasion of ministerial defection go as far as possible, that the confidence of the people may be destroyed.

Images of the same crime are multiplied by a thousand mirror-presses, and held up with malignant satisfaction before a jeering world and a mortified Church. The vile echo is caught up and prolonged. So a disproportionate effect is produced on the public mind; and those who judge of numbers by repetition and abundance by noise, conclude that crime in the Ministry is on the increase.

But we come face to face with the solemn question—Is this charge true? Ministers of Jesus Christ, in Synods and Conferences, Associations and Conventions, have you given cause for this saying of reproach? The esprit du corps, a fellow-feeling, mistaken kindness may have led you to deal more leniently with an offending brother than was demanded for the vindication of a bleeding Church. Your sympathies have blinded your judgments. Those without, may be, said after the trial, "they white-wash each other."

Men of doubtful eccentricities have been allowed to pass. The great Apostle's tenderest thought about the ministry was, that it should not be blamed—never brought under suspicion, or distrust, or disgrace. He would have men that are to be set forward prominently in the Church, proved first. Lay the hands of ordination on none suddenly.

Brilliant talents, eloquence, learning and fine-fellow qualities—these, all these should not avail the candidate or the offender, in the absence of safe, plain, Gospel tests. The polished shaft may soon be turned against the Church itself. God does not ask to be served by unrighteous or doubtful instruments; and there is no warrant for us to commit His cause to such a hazard.

The eyes of the world are upon the Ministry. They are called upon by every consideration to avoid evil and the appearance of it: to be circumspect, and to hold themselves to a rigid accountability.

NOTIONS ABOUT PREACHING—THE "FEELINEST PREACHIN' IS THE SORT."

The Church Herald is welcome to all it can make out of the item selected from our columns. On the 18th ult. it says:—

The following is no jeu d'esprit, nor an attempt at satire; but is a veritable extract from a letter from its correspondent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate, of the 12th instant, giving an account of a trip "up the river." The writer has been to Jackson, La., is on his way to Bayou Sara, and is giving an account of his driver:

"Jehu's name is Jeremiah—Jerry for short. Raised in Missouri, and a Methodist bred and born, but backslidden down here in the South. His father died a shouting—his mother over Jordan. Jerry thinks this a powerful wicked country, and he has felt the consequences. Jerry has been to camp-meetings, and sings orthodox songs—has his own notions about preachin'—the "feelinest preachin' is the sort."

Jerry, we fear, is but a fair sample of the result of that kind of preaching which appeals merely to the feelings. Such converts are too often like the drunkard who was wallowing on the way-side when the great Wesley passed without noticing him. What, said the former, don't you know me? No, I do not, said Mr. Wesley. Why, replied the inebriate, I am one of your converts. Very likely, replied Mr. Wesley, but you are certainly not one of God's.

Our cotemporary has picked his own ground out of a good deal afforded by that correspondent. It is to his taste, no doubt. We join a practical issue with him there, giving him all the advantage of his sneer and apocryphal anecdote.

Jerry is black, and a slave. Those facts may be allowed to determine the color and status of his parents. It appears, also, that they were Methodists, for Jerry, though by his own confession backslidden, was "a Methodist bred and born." What, then, has Methodism done for this family as here brought before us in the Herald's quotation? "Father died a shouting"—he is safe. "Mother over Jordan"—she, also, is safe in the rest that remaineth for the people of God. Two out of three saved! Will our High-church friends take that as "a fair sample of the result of that kind of preaching?" Can their own boasting communion show any such "results?" After all, that preaching is the sort which saves them that hear it. Other sort may go forth in pomp and pretension and paraphernalia; but in the sight of Him who died to save, in the light of eternity, in the estimate of perishing souls, it is nothing.

Jerry is not a very hopeful convert; admitted. But we should like to see "the Church" take hold of the case and make something out of it. Take him as he stands, or, rather, runs—take him in his social degradation, his ignorance and his poor opportunities. He is the type of a class—a class with which "the Church" does not concern itself. In his stratum lies the large majority of souls for which Christ died. The ministry without fruits here claims, with little propriety, to be exclusively His. What would Jerry do with the Prayer-book and the nineteen parts of "our beautiful service?"

It is easy to do nothing and find fault. A sure way to have no backsliders, is to have no converts. We mean no recriminations, but warning and exhortation rather, when we say that in some quarters the policy of masterly inactivity has been amply illustrated.

Among the converts under Paul's ministry, were backsliders. Yet many held on and were saved, and some backsliders reclaimed. Were there any cynical, do-nothing Churchmen in that day, looking on and saying—"Hymenæus and Alexander, we fear, are but a fair sample," etc. "Such converts are too often," etc.

Their successors in this day are still on the safe side. It is not often you have a chance to complain of their converts. The irregular activities and demonstrative energies incident to real life, do not disturb their propriety. We are reminded of a passage in Carlyle's life of Sterling.—A group were discussing transcendentalisms and theologies, and a number of deep things said—Sterling in the thick of it. One skeptical figure praised the Church of England, in Hume's phrase, as "a Church tending to keep down fanaticism," and recommendable for its very indifferency. Whereupon another figure urges him: "You are afraid of the horse's kicking; but will you sacrifice all qualities to being safe from that? Then get a dead horse. None comparable to him for safety."

FAILURE OF JESUITISM TO DEVELOP GREAT INTELLECT.

THEODORE PARKER sometimes utters a wholesome truth; the following passage is an example. It shows truly and sadly enough the intellectual dwarfage occasioned, alike by the false religion of Mohammed, and the spurious Christianity of Jesuitism:—

"I just said there was not a single eminent man of science or letters in any Mahometan country; not a great scholar, philosopher, or historian. Yet there is talent enough born into Mohametan countries, as much as in Christian nations of the same race; but it has not opportunity for development; the young Hercules is choked in his cradle. Look at the Catholics of the United States in comparison with the Protestants. In the whole of America there is not a single man born and bred a Catholic, distinguished for any thing but his devotion to the Catholic Church; I mean to say there is not a man in America, born and bred a Catholic, who has any distinction in science, literature, politics, benevolence or philanthropy. I do not know one; I never heard of a great philosopher, naturalist, historian, orator or poet amongst them. The Jesuits have been in existence three hundred years; they have had their pick of the choicest intellect of all Europe—they never take a common man when they know it—they subject every pupil to a severe ordeal, intellectual and physical, as well as moral, in order to ascertain whether he has the requisite stuff in him to make a strong Jesuit out of. They have a scheme of education masterly in its way. But there has not been a single great original man produced in the company of Jesuits from 1545 to 1854. They absorb talent enough, but they strangle it. Clipped oaks never grow large. Prune the roots of a tree with a spade, prune the branches close to the bole, what becomes of the tree? The bole itself remains thin and scant and slender. Can a man be a conventional dwarf and a natural giant at the same time? Cage your little boy's limbs in metal, would they grow? Plant a chestnut in a tea-cup, do you get a tree? Not a shrub even. Put a priest, or a priest's creed, as the only soil for a man to grow in, he grows not. The great God provided the natural mode of operation—do you suppose He will turn aside and mend or mar the Universe at your or my request? I think God will do no such thing."

Methodist Press.

The Texas Christian Advocate contains a very interesting letter from H. P. YOUNG, a German Missionary of our Church, describing the first German camp-meeting in Texas. It commenced 10th August, in Gillespie county. As a beginning, which, we trust, will go on to increase greatly, we chronicle the event:

"The camp ground is situated near a beautiful crystal spring, which runs through the center, and is a luxury to those who meet on such occasions. We had about ten tents, temporarily put up, of domestic, besides a good many wagons; the whole of which was quite picturesque in appearance. The brethren, to their honor be it said, had provided everything necessary for comfort, and every visitor was kindly invited to partake of their hospitality. * * * The pulpit was worthy of attention, a wagon box, which was ornamented with blankets and domestic, sewed for the occasion. At night it was a beautiful sight; the whole was illuminated in a manner very agreeable and pleasant to behold. Lanterns made of pink and other colored paper, dipped in oil, made it most beautiful and brilliant. The rules and regulations were strictly observed by all who came to the camp ground. At five in the morning a signal was given, by the blowing of a horn, to rise; at half past six, for family worship; at eight, eleven, three and at night, for public worship and the different religious exercises. All the four German Missionaries, besides one local preacher, were present. * * * * * On the Sabbath, great interest was manifested; the people came from all directions; the number was estimated at from five to six hundred, who very attentively, and with great respect, listened to the ministry of the word. Among the visitors we noticed several Lutheran preachers. After preaching at eleven A. M., we commemorated the dying love of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, which was a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord."

Though he could not speak their language, Rev. J. W. Whipple, the Presiding Elder, arrived while the meeting was in progress, after walking forty miles, his horse having given out. The meeting was orderly and happy. Many (Romanists included) heard the Gospel that would not have been reached otherwise. About fifty professed conversion, and the Church was built up. It seems our Bro. Whipple has had success among the Germans in his district in a strange way. The following was a bow-shot at a venture. It will bear a record:

"At night (Monday) we had again a very interesting season. After preaching we gave an opportunity for the new converts to speak, and oh! how pleasant and cheering it was to hear the evidence of those who had found the pearl of great price.

"The experience of one brother is especially worthy to mention: he said, that two years ago, when at the quarterly meeting at Fredericksburg, I was brought to a sense of my sins, and became greatly alarmed about the salvation of my soul. Bro. J. W. Whipple, in company with Father Wilson, who took a great interest in the meeting, called my special attention, as to his peculiar manner of saying Amen. At that time I did not understand what he meant by saying Amen so often, which run through all my bones, and while I kept back from the altar of prayer, against my conscience, I thought the old gentleman was calling me by my name (Lehman.) I could not know how Father Wilson learned my name and the circumstances I was in, as I was an entire stranger to him. But he kept on crying (Lehman! Lehman!) as I understood it, which at last had such an effect, that I had to run to the altar of prayer, and there I found peace for my soul!""

The editor of the Nashville Advocate having charged the secular papers of that city with selling their influence and editorials, along with advertisements, to Dan Rice, the circus man, and such like, got into a war with them. The Advocate of the 24th, announces that he has conquered a truce if not a peace with the enemy. So fare all the adversaries of our redoubtable great official! But, we think Dan Rice has never had his circus so respectably, conspicuously and lengthily advertised. Stevenson & Owen ought to bring a bill against him for $500, value received.

There are two theories among Methodists, on the doctrine of Sanctification or Christian Perfection. The standards are all on our side, that is confessed by those holding the un-Wesleyan view. They do not write much or state their views formally; this, we suppose, because in the theology of some other denominations, it is done for them. The editor of the Memphis Advocate defines the position of parties:

"We believe that it is entirely, if not almost, the universal experience of the heart, to realize some time after conversion, the motions of remaining inbred sin. In addition to this, if it is sincerely aiming to lead a new and earnest life of obedience to the Divine Law, it feels a conviction that these sinful emotions of which it is conscious, ought not to abide where Christ should dwell supreme: "For what fellowship hath Christ with Belial," and "the flesh lusteth against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh, and the two are contrary, the one to the other." It is obvious that perfect peace and that entire rest of soul which Christianity claims to impart, can not consist with the existence of such a conflict; and the sincere heart yearns for deliverance.

"This stage of Christian experience the Scriptures designate as a state of Christian infancy. "And I, brethren," says Paul to the Corinthians, "could not speak unto you as unto spiritual, but as unto carnal, even as unto babes in Christ." Here he recognizes them as Christian brethren, as vital members of the Church of Christ, and yet calls them carnal, and, therefore, "babes in Christ." It is clear, then, that a converted man may be, to a certain extent, carnal, and as such, is a child in Christian experience. We beg this point may be clearly understood and borne in mind.

"Now another idea. We notice that some of our brethren of late, while holding the Methodist doctrine of Christian Perfection, in terms, really avoid the Old Wesleyan teaching, which goes under this name. They contend for holiness and a growth of grace, but comparing Christian progress in the divine life, to physical development, argue that we are gradually, in a long course of years, to grow out of our partially unsanctified condition, and that the heart is less and less subjected to sinful principles as we proceed from children to young men and fathers in Christ. Now be this doctrine true or not, it is at least not that of our standard writers on this subject, Fletcher and Wesley, who clearly taught an instantaneous, entire sanctification by faith, under the term Christian Perfection; and we consider it disingenuous in those who reject the doctrine to hold on to the term, merely to shield their orthodoxy.

"But their notion of Christian experience is, we contend, not sustained by the Word of God. Instead of being more and more free from inbred sin as we become young men and fathers in Christ, the text we have quoted clearly shows that we can not be any thing further than "babes in Christ," while we are yet carnal. Consequently, until "sin is all destroyed," we may for years be professing Christians, but still babes in Christ. We must therefore be cleansed—"cleansed from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit," ere we are prepared to pass into those higher grades of Christian experience, in which we are called "young men and fathers in Christ."

"It is said by those who advocate this theory of Methodist Christian Perfection, never heard of until lately in our branch of the Church, that we are at first perfect babes in Christ, then perfect young men, and so progress from one degree of perfection to another, from the very instant of the new birth. Now that there may be instances of conversions, where the heart has undergone at the same time entire purification, we are not prepared to deny. But that Christians, as children of Christ, are perfect, we hold to be, as we have shown, wholly unsustained. "Let us go on unto perfection, not laying the foundations" of rudimental Christianity, says Paul; and to whom? Why to those he called "babes" in his letter to the Hebrews. To be "imperfect" and to be a "babe" are therefore synonymous terms.

"But it is urged, is not regeneration a perfect work? Can a man be imperfectly, only half-born again? Most assuredly not. But we might reply to this, to us, puerile objection, that a perfect birth does not imply perfection in the thing born. Since the Fall, we may safely assert, no child has been born physically perfect. The answer, however, which we conceive due to this objection, is that it is miserable quibbling,—an effort so to strain a figure of speech as to make the Scriptures speak, what we have shown they expressly disclaim to teach. They expressly say a man may be converted and regenerated, and yet imperfect in heart and life:—"And did what was right in the sight of the Lord, yet not with a perfect heart." To such persons the exhortation is, "let us go on to perfection."

PREACHING IN CHINA.

Rev. I. J. ROBERTS writes to the Western Recorder from Shanghai, April 16th, that "the Baptist Missionaries, Messrs. Burton, Cabaniss, Crawford, Pearcy, Roberts and Yates, went into the city, this evening after dinner, to hold service in our chapel; rather a rare occurrence since the commencement of the siege of the city. This forms the strongest band (six) of Baptist Missionaries of any with whom I have had the pleasure of being numbered since I have been in China."

According to this report, the troubles of war are opening, presently as well as remotely, an official door for the preached Gospel. He says:

"When we got to the church the bell was rung, and some four or five hundred persons came and took seats, of whom fully half were women, and listened very attentively, while Bro. Yates preached to them quite a lengthy discourse. This was really the most interesting congregation that I have met for preaching since in Shanghai—so many old people, regular citizens, who came, perhaps, for the first time. Their hair, which was formerly shaved off, has grown out, and many of them were gray and venerable. The civil war has brought them to distress, and that has brought them to the church; and who knows but through that means, their souls will be brought to heaven at last.

"Afflictions, though they seem severe,
In mercy oft are sent;
It stopped the prodigal's career,
And caused him to repent."

"One was there who had been wounded with a bullet, found lodged in his back. This offered an early opportunity for Dr. Burton to exercise his surgical skill. He appointed a time to meet him at the chapel, and promised to cut it out."

The city authorities of Mobile have adopted a limited quarantine. The appointment of visiting physician has been given to Dr. Mordecai, Jr. All vessels from ports where the fever exists will be rigidly examined and detained until there is no danger of their communicating disease. The New Orleans mail boats will be boarded every morning, and all sick or infected persons aboard will be taken to the hospital ship, where they will be medically treated or permitted to return to New Orleans, as they prefer.

Quarterlies and Monthlies.

Once a quarter our Nile overflows its banks, when the republications of the English Reviews, by L. SCOTT & Co., N. Y., reach us, along with the home exchanges of that character then due. The Westminster, Edinburg and London Quarterlies, for July, abound in fresh and strong articles. The latter makes a moderate but able defense of "tectotalism and anti-liquor laws." It has it tea-totelism. The soundness and progressiveness of American legislation on that subject, is the staple of the article. The manner of the argument is ingeniously carried, coming up on the blind side of English prejudice.

THE LADIES' REPOSITORY, for September, is already on our table, and a most delightful number it is. The engravings of West Point and of the Believer's Vision, are splendid plates.

THE LADY'S COMPANION, for September, is here, too. Really, it seems to us the old lady is without a companion—she looks so forlorn. She certainly needs a new dress, and ought to have it. Can't Stevenson & Owen do something for the dear old thing. Gentlemen, please try.

PUTNAM, for September, presents a portrait of J. P. Kennedy, for manly handsomeness unexcelled.

THE NEW ORLEANS MEDICAL AND SURGICAL JOURNAL, for September—Dr. B. DOWLER, Editor—is a superior number. The leading paper is by Dr. Cartwright, on "Dysentery among Negroes," elicited by a letter from Hon. J. Bragg, of South Alabama, seeking his opinion on the nature and management of that malady, which proves, in certain populous planting districts, as fatal as Cholera. This article is worth to Southern planters the price of the Journal for a dozen years. Among the original contributors are two Texas physicians and three Louisianians. The "Excerpta" are attractive and profitable, even to an unprofessional man. The Editor, besides being an easy and graceful writer and reviewer in his line, is perhaps the ablest and most industrious vital Statistician in our country. We heartily commend this Journal to the patronage of our readers.

A VOICE FROM THE RIGHT QUARTER.

We have alluded to the attack made by the Staats Zeitung, a German paper of this city, against the Advocate and the supposed author of an article on "German Reformers," over the signature of "A German." To enter into controversy were useless. But an Intelligent and Christian German of the city, who reads both papers, has forwarded the article below. It has been mislaid several days, but is not out of date. The writer is not a Methodist. His article affords social and political reasons, in addition to the already urgent religious ones, why the Methodist Missions among our German population should be encouraged.—[ED.

MR. EDITOR: The article in the Christian Advocate of the 5th August, written by "A German," translating the platform of the "Free Germans," has made no small stir amongst men of our own city of that platform. A most shameful attack was made upon Bro. Hofer, whom they suppose to be the author of the article. The attack contains the grossest calumnies I ever found sounded forth through the public press. It seems that they are afraid, when they see that their hellish principles are exposed, and made known to those who are not able to read the German language. Their endeavors, therefore, must be, to enlighten the Germans with their doctrines, which are dangerous both to our political and religious institutions. It is indeed awful to behold the efforts and demonstrations which these declared enemies of our Lord Jesus Christ, are every where to place His servants in a bad light before the public. Their hatred is especially directed against Methodist preachers, because they most boldly denounce their lives of revelry, wickedness, sin and disorder. Bro. Hofer, they say, came like all the rest of parsons to this country to keep the people in darkness and ignorance, that they can the easier exact the last cent of money from them. This they say is the only thing at which they are aiming. Monarchs and preachers must be done away with from the face of the earth; the Bible, which has long since been declared as a book of lies, only made by some cursed priests for the purpose of keeping our human race in subjection; a book that contradicts itself in a thousand places, must be exterminated, and then, and only then, we shall enjoy political freedom in reality, and no longer in theory. What! say they, will these bigoted Methodists endeavor to restrict us by laws in our innocent pleasures and amusements on Sundays? And under these movements they understand, balls, theaters, beer and coffee-houses, etc., for this purpose has the Sabbath been installed. A man who has labored hard during six days, wants a day to enjoy himself; and where is the best place of entertainment; is it not in the coffee and beer house? And these places, where only now and then a man is killed; where perhaps only once or twice on a long Sunday fighting takes place; where a father might once and a while be induced to spend his last dollar, which his poor wife and children need for their support, and after he has got drunk beats them most cruelly! These places we have been accustomed to in our own country, are denounced by the advocates of the temperance humbug, by the Know-Nothings and by native Americans, and more especially so by the ignorant parson in Greatmen street, Third District. But thanks be to God, this is not the case with all the Germans in our glorious Union. Those "Free Germans" are by far in the minority. We are ready to declare openly, that they will be defeated in their principles, both religious and political, by their own countrymen, although they believe to hold an unlimited sway over them.

Should this scorner venture again to come forward with his inquisitorial language, then we will expose his name to the public. We will show him that it is not only Bro. Hofer who declared war against their poisonous doctrines, revelries and debaucheries, but many hundreds of his countrymen, who are ever ready to prove that the writer of the article in the "Louisiana State Gazette" is guilty of the grossest falsehoods. Mr. Hofer rises the more in our esteem, as he was the first one who rose against these threatening individuals, or rather against their principles. I would further state, that Mr. Hofer spoke about "Froo Germans" in the West and not about such in the city of New Orleans; therefore, has this individual, by coming forward in defense of them, placed himself in the same category, and deserves to be treated as one of their number. In conclusion, we would remark, that our only intention by writing these few lines was to show these Pope-like denouncers that they may not think Mr. Hofer is the only one who will be an unmovable obstacle in their way.

I am, sir, with great respect, your humble
P. M.

Also a German citizen.

Revival Intelligence.

OUACHITA DIST., LA. CON.—Rev. Joel Sanders, P. E., writes, 22d Aug.:

"Bro. Hamilton has now a meeting of interest going on at Sparta. Himself and Bro. Grives have had quite a round of protracted meetings; at some of which were considerable displays of saving grace. At three meetings they had near a hundred accessions, besides a number at other places. Bro. Randle I learn has had some good meetings; and in other parts of the district the work is looking up."

GREENSBORO MISSION, ALA. CON.—Rev. M. P. Dickinson writes, 10th Aug.:

"We have had a good meeting on this mission at a new appointment which began the fifth Sunday in July. It continued ten days. After preaching five days and nights, Bro. Lamb, a local preacher, came to my help. Brother Filley, a Cumberland Presbyterian, preached us a most excellent sermon, which closed the meeting. We had about thirty conversions, and as many added to the Church."

SIPSEY MISSION, ALA. CON.—We have just closed an exceedingly interesting protracted meeting, held at the Hopewell Church, commencing on Saturday, 5th Aug., and holding until Sunday 13th; the labors of which resulted in twenty-six converted and added to the Church.

The Lord was with us in power. A promising Church is now organized at this place, composed mainly of the interesting youth of the land, and the good work progresses over all opposition from the world. All honor and glory to our King.

Bros. Jas. Cameron and W. C. Hearn rendered good service during the meeting.

G. W. GILLESPIE.

WILKINSON CT., MISS. CON.—At a Presbyterian church within the bounds of our circuit, we commenced a meeting on Friday preceding the fifth Sabbath in July, and continued it until the following Thursday. We had good congregations all the time after the first day. The Lord was with us to the comfort of his people, the salvation of souls and the awakening of sinners. Twelve professed to find peace in believing. Some of the conversions were of the old style. Sixteen were added to the Church. Of those a goodly number were young men, who promise usefulness to the Church. There were two quite aged persons converted and joined the Church—about sixty years of age. It was a very good meeting. We are assisted by Bros. Fly and Miller, of Jackson, La., in part, and by Bro. William James, one of our most useful local brethren, and also by Bro. Thorn, another local preacher of this circuit. We are praying and looking for better times at our camp meeting, which includes the first Sabbath in October.

WM. B. HINES,
THOS. W. BROWN.

August 24, 1854.

UNIONTOWN CT., ALA. CON.—Our third Quarterly Meeting was held at Rehoboth, commencing on Saturday, the 11th August. The Lord met us in great power. Ten or twelve were happily converted, and joined the Church. Among these were some of our own dear children. To the great Head of the Church be all the praise. T. BURPO.

PICKENSVILLE CT., ALA. CON.—Rev. D. C. B. Connerly writes on the 24th ult. from Pleasant Grove: "It is our third Quarterly Meeting. Bros. Shaeffer and Jennings are working hard and gathering fruit. We began our Missionary collections on Sabbath afternoon, getting about $230. Fifty of this going to aid the German Church in Mobile.

NEW ORLEANS, OPELOUSAS, AND GREAT WESTERN RAILROAD.—The Opelousas Courier learns that two gentlemen, one of St. Mary the other of Lafayette, are on the eve of taking the contract for the construction of the portion of this railroad between Berwick's Bay and Washington.

SOMETHING NEW.—The steamship Arctic was to proceed to sea from New York on the 23d for a trip of a few days, for the purpose of testing what is supposed to be a great improvement in her machinery. The trial already had was considered very satisfactory, and the one now to be had will be conclusive, pro or con. The improvement referred to is one which Mr. Collins has been assiduously endeavoring to perfect for the last two years. It consists in a new application of steam, with a view to secure greater power with a less consumption of fuel. So far as experiments have been made, this object seems to have been attained.

FIRE AND LOSS OF LIFE.—A large fire occurred in Richmond, Va., on the night of the 21st, by which three tobacco factories, belonging to Messrs Hatcher & Gentry, J W Atkinson and John Carr, were destroyed. Several other buildings were burned, and the total loss is estimated at nearly $30,000. A fireman named Nicholas Walsh was crushed under the falling ruins of one of the buildings and instantly killed. He left a wife and six children. Several other persons were hurt in the same manner.

The sister of the celebrated Henrietta Sontag (Countess Rossi,) Mdlle. Nina Sontag, has retired from the stage to enter a cloister.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

N. O. District Quarterly Meetings.

Wesley, Soule, and Winans--Sept. 8th.

Carondelet st.—Sept. 10th; L. F., 11th; Quar. Conference, 12th.

Felicity st.—Sept. 17th; L. F., 18th; Q. Conference, 19th.

German Missions, Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4—Sept. 24th, at Piety st.; L. F., 3½ P. M.; Quar. Conference at Dryades, Sept. 22d.

Thibodaux—Sept. 30th and Oct. 1st.

Bayou Lafourche and B. Black, Circuit and Mission—Oct. 7th and 8th, at Tigerville.

Baton Rouge—Oct. 14th and 15th.

Plaquemine and Bayou Gros Tête--Oct. 21st and 22d, at Bayou Gros Tête.

N. O. Circuit--Oct. 29th, at Carrollton; Quar. Conference, 28th, 5 P. M.

Algiers and Meraux st.—Nov. 5th; Quar. Conf. Nov. 2d.

J. C. KEENER, P. E.

Notice.

The CALIFORNIA CHRISTIAN OBSERVER will be published weekly in the city of San Francisco for the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. J. BORING, Editor.

TERMS:

The Observer will be sent to subscribers at $2 per year; $5 for two years, or $10 for five years.

CLUBS.—A club of ten or more subscribers at the same post-office, shall have the paper for $2 50 each.

Any Methodist preacher who may send us the names of subscribers, accompanied by the cash, shall receive a copy one year for his trouble.

No name will be entered on the books as a subscriber until the cash is received.

All communications should be addressed to the subscriber, at Oxford, Georgia, until the first of Decembor next. J. BORING.

Notice.

The Lauderdale Camp Meeting will commence on Friday before the third Sabbath in October. Ministering brethren from adjacent appointments are affectionately solicited to attend. J. W. ELLIS, P. C.

August, 1854.

List of Remittances

received at the Office of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, from August 11th to August 31st, inclusive.

T. Y. Armstrong, $10; T. S. Abernathy, $5; Mrs. D. Aikman, $1 50; O. M. Addison, $8 50.

W. P. Barton, $13 50; Miss S. A. Byrne, $150; Mrs. Barrett, $2; G. W. Brown, $3; T. Burpo, $6.

A. Clement, $5; D. C. B. Connerly, $9.

W. P. Dickinson, $5.

A. G. Edmondson, $2.

A. T. M. Fly, $6; J. Fowler, $1 50; R. Finley, $5.

H. S. Gilmore, $3; L. P. Golson, $3.

W. B. Hines, $2 50; W. H. Harrison, $1 50; J. J. Hutchinson, $5.

A. B. Jones, $6; J. R. Jackson, $2.

A. P. King, $5.

Mrs. S. E. Mitchell, $7.

R. J. Nugent, $2.

J. Paul, Jr., $6.

U. Riley, $15; J. S. Rash, $2.

W. Shores, $2.

J. Wilson, $2; J. L. Wright, $10.

ANNUAL COMMERCIAL STATEMENT

For the Year ending September 1, 1854.

(From the Daily Crescent.)

The business of the past year in our market has been up and prices for most descriptions of produce have been high, largely remunerating the producers and affording handsome profits to factors and buyers. The crops throughout the country have been heavy, and with one or two exceptions, have considerably exceeded those of any year, which also was one of large crops. The exception of greatest importance to us is our great staple, Cotton, the production of which has been some 350,000 bales more than that of last year, when the crop reached the enormous amount of 3,263,000 bales. The crop of 1851-'52 reached 3,000,000 bales. With these two exceptions the crop of the year just closed is the largest ever produced, and one-half the total production of Cotton finds a market at this port.

The crop of Sugar for the past year has been unprecedentedly large, exceeding that of 1852-'53 by 127,000 hhds or more than 40 ₱ cent. The yield of Molasses shows a corresponding increase. The supply of Flour has been plenty, and of Grain largely, in excess of last year. In the latter, although the production has been larger than it was last year, the receipts at our port have been less.

The commercial year opened with us under considerable disadvantages. The epidemic which ravaged our city until the beginning of November, and but few of the citizens or usual customers seemed disposed to return with a much later period than usual, and soon after navigation had fairly opened, it was closed by ice. We had, consequently, a very late period for the commencement of business.

The following table shows the receipts and exports of the principal articles of Southern and Western Produce during the past year, compared with the year before:

	RECEIPTS.		EXPORTS.
	1853-'54.	1852-'53.	1853-'54.	1852-'53.
Cotton, bales	1,442,677	1,605,647	1,426,573	1,644,161
Tobacco, hhds	48,564	74,650	54 317	64 208
Sugar, hhds	272,563	186 217	159,370	77,114
Molasses, hbls	337,298	249,951	240,160	120,819
Flour, bbls	868,276	788,394	576,744	461,728
Corn, sacks	1,762 614	1,238,246	1,165,258	808 234
Meal, sacks	187,228	51,368	121,781	19,116
Pork, bbls and tcs	257,08[illegible]	321 983	149 9[illegible]	182,992
Lard, bbls and tcs	53,916	62,485	26,319	74 316
Bacon, hhds & casks	37,777	50,071
Bacon hams, casks	32 372	43 218	47,482	45,164
Lard, bbls and tcs	133,316	120,724	788,114	697 978
Whisky, bbls	192,428	137,214	49,647	86,379
Wool, bales	18,775	16 900	14,869	10,197
Live pigs	75,405	204,768	80,238	201,006

And the following shows the receipts of articles mostly consumed in the city and on the neighboring plantations:

	1853-'54.	1852-'53.
Shingles, pieces	48,115	61 572
Hoop Rope, coils	104 702	118,308
Lumber, Western, boxes	47,511	42,903
Lumber, Eastern, boxes	48,940	39 816
Linseed Oil, bbls	15,108	15,642
Oil, Castors, bbls	206,396	211,256
Hay, Western, bales	58,890	51,616
Candles, boxes	70,217	64,422
Lard, Western, bbls	683,143	437,750
Beans, Western	34,517	35,569
Coal, sacks	591,232	456,376

COTTON—The Cotton crop of the past year amounts to about 2,912,000 bales, of which 1,442 677 bales have found a market at this port. Of this supply of 1,442 677 bales, 82,867 have been received from Alabama, Florida and Texas, and are accounted for in the Cotton Statements of other ports. With these deducted, we find the receipts proper to be 1,379,710 bales, the first amount, however, representing our actual business in the staple. The exports of the year embrace 1,426,573 bales, of which 194,196 have been shipped to Great Britain; 191,210 to France; 92,079 to the North of Europe; 136,904 to other foreign ports, and 192 816 to our Northern domestic markets. The amount remaining on hand last evening, including all in presses and pickeries, and on shipboard not cleared was 26 676 bales. The total receipts of this port last year were 1,605,047 bales, including 81,000 from Alabama, Florida and Texas, leaving for the receipts proper 1,604,047 bales. The exports last year were 1,644,161 bales, comprising 921,114 to Great Britain; 212,261 to France; 95,970 to the North of Europe, 149 604 to other foreign ports, and 266,224 to Northern domestic ports. The stock on hand on the 1st of September, 1853 was 206,512 bales. The decrease in the receipts this year from the last is thus shown to be 228 271 bales, and in the exports 100,319 to Great Britain; 21,051 to France; 17,892 to the North of Europe, 13,600; to other foreign ports; and 78,408 to domestic ports. The first receipts of the new crop (1854-'55) were two bales which arrived on the 25th of July, fifteen days earlier than the receipt of the first bale last year. The total receipts of the new crop up to last evening were 1360 bales, against 74 bales for the same time last year.

The following table exhibits the receipts and exports of Cotton at New Orleans each year for twenty years:

	RECEIPTS.	EXPORTS.
Years.	Bales.	Bales.
1834—'35	535,851	534,339
1835—'36	702,497	696,758
1836—'37	806,913	796,287
1837—'38	743,725	737,187
1838—'39	957,514	958,369
1839—'40	1,054,445	1,026,140
1840—'41	922,870	920,241
1841—'42	740,155	742,562
1842—'43	1,040,042	1,042,363
1843—'44	910,854	913,044
1844—'45	1,070,238	1,044,—35
1845—'46	805,375	1,045,—45
1846—'47	740,050	1,046,—47
1847—'48	1,213,866	1,047,—48
1848—'49	1,152,382	1,048,—49
1849—'50	835,773	1849—'50
1850—'51	995,048	1850—'51
1851—'52	1,430,103	1851—'52
1852—'53	1,605,047	1852—'53
1853—'54	1,442,077	1853—'54

And the following shows the total crop of Cotton for each year for twelve years in round numbers:

Years.	Bales.	Years.	Bales	Years.	Bales.
1842—'43	2,380,000	1846—'47	1,700,000	1850—'51	2,355,000
1843—'44	2,031,000	1847—'48	2,350,000	1851—'52	3,020,000
1844—'45	2,396,000	1848—'49	2,700,000	1852—'53	3,263,000
1845—'46	2,702,000	1849—'50	2,696,000	1853—'54	2,910,000

Our estimate of the crop for the past year is based on the following statements, a portion of which are necessarily inexact. When the full account of the crop is taken by the editors of the New York Price Current, this estimate will no doubt prove too small, but it is as complete as at this early period we are enabled to make without actual guessing.

Exports from the Southern ports at the latest dates:

New Orleans, August 31	1,420,573
Mobile, August 25	472,068
Charleston, August 24	421,651
Savannah, August 23	208,882
Florida, August 15	143,576
Texas, August 17	52,000
Virginia and North Carolina, Aug. 12.	11,022
	2,855,572

Add estimated receipts at Baltimore, Philadelphia, N. York and Boston by railroad, etc 10,000

Add stock on hand at the latest dates:

New Orleans, August 31	26,670
Mobile, August 25	37,964
Charleston, August 24	14 267
Savannah, August 23	1,891
Florida, August 15	777
Texas, August 17	3,570
Virginia and North Carolina, Aug. 12.	750
	86,015
Total	2,951,787
Deduct stock on hand, September 1st, 1853:
New Orleans	10 572
Mobile	7,526
Carolina	15,126
Savannah	5,150
Florida	523
Texas	425
Virginia and North Carolina	400
	39,715
Total crop for the year 1853-'54, estimating the amounts in the interior towns and on plantations the same as last year	2,912,072

STATEMENT OF COTTON.

Stock on hand September 1, 1853	10,572
Received during the year	1,442 677
	1,453 249
Exported during the year	1,426,573
Stock on hand at this port, including all in presses and pickeries and on shipboard not cleared on the 1st September, 1854	26,676

Professor McCay, who wrote early in the year an article on Cotton, for Hunt's Merchant's Magazine, says:

On the 1st of September the amount of old Cotton in our ports was 135,618 bales, against 91,176 for the year 1852. On the first Friday of October it was in Liverpool 770 770 bales, against 506,870 in 1852. At Havre it had increased, by October 14, to 53,688 bales over the preceding year. The accumulation at these places having advanced more than 350,000 bales during 1850, furnishes a proof that the large crop of the past year has not been consumed.

For the last fourteen years, from 1840 to 1853, the averages price has been 8 cents and 7 mills. The exports to foreign ports for the first ten of these years, amounted in all to 7128 millions of pounds: for the last four they have been 3576 millions. The value of the first ten was 552 millions of dollars, of the last four 381 millions. For the whole period, 10,698 millions of pounds were exported for 933 millions of dollars, giving the average price just mentioned.

With regard to the consumption in Europe and the United States, he gives the results and estimates embraced in the following tables:

	Result for— 1851. Bales.	1852 Bales.
Wants of Great Britain	1,650,000	1,801,000
" of France	310,000	410,000
" of United States	404,000	603,000
" of other countries	538 000	635,000
Total	2,915.000	3,510,000
	Estimate for— 1853. Bales.	1854 Bales.
Wants of Great Britain	1,700.000	1,600 00
" of France	375,000	350,000
" of United States	071,000	700,000
" of other countries	650,000	600,000
Total	3,396 000	3,250,000

As to the supply he furnishes the following tables:

	Crop of 1851. Bales.	Crop of 1852. Bales.	Estimate for— 1853. Bales.	1854 Bales.
Texas	48,000	64 000	80 000	90 000
New Orleans	933 000	1,373,000	1,581,000	1,400,000
Mobile	452 000	540,000	545,000	540,000
Florida	171,000	189 000	179,000	160,000
Georgia	322,000	326,000	350,000	325,000
S. Carolina	387,000	477,000	463,000	423,0 0
Other places	34,000	37,000	30 000	00,000
Total	2,355,000	3,015 000	3,263,000	3,000,000

From Egypt, Brazil and the West Indies the supply has been on the increase for the last four or five years. For the two years, 1847 and 1848, it averaged 136,450 bales. For 1849 and 1850, it was 251,350. For 1851 and 1852, it was 253 850. For 1853, the receipts at Liverpool up to the 18th of November were 218,451 bales, against 244,939 for the preceding year. As the whole English receipts for 1852 were 346,700 bales, the smallness of the decline at Liverpool authorizes the expectation that at the end of 1853 they will reach 300,000 bales.

RECAPITULATION.

	Result for— 1851. Bales.	1852. Bales.	Estimate for— 1853. Bales.	1854 Bales
United States	2,355,000	3,015 000	3,263 000	3,000,000
East Indies	320 000	323,000	400,000	400,000
Other places	181,000	347,000	300,000	250 000
Total	2,855 000	3,583,000	3,863 000	3,650,000

The following is the Liverpool Cotton Statement of the 1st of January, 1854:

LIVERPOOL COTTON STATEMENT.

Stock, 1st January, 1853	bales 577,800
Import in 1853	2,028,400
" from Glasgow	5,900
" from London	1,000
	2,615,100
Total quantity sold in 1853, as per weekly returns	2,444,150
Deduct proportion sold to speculators for resale	428,550
	2,015 600
Stock, 1st January, 1854	597,500
Taken for consumption and export in 1853	2,015,600, or 38,561 per week.
[Taken for consumption and export in 1853—2,055,700, or 38,538 bales per week.]
Deduct exp't to Continent	255,600
Deduct export to Ireland	4,000
	250.000
Taken for consumption	1,758,000, or 33,789 per week.
Taken for the Glasgow market	53,000
Taken for consumption in England	1,702,400, or 32,738 per week.
[In 1852	1,762 800, or 33,900]

The range and fluctuation of prices in New Orleans will be shown at length by the subjoined tables, the first of which exhibits the rates for the year just closed, and the next those of the preceding year.

The following table exhibits the range of prices for Middling, Good Middling and Fair Cottons at the close of each Week during the year 1853-'54:

1853.	Middling.	Good Middling.	Fair.
September 3	9¼ a10¼	11 a11½	—a—
10	9¼ a10¾	11¼ a11½	—a—
17	10¾ a11	11¼ a11½	12¼ a12½
24	10¾ a11	11¼ a11¾	12½ a12¾
October.. 1	10¼ a10½	10¾ a11	—a—
8	9¼ a10¾	10¾ a11	—a—
15	9¼ a 9¾	10 a10¾	—a—
22	8¾ a 9¼	9¼ a10	—a—
29	8¾ a 9	9¼ a10	—a—
November 5	8 —a 9	9¼ a 9¾	—a—
12	7¾ a 8¾	9¼ a 9¾	—a—
19	8 a 8¾	9¼ a10	11 —a—
26	8¼ a 9¾	9¼ a10¾	11¼ a—
December 3	8 a 9¾	9¼ a10	11¼ a—
10	9 a 9¾	9¼ a10	11¾ a—
17	8¼ a 9¾	9¾ a10	—a—
24	8¼ a 9¾	9¾ a10	—a—
31	8¼ a 9¾	9¾ a10	—a—
Jan. 7, 1854	8¼ a 9¾	10 a—	—a—
14	8¾ a 9¾	9¾ a10	—a—
21	8¼ a 9¾	9¾ a10	—a—
28	8 a 9¾	9¾ a10	—a—
February 4	8¼ a 9¾	9¾ a 9¾	10¼ a10¾
11	8 a 8¾	9¼ a 9¾	—a—
18	8 a 8¾	9¼ a 9¾	—a—
25	8 a 8¾	9¼ a 9¾	—a—
March.... 4	8 a 8¾	9¼ a 9¾	—a—
11	8 a 8¾	9¼ a 9¾	—a—
18	8¼ a 9¼	9¼ a10	11a—
April..... 1	8 a 8¾	9¼ a 9¾	10¼a—
8	8 a 8¾	9 a 9¾	10¼a—
15	7¾ a 8¾	8¾ a 8¾	9¾ a10
22	7¼ a 7¾	8¼ a 8¾	9¾ a10
29	7¼ a 8¾	8¼ a 8¾	9¾ a10
May..... 6	7¼ a 6¾	8¼ a 8¾	9¾ a10
13	7¼ a 8	8¼ a 8¾	9¾ a10
20	6¾ a 7¼	8 a 8¼	9¾ a—
27	7¼ a 8	8¼ a 9	9¾ a10½
June..... 3	7¼ a 8¼	8¾ a 9¼	10—
10	0¼ a 7¾	8¾ a 9	10¼a—
17	7 a 8¾	8¼ a 9¼	10¾a11
24	7¼ a 8¾	8¼ a 9¾	10¾a11
July..... 1	7¼ a 8½	8¾ a 9¾	10¾a11
8	7¼ a 8¾	8¾ a 9¾	10¾a11
15	7¾ a 8¾	9 a 9¾	10¾a11
22	7¾ a 8¾	9¼ a 9¾	10¾a11
29	7¼ a 8¾	9 a 9¾	10¾a11
August... 5	7¾ a 8¾	8¾ a 9¼	10¾a11
12	7¾ a 8¾	8¾ a 9¾	10—a—
19	8 a 8¾	9¼ a 9¾	10—a—
26	7¾ a 8¾	9 a 9¾	10 a10¼

The rates for the years 1852—53 were as follow:

1852.	Middling.	Good Middling.	Fair
September.. 3	9¼ a 9¾	10 a—11	10¾ all
10	9¾ a10¾	10¾ a10¾	11 a11¼
17	9¾ a 9¾	10 a10¼	11 a11¼
24	9 a10	10¼ a11¼	11 a11¼
October..... 1	9¼ a 9¾	10 a10¼	11 a11¼
8	9¼ a10¼	10¼ a11	11¼ all
15	9¼ a 9¾	10¼ a10¾	11 all
22	9¼ a10¼	10¼ a11	—a—
29	9¼ a10¼	10¼ a11	—a—
November.. 5	9¼ a10¼	10¼ a11	—a—
12	9¼ a10¼	10¼ a11	—a—
19	9¼ a10¼	10¼ a11	—a—
26	9¼ a10¼	10¼ a11	—a—
December.. 3	9¼ a10¼	10¼ a11	—a—
10	9¼ a10¼	10¼ a11	—a—
17	9¼ a10¼	10¼ a11	—a—
24	9¼ a10¼	10¼ a11	—a—
31	9¼ a10¼	10¼ a11	—a—
January..7, '53	9¼ a 9	10¼ a—	10¾a—
14	8¾ a 8¾	10¼ a10½	—all
21	8¾ a 8¾	10¼ a10	all a—
28	8¾ a 9¼	10 a10	11 a—
February... 4	8¾ a 9¼	9¾ a10	11 a—
11	8¾ a 9¼	9¾ a10	11 a—
18	8 a 8¾	9¾ a10	11 a—
25	8 a 8¾	9¼ a10	all a—
March..... 4	8 a 8¾	9¼ a10	11 a—
11	8¼ a 8¾	9¼ a10	—a—
18	8¼ a 8¾	9¼ a10	—a—
25	8¼ a 8¾	9¼ a10	—a—
April..... 1	8¼ a 8¾	9¼ a10	—a—
8	8¼ a 8¾	9¼ a10	—a—
15	8¼ a 8¾	9¼ a10	—a—
22	8¼ a10¼	10¼ all¼	—a—
29	8¼ a10¼	10¼ all¼	—a—
May..... 6	9 a10	10¼ all	12¼a12½
13	8¾a 9¼	10¾ a10¾	—a—
20	9 a10	10¾ all¼	—a—
27	9¼a10¼	10¾ all¼	—a—
June..... 3	6 a10½	10¾ all¼	12¼a—
10	0 a10½	10¾ all¼	—a—
17	9 a10½	10¾ all¼	—a—
24	9¼a10½	10¾ all¼	—a—
July..... 1	9 a10	10¾ all¼	12¼a—
8	9½a10½	11 all¼	—a—
15	9½a10¾	11 all¼	—a—
22	9¼a10¾	11 all¼	—a—
29	9¼a10¾	11¼all¼	—a—
August..... 5	9¼a10¾	10¾ all¼	12¼a—
12	9¼a10¾	11 all¼	—a12
19	9¼a10¾	11 all¼	—a12½
26	9¼a10¾	11¼all¼	—a—¼

The sales of Cotton for the past five days embrace about 2200 bales, the market closing at the range of our quotations as follow:

NEW ORLEANS CLASSIFICATION.

Inferior	5 @0	Middling Fair	9¾ @10¼
Ordinary	6¼ @7¾	Fair	10 @—
Middling	8 @8¾	Good Fair	—@—
Good Middling	9 @9¾	Good and Fine	—@—

TOBACCO—The stock of Tobacco on hand at the beginning of the commercial year was large, embracing 29,465 hhds. Holders during the early part of the year relied very largely upon the appearance of the growing crop, the prospects of which seemed to be any thing but brilliant for the producers. The larger portion of the supply was consequently held back, and month after month passed, and many opportunities of sale, at remunerating prices, were presented without resulting in any considerable transactions. The holders for the most part relying upon a short crop for this year, and the support necessary to enable them to persist in their limits to factors, and our stock grew to over 43,000 hhds in the month of June. Since then there has been some movement, and at the close of the year the stock is reduced to 23,712 hhds.

The receipts of the year embrace 48,564 hhds against last year 74,650. The exports have been 54 317 hhds, including 12,700 hhds to Great Britain; 12 027 to France; 14,106 to the North of Europe; 9,763 to other foreign ports, and 4,736 to domestic ports.

TOBACCO STATEMENT.

Stock on hand September 1, 1853	29,465
Received during the year	48 564
Total supply to 31st August	78,029
Exported during the year	54,317
Stock in warehouse and on shipboard not cleared 1st September, 1854	23 712

The following table will show the receipts and exports of Tobacco at this port during the last twenty years:

RECEIPTS AND EXPORTS OF TOBACCO AT NEW ORLEANS EACH YEAR FOR TWENTY YEARS.

	RECEIPTS.	EXPORTS.
Years.	Hhds	Years. Hhds
1834—'35	35,050	1834—'35 33,821
1835—'36	50,558	1835—'36 41 604
1836—'37	28,501	1836—'37 35,821
1837—'38	37 288	1837—'38 35,555
1838—'39	28 153	1838—'39 30,852
1839—'40	43,827	1839—'40 40,439
1840—'41	53,170	1840—'41 54 057
1841—'42	67,556	1841—'42 68,068
1842—'43	92,569	1842—'43 80,801
1843—'44	82,436	1843—'44 81 249
1844—'45	71,403	1844—'45 68,579
1845—'46	72,986	1845—'46 62,145
1846—'47	55,558	1846—'47 50,36
1847—'48	55,582	1847—'48 60,264
1848—'49	52,335	1848—'49 52,890
1849—'50	69,304	1849—'50 57,956
1850—'51	64,112	1850—'51 54 50[illegible]
1851—'52	87,905	1851—'52 91 814
1852—'53	74,650	1852—'53 64 208
1853—'54	48,564	1853—'54 54 317

The prices for Tobacco during the year have been as follow:

	Lugs.	Inferior to Common.	Fair to Fine.	Choice & Select'ns.
September.	5 a6	6¼ a6½	7 a8	8½ a9¼
October...	5 a6	6¼ a6½	7 a8	8½ a9¼
November.	5 a6¾	6 a6½	6¾ a7½	7¾ a8½
December.	5 ¾a6	6¼ a6½	6¾ a6¾	7¾ a8½
January..	5¾ a6	6 a6½	8¼ a7½	7¾ a8½
February.	5 a6	6 a6½	6¾ a7½	7¾ a8½
March	5 a6	6 a7½	6¾ a7½	7¾ a8½
April	5 a6	0 a6½	6¾ a7½	7¾ a8½
May	4¾a5	6 a6¼	8¾ a7½	7¾ a8½
June	4½a5½	5¾a5¾	6¼ a7¼	7¼ a8½
July	4½a5½	5½a6	6¼ a7¼	7¾ a8½
August	5½a6¼	5¾a6¼	6¾ a7¼	7¾ a8¼

The rates during the years 1852 and 1853 were as follow:

	Lugs.	Inferior to Common.	Fair to Fine.	Choice & Select'ns.
September	3 a4¼	4¾a5¾	5½a6¼	6¾a7¾
October...	3¾a5	5½a5¾	5¾a6¼	6¼a7¾
November	4 a5	5¾a5¾	5¾a6½	6¾a8
December	4 a5	5¼a5½	5¾a6½	6¾a8
January..	4 a5	5¼a5½	5¾a6¾	6¾a8
February	4 a4¾	5 a5½	5¾a6½	6¾a7¾
March	4 a4¾	4¾a5½	5¾a6¾	6¾a7¾
April.....	4 a4¾	4¾a5½	5½a6½	6¾a7¾
May	4¼a5	5½a5¾	6 a7¼	7 a8¾
June.....	4¾a5½	5½a5¾	6¼a7	7¼a8¾
July.....	4¾a5½	5¾a6	6¼a7	7¼a8¾
August...	5 a6	6¼a6½	6¾a7¼	6 a9¾

A late writer in the Baltimore American, referring to this staple, says:

The crop of Tobacco raised in the United States is considered by many as comprising the great bulk of the consumption of Europe, and few are aware of the fact that Hungary, with all its political embarrassments, and its oppressive policy towards the agriculturist, produces nearly double the quantity of that sent from the United States to Germany and Holland. An intelligent friend has received the following statement of the imports of Tobacco into those countries in the year 1853, which we translate for the benefit of the American reader:

Imports of Tobacco into Holland and Germany in 1853, from the United States.

	Hhds.	Weight in Pounds.	Value.
Into Bremen	34,015	34,017,000	$1,876,000
" Hamburg	1,007	1,140,000	111,000
" Holland	99,818	15,339,000	1,881 000
Total	55,790	47,482,000	$3,269,00

From the West Indies.

	Packages.	Weight in Pounds.	Value.
Into Germany	149 653	12,913,000	$3,160,000
" Hamburg	113,950	14 271,000	2,777 000
" Holland	43,552	8,316,000	1,703,000
Total	307,155	35,500,000	$7,790,000

From this statement it would appear that whilst the total value of Tobacco received from the West Indies is $7,793,000, the value of that received from the United States is only $3,269,000, being less in value by two millions and a half. It must be observed, however, that there is a material difference in the price of the two commodities—the average value of that from the United States being about 11 cents ₱ lb, whilst that from the West Indies averages over 25 cents.

The following table contains in brief the total production of Northern Europe:

	Pounds.	Value.
Prussia	35,000,000	$ 3,150,000
Other German States	55,000,000	5,500,000
Hungary	90,000,000	7,200,000
	180,000,000	$16,850,00
From the West Indies	35,500,000	7,10 ,000
	215,500,000	$23,950,00
Add import from the United States	47,482,000	3,269,000
	262,982,000	$27,219,000

From this statement it will be seen that Germany and Hungary alone raise 180,000,000 of pounds, against 46,000,000 received from the United States into those countries. The average value, is less than that of the United States, being about 8½ cents ₱ lb. It is generally supposed that the crop raised in that part of Germany known as Ptalia, is about equal to the average crop of Maryland —say 30,000 hhds, and that the other German States produce about as much more. The produce of Hungary is nearly three times that of Maryland.

An observant reader will readily see from the above statement how small a proportion the whole receipts from the United States bear to the total amount of Tobacco consumed in Northern Europe alone, being only about one-fifth of the total amount, or in round numbers less than 50,000,000 of pounds out of 250,000,000. He will also see that while an advance in price in Europe may materially affect the value of the article in this country an advance here from a partial failure at crops, or other causes, can produce but little effect in Europe. A slight diminution in the consumption in those countries must soon countervail any deficiency in the produce of the United States.

Mr. Charles DeFord, writing for DeBow's Review, of May last, gives the following table:

STATEMENT OF LEAF TOBACCO.

Stock of Leaf Tobacco in Europe 1853	hhds 86,000
" in the United States 1853	55,861
	140,861

ESTIMATE FOR 1853.

Maryland and Ohio	hhds 40,000
Virginia	45,000
Kentucky and all other States	75,000
	160,000
Total supply	hhds 297,861
Consumption in Europe in 1854	hhds 250,000
	47,861
United States—Maryland and Ohio	7,000
Virginia	18,000
Kentucky	20,000
	45,000
Total consumption	185,000
Which deducted from supply as above leaves a stock in Europe and the United States in 1855	hhds 11,861

The sales of the past week reach about 300 hhds, the closing prices being within the following quotations:

Factory Lugs	4½@4¾
Planters do	4¾@5½
Leaf Inf'r to Com.	5¾@6¼
Fair	6 @6½
Fine	6¾@7½
Choice & Select'ns	7½@8¾

SUGAR.... The crop of Sugar for the year just closed embraces 449,324 hhds against 321,934 for last year, the increase being 127,390 hhds. The receipts at this port during the year amount to 272 561 hhds, and the exports to 159,370 against last year's receipts 186,217, and exports 159,370 hhds.

The crop of Sugar each year, during the last twenty years, was as follows:

Year.	Hhds.	Year	Hhds.
1834	100,000	1844	200 000
1835	80,000	1845	185,000
1836	70,000	1846	148 000
1837	65,000	1847	240,000
1838	79 000	1848	220 000
1839	115,000	1849	208 000
1840	87 000	1850	211,000
1841	90,000	1851	230 000
1842	140 000	1852	322 000
1843	100,000	1853	440 324

The Hon. T. G. Hunt, member of Congress from this district, a short time since, published the following interesting statistics of Sugar, in the National Intelligencer

In the report of the Hon. R. J. Walker, the Secretary of the Treasury, of December 3, 1845, page 601, the following statistics will be found on the subject of the Sugar and Cotton interest of Louisiana:

1. That there were in 1845, in the State of Louisiana, 762 sugar plantations, of which the sugar mills were worked by steam power 408, and by horse power 354. Of these using the old process, by open kettles for granulation, there were 765, and by vacuo, with its expensive appuratus, 5.

2. The slaves of all ages attached to those estates in 1845 were 65,340.

3. The capital invested in sugar salaies and works was was estimated at that period at sixty millions.

4. The crop of Sugar in 1841-'45 was 204 613 hogsheads of 1000 pounds each, or 204 913,000 pounds.

5. That the slaves attached to the cotton plantations in 1845 were 92 220.

6. The crop of Cotton for that year was 350 000 bales.

To compare the above with the present, the following details are taken principally from the Census Returns of 1850 and J. A. Champomier's Annual Statistical Report on the Sugar Crop for 1853, which he gives with full details and great correctness:

1. There were in operation in the year 1853, 1481 sugar estates; of which there were worked by steam 1134, and by horse power 538. Using the old process by open kettles 1428, using the vacuo process 53. It may be well here to remark that the only check to the general use of the vacuo process, which produces at once a refined article, fit for exportation to any part of the world, without loss of weight, is the present low prices and the uncertainty as to further tariff legislation, whilst the outlay for the apparatus involves a heavy capital, say from $15,000 to $60,000, according to the extent of the works.

2. The Sugar crop of 1853 was 321 943 hhds.

3. The number of slaves in the sugar district in 1850 was 139,866

Deduct number of slaves employed in other pursuits than Sugar 10 per cent., which is an ample allowance 13 986

Leaves 125,976

as the number of all ages on sugar plantations.

2. The number of slaves in the cotton district in 1850 was 85 612

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

What I Live for.

I live for those who love me—for those I know are true;
For the heaven that smiles above me,
And awaits my spirit too!
For the human ties that bind me—for the task by God
For the bright hopes left behind me,
And the good that I can do.

I live to learn their story who've suffered for my sake—
To emulate their glory,
And follow in their wake.
Bards, patriots, martyrs, sages—the noble of all ages,
Whose deeds crowd history's pages
And time's great volume make.

I live to hold communion with all that is divine,
To feel there is a nature
Twixt honest hearts and mine.
To profit by affliction, reap truth from fields of fiction,
Grow wiser from conviction,
And fulfil each great design.

I live to hail that season by gifted minds foretold,
When men shall live by reason
And not alone by gold;
When man to man united, and every wrong thing righted,
The whole world shall be lighted,
As in favored times of old.

I live for those who love me—for those who know I'm true;
For the heaven that smiles above me,
And awaits my spirit too.
For the cause that lacks assistance, for the wrong that needs resistance
For the future in the distance,
And the good that I can do.

The Long Ago.

Oh! a wonderful stream is the river Time,
As it runs through the realms of tears,
With a faultless rhythm and a musical rhyme,
And a broader sweep, and a surge sublime,
As it blends with the ocean of years.

How the winters are drifting like flakes of snow,
And the summers like buds between,
And the year in the sheaf—so they come and they go,
On the river's breast, with its ebb and flow,
As it glides in the shadow and sheen.

There is a magical isle up the river Time,
Where the softest of airs are playing;
There the cloudless sky and a tropical clime,
And a song as sweet as a vesper chime,
And the Junes with the roses are staying.

And the name of this isle is the Long Ago,
And we bury our treasures there;
There are bonds of beauty and bosoms of snow—
There are heaps of dust, but we loved them so!
There are trinkets and tresses of hair.

There are fragments of song that nobody sings,
And a part of an infant's prayer;
There's a lyre unstrung, and a harp without strings,
There are broken vows, and pieces of rings,
And the garments that she used to wear.

There are hands that are waved when the fairy shore
By the mirage is lifted in air;
And we sometimes hear, through the surf and the roar,
Sweet voices we heard in the days gone before,
When the wind down the river is fair.

Oh! remembered for aye be the blessed isle,
All the day of life till night,
When the evening calm comes with its beautiful smile,
And our weary hearts yearn to slumber awhile,
And "the dove come back to her nest" of rest be in sight.

Where's my Money?

A capital translation from the German of Franz Freiherr Gaudy, which appeared some years ago in the Dublin University Magazine.

Ay! where's my money? That's a puzzling query.
It vanishes. Yet neither in my purse
Nor pocket are there any holes. 'Tis very Incomprehensible. I don't disburse
For superfluities. I wear plain clothes.
I eat bean soup, jam tarts, preserves or honey;
And no one overlooks what do be owed
More steadily than I. Where is my money?

I never tipple. Folks don't see me staggering,
Home once and never, in the public street.
I spend no ornaments—not even a large (ring),
I have a notion that my own two feet
Are much superior to a horse's four,
So never call a jarvey. It is funny,
The longer I investigate, the more
Astonishingly I ask, Where is my money?

My money, mind you. Other people's dollars
Others squander nobly. Only mine
Cut one another. There's that pink of scholars
Von Doppelbrunk, he spends as much on wine
As I on everything. Yet he seems rich,
His laughs, and waxes plumper than a tunny,
While I grow thin as a dirt-ing-switch,
And wonder for gold as ruthy. Where's my money?

I don't complain the editors don't pay me;
I get the every about One Pound Sixteen;
And well I may; My articles are fancy
Enough to blow up any Magazine.
What's preserved in the affair though is, that at
The same time I miss nothing but the one. He
That snitches me will find I don't lose hat,
Gloves, fogle, stick or cloak. 'Tis always money!

Were I a rake I'd say so. Where one oysters
Beyond the rules, of course his cash must go.
'Tis true I regularly sup on oysters,
Cheese, brandy and all that. But, even so,
What remains is almost of a wight!
Where's the money? I put my hand in my pocket,
And that draws up the light
From their eyes any how. Where then's my money?

However, a propos of eyes and maidens,
I owe I do make presents to the sex—
Bonbon, watches, tea-kettles, aussie too (not Hayden's),
Combs, shawls, veils, bonnets—things that might perplex
A man to count. But still I gain by what
I lose in this way. 'Tis experience woe—eh!
I think so. My acquaintances think not.
No matter. I grow tedious. Where's my money?

From the London Times.

The Escape of the Czar.

"A man gets up in the morning on his own premises, but little knows where he may sleep at night." The Czar of all the Russias has lately been within an ace of offering in his own person a practical confirmation of this well-known saying. What would the British public have thought; what would Europe have thought; what would the King of Prussia in his caps have thought; what would Omar Pasha in his fez cap have thought; what would the allied troops have thought; and, finally, what would the Three per Cents have thought, if, about this time, the Czar of all the Russias, the Archduke Constantine, and the Archduchess, and the Russian Admiral in command of Cronstadt, had been sent home by Sir Charles Napier in the small steamer which had captured them? Improbable as the tale may appear—impossible the catastrophe—it was fairly upon the cards within the last few weeks. The facts are these: A short while back, while the allied fleets were lying before Cronstadt, an English yacht belonging to Lords Lichfield and Euston, with Lord Clarence Paget on board, ventured somewhat too near the guns of the place. Suddenly a puff of steam was seen on the Russian side, and a small Russian steamer put out to sea, with the evident intention of cutting off the English yacht. On board of that steamer were the Czar Nicholas, his son the Archduke Constantine, the Archduchess his wife, and the Russian Admiral, who all went forth to enjoy the satisfaction of an easy triumph over the poor little yacht. She is, in point of fact, stated to have been in the most imminent danger of capture. The Czar, however, was destined to be foiled in his anticipated little triumph, as he has already been foiled in his hopes of many a great one. An English war-steamer, seeing the danger to which the yacht was exposed, advanced with all speed to her relief. Shortly she obtained such a position that the English yacht was safe; and the only question that remained for discussion was one between the two small war-steamers—the one under English, the other under Russian colors. Could the English but have known the valuable freight which that little yacht contained, could the captain but have known that by capturing her, or sending her to the bottom, peace would have been restored to Europe, and probably a million of human lives, first and last, be saved, we have no doubt that he would have carried one or other of the alternatives into effect, even though his own destruction, that of his ship and of every soul on board of her had been the inevitable consequence. As it was, he saw nothing before him but a little trumpery steamer—he had carried his purpose of relieving the English yacht into effect—and remembered orders which certainly had been issued, to the effect that no English ship, upon the mere heroic impulse of her commander, should be thrust into the lion's mouth. We have no doubt that this was so, and that when the English Captain gave his orders for putting the head of his steamer round, he did so with the feeling that he had very satisfactorily discharged the duty with which he had been intrusted. Little did he suppose, at the moment, that he had lost probably the greatest opportunity for obtaining personal distinction which had ever been thrown in the way of a single man. The English nation venerate the name of Lord Nelson for the sake of certain little affairs in which he was engaged off Cape St. Vincent, at the Nile, at Copenhagen, at Trafalgar, and elsewhere, but not all of these wonderful, important and heroic achievements combined, would have had such an important influence on the history of the world, as the capture of that little Russian ship. It was given to the captain of a small steamer to change the face of Europe in ten minutes well employed, but in pure innocence he missed the chance.

☞ It is seldom, in modern warfare, still more rarely in naval warfare, that monarchs themselves run any danger of capture. Napoleon, to be sure, at Arcis-sur-Aube, was compelled to cross swords with a swad of Cossacks in the twilight, but he was after all a General, not a King, by trade. If we remember right, upon one occasion poor old George III was in danger of capture from a French privateer off Weymouth, and was only saved by some marine chance which has slipped from our recollection.

In medieval history there are, of course, the cases familiar to every school-boy of King John of France at Poitiers, and of Francis I after Pavia. But what comparison would there have been between the case of the Black Prince sailing on a mediæval King, and who went to battle in a coat of mail, and the grand surprise of the Russian Czar landing at Portsmouth—no at New Haven—while all Europe was in commotion upon his account? We are, of course, speculating upon history of a very hypothetical character; but still the event did so nearly occur as to justify speculation upon its consequences. In our mind's eye we can see Lords Aberdeen and John Russell communicating the information to the Houses in their own dry and cautious manner. What would Messrs. Bright and Cobden have said? What would Col. Sibthrop have said? The newsmen would have gone bellowing the information about the streets, and their cries would have been regarded by the testy old gentlemen in Belgravia but as mere lessings for the sake of deceiving the lieges and interfering with their digestive functions. What should we have done with the Czar, when we had got him? Reckless, unprincipled and merciless as he has shown himself to be, we should have been anxious to treat him like a gentleman, and make him comfortable during his sojourn among us. But at Berlin and Potsdam! let us suppose the information to have been brought in while the glasses were well charged with champagne, and the King and his Russian friends were devising a fresh counter proposition to the counter-counter-proposition which had emanated from the Bamberg Conference. The Czar is taken!—he lain England, he is in the Tower—he is pretty well after the voyage—as easy in his mind as can be expected, but he was very sea sick. What would the good folks in Wurtemberg and Bavaria, who have bedizened their coats with Russian ribands and orders, have made of the intelligence—and M. Marzial and the Italian Reds? There is the Emperor of Austria, too, busy with his levies, and rejoicing at his loan, which would have given him still higher gratification when he came to reflect that, the war being at an end, he was at liberty to apply the proceeds to other purposes. There are, however, two sets of people whose acts we should have been most desirous to behold, as the fact of the capture was forced upon their convictions. We should have liked to been in Cronstadt while the Czar was steamed away under the eyes of the garrison. Next to this, which would perhaps have been the most interesting point of observation, it would have been most peculiarly delightful to stroll through the Bazar at Constantinople, and listen to the gossip of the old Turks, when they were at last convinced that their old enemy the Czar was really within the grasp of the allied powers—a prisoner of war.

On the political consequences of such an event we must scarcely venture to speculate. The imagination of the historian who is called upon to write the history of its events which did not occur may fairly recoil from the magnitude of the subject. Little petty questions, such as those connected with the Sulina months of the Danube, the navigation of the Black Sea, the freedom of the Circassian mountaineers, the restoration of Finland to Sweden, etc., sinks into comparative insignificance by the side of the chapter which might have been written on the result of the Czar's yachting expedition till Cronstadt. The wonder of it is that all this time we are not dealing with a fable nor with the result of a drunkard's inspiration, but with sober and serious fact. The Czar of Russia, the Archduke Constantine, and the Archduchess, were the other day as near capture and transmission to England as it is possible to be without having actually incurred such a catastrophe. Such is life and history, such a strange mixture of chances and improbabilities! What an end to the Russian war; and to think, in all soberness of thought, that it might really have come to pass, had the captain of a little English steamer known who was on board of the little Russian steamer the other day off Cronstadt.

THE ALBATROSS.

The Courier and Enquirer is publishing a series of highly interesting sketches from George W. Peck, enthor of "Melbourne and the Chinchin Islands," who is at present rusticating in Massachusetts, somewhere in the neighborhood of Cape Cod or Nantucket. In one of these letters he gives the following poetic description of the Albatross—the best and most picturesque we have ever read—and truthful withal:

"One fine afternoon when our ship with her crowd of passengers was in the Southern Atlantic, or, more properly, the Southern Indian Ocean, and farther to the Southward than the tracks of most vessels, being, as I remember, in latitude as high as 45 deg., the Albatross came about us in unusual numbers. The weather was light, the bird eager for slush or any thing that fell from the ship, and our passengers eager for sport, it being the first week after we had got into the bird latitudes. The mate, who had the deck, was willing, (probably with the Captain's knowledge) to indulge them. Fastening a large hook to a spare log line, and baiting it with a big piece of pork, he soon had a victim out of the flocks that were following close astern, and landed him, not without assistance, over the taffrail upon the poop. We were all astonished at his size, which was so much larger than appeared from the deck, and as may be supposed, I had a peculiar curiosity respecting the bird of 'The Ancient Mariner.'

The Albatross is the most poetic object on the ocean. There is nothing in all nature so noble free, ethereal, spiritual—nothing animate, that so brings the sense of infinity and mystery and boundless space into the daylight. His home is in the Southern oceans, below twenty degrees south of the line. Here he ranges alone or in company, over wastes of water that it takes fast ships from forty-five to sixty days to sail across. His flight is not high; it is long low swings, a mile or two each way. Except in alighting and and getting under weigh again, he rarely moves his wings, only sometimes giving a few grand strong flaps; then sailing away, now on one side, now on the other, now far astern, and again across the ships bows; he may be watched in any weather, going over a hundred miles of distance to the ship's one. No gain beside him to leeward, so calm leesens the swiftness with which he "shaves with level wing the deep." Sometimes there come hundreds of this kind at once, at others I have watched a solitary one for days together. I never saw one slight except to pick up something which had fallen or was thrown from the ship. Their alighting and rising is goose-like and ungraceful, but once afloat, their motions have an almost supernaturally sublime beauty. It is possible they may sleep at night on the waves, but we never fell in with them as we did with Cape Pigeons, in the dark. I have thought I could perceive when the latter were tired, after several days of rough weather, but never the Albatross.

"On a ship's deck they are powerless, except to bite with their streng hooked bills. So far from being able to perch on mast or shroud, they are web-footed, and cannot fly from the deck or even stand upon it, except momentarily. Their plumage is white, spotted, often most beautifully, with various shades of brown and black. Fifteen feet is a low average for their stretch of wing. Some that we caught measured more than this, and I heard of one being taken that reached twenty-two. The expression of their eyes as they look around them, helpless on the deck, is that which might be ascribed to a proud, noble woman, made the mock of pirates. Nothing not human ever wore a look so high, so imploring, yet so dauntless. I confess that it filled me with grief and anger, and shame for my species, to see the captives abused by dogs and men more cruel than dogs. I knew them to be stupid foolish birds, intent only on filling their stomachs with disgusting garbage, and cruel even to eat each other, tearing and devouring a disabled one that may be thrown to them, without mercy. Yet I could not bear to see our 'enterprising young gentlemen' cut off their wings to make pipe-stems of the little bones, and skinning their feet for purses, while the poor, ignorant things were alive. I felt the superstition of the poem, though among sailors, there is not only no such superstition, but the birds are regarded as fair game. A retired whaling captain told me that once in the South Pacific, when it was blowing fresh, the parral of a yard on which were seven men, gave way, and the yard swung to the leeward, precipitating the men into the sea. He said the gonies had them before a boat could reach them. They saw them from the deck pick at them as they were swimming, and when the boat reached the place, there were traces of blood on the water. The blood might have been occasioned by the fall, and the birds attracted by that, or only by curiosity."

In Boaden's Life of John Philips Kemble is the following curious account of an attempt half a century ago upon the life of George the Third, King of England. The intention appears to have been rather more murderous than was that of Jeffards when he discharged the hard boiled egg at the head of Frank Pierce the First:

"But I am now to speak of an event, so horrible in its nature, so surprising in all its circumstances, so perfectly without a motive, and yet so transcendent in its mischief, that I need these few lines of preparation to assume the proper tone for a detail so unparalleled. On the 15th day of May, 1800, the into amiable sovereign, George the Third, upon his entrance into the royal box at Drury Lane Theatre, was fired at by a frantic miscreant in the pit, with a pistol loaded with two slugs. And on the same day, His Majesty, in the morning, attending the field exercises of the grenadier battalion of the Guards in Hyde Park, a gentleman named Dingley, standing in the direction, and not twenty yards from the royal person, was shot by a ball fired from the musket of some soldier in the ranks unknown. I put the two events together, because, in all probability, they were instantly associated in the royal mind; and His Majesty must have conceived, that some assassins that day were taking every means to destroy him. The King, upon hearing the report of the pistol, stood firm, at about four paces in advance from the door of the box; but amid the alarm and horror, and the thousand voices that called to seize the assassin, with the self possession that became a sovereign, perhaps expecting to have a second shot fired in the tumult from some other quarter, His Majesty calmly advanced to the very front of the box, where he remained, as such a man only could be, perfectly undismayed. Upon seeing the Queen enter, he at first with his hand waived her back; but upon her enquiring what was the matter, the King considerately replied "only a squib! they have been firing squibs." After the assassin, across the orchestra, had been taken out of the pit, the Queen, in great agitation, came forward and curtsied, and asked His Majesty, "whether they should stay?" His answer was, "We will not stir; we will stay the whole of the entertainments."

"The Princesses, in their alarm, fainted, except the Princess Elizabeth, whose more powerful nerves enabled her to assist in their recovery. The heroism of their Sovereign, and his escape, exalted the joy of the people to rapture; and, it was with no common feelings that the national anthem was delivered. God had indeed that day saved the King.

"James Hadfield, the assassin, was about 29 years of age, had served on the Continent under H. R. H. the Duke of York, who remembered him in the 15th Dragoons, as one of his orderlies. On the 26th of the following month, this man's trial for high treason took place, before Lord Kenyon. It was what is termed a trial at bar in the Court of King's Bench. Mr. Erskine was assigned to him for counsel; and whether with respect to his stating the law upon the case, or his elucidations of mental aberration, his speech was among the most interesting efforts of his powerful talent. When he called his witnesses, such a stream of facts, that could not have been colored for the purpose, flowed in full conviction of the prisoner's insanity, that, by Lord Kenyon's direction, and Mr. Attorney General's entire concurrence, the jury, without retiring, recorded a verdict of 'Not guilty.' He was of course taken proper care of for his life.

"The dreadful wounds which he had received in the service had injured the brain, and produced, at various times, very alarming results. When not in the paroxysm of his disorder, the man gentle, kind and industrious; but he had tried to bayonet the preserver of his life in 1796, and attempted to murder his infant child but two days before his attack upon the person of the King. Yet of his child he was doatingly fond, and he never mentioned His Majesty without blessings, because it was from his bounty he derived his pension.

"I wish to make but one reflection upon this business, and I could have desired it to come with all the authority of the seat of Justice. It is this; that when the relatives of persons acting in the manner of Hadfield, pass over the ravings or the violence of their lunacy, satisfied with an interval of calmness, a glimpse of returning reason, and allow such unhappy beings to be the actual masters of their conduct, they incur a fearful responsibility indeed before God and man. It is not a matter for their speculation or indulgence—they are bound to ask the judgment and the aid of a branch of the profession of the highest importance in society, and whose sindies lie in that region of our structure, which, all, all of it 'fearfully and wonderfully made,' is there more peculiarly wonderful and to feared.

"It is hardly of consequence to inquire the motive that frenzy assigns for an act so atrocious; but Hadfield was possessed with an opinion that it was proper he himself should die. Suicide, as he conceived, would rob him of decent burial; he therefore, without intending the death of the King, fired into his box, knowing that the deliberate attempt alone was sufficient to bring about that death, which he persuaded himself was necessary to society. Before the exact state of the man could be known, (for the Attorney-General did not know it even upon the trial,) the King, as I heard, entertained some notions of systematic violence; because, he said, 'If with my family I cannot enjoy my amusements in the midst of my people, let them take my life, for existence is not worth holding upon such conditions.'"

FALLING IN LOVE WITH A BONNET.—That was a very singular and amusing circumstance which happened several years ago near the town of Northampton, Massachusetts. It will strike the ladies, we think, as an instance of "popping the question" under difficulties:

As a party of pleasure were ascending Mount Tom a few days ago, a well-dressed man, furnished with a fishing tackle, accosted a lady, one of the party, who had loitered behind her companions to enjoy, without interruption, the beautiful scenery which lay along the rich valley of the Connecticut: "Good morning, madam," said the fisherman, touching his hat.

"Good morning, sir," replied the lady, with a dignity of manner which would have been considered perfect in the Court of Queen Elizabeth.

"It is a fine morning," continued the gentleman. "I saw your bonnet at the foot of the hill, and I thought I should like to marry the lady who wore that bonnet. It struck my fancy, and I walked up here to ask if you would like to enter the blessed state with me."

The lady was somewhat startled at the abruptness of this proposition, and her first impulse was to hurry on to her companions; but her dignity and self-possession prevailed, and she quietly turned to the stranger and said: "This is a very serious proposal to come from one whom I have never seen, and one who has never seen me before."

"But I have seen your bonnet," said he, "and I know you will suit me. I have money and a good house at the foot of yonder hill. My wife and children are dead. I am all alone. If you outlive me, you shall have all my property. I have just got a new grave-stone for the grave of my wife, for which I gave $20! I buy all my things for the house by the quantity. You shall be well provided for in every thing. I don't think you could do better."

The lady had seen much of the world—had held command in the fashionable circles of the South—and "the chivalry" had bended the knee to her beauty and accomplishments, and she learned to the intelligence and cultivation of her mind. She had sailed triumphant and unconquered every where, and to be thus waylaid and as it were entrapped into matrimony, was a thing not to be thought of for a moment; and so the raised her form to more than its usual height, and giving additional dignity to her head, she bowed "good-by" to the fishing widower, she left him to bestow himself and his grave-stones upon some one else!

Messrs. Robt. J. Walker and T. Butler King, who recently concluded the Texas contract on the Pacific Railroad, are at present in Montgomery, Ala. A meeting of the Directors of the road is to be held in that place on the first Monday in December.

A DARING EXPLOIT.—One day last week after the spires of the new Presbyterian church were raised, one of the hands, Mr. H Gifford mounted to the top, a distance of one hundred and twenty feet, putting a large iron over the timbers to hold them together, after which Mr. Dennis Van Buskirk climbed to the top and stood erect on the ends of the timbers, a space less than a foot in measurement, and deliberately lighted and smoked a cigar apparently with as little concern as though he were on the foundation of the church itself. [Ishaca Chronicle.

Grasshoppers are very thick, and are proving exceedingly destructive in Chautauque—at least, we judge they are, from the following story told us by a farmer of that county, whom we saw a few days since at Dunkirk. Said he, "This spring, as an experiment, I devoted about about an acre of land to tha growth of tobacco. The crop did finely, and in a short space of time the plants had attained to the height of nearly five inches. Business called me to Buffalo. I was gone just two days; but in that brief period, every vestige of my tobacco was destroyed by the grasshoppers; and, sir, incredible as it may seem, one large, hungry-looking specimen of the marauders, which I saw sitting upon a stump as I entered the field, actually had the audacity to ask me for the chew I had in my mouth!" [Cattsraugus Whig.

☞ We are again publishing advertisements of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. This medicine is taking a very strong hold upon the good opinion of the people. It is regarded generally as a most excellent remedy for Pulmonary Complainte, Coughs and Colds.

Having found it an excellent medicine, we cheerfully endorse it. [Miscellany, Detroit.

Dissolution.

THE firm of McGINNIS & CARVER is this day dissolved by mutual consent. H. D McGinnis is alone authorised to use the name of the firm in liquidation.

H. D. McGINNIS,
THOS. J. CARVER.

New Orleans, August 26, 1854.

H. D. McGINNIS will continue the Book and Stationery business at the old stand, 36 Camp street, where he would be pleased to see his friends and those of the late firm.

H. D. McGINNIS.

New Orleans, August 26, 1854. sep2-1m

New Books.

JUST received by
H. D. McGINNIS, No. 36 CAMP STREET:
Notes of a Theological Student: By James Mason Hoppin.
—Also—
Sandwich Island Notes: By A. Haole.
Dr. Ollins' Works; 4 vols.
Katharine Ashton: By the author of Amy Herbert.
The Experience of Life, etc. etc. A most charming book.
Our Parish; or, Annals of Pastor and People.
A popular account of the Ancient Egyptians; revised and abridged from his larger work: by Sir J. Gardner Wilkinson, D. C. L., F. R. S., etc.; in 2 vols., with five hundred Engravings.
Together with many other New Works of interest. All the new works of merit received as soon as issued from the press.
H. D. McGINNIS.
Sept. 2, 1854. 1m 36 Camp street.

To Country Merchants.

H. D. McGINNIS, No. 36 CAMP STREET, would respectfully call the attention of Country Merchants and others visiting BOOKS and STATIONERY to call again—to his extensive assortment of School Books of every description. Also, a large supply of French, English, and American STATIONERY; BLANK BOOKS of all kinds; and in fact, every article found in a Book or Stationery establishment.

All of which he offers exceedingly low to those wishing to buy to sell again, as his object is to make his business a wholesale business.

Country Merchants laying in their fall stocks, will save money by giving him a call.

H. D. McGINNIS,
Sept. 2, 1854. tf 36 Camp street.

Franklin Female College.

HOLLY SPRINGS, MISSISSIPPI.

THE Fall Session of this Institution will commence on the first Monday in September. The buildings during the vacation will be extensively refitted. With a complete apparatus, an abundant supply of musical instruments, a large and able Faculty, and unwearied exertions, our patrons may be assured that every thing shall be done to sustain the stand which we have taken, to make the course of education as thorough in this as it is in our best male colleges.

Holly Springs is noted for its excellent society, the purity of its air and water, and its constant salubrity. It is now within half a day's travel, by railroad and stage, from Memphis, and it is believed that by the first day of January next the railroad connection between the two places will be completed.

Parents and guardians are referred to the preachers of the Memphis Conference, to the Board of Trustees, to Rev. C. K. Marshall, of Vicksburg, Rev. R. Abbey, of Yazoo City, Rev. Bishop Paine, of Aberdean, Rev. J. E. Cobb and S. Watson, of Memphis, for any information they may desire.

S. G. STARKS,
Holly Springs, Miss.
Sept 2 6w

Chunnynuggee Female College.

The next Session will commence on the second Monday in July, and close on the first Wednesday in December.

FACULTY:
REV. W. H. ELLISON, D.D., President.
JOHN F. ELLISON, A. B.
Miss F. OMALINE BATTLE, Primary Department.
Mrs. EUGENIA RUTHERFORD, Instructress in Music.
Competent Teachers in the departments of French, Drawing, Painting, etc., will be provided.

RATES OF TUITION PER SESSION OF FIVE MONTHS:

Primary Department	$10 00
First, Sophmore and Middle Classes, each	18 00
Junior and Senior Classes, each	22 50
Music—Piano or Guitar	20 00
Use of Instruments	6 00
Latin, Greek, French, or German, each	10 00
Drawing, Painting, or Embroidery, each	12 50
Wax Work, per Lesson	1 00
Incidental Expenses	1 00

☞ One half the tuition to be paid in advance.

Board can be had at from $10 to $12, including Washing, Lights, etc.

The College is located upon Chunnynuggee Ridge, Macon county, Alabama, in the midst of an intelligent community. It has recently been provided with a new Philosophical and Chemical Apparatus, adequate to all the purposes of instruction; and no pains will be spared to secure the application of the best and most approved means of developing and training the mind. The President having been for twelve years in charge of the Female College, Macon, Georgia, the Trustees entertain no doubt, from his past success, of his entire ability to make this equal to any school of the same grade in the country.

A tri-weekly line of stages from Eufaula to the Montgomery and West Point Railroad, and semi-weekly line from Columbus, Ga., to Chunnynuggee, make it accessible from all points.

RICHARD H. POWELL,
President of the Board of Trustees.
Chunnynuggee, Ala. [illegible]—1y 16 6m

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL

FOR THE CURE OF
COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS,
BRONCHITIS, WHOOPING COUGH,
CROUP, ASTHMA AND CONSUMPTION.

AMONG the numerous discoveries Science has made in this generation to facilitate the business of life, increase its enjoyment, and even prolong the term of human existence, none can be named of more real value to mankind than this combination of Chemistry to the Healing Art. A vast trial of its virtues throughout this broad country, has proven beyond a doubt, that no medicine or combination of medicines yet known, can so surely control and cure the numerous varieties of pulmonary disease which have hitherto swept from our midst thousands and thousands every year. Indeed, there is now abundant reason to believe a Remedy has at length been found which can be relied on, to cure the most dangerous affections of the Lungs. Our space here will not permit us to publish any proportion of the cures effected by its use, but we would present the following, and refer further inquiry to my American Almanac, which the agent below named will always be pleased to furnish free, wherein are full particulars, and indisputable proof of these statements.

Office of Transportation, Laurens R. R.,
August 4, 1853.

J. C. AYER—Dear Sir: My little son, four years old, has just recovered from a severe attack of malignant Scarlet Fever, his throat was rotten, and every person that visited him pronounced him a dead child. Having used your CHERRY PECTORAL in California, in the winter of 1850, for a severe attack of Bronchitis, with entire success, I was induced to try it on my little boy. I gave him a teaspoonful every three hours, commencing in the morning, and by ten o'clock at night I found a decided change for the better; and after three days' use, he was able to eat and drink without pain.

Its use in the above-named disease will save many a child from a premature grave, and relieve the anxiety of many a fond parent. For all affections of the Throat and Lungs, I believe it the best medicine extant. A feeling of the deepest gratitude prompts me in addressing you these lines; but for your important discovery, my little boy would now have been in another world.

I am yours, with great respect,
J. B. POWELL, Supt. Trans., L. R. R.

Rock Hill, Somerset Co., N. J., July 21, 1852.

DR J. C. AYER: Since your medicine has became known here, it has a greater demand than any cough remedy we have ever sold. It is spoken of in terms of unmeasured praise by those who have used it, and I know of some cases where the best they can say of it, is not too much for the good it has done. I take pleasure in selling it, because I know that I am giving my customers the worth of their money, and I feel gratified in seeing the benefit it confers.

Please send me a further supply, and believe me yours, with respect, JOHN C. WHITLOCK.

P. S. Almost any number of certificates can be sent you, if you wish it.

Prepared and Sold by
J. C. AYER, Chemist.
Lowell, Mass.

Sold by all Druggists.

J. WRIGHT & CO., New Orleans,
Sept. 2 3m Wholesale Agents.

Wesleyan Female College.

THE Eighteenth Annual Session of this Institution will begin on Monday, the 2d day of October next, under the following Board of Instruction, viz:

Rev. O. L. Smith, A. M., President, and Professor of Moral Philosophy and Belles-Lettres.
Rev. J. M. Bonnell, A. M., Prof. of Natural Science.
Rev. C. W. Smith, A. M., Prof. of Mathematics.
Rev. O. H. Hancock, A. M., Prof. of English and Latin Literature.
Mons. A. Reinehart (of Paris) Prof. of Modern Languages, and Instructor in Drawing and Painting.
Mr. P. O. Guttenberger, Prof. of Music.
Miss Francesca Guttenberger, Assistant in Music.
Mrs. Susan S. Hancock, Assistant in Literary Department.
Madame Reinehart, Instructress in Ornamental Department.
Mr. Robt. H. Clayton and Lady, Steward's Department.

Two hundred dollars will be about the expenses of a pupil boarding in the Institution, who pursues only the regular course, which embraces Latin and French. Extra charges only for Music and the Ornamental branches.

For further particulars, address any member of the Faculty.

C. W. SMITH, Sec'y.
Macon, Ga., Sept. 2, 1854 4t

Pickensville Female Institute.

R. BRADSHAW, A. M., PRINCIPAL.

THE next regular session of this Institution will, with a full corps of able and experienced Teachers, commence on Monday, the 2d of October. Catalogues containing every necessary information can be had by applying to the Principal.

PEYTON KING,
August 26-3t President Board of Trustees.

Hardinsburg Female High School.

Under the patronage of the
LOUISVILLE ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

Conducted by Rev. R. O GARDINER and LADY, Who are assisted by experienced Teachers of the very best qualifications for teaching both the solid and the ornamental branches, including the higher Mathematics, Ancient and the Modern Foreign Languages, Music, the various kinds of Drawing, Painting, Embroidery, etc.

Located in Hardinsburg, Breckenridge county, Kentucky—decidedly one of the most healthy places in the United States—convenient to a number of excellent mineral Springs; and of easy access, being but ten miles from the Ohio, at Cloverport, where conveyance at all times can be obtained.

The proprietor is determined this shall continue one of the best and cheapest Female Schools in the country. Situated where provisions are cheap and abundant; his buildings large and commodious; no rent to pay; he is prepared to accommodate a large number of boarders at $1 50 per week. Tuition, exclusive of the languages and the ornamental branches, from $7 to $12 per session of five months. Music $18 per session. Use of instrument $2. All other charges equally low.

One half of the price of board and tuition required in advance. The Sessions will commence the first Monday of September and February. aug. 19, '29

Alabama Centenary Institute.

THE EXERCISES of this long established and popular institution will commence on

THE FIRST MONDAY OF OCTOBER NEXT.

FACULTY....FEMALE COLLEGE.
Rev. A. H. MITCHELL, D.D., President and Professor of Mental and Moral Science
Rev. D. F. LAMARCHE, Professor of Mathematics and Belles Lettres.

....., Professor of the Natural Sciences.
Mons. JULES RAMY, Member of the Royal Academy of Paris, Professor of Music and French.
Mrs. LUCINDA FERGUSON, Assistant Teacher of Music.
Miss ELLEN E. LAMARCHE, Teacher of Drawing and Painting.

MALE DEPARTMENT.
Rev. E. B. PITTS, A. M., Principal.
JOHN T. BONNELIN, A. M., Associate.
PREPARATORY SCHOOL.
THOS. C. BRAGG, A. M., Principal.
Assistant.

This institution is situated in Summerfield, Alabama—as healthy a location, we believe, as there is in all the South. It is under the guidance and instruction of an able and experienced Faculty. No one of the Professors or Teachers, whose names appear above, needs the support of a recommendation.

Heretofore all the departments have been under the superintendence of Dr. Mitchell; but it has been thought best by the Trustees and Faculty to place each department under a separate jurisdiction. Accordingly, Dr. Mitchell will hereafter devote his whole time and his distinguished talents to the Female College. With him will be associated three experienced Professors, and as many Ladies as the circumstances may require.

One of the Professorships is now vacant, but it is certain to be filled before the beginning of the ensuing session, by some gentleman of established reputation.

The Trustees most confidently invite a comparison of the advantages thus presented to parents for the education of their daughters, with those afforded by any Female College in the South.

The Male Academy, under the direction of Professor Pitts, aided by Professor Dunklin, (and others if necessary,) cannot fail to secure and retain a large share of the public patronage.

The Preparatory School has been placed under the charge of Professor Bragg, in order that the children may be properly trained and prepared to enter the higher departments of the institute. A new building for it is already under contract. The buildings of the Female College are also being greatly enlarged and improved. Some ten or twelve thousand dollars will be expended in perfecting and furnishing them.

The Trustees and friends of the institute have resolved to leave nothing undone to place it above every similar institution in the country.

B. J. HARRISON, Secretary of the Board.

N. B.—The Trustees have thought proper, from motives of economy, to require the young ladies to dress in uniform, except in the school-room, and strictly forbid the wearing of any jewelry, except a plain breastpin.

The uniform for winter is green worsted; for summer, white muslin. aug5—6m26

Marion Female Seminary,

MARION, PERRY COUNTY, ALA.

THE EXERCISES of this institution will be resumed on Monday, the 2d day of October, under the charge of the Rev. Jas. K. Armstrong, as Principal, assisted by nine Professors, Teachers and Officers.

It has just closed its present session with one hundred and thirty-three students, seventy-seven of which number were boarders. There is but one session of nine and a half months.

Pupils can enter at any time during the session, chargeable from the beginning of the month in which they commence, to the close of the session. No deduction will be made but at the discretion of the Principal.

The Principal, with his family, resides in the building. The female teachers also reside in the Seminary. Boarders in the institution are under the control of the Principal at all times. A Steward, in the employment of the Principal, of experience, urbanity of manners, and faithfulness to his duties, a Matron who constantly and kindly ministers to the private wants of young ladies, and especially in sickness, a Governess who directs them in their exercises and amusements, superintends the order of their private apartments, instructs them in certain domestic duties, and guards their private, personal habits, manners and morals, always aided by the presence and active cooperation of the female teachers. The Principal and his lady secure to those committed to their charge every necessary and proper comfort and kindness. Here they are constantly exercised under a wholesome system of regulations respecting neatness, order, punctuality and economy. They have regular hours for study and recreation, for rising and retiring, for eating, domestic duties, and social enjoyment among themselves.

The institution is furnished with a new and superior apparatus in the departments of Chemistry, Natural Philosophy and Astronomy. There is also a large collection of Maps, Charts, Plates, Diagrams, Globes, etc., for simplifying the principles of Geography, Physiology and Astronomy.

In the department of Drawing, Painting and Embroidery there is a fine collection of Drawing Cards, Engravings, Fixtures, Paintings, Patterns, and every other convenience important in the prosecution of these departments.

There is in connection with the institution a Library of more than one thousand volumes, and a Cabinet of several hundred specimens.

The institution is furnished with six Pianos, five Guitars, and one Harp.

MUSIC.—The Professor at the head of this department is equal to any in the country. He is a superior vocalist, a fine performer on the Piano, Harp, Guitar, Violin, Violoncello, etc. He has enjoyed ten years experience as a teacher of music in the best institutions in the Union, is profoundly versed in the principia of harmony, and is a real amateur of the sublime science to which he has devoted himself.

LOCATION.—Its salubrity, intelligence, morality and public spirit are unsurpassed.

PERMANENCY.—Parents may send their daughters here with confidence in their completing their education under the same course of instruction and system of discipline. Every thing comspires to make the permanency of the Principal a matter of duty, pleasure and interest.

TEACHERS.—The Principal, himself a native of Alabama, surrounds himself with a corps of teachers of known efficiency and tried success, nearly all of whom have been reared in the South, thus ensuring a better acquaintance with Southern peculiarities and sympathy with Southern views and interests. Thoroughness is our motto in teaching. We ascribe the true importance to the harmonious development of the physical, intellectual and moral nature.

Reports are sent to patrons once every two months, which are a faithful showing of the scholarship and conduct of the pupil. In our system of merits and demerits scholarship and conduct are connected.

The Principal regards it as his most important duty to attend to the moral habits of his pupils and to imbuing their minds with proper religious principles.

The facilities for acquiring the French and other modern languages are superior.

There are daily exercises in Orthography, Reading and Writing. Great attention is bestowed on letter-writing and composition.

Lectures are delivered weekly to the junior and senior classes on various subjects of Science and Literature, on which they take notes and are subsequently examined.

The Principal will be assisted in the collegiate department, the ensuing session, by a gentleman, a Professor of long experience, of the ripest scholarship, and the most superior qualifications as a teacher. He will take charge of the department of Mathematics and some of the higher English branches, and the control of the main study hall.

Vis

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Publishing Committee Louisiana Conference, { J. C. KEENER, D. D., L. PARKER, J. B. WALKER.

H. N. McTYEIRE, EDITOR.

J. HAMILTON, D. D., T. W. DORMAN, W. MURRAH. } Publishing Committee Alabama Conference.

VOL. IV. NO. 32. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 9, 1854. WHOLE NO. 188.

From the Christian Advocate and Journal.

A CLASS-MEETING SONG.

Air—Ingleside.

'Tis good to see the forest bow
Before its passing God!
To hear the torrent's rushing flow,
The anthem of the flood!

And sweet from sunny fields to note
The rustling praise ascend,
Where playful zephyrs gently float,
And waving harvests bend.

And sweet the song of summer bird;
And sweet the insect call;
And sweet to know their voice is heard
By Him who loves them all.

But sweeter far with them to meet
Whom Jesus calls his own—
To gather round the Master's feet,
And be in spirit one.

One song of praise, one voice of prayer,
One bounding pulse of joy,—
One faith, one hope, one portion fair,
Our ravish'd hearts employ.

O, God of love, meet with us here;
Touch our cold lips with fire;
Bid sin and sorrow disappear,
And heavenly hope inspire.

Talk with us, Lord! and let our hearts
With new devotion glow,
While Christ His boundless love imparts
And makes these rocks to flow.

And when we part, go with us, Lord—
Our coward fears allay;
To all thy mighty aid afford,
And cheer the pilgrim's way.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

EARLY MISSISSIPPI METHODISTS.

THOMAS GIBSON—LORENZO DOW—THE OLD MEETING HOUSE IN WASHINGTON—MEAD AND POINDEXTER—A DUELIST—DR. WILLIAMS—MILES HARPER—THOMAS GRIFFIN—ORIGINAL LETTER—SLAVERY AND SLAVEHOLDERS—NORTHERNERS IN THE SOUTH.

MR. EDITOR,—In a late number of the Advocate there was an allusion to Natchez as one of the points in the Southwest where the first efforts of the Methodists were made, and to the probability that many reminiscences, interesting and instructive, might there be collected.

The earliest recollection that I have of Methodism, begins with an old brick meeting house in the village of Washington, six miles east of Natchez. It was built mainly by the efforts of the Rev. Tobias Gibson, who had removed to the Mississippi Territory, then in the hands of the Spaniards, about the close of the Revolutionary war. He settled in the neighborhood of Natchez, subsequently moved to Jefferson and Claiborne counties, but during the last years of his life resided in Warren, where he died some years ago, at an advanced age, leaving a numerous family, all, I believe, in connection with the Church. His connections and descendants, consisting of the Gibsons, Fosters, Newmans, Lums, Gillespies, Smiths, Collins, Harrisons, etc. etc., are scattered all over Mississippi and Louisiana, and have for half a century been the props of Methodism in these two States. He was an apostolic-looking man, realizing my idea of St. John the Baptist, and was remarkable for his singular mildness, his persuasive powers, good sense and perseverance.

In that old meeting house I heard, when a child, the celebrated Lorenzo Dow, who preached then, punctually to the minute, in pursuance of an appointment he had made some five or six years previous. On that previous visit he had contributed one hundred dollars to the building of the meeting house.

Washington was then the seat of the territorial government, and in the old meeting house sat the Convention that framed a Constitution for the State on its admission into the Union. It was presided over by Cowles Mead, a man of much celebrity in his day, and George Poindexter, familiarly called the "Devil's Darning Needle," was the leading member of it. He had some years before killed Abijah Hunt, of Natchez, in a duel, and was ever after so much under the influence of remorse, conscience or fear, that he would not sleep in an apartment by himself. Twenty years after that duel, the writer of this conducted him to the chamber in which he had slept on the night that Hunt expired, and he turned pale, and staggered back, exclaiming, "not here! not here!" He was a man, as you know, of transcendent ability; ranked in both houses of Congress in the first class; died recently at Jackson, in this State; and, it is to be hoped, had made his peace with God.

The first camp-meeting I ever attended was in the Foster settlement, Adams county, and the preachers whom I remember are Tobias Gibson, Miles Harper, Thomas Griffin, and William Winans. The latter was then recently from Indiana—a tall, thin, raw-boned and awkward young man—arrayed in homespun pants, with a long, brown, straight-breasted coat, no neck handkerchief, and a coarse pair of boots. There was nothing prepossessing about him, and nothing to remark but his small, burning eyes that glowed like coals of fire. His manner then was, as it is now—slow, deliberative, self-possessed; but the first sentence he uttered arrested the attention of the audience, and told that he was no ordinary man. He has since become one of the most eminent divines of the age; as a logician without a peer; as a preacher speaking with the spirit and power of an evangelist of old. On a future occasion I will send you an elaborate portraiture of this venerable friend and guardian of my boyhood.

Miles Harper and Thomas Griffin were brothers-in-law, having married daughters of one of the patriarchs of the Church, sisters of your eloquent friend, the Rev. Mr. Ford, of Clinton, and of that accomplished gentleman and enlightened philosopher, Judge Ford, of Marion county. They were both then young men, and used to "hunt in couples," as often as circuit duties permitted; and it was seldom they failed to "trap their game." I often heard them during a period of twenty years; and as camp-meeting and revival preachers, I never met their superiors. They were both men of striking physiognomy, of rough manners and severe aspect; often with a frown upon their brows; and full of pungent and sometimes very bitter satire. They had clear, powerful, stentorian voices, whose loudest tones would ring through the forest with terrible distinctness, and whose lowest notes were perfectly audible. Mr. Harper's voice was peculiarly remarkable, full of volume and melody. He had a sparkling eye; a smile, when he chose to smile, particularly persuasive; and a fund of anecdote at command which he brought to bear with great effect. Mr. Griffin was rather harsh and sardonic. He would make the congregation quail, and shrink and hide their heads with fear and shame, and then Harper would solace and comfort them, and inspire them with hope and confidence; and between the two, whenever they preached, a revival was sure to follow. Both these good men began life with no advantages of education or fortune; they were pioneer Methodists—saddle-bags preachers—the great instruments of civilization and Christianity. In the wilderness, by the torch of the camp-fire, on the circuit exposed to toil, privation and personal peril, they studied the Bible; and I doubt if any ever understood it better, or preached it with more effect. Mr. Harper died, not many years since, in the parish of Tensas, Louisiana, leaving there several sons, who inherit his talents and virtues. He was from my early boyhood, my constant friend and adviser; and I pay with gratitude this passing tribute to his memory.

The last time I saw the Rev. Mr. Griffin, was in 1836, at his own home, in the county of Madison, surrounded by a charming family, and with a fine plantation. Whether he still survives, I do not know. If alive, I wish him many long years of happiness; if dead, "a good man has gone to his reward." The last correspondence I had with him was in 1842, and his letter is so characteristic, and so appropos to events now occurring in the Northern States, and so full of warning and of wisdom, I transmit it to you for publication.

And with this, my reverend friend, I conclude my first sketch of the early Methdists of Mississippi.

JOHN BUNYAN.

LETTER

From Rev. Thomas Griffin to the Editor of the Natchez Free Trader.

MADISON COUNTY, 5th May, 1842.

MR. EDITOR,—In the language of Charles V, of Germany, I thought I had "grown old before my time." For several years I have been in private life, and was willing to let my body and name descend in silence to the grave, and I courted neither slab nor willow to tell where I lay. But you have deemed proper to draw me from my beloved retirement, and my name is in the Free Trader and the New Orleans Picayune; and yesterday I learned it was in another of the public prints! The reason I notice this, is because my words have been made to say what I never intended to say. The statement you have made is true in part. If you publish this, you will have the true state of the case. It is known to you that Missouri had formed a constitution and come forward for admission into the Union. It is too well known, the commotion and discussion this produced, for me to detail the cause. I passed through Washington city soon after this case was disposed of, but it was obvious the excitement had not subsided. On the 1st May, 1826, the Methodists held their General Conference in Baltimore. We had not been in session but a few days, when a resolution was introduced to prohibit slaveholders from filling official stations in the Church, in future. The delegates from some of the non-slaveholding States began to come down upon the subject, in a manner very new and unexpected. A man would have thought there was scarcely any crime on earth but slavery. A variety of new coined expressions were employed, to render those connected with slavery as ridiculous as possible. In fact, it appeared as if we, Southerners, would be blown away like chaff before the tempest. Dr. Capers, of South Carolina, made a powerful, sympathetic appeal. Some few others from the South made speeches. But they were too much like suppliants for my feelings. It was the first time I ever had a seat in so learned a body of men. Though not very old, I knew I was old enough to be wiser than I was. I was sensible of my defective education, and the few years of my ministerial action had been spent on the frontiers of the Union. But I knew that that was not the time to flinch from responsibility. If I had tried, I could not have made a set speech. It was neither more nor less than the vent of my natural feelings—an off-hand shot. I well remember the outlines and points I sprung upon them. Bishop Roberts was in the chair. I had spoken but a few words before there was a call, "Speak louder—speak louder!" With excited feelings, I told them if they would only be still, they should hear me. [Yes! and we warrant they did hear him, if they could hear thunder. Ens.]

I began by observing, "that I was willing to concede that I had lived longer than I had lived to profit, and many things had passed me unimproved. But among the few I had noticed, was Northern men coming to the South. Sir, said I, when they first came among us, it seems as if THEY could see us all damn'd and double-damn'd, ramm'd, cramm'd and jamm'd into a forty-six pounder, and blown into the fiery vaults of a deep damnation! Nay, pious zeal will not stop there. It seem they would get on their knees and invoke the thunder-bolts of an avenging God to sink our sin-murdered souls to the lowest Hell! But, in twelve months' time they become a little smoother on the subject, and if they contemplate a permanent stay—if they have either worth, merit or intrigue, they are sure to form alliances with our slave-holding families. We have young ladies in the South; charming ones, too: owning no slaves, and entirely unconnected with slavery. But Northern gentlemen always seem, some how or other, to see peculiar charms in those young ladies whose parents possess the largest number of "niggers." Who ever heard of a Mississippi Yankee fancying a girl that owned no slaves? Sir, if a stranger was in that gallery, he would conclude that we Southerners were a pack of cannibals, who kill and eat their slaves. We have heard much about blood-stained hands. I am almost startled, and look around for them. Where are they? I would ask a question—how came slaves in this country? Northern men, Northern money and Northern ships brought them to America. They kept them at home until they cut down their forests, and so exhausted their farms that they would scarcely grow a crop of sedge, and then, with shrewdness and foresight, peculiar to the North, they sent them to us on speculation, just as they sent us rum, and staves and wooden nutmegs. Our fathers gave them value received, and now we are to be condemned, without mixture of mercy, for holding the same property these Northerners once possessed. It is possible, should the period arrive in the South when our lands are worn out, and slaves become a bill of cost to us, we shall become very patriotic, moral and religious, like our Northern brethren, and wash our hands of slavery. We are told here that it is one of the most heaven-daring God-provoking, hell-deserving crimes, that man can commit. But I wonder, when Jesus Christ came from heaven to earth to set men right, that he did not touch the subject. I wonder that the Apostles, who denounced the smallest transgression, should have entirely passed over this enormous offence! And if it be offensive and sinful, I wish some one would just put their finger on the place in Holy Writ. We have no difficulty in pointing to the passages where slavery is recorded and sanctioned, and rules prescribed for the owner and the owned. We are told the time has come, that something must be done. The venerable man, whose remains lay under that pulpit, (Bishop Ashbury,) and Dr. Coke, thought so many years ago and made such a move as they thought prudence dictated, and what was the consequence? Laws were made more rigorous, and every avenue to information closed to the negro and white he remained in the same or a worse condition in body, his mind was void of that instruction that might have saved his soul from sin. That was the result of intermeddling. Some of our brethren seem to take pride that they labor in free communities. Sir, why this ministerial pride? What have the church or ministry done? Nothing, literally nothing. Policy and the Legislatures have, in all cases, moved in advance. The Church should stand aloof. In conclusion, Mr. President, I see there is strength enough in this assembly to pass any resolution they please. But here, in my place, as one of the representatives of Mississippi, I tell you I will never aid in executing it. And if the resolution should be adopted, you may send ship loads of Northern men to execute it, but permit me to say in advance, when ever they come to the South and meddle with Southern institutions, they will find their situations very delicate, if not perilous in the extreme."

This is the substance of what I said, though I may have said much more. Judge Lane of Vicksburg, was present and heard me. Mr. Editor, you make me say that at the close of an hour's speaking, I said they ought to be damned, etc., whereas you will see from the above, that I represented them as willing to see us damned, etc. I throw the mantle over your mistake, as no doubt you followed the best light you were possessed of. I should be willing that you give this a place in your paper, as it will correct the error. I have made many a rough speech in my time. For all the errors I have committed, I ask compassion of God and man; and if I have done no good, I carry with me into retirement a consciousness that I have wished to injure no man. Our actions are public property, but our conscience is private, which we may enjoy if it is what it should be. I should be glad if those prints that have transcribed the article from the Free Trader, would correct it, if in accordance with their feelings; if not, I shall not complain, as it is a trifle to what I have encountered. You will pardon me, Mr. Editor, for this long letter. That prosperity may accompany you in life, peace and quietude in death, and on the wings of seraphs may your flight be from a world of gloom to glory, is the sincere prayer of an old-fashioned Methodist Preacher.

THOMAS GRIFFIN.

WORLDLY PASTORS.

Do not some pastors neglect this part of ministerial labor, and thereby diminish their own influence, and bring discredit upon the office they hold? An omission on their part is more noticeable, and for that very reason more blameworthy than a similar neglect by a private Christian. A brief anecdote will illustrate. In conversation to-day with a man of business, I inquired, "How do you like your new minister?" "I like him well," was the reply. "He is smart in the pulpit, and smart out of it." He seems to be posted up in all sorts of business. He visited at my house the other afternoon, and we had a good deal of talk. He knows all about railroads, and where the good business locations are. He has a great notion of going West, because, he says, he can get twelve per cent. for his money there. But he did not say a word about religion all the afternoon." Whether pastoral visits of this character do good or hurt, deserves to be considered.

CHRISTIANITY alone can reconcile the two opposite qualities, self-abasement and elevation, lowliness and dignity, the being nothing and becoming every thing.

Can we silently bear, or ingeniously extenuate, the faults and mistakes of our own party, while we are all zeal and emotion to expose, censure, and condemn what is amiss in others?

When we first enter into the divine life, we purpose to grow rich; God's plan is to make us feel poor.

When a Christian goes into the world because he sees it in his call, yet, while he feels it also his cross, it will not hurt him.

A man, truly illuminated, will no more despise others than Bartemeus, after his own eyes were opened, would take a stick and beat every blind man he met.

I set no value upon any doctrinal truth, further than it has a tendency to promote practical holiness.

To be humble, and like a little child, afraid of taking a step alone, and so conscious of snares and dangers around us as to cry to Him continually to hold us up that we may be safe, is the sure, the infallible, the only secret of walking closely with Him.

Those who pray "Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive them that trespass against us," and yet are implacable, pray to be damned!

ON PREACHING.

The following article, on what preaching ought to be, is part of a "Letter from Virginia," which appeared in the N. York Daily Times:—

My idea is, that a Church is a place where a matter of overpowering interest is to be pressed upon the people. The object is to conquer—to persuade men to embrace the everlasting Gospel. And as a lawyer addresses a jury, or a politician the masses, so should a preacher bear down with his subject upon the minds of his hearers. Not in the cold and rigid fancies of a dead and lifeless essay—not in the decent phrases of an elegant and dainty moral dissertation, but "in demonstration of the Spirit and of power," as when a man grapples with a man, in the hour of danger, when forms and set-phrases and proprieties are forgotten, and the greatness and the necessity of the impending peril gathers over and swallows up every other object.

The lawyer pleading for his client—when the anxieties of his cause press upon him—forgets the fine fancies of his chamber, and throws off the paper containing his speech, and knowing his subject, understanding the evidence, understanding the facts, he pours forth from a living and breathing spirit the words and the thoughts that are warm and fervid, with the same emotions that are smouldering like a flame in the chambers of every heart. Eloquence must come right forth; it is like good ale; if you draw the stopper before the company assembles, its vitality is gone. It has the taste of ale, but the fire and spirit have left it.

The thing is very simple. Suppose I want my friend to go my security, or my father to give me a buggy, am I going to attack them with a formal harangue? You might as well enter a parlor on a pair of stilts, or in a straitjacket, and sit on the edge of your chair.

Would any advocate, urging a tribunal to spare the life of a man, pull an essay out of his pocket and read it to the judge? Would any stump speaker, trying to get votes, read the leader from a newspaper? Why, then, should the pulpit act differently? Its object is not to behave—it is to persuade. Talk to a man as you would talk to a friend. Take hold of him—close with him—don't stand off reading him a lecture.

In all of the Churches, also—and again more particularly in the Episcopal Church—as to the matter of the sermon, there is nothing of that special application of the utterances of the pulpit to secular or social matters which prevails to such a degree among a certain class [of lecturers] in New England and elsewhere. I think this is a fault. Not that the pulpit does not intimate Mr. Theodore Parker, who seems to convert it into a sort of intellectual gymnasium, or Mr. H. W. Beecher, who lectures exclusively on the subject of slavery; but I think the conservative ministry keeps too much aloof from every-day matters. I think our religion is our ethics—and it ought to teach ethics. I think the pulpit ought to tell the merchant that he is often dishonest; the lawyer, that he is often unsandid, unfair, knowingly a party to outrage and fraud; the editor, that he often advocates what he has no knowledge of, or opposes what he feels to be right; the politician, that he constantly violates every sentiment and principle of honor and self-respect, and knows it.

There is also in the pulpit—not the least so in the Presbyterian—a certain uniform, professional tone of the voice—a sort of funereal, dirge-like, nasal twang—which is wholly unnecessary. The minister should stand up and speak like a man. No whining—there is no occasion for it. He should speak in a natural tone, straight-forward and matter-of-fact. Alexander Campbell says: "Fellow-citizens!" it is the right note. The pulpit also ought not to smell too much of theology. I will be understood—I am not against having a theology, and a well-defined theology, but the language of the schools does not suit a mixed assembly.

To avoid mistake, also, I would not have it inferred that I argue against the preparation of sermons. I think they ought to be thoroughly prepared—written out, if you choose; but don't take them into the pulpit. Address your congregation as a lawyer addresses a jury. You know how you can best prepare for it; but when the speech comes, let it come fresh.

The great secret of eloquence is to be in earnest. Every man in earnest is eloquent. A drowning man is in earnest when he cries for help; a mother is in earnest when she pleads with a prodigal child. The orator must want what he pleads for; he must desire what he urges; he must vehemently desire it; it must be the burden of his soul; it must weigh upon his spirit; it must fill his heart. There is no foppery about the man under the influence of emotion; de minimis non curat; his eye is filled with his object, and, despising conventualities, he presses right upon it, in the simplicity, and majesty, and power of nature.

Surely, many a speaker is heavy and dull who has his subject at heart—who is in earnest about it—but such a one, in a simple and honest spirit, does not give the reins to his feelings; he is hampered by effort; he is trying to behave; he is not uttering the very thing that he really feels—he is smothering that—and talking like an icicle about something else. O, if he would let it out! with singleness of heart! without thinking of himself more than his subject! It is himself he cares for; he will be eloquent when his theme has overshadowed that!

And now, O man of God! if thou wouldst, in the fervor of thy heart, "save a soul from hell, and hide the multitude of sins," cry to Him as thou wouldst cry to thy brother when in the darkness and storm the merciless waves were pressing upon him!

DECISION AND TRUTH.

Whatever you think proper to grant a child, let it be granted at the first word, without entreaty or prayer; and, above all, without making conditions. Grant with pleasure; refuse with reluctance, but let your refusal be irrevocable; let no importunity shake your resolution; let the particle "no," when once pronounced, be a wall of brass, which a child, after he has tried the strength against it half a dozen times, shall never more endeavor to shake.

"THIS SAME JESUS."

O, it is blessed, when you feel very vile, to hide in Jesus, and though still as vile as ever in yourself, to say "Abba Father." In reading a chapter, the only part I could dwell on at that time was, "this same Jesus." It seemed so sweet to think that it is the same Jesus who was so lovely, so gentle, so full of sympathy on earth, who is now in heaven, "the friend of sinners," pleading for them at God's right hand; that it is the same sweet voice that on earth said to the troubled soul "Come unto me and I will give you rest." [BONAR.

"GOD OF MY MOTHER."

Rev. Charles Morgan, of East Troy, Wisconsin, in giving an account of a religious revival in that place, says:

An infidel of talent and respectability, under the power of truth, bowed upon his knees, and cried in agony:

"God of my mother, have mercy on me!"

His mother is a devoted Christian in the State of New York.

"God of my Mother!" How much is revealed in that single exclamation; how conclusively it proves that this man had a mother whose faithfulness left its impress on his soul too deep to be obliterated by time and sin.

THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

With all its wealth and honors, and advantages for progress, it has not life enough in its ministry and membership to keep pace with the dissenting Churches. The Church of England is no longer the Church of the majority in that country. This great argument in support of an established religion has been sweptaway by the more rapid growth and advancement of other denominations. The relative position of the establishment has been changed; its influence over the people is waning.

This is made very evident by the report of the Census of Public Religious Worship in England and Wales, recently published. In the facts stated in the report, a great change is foreshadowed in the ecclesiastical affairs of England. The call for terminating the unhallowed union of Church and State may at length become irresistible, and overturn the political foundation of English Episcopacy.

It appears by this document that the Established Church has attached to it 14,077 places of worship, and that all other religious sects have 20,390 chapels, making in all 34,467 places of public worship. Of the seven more numerous dissenting bodies, the number of chapels, is stated as follows:

Roman Catholics	570
Congregationalists	3,244
Baptists (all divisions)	2,489
Society of Friends	371
Unitarians	229
Wesleyan Methodist (all divisions)	11,007
Calvinistic Methodists	890

The statistics show that there has been a great change in the relative strength of the Established Church during the last fifty years. In 1801 the Establishment had 11,379 churches, and all other denominations had only 3,701. At every decennial period since that year, the Wesleyan Methodists have far outstripped the Church of England in the number of its new edifices, and the successive encroachments of dissent upon the once towering preponderance of the Established Church, indicate for the future a result of the highest importance to the interests of political as well as religious freedom.

The waning power of the Established Church, compared with her position fifty years ago, is a matter of prime political import, for "with the Established Church," says Lord John Russell, "the hereditary monarchy and hereditary aristocracy stand or fall." Notwithstanding her own conclusive efforts to maintain her ground for the last ten years preceding the census returns; notwithstanding the ever jealous zeal of Parliament in her behalf, her career is still downward. And whore must it end?

HUNTING HYENAS IN AFRICA.—The ruins of the ancient city of Sufutula, "amid which," says a recent traveler, "one might almost fancy himself wandering through the majestic, time-worn palaces of Baalbeck," are beautifully situated on an eminence, in the southern part of Fauis, in Africa, and abound in holes, caverns and clefts, were hyenas resort for shelter. These subterranean abodes of this fierce beast are generally so narrow as not to admit the animal turning in them, and they are frequently captured by the Arabs in the following curious manner, as the hyenas must have two doors, one for exit and the other for entrance. The Arabs, lying concealed in the vicinity of these dens, watch the particular hole by which the hyena enters, and then proceed to place a strong rope net over the opposite hole, while one of their fraternity skilled in the business and prepared with a rope, works his way in by the door which the animal has entered. As he nears the brute (which cannot turn upon him) he "charms it," saying, "come my dear little creature; I will lead you to a place where many carcasses are prepared for you. Plenty of food awaits you. Let me fasten this rope to your beautiful leg, and stand quiet while I do so." This sentence, or some thing very similar to it, is repeated till the operation is effectually achieved, when the daring son of the Sahara begins to gore the brute with a dagger till he is forced to rush out, when he is caught in the net, and either killed on the spot or carried off alive. If any blunder happens, however, as is sometimes the case, through which the hyena is enabled to struggle, and re-enter his abode, the "charmer," in spite of his charming, falls a victim to its savage rage, and frequently his companions can scarcely contrive to get clear without feeling some thing of its effects.

A MELANCHOLY SURVIVORSHIP.

The case of Underwood vs. Wing was heard in the Rolls Court last week, the facts of which were very peculiar and interesting. Mr. and Mrs. Underwood, of Barnstead, in Essex, made their wills on the 4th of October, 1853, in contemplation of going to Australia, by which they made a disposition of their property for the benefit of the survivor of them. Mr. Underwood's will left his property to his wife for life, provided she survived him, then to his children, and in case of his wife dying before him, or none of his children attaining twenty-one years, (or, if a daughter, marrying,) then he left the whole of the property mentioned in his will absolutely to his friend Mr Wing, of Braod street. Mrs Underwood's will was to the effect that she left the property over which she had the power of disposition to her husband, provided he survived her, and in case he died before her, then she left it to Mr. Wing absolutely. Both Mr. and Mrs Underwood appointed Mr. Wing their executor.

On the 12th of October, 1853, Mr. and Mrs. Underwood and their three children went on board the unfortunate ship Dalhousie, which on the nineteenth of the same month, was wrecked off Beachy Head, and every one on board perished except a sailor of the name of Joseph Reed. From the evidence of this sailor, it appeared that when the ship struck, Mr Underwood and his wife and two of their three children were standing on the deck clasped in each other's arms, when a huge wave suddenly broke over the part of the vessel on which they were standing, and swept them all four off together into the sea, and none of them were seen to rise afterward. The other child did not seem to have been with her father and mother at this time, and was seen some short time after by the sailor Reed, under the circumstances described in his evidence. He said:

"I saw Catharine Underwood after her father, mother and two brothers went down. Captain Butterworth sang out to me: 'For God's sake, look here.' I went and looked, and saw a young lady struggling in the water; that young lady was Miss Underwood. With the assistance of another seaman, who was afterwards drowned, I got her out of the water, and lashed her to a spar, which was afterwards cut away from the sinking vessel, and when it was cut away Miss Underwood was alive."

Under these circumstances, the plaintiff contended that Miss Underwood having survived her father and mother, even for a short time, became their next of kin, and that Mr. and Mrs. Underwood having perished simultaneously, no fact of survivorship could be established, by virtue of which Mr. Wing could claim the property left to him contingently on survivorship under both the will of Mr. and Mrs. Underwood. On the part of the plaintiff, the evidence of Mr. Wootton, surgeon of the Fitzroy Square, and of Dr. Hancock, of Charing-cross Hospital, had been taken, in which they gave it as their opinion that the death of Mr. and Mrs. Underwood was caused simultaneously by asphyxia, from being submerged in the sea, and that there was no survivorship at all. While on the part of the defendant, the evidence of Dr. Taylor and Dr. Brunton was produced, from which it appeared these gentlemen were of opinion upon the evidence that had been given by Reed, that Mr. Underwood, being a strong man and a good swimmer, would naturally not go down as soon as Mrs. Underwood, and that, therefore, in all probability, he survived her.

The Master of the Rolls after hearing counsel on both sides, said he was of opinion that the death of Mr. and Mrs. Underwood was simultaneous, and that there never was any survivorship, the consequence of which would be that the gift over to Mr. Wing contingent on the same, never took effect. As to Miss Catharine Underwood, the daughter, he considered the evidence of Joseph Reed incontrovertible, and it bore upon the face of it the most touching evidence of truth. Too much praise, in fact, could not be bestowed on that brave man for his conduct all through the transaction; and the way in which he had given his evidence entitled whatever he said to be received with the highest degree of respect. The effect of his decision would be that the plaintiff, as next of kin and personal representative of Miss Catharine Underwood, would take the property in question. [London paper.

NORTHERN NORWAY.—From an interesting notice, in the North British Review, of a work entitled "Nurway, and its Glaciers," by Professor James D. Forbes, of Edinburgh, we gather a few interesting facts relative to the character of Northern Norway:

The Northern part of Norway, as is well known to every geographer, is intersected by numerous irregular bays or fiords, extending far into the country, and its mountainous shores are guarded from the attacks of the ocean waves by great insular masses of earth and rock, which are scattered, singly and in groups, along the coast. Few or no roads traverse the country, and it is seldom visited save by English sportsmen, who are attracted by the charms of the excellent salmon fishing, which abound in the streams. Potatoes and barley are cultivated to a limited extent along the Northern shores of Norway. The actual summer there does not exceed a month in length, and during the long months of winter the stock are fed chiefly on sea-weed and the heads of boiled fish. Professor Forbes states that in some of the valleys the bodies of those who die in the winter season are kept in a frozen state until the advancing season admits of their being carried to the grave. The frozen corpse is then frequently fastened astride the back of a sure-footed pony, supported by a bag of hay, and thus rides to church for the last time.

The highest land in Norway is 8500 feet above the level of the sea. The prominent features of the country are valleys, fields and fiords. The "fields" are broad, table-topped mountains, or elevated plateaux, intersected by deep and narrow valleys. These fields are often interminable wildernesses, varied only by craggy heights, spotted with ungainly patches of perpetual snow.

One charming characteristic of Norway is the sparkling abundance of running water. Beautiful streamlets pour down the rocky cliffs into every valley, sometimes spreading in their descent into broken falls and subtle ramifications, and again stretching down a steep of two thousand feet or more, like a single snow-white thread; but on approaching these seemingly threads one is astonished at their volume, which is generally such as to cut off communication from bank to bank. The source of this profusion of living water lies in the peculiar configuration of the country, the mountains being wide and flattened and the valleys deep and far apart. Thus each river represents the drainage of a vast extent of upper country. All the beds, which should be capacious, is narrow, like the berth on board a steamboat; the mattress is, as I have said, about as elastic as a sea biscuit—"Un Voyage de Desagremens a Londres." [By Juleous Lecount.

The Emperor Nicholas is getting ugly on the hands of the allies. He is reported to have said, in reference to the English:

"They may repel me from the Danube; they may enter Cronstadt, and take possession of St. Petersburg; they may force me to retire from Moscow; but they must drive me from the wilds of Siberia, or take me prisoner in the mountain passes of the Ural, before I cease to strive for the position I have taken."

During the year ending July 1, 1854, the whole number of marriages reported in New York City was 6097. Of these 12,084 were whites, and 169 blacks. There were six cases of intermarriage between white and colored people: in each case the husband being colored, and the wife white.

RESPECT TO THE DEAD IN PARIS.—A common practice in Paris, which impresses strangers favorably, is that of lifting or taking off the hat as a funeral passes. This is observed by all classes. A little while since, (says a writer,) I noticed a small funeral train moving in the direction of the Madeleine. Evidently the one borne to burial was of the humblest class, for the body was followed only by a few workmen in blouses and women without bonnets. As it passed on, hats were taken off by the well dressed crowd, sitting or moving on the walk, by gentlemen in carriages with footmen in golden liveries, and by men driving their watering carts through the street. It was a touching and beautiful sight.

MYSTERIOUS BRAIN.—Chance may involve a seeming mystery of very awful import. Some years ago the town of Reading, England, was thus bewildered. On the leaves were seen the most mysterious signs: on one, a skeleton's head and cross bones; on another, the word "resurgam;" on another, a date of death was marked in deep impression. The leaves of course were, by some mysterious influence, the vehicles of solemn warning from the Deity.

The baker was church warden of St. Giles's; his oven needed heating, and, thinking the sacrilege, he stole the flat, inscribed tomb-stones from the church-yard, and therewith floored his oven. From the inscriptions of these stones the loaves took their mystic impressions.

Doctor Lamb.

Dr. Lamb was a great sorcerer in the time of Charles I. The famous Richard Baxter, in his "Certainty of the World of Spirits," printed in 1691, has recorded an appropriate instance of the miraculous performances of this man:

Meeting two of his acquaintances in the street, and they having signified a desire to witness some example of his skill, he invited them home with him. He then conducted them into an inner room, when presently, to their no small surprise, they saw a tree spring up in the middle of the apartment.

They had scarcely ceased wondering at this phenomenon, when in a moment there appeared three diminutive men, with little axes in their hands for the purpose of cutting down the tree. The tree was felled; and the Doctor dismissed his guests, fully satisfied of the validity of his pretensions.

The very night, however, a tremendous hurricane arose, causing the house of one of the guests to rock from side to side, with every appearance that the building would come down and bury him and his wife in the ruins.

The wife, in great terror, asked: "Were you not at Dr. Lamb's to-day?"

The husband confessed it was true.

"And did you not bring away some thing from his house?"

The husband owned that, when the little men felled the tree, he had been idle enough to pick up some of the chips, and put them in his pocket. Nothing now remained to be done but to produce the chips, and get rid of them as fast as they could. This ceremony performed, the whirlwind immediately ceased, and the remainder of the night became perfectly calm and serene.

Dr. Lamb at length became so odious by his reputation for these infernal practices that the population rose upon him 1640, and tore him to pieces in the streets. Nor did the effects of his ill fame terminate here. Thirteen years after, a woman, who had been his servant-maid, was apprehended on a charge of witchcraft, was tried, and, in expiation of her crime, was executed at Tyburn.

AN ENGLISH HOUSE DESCRIBED BY A FRENCHMAN.—You enter. The house, which is not usually wider than two or three ordinary windows, can afford only the narrowest possible space for a staircase. This staircase is nearly always of wood, and creaks dreadfully when trodden upon. It is covered with a band of carpet or oil cloth. The windows are ornamented with painted blinds. You enter your sitting-room. A carpet covers the floor all the year round, but carpet, linen bands, and scraps of oil cloth, almost hide the fundamental carpet. The walls are covered with a bilious pattern after a French design. Some friends gave me some prints to hang up, but the landlady was horrified at the idea of driving nails into her splendid paper, and placed my presents upon chairs. This accounted for what I had noticed in England, and had mistaken for carelessness, viz: that in order to avoid driving nails into the walls, the English will stand pictures upon chairs about their rooms. Even for a Rubens or a Lawrence they will not drive a nail through paper of the value of two shillings a piece! An immense table, covered with an immense fringe, takes up an immense space in my sitting room. I lift the cloth and discover a table, as substantial as a bridge, supported by enormous columns. It cannot be a table; it must be an entresol. I can throw my papers and books carelessly about it—even when the vast breakfast tray is upon it—and then desert steppes of great extent are left around. Should this table become in the course of ages fossil it will discover to future generations a specimen of the colossal furniture of our time.

Then there is a long, massive, failed sofa, that has suffered the effects of the carboniferous atmosphere; it is hard, and in no way inviting. The eye even does not desire to rest upon it, until the eye is right. I ought while I try it leave it, wondering whether it was originally built to contain coals. Chairs which can be lifted only with two hands, are distributed here and there, but the most curious part of the furniture is a huge ebony affair opposite the windows. Think of two towers united by a platform or terrace. Each tower has two stories. The first tower is divided in two parts—let us say two rooms. Under the platform, which is ornamented with a massive sculptured balcony, is a secret passage, which, but for its Babylonian proportions, might be called a drawer. From the flat and polished terrace there must be, I fear, a view, I never asked the use of this wooden edifice; it might be either a fortress or an organ. If we were all about the size of Polyphemus I should say it was perhaps an ugly sideboard in some dining-room inhabited by Cyclops. But as human affairs stand, I cannot see what use it can serve, except, perhaps, for a barricade. Do you wish by chance to roast an ox some in my room in London—every thing is colossal here. The grate is so large that it is impossible to make a little fire in June. It requires no little effort to lift the shovel or tongs. Above this colossal grate is a glass; but placed so high that I can but just catch a glimpse of my eyebrows in it. Two immense bell-ropes, with cockades as large as the top of a hat, complete this formidable furniture; in the midst of which a man is a Lilliputian. I need not dwell upon the details of my bed-room furniture. The bed, which should be capacious, is narrow, like the berth on board a steamboat; the mattress is, as I have said, about as elastic as a sea biscuit—"Un Voyage de Desagremens a Londres." [By Juleous Lecount.

The Emperor Nicholas is getting ugly on the hands of the allies. He is reported to have said, in reference to the English:

"They may repel me from the Danube; they may enter Cronstadt, and take possession of St. Petersburg; they may force me to retire from Moscow; but they must drive me from the wilds of Siberia, or take me prisoner in the mountain passes of the Ural, before I cease to strive for the position I have taken."

During the year ending July 1, 1854, the whole number of marriages reported in New York City was 6097. Of these 12,084 were whites, and 169 blacks. There were six cases of intermarriage between white and colored people: in each case the husband being colored, and the wife white.

A letter from Miss Frederika Bremer, dated at Stockholm, is published in the National Intelligencer, proposing that the association of Christian women, formed in various places of the earth, should form a Peace Alliance, looking to a union of all denominations and nations, whereby peace and good feeling may be made lasting, and war for ever after averted.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Christian Advocate.

Terms: $1 50 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:
SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 9.

HEALTH.—In private practice our physicians report a decrease of Yellow Fever; Drs. Fenner, Moss and Austin so inform us. In the Charity Hospital, where neglected, poor, and friendless patients (nearly all foreigners) find an asylum, there has been no falling off. On Wednesday there were about eighty new cases brought in. As an evidence of the public pulse, we report the following as significant.—On Tuesday last a physician was advertised for to serve professionally on the next voyage of the Cahawba to New York, and from thence back again to this city. Next day the number of applications were no less that fifty! From this it would appear that doctors in this city are very numerous, or are not overrun with business.

JOHN BUNYAN'S LETTER.—It was a fortunate Editorial paragraph that struck the mine of this elegant writer's reminiscences. We trust he will continue his favors.

BOOK COMMITTEE.—In another column is published a report of their action. From a private source we learn that the location and buildings purchased for the Book Concern, are very eligible, and cost $33,000. The citizens and Churches of Nashville have, up to this time, contributed about $25,000. We exceedingly regret that Dr. HAMILTON, from Alabama, was not present. This, however, was not his fault, as "by an accidental misdirection of the letter notifying him of the meeting, he was not apprised of the appointment in time to reach Nashville by the day designated."

PARSONAGE BUILDING.—We like to hear of this work going on. It promotes the stability if not the present progress of the Church. An effort made to secure a house and lot, for a circuit or station, and a heavy item of ministerial support is thenceforth provided for: a supply of the preached Gospel secured. A minister can be sent to them according to their wants, and not the size of his family. Rev. P. M. GOODWIN, P. E., of Opelousas district, writes, Aug. 31, of this interest at Alexandria, La.—"Our Parsonage here moves on slowly. The frame is up, roof on, and nearly enclosed."

NEW ORLEANS BAPTIST CHRONICLE.—It is with much regret that we find in our very clever cotemporary, August 31st, a prospective notice of discontinuance. This will be the second of the kind, on the part of our Baptist brethren in the Southwest, within a few years past, notwithstanding the enterprise here has been conducted with ability and energy, and at great personal sacrifice. Will our Methodist friends take warning and act for their ADVOCATE! The publisher says:

"Since the commencement of the Chronicle, in November, 1852, we have spent about $1500 more for its publication than has been received, from subscriptions, advertisements and all. This does not look like a very profitable 'speculation,' to say the least. True, many owe us, but for some cause or other they do not pay up; and we can not afford to spend $200 per month, just for the 'privilege of publishing a paper.'"

We want the Chronicle sustained. Notwithstanding it gives the Pedo-baptists in general, and the Methodists in particular, occasional hard raps, there is no doubt which side it is to be counted on in the great battle between religion and irreligion, truth and error, light and darkness, Protestantism and Romanism.

While this failure is largely ascribed to the apathy of friends, we learn, also, that it has been contributed to by the unscrupulous opposition of Mr. Graves, the Editor of the Tennessee Baptist.

"The truth is, Mr. G. is somewhat ambitious; he wants to be dictator and ruler in the whole South-west; he wishes his 'mammoth sheet' to have all the circulation, that he may have the sole control. It was for these reasons that he regarded the movement to establish a paper in New Orleans with jealousy; and when he saw the undertaking about to succeed, it is not to be wondered at that he brought all his forces against it."

WHAT IS CAMPBELLISM!

Rev. Dr. JETER, of Richmond, Va., informs the Bib. Recorder that he "has just written a work on Campbellism," which he is "revising for the press." The question, "What is Campbellism?" is fully considered. Dr. J. says: "Mr. Campbell's policy seems to be to slide back into orthodoxy, and make it appear that he has always been sound in the popular faith."

Upon which the Baptist Chronicle remarks:

"A fair, scholar-like examination of what is currently called 'Campbellism,' is certainly much to be desired. It seems to us, however, that it will be very difficult, if not impossible, to write such a review of 'Campbellism' as that term is generally understood; for the 'Disciples' are by no means agreed among themselves in doctrine. The writings of Mr. C. himself, however, may be carefully reviewed; and we should be highly pleased to have the work done by an honest-minded and capable Baptist Theologian. We await with interest the forthcoming volume."

Rev. E. A. Baker, one of the editors of the Detroit Democrat, recently lost his wife, three children, a brother and a brother's child, all within a few days.

A water-spout descended at Charlottesville, Va., on the 25th ult., by which a horse was washed away and a lady drowned.

STATE OF BRITISH METHODISM—LOSSES—DR. BUNTING'S ADVICE—EPISCOPACY RECOMMENDED.

THE WESLEYAN CONFERENCE closed its 111th session August 9th. The next is to be held at Leeds. The number of members (exclusive of several thousands on trial at home and their large foreign Missions) was ascertained to be 264,168; a decrease in England of 6,787, and in Ireland of 300. The resources and endurance of a Church and its previous disasters must be great, where such figures are regarded as signs of recuperation.

Rev. W. B. BOYCE was appointed the first President of the Australian Conference. The President (Rev. J. Farrar) was formally appointed to visit and preside at the next Irish Conference—to be accompanied by J. Lomas and John Scott. The President and Mr. Arthur were appointed to visit Scotland. Enoch Wood was reappointed President to the next Conference in Canada, and Mr. Ryerson was nominated co-delegate. Dr. Cook was reappointed President of the French Conference. A new member has been added to their administrative system by the appointment of the Rev. W. Kelk to be Secretary of the General Chapel Fund—an office long considered necessary.

An Irish delegate delivered a racy and characteristic speech. He said:—

"The Conference, then, would be glad to learn that Ireland as a country had fully gone to the bottom of the wheel, and was beginning to rise again. He recollected that in 1843, on some occasions, not less than 500,000 followed a man in a national Sabbath breaking at the monster meetings. He would not pollute the place by mentioning his name. Famine, disease, and death swept off nearly a million and a half of those who were thus deluded and led away. In addition to this, nearly one million and a half had emigrated from Ireland in the course of the last seven years, principally to the United States, and these were mostly Romanists. One million seven hundred thousand acres had been sold in the Encumbered Estates Court. One million and a-half of money had been paid for the purchase. One thousand insolvent landowners had been replaced by four thousand solvent ones. * * * The Romish peasantry, in cultivating the soil, had been succeeded by Protestant laborers in many places, and an example of industry was given to the Romanists hitherto destitute of employment. Thus, the Protestant and Popish population were approaching nearly to equality. The country was becoming manageable. The Lord took the matter into his own hand, and had done more in a short period to free Ireland of Popery, than had been done since the Reformation. Even Tipperary, that region of blood and murder, was now one of the quietest counties in Ireland. Crime had diminished, and many of the murderers and violators of property had been swept off by death or emigration. A great alteration was beginning to be visible; the country was expected to rise in every point of view. All religious parties were at work. The Established Clergy, as a body, were free from Puseyism; the Irish Protestants smelt Popery, even in the distance; and any who might be inclined that way were afraid to broach it openly. In fact, they had more fear now for the spread of Popery in England than in Ireland."

Interesting it is and instructive to know what that Nestor of the Conference, Jabez Bunting, said at each a time. In a meeting of consultation he spoke like the experienced sage and the Christian philosopher:—

"He had rather regretted that the loss of numbers had formed one of the principal topics to which they had addressed themselves. He did not attach so much importance to the regular and striking increase to their numbers, as some were disposed to do. They had, perhaps, been guilty of the sin of David in numbering the people. They had made too much boast of numbers, merely as such, though not too much, perhaps, of their increase of numbers in other respects; and had appealed to them, sometimes as an infallible proof that they were doing well. There might be a great increase of numbers, and yet no increase of that in which Christ saw 'of the travail of his soul' and was 'satisfied.' Perhaps they had not duly considered the amount of emigration. They would, no doubt, have found a large number under that head, if they had taken an account of the emigrants, like the Irish brethren. Still, the case was bad enough, after making all the deductions they could. They ought to be humbled. He had been pleased that morning by several intimations from the brethren who had spoken, that they ought to humble themselves, and ought not take it for granted that they were faultless. They were not so blameable as some supposed; but they were not quite free from blame. The first step toward a revival would be, to bring themselves, as Ministers, without making any excuses, to humble themselves before God, acknowledging that, as far as merely human means are concerned, they must say, 'It is time for Thee to work.' Perhaps this was a lesson which God was teaching them. They had been looking too much at the machinery, and too little at the impulsive power, which gave it all its value. He was not fond of hearing them boast so much about their system. It was the best thing going, but not the best thing that God could make. Let them not talk about their vast Connection. As to the cause of the decrease of numbers, that decrease was the symptom, not the disease. The spirit of the times was against them. The world was worse. It might be better in some respects, but those who were 'of the world,' were more worldly and more satanic. Then, again, there was the reflex effect of the recent agitation. He had seen what was similar in the results of the Kilhamite division. When it was in a state of subsidence, the effects were terrible, and there were several years before they recovered from those effects. The present had been called an 'unparalleled' state; but it was not so. They had had the same struggle after 1797. What was the great remedy? One was out-door preaching. They were in danger of losing that glory. There were sons who had traveled for several years, but who had never preached out of doors in their lives. But they used to do it,—it might be with some self-denial, but yet with great pleasure. Every man should do it. They should make a little more venture than they did. Oh that he could now practise, what he thought was desirable on the part of others! Another point was Pastoral visitation. What hindered the performance of that duty? In many cases it was not, and in other cases it was, hindered by too earnest a desire after fine preaching. It would be better to have preaching a little less artificial, and to give more time to Pastoral visitation. Would it not be a good thing to see every member in their circuit? The Peseyites were patterns to them in that respect. As to matters of doctrine, they must not imitate them, but, in attention to their flock, they were patterns to all. Allusion had been made to the country places. He agreed with Mr. Prest, that they ought to direct their efforts to the dense population of large towns; but Methodism was signally a rural system. He would appeal to his brethren, whether their country Methodist life had not been the most happy part of their lives. It was a bad sign if a man did not like to be in any but large congregations. He should suspect himself if he could not be happy in a country congregation. Their Circuits were too much divided,—too much so, not for their own comfort, but because they tempted them to come home almost every night. If they would not go out after the sinners, they could not catch them. He agreed with those who said, that their great want was an outpouring of the Holy Spirit. That would be the great cure of all their evils."

Though far off, and holding no official correspondence with the M. E. Church, South, the Parent Body of Methodism is of concern to us. This numerical lapse may be recovered from and is not vital. It has gone on and grown, under agitations and reverses and losses that would have obliterated any other dissenting Church. Now, its chapels and educational facilities and missionary operations are nearly equal to them altogether.

Dr. Olin, in his travels, was struck with what seemed to his American eyes the servility of the Wesleyans toward the Establishment. They could, by uniting heartily with other Dissenters, overturn the onerous and unequal Church rates. But the Government courts them, and they purr to the stroking. Over the rich and great, or any flattering notice from an M. P. or Lord Mayor, there is a great taking on, and "hear, hear." The poor, if not passed by, are not cared for after the primitive manner. Hence a schism, years ago—"The Primitive Methodiste"—now numbering 99,000, which takes to the lane and highways and the world as it comes. And hence, in part, their decadence.

According to its essential principles as a Church polity, Methodism is Episcopal. This is a prominent and successful feature of its American branch. It is connectional, responsible, and in a modified sense hierarchical. There must be an Executive, with power and prestige enough to administer the Government. Our English brethren are trying to work it with a Presbyterian apparatus! For a long time this unfitness was not felt, because they had an Episcopacy actually, though not nominally. Wesley exercised a bishop's prerogative. He presided at Conference and made appointments. After his death, the position, character and labors of his immediate coadjutors provided substitutes. The platform on which these men sat, was the Administration. As the old prescriptive bonds fall off, constitutional ones are needed. Wesley, Watson and Benson did, with benefit and approbation, what would now be regarded with jealousy, and condemned as an assumption of power, ambitious and tyrannical, if done by Farrar, Lomas, Rule and their cotemporaries. The last and most troublesome Reformers appealed powerfully to the multitude against the leaders of the Conference, the Committee aristocracy, and so on. These leaders, so bitterly, and we think, in the main, unjustly assailed, arose ex necessitate rei. Some body had to do their work and stand in their places, if the great work went on at all.

The difficulty and invidiousness of their position would be removed, and their influence legitimated and increased by a Scriptural Episcopacy. Announcing the appointment of Mr. Boyce, the Editor of the Watchman gives us an inside view, without intending it, of their embarrassments:—

"The Committee found it impossible to find a Minister of such distinction and ability as would fit him to inaugurate as President the new era of Australian Methodism, who could at the same time be spared from the home work. Dr. Beecham himself would doubtless have been a most suitable Minister for the appointment, if he could have been spared from the Mission House. But this could not be. Mr. Young can not again go out, so soon after his return. Such men as Dr. Hannah and the ex-President can not be spared. And to have sent any inferior man, any Minister of second rate position, and possessed of no commanding authority and character, would have been unjust and offensive to the able men who have long been laboring in Australia."

Here lies the friction of the machinery. The man is every thing: the office nothing. Inevitable are the consequences. The first rate man undertakes to do a thing, however needful, in virtue of his "position," and relying on his "commanding character" to bear him through: one of "second rate position" asks—"By what authority?" The production of parchments, showing his election and ordination to the office he is executing, would be an end of controversy.

Our English brethren may be chained to usage, or afraid of jostling the lawn sleeves of the Establishment, or backward to accept an American example. But the difficulties of their system are organic. With the best doctrines to offer, their polity is anomalous. It has too much friction, and breeds agitation. Beyond a certain point of time, that personal veneration which is the inheritance of founders, can not be counted on as a remedy for constitutional defects. The English Wesleyans have reached that period.

The wealth of souls God has given them as seals to a Ministry of apostolic zeal and purity, and self-sacrifice and love, can only be endured and most advantageously used to the furtherance of His cause with a constitution as sound as the glorious doctrines they have made known, world-wide, are scriptural. One thing they lack—an Episcopacy. And how well, conservatively and aggressively, doctrinally and practically, Methodism agrees with Episcopacy, we, with grateful satisfaction, point them to the history and state of the Methodist Episcopal Church (North and South) in the United States.

They may not take our advice—it may be impracticable in their case, and of this we are ourselves doubtful. But it affords us pleasure to offer it, and from such a stand point to contemplate the inestimable Providence by which Methodism, in being transplanted to this continent—where its greatest development has been achieved, and where, under God, greater things than these are yet to be seen by its instrumentality, had grafted upon it a Scriptural Episcopacy. A great eagle with wings, long winged, took the highest branch of the cedar and carried it into a land of traffic: he set it in a city of merchants. He took, also, of the seed of the land and planted it in a fruitful field: he placed it by great waters, that it might bring forth branches, and that it might bear fruit and be a goodly vine.

THE UNITY QUESTION.

Harper's Magazine, September, presents a well-timed article against those who make the human race many. It is not confused by scientific terms or bloated with empirical pretensions, but clear, strong and common-sense. The unity of the human race is set down as second only to that other cardinal proposition, the unity of Deity, and the assertion is ventured that its denial would involve a greater amount of direct practical veil. Polytheism is not so demoralizing as polyanthropy.

The caution is given to the naturalist, that the naturalist has always pressed upon the moralist and theologian—be modest. What is the finity of his knowledge to the infinity of his ignorance... On a spec of space, and in a moment of time, his induction must be small and disproportionate to sweeping generalizations as to the ultimates and principia of creation. As to origin, he must receive his information from a plane above—revelation. That asserts unity. The assertion is maintained by the spirit as well as letter of the Bible—that most ancient record, to say nothing more; by the scheme and scope of the Incarnation, and that unanswerable argument from similarity of the roots of all languages.

The capital defect of Agassiz, Muton, Nott, and others is pointed out herein—that the laws governing generative changes, the essential idea of a species having an organic unity, in distinction from a class having a unity of resemblance without community of origin, are not laid down. No canon determines these points, which being unsettled, all is unsettled. The question is put—What degree of uniformity or diversity observed among the human race, shall decide the case of their unity or difference of origin? What and how many agreements or differences shall be taken as logical and scientific proof either way? While this is an open question, all the labors and groupings and comparative anatomies of the diversity ethnologists are only curious, not conclusive. Their boastings of having exploded the old theory—the biblical and historical theory upon which men have rested up to this time with as much security as the solid earth, are, therefore, premature. The fact of ONENESS is not yet touched, and may be consistent with a much greater phenomenal diversity than is yet known to exist. So vital and great a truth ought not to be expected to surrender at the mere summons of those few gentlemen of fins and scales, and a show of second-hand learning in Egyptian antiquities.

The extremes and suicides of those who espouse the anti-biblical interest, are well set forth. A few years ago the Vestiges of Creation was the rage. The development theory was vaunted. The lowest specimens of humanity were progressive developments from those animals that appeared nearest human, and following up the genealogy these animals were developed from lower forms. So that not only all men were a unit as to origin, but monkeys had the same origin! Critics who loudly extolled that book are now equally earnest in their admiration of Nott and Agassiz! These speculations, having equal authority, are as much opposed to each other as they are to the Scriptures.

We close with a literal quotation, having attempted nothing more than a synopsis of the article, and regretting that its length forbids its transfer, entire, to our columns:—

"It has been said, that in all the reasoning of the advocates of diversity, they have left wholly undetermined the very point without which all their other inductions are of no avail. They have not fixed, and can not fix, the limit in either direction: they can not determine the degree of diversity that physically excludes unity of origin, or the amount and nature of agreement that necessitates it. This leaves their side of the case entirely open and defenseless against any impeachment of their logic. But, on the other side, and as against their assaults, there is a positive impregnable bulwark built up, not of phenomena merely, but of genealogical facts, real historical and not hypothetical facts, directly connected with the phenomena. The position may be thus stated—There are diversities in other parts of nature, diversities in the vegetable world, diversities in the animal world, greater in degree, and more striking in kind, than any that can be traced in the human varieties; and yet these diversities are known—not inferred—to have a common origin. They fall within the field remembered of history. Without going back to ante-historical ages, the phenomena of which we speak can be actually traced genealogically to a source where all this subsequent diversity was once unity and even identity of being.

"All naturalists have to admit this. Why, then, do some of them so gratuitously adopt a reverse rule and a reverse principle in respect to the human varieties? Why do these gnat-straining, camel-swallowing interpreters of nature thus ignore positive facts falling within the direct field of their science, and this for the sake of hypothetical conclusions lying equally beyond both horizons, that of scientific induction, and that of historical or actual genealogical knowledge. The inconsistency of their reasoning, or their want of reasoning, here, is as astonishing as their strange modes of estimating evidence. They make wry faces at the clear, and consistent, and sober ethnology of the Bible, and yet take down, without any harm to their digestion, all the sphinxes and crocodiles of Egyptian hieroglyphics. They see no light in that wondrous genealogical chart of the nations that is given in the tenth of Genesis, and yet find perfectly intelligible, and perfectly satisfactory, all the bungling monstrosities, or designed distortions of a sculpture whose whole aim was priestly imposture, or political mystery and deceit. In these miserable scrawls, not equal, many of them in artistic merit to the Oneida's picture on the bark of a tree, or the rude drawing on an Indian's powder-horn, their marvelous faith finds the most 'unmistakable evidence' of diversity of origin in the human race. It is all perfectly plain. The varieties stand out as clear to their 'believing eyes,' as the most carefully drawn figures in a modern book of anatomy. The Negro, the Indian, the Hottentot, the Seythian, all have their representative men, with their exact portraits, in the works of these 'old masters.'

"But why do they not go further, and find as many more varieties as there are deformities in these uncouth, art-lacking caricatures of humanity? If they want them, there are plenty more in Layard's exhumations from Nineveh. Abundance of snob varieties could be discovered in any old tablet of the kind, in which the despot-awed artist, even if he possessed any genius, is compelled 'to paint the conquerers in the most portly look and attitude that might be suggested by national vanity, while the crushed captives have bestowed upon them more of the beastly than the human face. The thought occurs—What if a document precisely like the Mosaic genealogy of the sons of Noah had been dug out of the ruins of the Karnak, or deciphered from some Theban column—especially if it could be made to seem in conflict with any thing in a received revelation—with what rapturous delight would it be hailed by the naturalist as well as the antiquarian! How clear would be its evidence! How perfectly satisfactory to many who now ignore it, simply because it occupies an unpretending place in our old book of faith, which is not the same time our sole book of primeval history!"

ORIGIN, PHILOSOPHY AND INCIDENTS OF PEWS.

It is said that the first enclosed pew ever known in a Church, dates back only to the 17th century, half a century and more than the Reformation in England. They were never extensively introduced until the time of the Puritan rebellion, and then in opposition to the Bishops of the Church, by men who wished to conceal from the congregation that they refused to kneel during the prayers, or thought themselves too good to pray by the side of those who were poorer than themselves.

They have been successful as a financial plan and for getting select congregations; but for serving the great ends of the Gospel, and reaching the poor and the masses, the expedient is not so fair. It is a fine institution, a patent system for shaking off the poor. St. James hardly had any thing so exclusive in his eye when he spoke of the man with a golden ring being preferred, and his poor neighbor snubbed.

Gold rings are or used to be regarded as an evidence of wealth. So it was eighteen hundred years ago. The apostle's rebuke is good and applicable to the Church still. Do not some feel that it is of greater importance to convert a rich man than a poor man? If he should become a Christian, he will be a valuable accession to our Church! The strength of a Church lies in the piety of its members; not in their wealth. Some wealthy Churches are very weak. They exert little influence for good. How pleasing the thought, that Christ's kingdom is of such a nature that "the poor man in vile raiment" may exert as great influence for good as "the man with the gold ring." It is a startling truth yet, that "God has chosen the poor of this world rich in faith." Almost every pastor may testify that the moral power of his Church emanates chiefly from the poor of his flock. All the treasures of earth are under the control of Jesus Christ, and with infinite ease he could turn them into the Church, if He saw His cause needed them. But He has explicitly declared the policy of His kingdom to be otherwise.

So much for the origin and philosophy of the pew system. We clip from an exchange, by way of incidents, the REVERIES OF THE CHURCH SEXTON.

"Splendid day! We'll have quite a turn out. There's nothing like sunshine to draw an audience. It's better than all the popular preachers that ever were born. O! there's my memorandum book; I'd like to have forgotten it, and if them directions had'nt been tended to, most likely I should have lost my place. Let's see. [Takes out a memorandum and reads.]

"By order of Judge R., the woman who squints and eats cardamon seeds, is not to be put in the seats in front of him.

"By order of Squire B., the young man who ogles his daughter and wears plaid pants, is to be put some where on the other side of the Church.

"By order of the wealthy Miss Prudence Prim, the young man whose clothes smell of cigars and brandy, shall be set behind her.

"The request of Mr. A., meobanic, that strangers be not shown into his pew—to be attended to if convenient.

"Quite a chapter, any how. But people are beginning to streak in. There's two young women waiting. Common sort of folks, I guess; gentility don't come quite so early as this. Have a seat, marm? She says with a bow, if you please, sir. No matter, politeness is a cheap article, it don't cost nothing. So here goes the two women into one of the back wall pews. Here's two more birds of the same feather; woolen shawls, straw bonnets and cotton gloves; wall pew, second from the door; good enough in all conscience.

"Ah! there's a bride. Satin velvet and kids; fine broadcloth and white vest. Shall I have the pleasure of showing yourself and lady some seats? They must have some first rate seats, for they are evidently some body. What a difference there is in folks!

"Now there's a dress-maker and a school mistress, no bodies. Back seats good enough. Two young lawyers—some bodies; I must find a seat in the middle aisle. A rich widow—some body—middle aisle. A broken down minister, coat rather seedy, cravat rather coarse—no body—side aisle. Six fashionable boarding-school girls—some bodies—middle aisle if possible. Rouged cheeks, but a splendid silk cloak—some body—middle aisle. An apprentice boy, decent looking, but a no body—side aisle.

"Who'll say I ain't a judge of human nature? Don't I know who a man is the minute I see him?

"Now there's one of our seedy coated old fellows coming. Don't I set him down as a no body, and won't he be glad to get any kind of a seat? I'll show folks that I understand my business. Have a seat sir?

"Confound my ill luck. Just as I was a putting him into one of the poorest in the house, along comes Judge R., who, spying him, comes up and says he, 'Ah! how d'ye do, Gov. B.? Take a seat with me, sir; my wife will rejoice to meet with you.' Shaking hands with the seedy coat he looked daggers at me, and I'll bet a fourpence I've lost my place. Who'd have thought the old fellow was an ex-Governor. But that comes of looking as meek as a school master, and dressing like a wood sawyer! Why don't folks as ought to, hold up their heads and be some body?"

PROTESANTISM WITHIN THE TROPICS.

Why should not an ardent religion seek expansion and flourish in an ardent climate? and if Methodism is not ardent, it has lost a recommendable feature of character. We think much and hope much for China and Africa; but the regions beyond us, or, rather, below, have urgent and natural claims upon the M. E. Church, South. Her territory lies next to it—Mexico Central and South America. Her people and ministry have near sympathies with them and connections. They have also that important advantage for working and living there that others need—climatic adaptation. If we are the Church, South, then southward let us wend our way. We hope our Missionary Board and Secretary will keep their vigilant and far-seeing eyes in that direction. A land for a possession opens up there. It gives us pleasure to chronicle all signs of the times in those regions.

The Missionary Advocate (Dr. Durbin) gives a letter dated Buenos Ayres, South America, May 20th, from Rev. Mr. LOAR; and also other valuable information, from which we extract. We may state here, that for some time and now, we are making efforts to secure for the New Orleans Christian Advocate capable and reliable correspondents in South and Central America.

The new Constitution of the province of Buenos Ayres, now no longer a province, but a free and independent state, is completed and adopted.

The Constitution, in itself, is, perhaps, as good as could have been expected: there is not much in it that any one could reasonably object to.

The most objectionable feature to an American Protestant is its established religion. The articles on this subject are as follows:—

3. Its religion is the Roman Catholic Apostolic; the state to defray its celebration, and all the inhabitants, be their religious opinions what they may, to show it respect.

4. Nevertheless, the right which every man has to worship Almighty God according to his conscience, is inviolable within the territory of this state.

5. The exercise of the religious liberty declared in the preceding article is subjected to the prescriptions of morality, public order, and the existing laws of the country.

By these articles, Protestants have as much secured to them as could be expected in a Roman Catholic country; and more, we presume, than is constitutionally granted in any other. There was in the House of Representatives a pretty decided opposition to the union of Church and State at all; and there has been the utmost freedom in the expression of opinion on the subject, both in the House and through the public press. This is certainly a long stride in advance of Rome.

A series of articles have appeared in the Government paper, in reply to a Romish priest who had taken the Government to task for granting religious toleration, and who attributes to this the decay of the Roman faith. In reply to the priest the Protestant remarks:

"It surely has not been for want of priests in sufficient numbers; and these have had also the almost exclusive right to instruct the people religiously and intellectually, and have been paid by the state for doing it; and if it has not been done, it the people have been kept in ignorance, if the faith is so feebly established, if the light of truth is eclipsed, if the priests are without influence and without popularity, as a "Catholic" asserts, we can not but conclude that it is all their own fault.

"After having been protected and supported by the state in such large numbers for so many years, if, under such circumstances, they have permitted their faith and influence to suffer shipwreck, they must have been very indolent or very unskillful pilots! Why, there are priests enough to have a school in every square of the city, and a chapel in every district of the country. And then there would be priests enough left for every other imaginable duty. But we do not find them engaged in schools in the city—we do not find them teaching schools in the country—nor do we find them there as pastors looking after the flock of the Lord. Where are they? What are they doing? How are they employed? No wonder that their 'doctrines tremble—that their faith is destroyed—that their light is eclipsed, and that they are without influence and popularity.' The fault, however, is not with the Government, nor the legislature, nor the people—nor with the Protestants, but with the priests themselves."

If we mistake not, this Mission was opened before the division of the Church, North and South, by Rev. FOUNTAIN E. PITTS. The present Missionary writes as follows, giving some trenchant views of the Great Commission:

"It has been more than one year ago since my resignation was forwarded, and no one has yet been found to step into the breach, standard-bearer of the flag of our Zion. He, not the great Head of the Church interposed, and turned His hand upon me for good. might have gone to the grave, and these fe sheep in the wilderness been left without shepherd, while the brethren are deliberating whether to cure for their souls or not; see for whom Christ died, and ministers wh Christ has commissioned, 'Go ye into all t world,' etc., I do not censure the authorit for not sending a man to this post, or to a other post, when proper men do not offe themselves. I know that our bishops can n make ministers; and if they could, the Chur would not be benefitted by the manufacture But I am astonished that Christ-made pre ters, ministers who profess to be—inward moved by the Holy Ghost to take upon th the solemn obligations of ministers in t Church of Christ, are not ever ready, wa ing and anxious to enter every open door, especially to be sent with the unsearchab riches of salvation to those who need the most.

"It is a marvelous thing in the Israel God, that so few ministers of experience, maturity, and of eminence, ever read the commission according to the apostolic te Only young men in their enthusiasm, w want of ministerial experience, and theolo cal requirements, read their commission th 'Go ye,' etc. To these we may add an occ sional invalid, who has held his commissi for years, especially if his physician thi that a foreign clime will be favorable to h health; he puts on his specs, and lo, for t first time, he reads, 'Go ye,' etc., and t great sacrifice he goes to heathen lands, falls a martyr to duty! And now and th also a man of some ministerial age, bu medium talents, hesitates not to fulfill t letter of his commission as a Gospel minist but where are the men of prominence in t home-work who acknowledge any call to m sionary toil? I repeat, this is a marvelous thing.

"I shall not be charged by you, I know, writing thus because of my great anxiety leave the post I occupy. These have ev been my most deliberate sentiments. I b lieve the obligations imposed by our comm commission as ministers of Christ, make debtors to all for whom Christ died, and the limited interpretation of these obligations can not be authorized except by special rev lation from the Head of the Church. And write thus, because I have seen from our re gious papers, for a long time past, that th is a lack of laborers for the foreign field. consider this an evil omen, a deep reproa to the Christian ministry.

"The laity of the Church are evidently awakening from the sleep of indifference the world's interests, in which they have long indulged, and the spirit of benevole is greatly on the increase. Is it not time direct the cause of Mercy to another peo of the Church, to the ministry, who will come up to the help of the Lord—to the he of the Lord against the mighty?

"By the Margaret Eliza we had the ar val of a French Protestant missionary, and the auspices of the American Board. I thi well of the enterprise, and shall render h of course, all the assistance in my pow There are a few French Protestants, and large French population. There is no se vice for the French Catholics in their o language, and I think that national feelin will induce many of them to attend preac ing in French. And also many of the nativ understand French very well, and they ma be induced to attend from curiosity. Th missionary's name is L'Hommedé. I am fa vorably impressed with him. He brought a letter of introduction from Dr. Brigham.

"Politically, we are at present in peace and the party in power is disposed to be as liberal as possible in every respect."

The state of things in New Grenada we have more than once alluded to, and we believe have laid before our readers the late important Church information. Rev. Mr. MONTSALVAGE, a converted Spaniard, has been ordained by the Presbytery of Brooklyn, N. Y., to go out as a Missionary to South America, for the American and Foreign Christian Union. New Grenada is understood to be his destination.

THUNDER AT A DISCOUNT.—In consequence of some recent Government acts in the Central American Republic of Honduras, the Pope of Rome ex-communicated Gen. Bernardo, the President. When the bill was received in Honduras, the General assembled an immense concourse of people, including the chief dignitaries, civil and military, and after reading the document to them, rammed it into a cannon with his own hand, pointed the piece eastward, and fired it off. The charm of superstition is being broken. The highway is preparing. A great door and effectual is opened.

MEETING OF THE BOOK COMMITTEE.

During the past week the Book Agents and Book Committee had a joint meeting, which continued in session for three days. All the members were present, except Dr. Hamilton, of Alabama. It was a matter of deep regret to all that he was absent; but by an accidental misdirection of the letter notifying him of the meeting, he was not apprised of the appointment in time to reach Nashville by the day designated. Brothers Stevenson and Owen, the Agents, and brother Evans, of Georgia, with the resident members of the Committee, addressed themselves diligently to the work before them, and transacted much business.

The first, and perhaps the most important act was the securing of a lot of ground on which to locate the Publishing House. After a thorough examination of various places proposed, the Board selected a lot on the Public Square, north of the City Hotel, and only separated from it by an alley. The lot presents a handsome front on the Public Square, and extends back to the river; thence it runs north, making an L, fronting on Bridge street. On the rear of the lot, and immediately on the bluff of the river, there is erected a very large and most substantial building, four stories high, made of massive stone-work and brick, covered with copper, all nearly new. This, with some slight modifications, it is believed, will be admirably adapted to manufacturing purposes. The front has two stories which are in good repair and will answer for sale-rooms, offices, etc., for the present, but will, in a short time, be superseded by new buildings suited to wants of the establishment. Possession will be given during the approaching fall, and in time, we hope, to erect the machinery, etc., to begin the work early in January. We are pleased to say that the citizens of Nashville are displaying much liberality in subscriptions toward the purchase and improvement of the buildings; they will meet the reasonable expectations of the members of the General Conference, who confided to their generosity by locating the Publishing House in their midst.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

The Agents have made a contract with a most responsible and elegant book-binder, who will take charge of that department of to establishment; they have likewise contracted for presses and other machinery for the various departments of the concern, all to be ready in due time; so we hope, before many months, to see the Publishing House of the Southern Church in full and successful operation. [Nashville Advocate, Aug. 31.

Revival Intelligence.

PICKENS CT., ALA.—The third quarterly meeting for this circuit was held at Mount Pleasant—more generally known here as "King's Store." Last year this point was in the Sipsey mission, and had a membership of twenty-one. It was placed among the regular appointments on the circuit, and has been served by my colleague, Bro. Connerly, and myself this year.

Early in the season the members and friends of the Church determined to erect a handsome edifice, which is nearly completed: and God has graciously accepted and honored the temple with His presence.

Some degree of interest was manifested at the commencement of our meeting, and with no occasional brief interruption, that interest gradually increased. We closed, after ten days, with a membership of forty-nine whites, and an organization among the blacks numbering fifteen.

Our much beloved P. Elder, Bro. Schaeffer, was with us all the time, laboring in his faithful and successful manner. Bros. Glass and Pegos, of the local ranks, gave valuable help; the latter remaining throughout the meeting, laboring faithfully.

Young Bro. Hern, a candidate for the itinerancy, was with us also, giving evidence of latent power, which only needs the requisite excitation to make him an energetic minister of the New Testament.

Our camp-meeting begins next Thursday, Aug. 29. J. M. JENNINGS.

BLACK HAWK CT., MISS.—We have some good meetings; a gradual improvement all the year. I closed a meeting yesterday at Bluff Springs. The Church was much blessed and four conversions. On the last night there were eleven anxious mourners. But want of ministerial aid and health caused me to dismiss the meeting. I have a series of two days' meetings before me. Our love-feasts are precious times. We had the welcome labors of Rev. J. L. F. Bird for two days, and Rev. J. G. Bruner for one. Thanks to those brethren for help. JOS. NICHOLSON.

August 18.

GAINESVILLE, ALA.—Rev. Josiah Barker writes, Aug. 25: "Religious prospects are improving, I think, in all this region. We are looking for large ingatherings."

ATTALA CT., MISS.—The Lord is still graciously working on this circuit. At the close of a nine days' meeting at Brook's Church, there were between twenty and thirty conversions; thirty-five accessions; the Church built up, our souls made happy in the love of God; and although many went away unconverted, we have abundant reason to praise God.

I commenced a two days' meeting at Smyrna Church last Saturday (18th,) which is still progressing—managed entirely now by the local brethren, as I was compelled to leave for another three days' meeting appointed on to-morrow—and up to Wednesday night there were seventeen accessions and about fifteen conversions. Surely, surely, we are deeply indebted to our Heavenly Father for the exhibitions of His power in answer to prayer.

Aug. 24. B. J. WOODWARD.

The Columbus Enquirer, 29th ult., says:—"A very interesting and profitable series of religious services have been in progress during the past three weeks in the Factory Methodist Church of our city. An unusual degree of interest in the subject of religion has been for some time past manifested by that class of our population who ordinarily attend worship at this Church. Fifty-three members have been added to the Church on Saturday last, and a considerable number of persons have professed conversion, who have not as yet enrolled their names as members.

"There seems to be no abatement of the religious interest awakened, and, from present appearances, the meetings will be indefinitely protracted.

FAYETTE, MISS. — Our camp-meeting at Spring Hill, near this place, has just closed. It was a glorious meeting. Ninety-five were added to the Church, and at least ninety came said one hundred conversions to God. Most of the Christiane present enjoyed the meeting, and performed their duty well. Our brethren in the Ministry preached the word with power; but to God be all the glory—all the grace. J. L. FORSYTH.

August 25.

OBITUARY:

The relatives and friends of SAMUEL GRACE will wish to see some notice of his decease, and others who read the Advocate may be moved to greater diligence in holiness by contemplating his untimely end.

He was born in Elyton, Ala., Dec. 11, 1834, and died August 18, 1854, aged 19 years, 8 months and 7 days.

His early youth was divided between the labors of the field and the pursuit of learning, so that he made slow progress in the latter until he was about 16 years old, when he commenced reading and study with great avidity, and soon became highly thoughtful and intelligent. In 1853 he entered the University of Alabama, but only remained a few months, without much improvement in mind or morals. In September of the same year he entered the Junior Class of Emory College, Ga., where he cultivated the best acquaintance of society and made considerable attainment in literary pursuits. Several of his pieces published in the newspapers, manifest rich veins of thought and felicity of style. He returned home in May, 1854, to spend for the last time some ugreeable hours at home. Having met there with all his own family, and many personal friends, he parted from a portion of them, August 14th, and traveling with a brother and sister to Montgomery, left them on the night of the 15th for Oxford. Arriving there he was no doubt made happy with meeting many of his old companions; but, alas! on the first or second night after his arrival, he met an unexpected and fatal doom. It seems by some unaccountable imprudence on the part of the College, he was put to room in an unfinished building; and having occasion to go down the stairs, or perhaps walking in his sleep, he stepped off the platform of the stairs, which had been left without bannisters, and falling on his head, became instantly unconscious, and died at 8 o'clock next morning.

Thus cut off in the bloom of life and health, the minds of his bereaved friends have but one refuge of hope, and that is in contemplating the probability of his being happy beyond the grave. In the fall of 1849 he made a profession of religion, and gave the clearest evidence of his acceptance with God. Though young, he influenced many of his companions to seek for God. And some will never forget his looks of joy and gladness as he approached the place of meeting, running to tell how the Lord had met him by the way. With more than ordinary faithfulness he maintained the Christian character until his first departure to College, where he greatly lost ground in religion, and mostly for this reason refused to return to the institution again. But while at home last year he was powerfully reclaimed, and went to Oxford in the midst of a revival, carrying one, too, in his own breast. As to his way of life there, the writer has but small means of knowing, except from the character of his associates, who are said to have been pious and holy. During his sojourn at home his boon companion, also, was a young minister; and yet we fear, with all these advantages, his faith was feeble and his love cold. In conversation with the writer but two nights before his death, he said of himself that he was wavering and unfixed, but hoped the expected revival would be a help.

Thus he died; and while he leaves room to hope that he is at rest, still gives us warning to "be every moment ready, for the Lord cometh," etc. His BROTHER.

DR. EDWARD W., son of John and Elizabeth W. Burgo, died in Butler county, Ala., August 11th, 1854, in his 25th year.

From his youth he was remarkably truthful and dutiful; and at seventeen attached himself to the M. E. Church, and lived and died a consistent and devoted member.

By the Grace of God he was enabled to meet death with a signal triumph. Two days previous to his exit, he revealed to his wife the mournful intelligence that he must die; but affectionately entreated her to restrain her grief, for his heavenly prospect was all bright.

As the "outward man" began to pale and chill in death, the "inward man" was "renewed" by the enrapturing love of God. His countenance became radiant—a heavenly halo encircled expiring virtue; while he continued to exhort relatives, friends, and attendant physicians, almost with his last breath, to meet him in Heaven.

JOHN D. WORREL, Pastor.

At a regular communication of D'Arbonne Lodge, U. D., held on the 22d of July, A. D. 1854, A. L. 5854, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted, viz:

WHEREAS it has pleased the Supreme Architect of the Universe, in His Allwise Providence, to remove from the labors and cares of life our dearly beloved and highly esteemed Brother, Rev. JOSEPH D. RICE, late W. M. of this Lodge, and, for many years past, a zealous and efficient laborer in the nursery of the Methodist Protestant Church. And whereas it is fitting that we give expression of our high appreciation of his character as a man, a Mason, Christian, husband and parent, and also the poignant sorrow which his death has occasioned; therefore, be it

Resolved, That by the death of Bro. RICE, this Lodge has sustained an almost irreparable loss, and Masonry one of its finest supporters and brightest ornaments; that his bereaved family, who feel the greatest loss, have received a wound which the great I Am alone can heal; and that the Church, of which he was a prominent member and successful minister, will long and sensibly feel the void which his demise has created. And while we meekly bow to the afflicting dispensation of One who "doeth all things well, who is too wise to err, and too good to be unkind;" yet we deeply feel the sad bereavement that has befallen us in the removal, by the hand of death, of one so endeared to us by his usefulness and those amiable qualities and Christian virtues by which he was characterized in life, and which we hope to emulate, that our death may be like his—calm and serene, without a doubt to mar our peace.

Resolved, secondly, That while we sincerely deplore our own loss, and sympathize with the Church and his neighbors in their loss, we would tender to his stricken family our heartfelt sympathies and condolence, humbly praying that they may realize the heavenly consolation, that "they sorrow not as those that have no hope," and "their loss is his eternal gain;" and that He, whose ways are just finding out, may prove indeed "a Father to the fatherless, and a Husband to the Widow."

Resolved, thirdly, That in testimony of the respect and esteem we entertain toward our departed Brother, we will wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days, and clothe our Lodge in mourning for six months.

Resolved, fourthly, That we, as a Lodge, being in our infancy, with a small membership, and our means for the relief of the needy limited and insufficient, would respectfully request contributions from Sister Lodges and Brother Masons, handed or sent to the W. M. pro tem., or to the Secretary of this Lodge, to aid us in relieving the necessities of his family in their present affliction and bereavement.

Resolved, finally, That these resolutions be spread on the minutes of this Lodge; that a copy be handed by the Secretary to the widow and family of our lamented Brother, and that one be sent to each of the Editors of the Boson Olive Branch, New Orleans Christian Advocate, and Masonic Signet and Journal, for publication in their respective papers.

Signed I. N. GUICE, W. M. pro tem.
Attest: A. H. BREWER, Sec'y.

DIED—In Wilcox county, Ala., on the 20th of July, Mrs. MARY E. ROBISON, wife of John L. Robison, in the 18th year of her age. She joined the M. E. Church in June, 1851, and in November following embraced religion, and was ever after an humble and consistent Christian. And although called in the morning of life to pass through the valley of the shadow of death, she feared no evil." That religion which she had embraced was her comfort and support, and prepared her to meet death triumphantly. She neither murmured nor repined during the entire period of her illness. A few moments before her departure she said to her mother, "I wish I could describe to you my feelings, but I can not. Of this, however, I want you to be fully assured, I am not afraid to die." She conversed frequently to her friends and dear husband, giving to them at all times undoubted evidence that "all was well" with her.

May God bless and sanctify this dispensation to the good of her friends that now mourn for her. A. C. RAMSEY.

Allenton, Ala.

Methodist Press.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

On and after the 1st November next, the subscription price of the New Orleans Christian Advocate will be $2 per annum in advance; if payment be delayed six months, $2 50; at the end of the year, $3.

After a fair and full experiment of two years, it is ascertained that the paper can not be supported at $1 50 per annum. This will be to all our friends and patrons, and to every reasonable person, a sufficient cause for the change. In labor and material there has been a change to higher rates. The price of printing is now 25 per cent. higher in this city than it was a year ago.

This arrangement has the unanimous recommendation of the Publishing Committees. It puts the New Orleans Advocate at the same rates with the family of Advocates, and cheap still.

"THE ADVOCATE."

Labor is high. Living is high. Materials are high. We are publishing the Advocate at a heavy weekly cash expense. We need heavy weekly cash receipts. Much can be done in extending our circulation and keeping us in funds at the approaching fall meetings. Bring the paper before the meeting. Collect and remit.

Notice.

There will be a Camp-meeting at Bethel, Wilkinson county, Mississippi, commencing on Wednesday before the first Sabbath in October next. Preachers generally are invited. WM. B. HINES,
Aug. 28. THOS. W. BROWN.

N. O. District Quarterly Meetings.

Wesley, Soule, and Winans—Sept. 8th.

Carondelet st.—Sept. 10th; L. F., 11th; Quar. Conference, 12th.

Felicity st.—Sept. 17th: L. F., 18th; Q. Conference, 19th.

German Missions, Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4—Sept. 24th, at Piety st.; L. F., 3½ P. M.; Quar. Conference at Dryades, Sept. 22d.

Thibodaux—Sept. 30th and Oct. 1st.

Bayou Lafourche and B. Black, Circuit and Mission—Oct. 7th and 8th, at Tigerville.

Baton Rouge—Oct. 14th and 15th.

Plaquemine and Bayou Gros Tête—Oct. 21st and 22d, at Bayou Gros Tête.

N. O. Circuit—Oct 29th, at Carrollton; Quar. Conference, 28th, 5 P. M.

Moreau st.—Nov. 5th; Quar. Conf Nov 2d.
J. C. KEENER, P. E.

Notice.

The CALIFORNIA CHRISTIAN OBSERVER will be published weekly in the city of San Francisco, for the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. J. BORING, Editor.

TERMS:

The Observer will be sent to subscribers at $3 per year; $5 for two years, or $10 for five years.

CLUBS.—A club of ten or more subscribers at the same post-office, shall have the paper at $2 50 each.

Any Methodist preacher who may send us ten subscribers, accompanied by the cash, shall receive a copy one year for his trouble.

No name will be entered on the books as a subscriber until the cash is received.

All communications should be addressed to the subscriber, at Oxford, Georgia, until the first of December next. J. BORING.

Notice.

The Lauderdale Camp Meeting will commence on Friday before the third Sabbath in October. Ministering brethren from adjacent appointments are affectionately solicited to attend. J. W. ELLIS, P. C.
August, 1854.

General Intelligence.

MUTINY.—During the passage of the ship Indiana from New York, which vessel arrived at this port on Monday, three of the crew, named George Bitou, Charles Allen and Wm A Pollard, made a desperate attempt to get up a general mutiny on board, inciting the remainder of the crew to rebel against the authority of the officers. They were unsuccessful in their efforts, however; were overpowered and confined; and yesterday when the vessel arrived at the Balize, the authorities here were telegraphed to be in readiness to take the mutineers into custody. R. M. Lusher, Esq., United States Commissioner, issued a warrant for their arrest, and placed it in the hands of officer De Coursey of the First District Police, who repaired aboard the Indiana last evening, as soon as she had arrived, and arrested the accused parties and placed them in the Police jail. Yesterday they were taken before the Commissioner for examination, when Pollard turned State's evidence, and upon his testimony the others were committed for trial before the United States District Court at its next session.

CHARITY HOSPITAL.—The following is the report of the Charity Hospital for the week ending on Saturday evening, 2d inst., at 5 o'clock:

Admissions	326
Discharges	284
Deaths	102

Of the deaths, 112 were from yellow fever. The following is a complete report of the operations of this institution for the month of August:

Admissions	1664
Discharges	1004
Deaths	460
" by yellow fever	300

There was a remarkable falling off in the number of yellow fever deaths on the two last days of the week, and at the present time every thing seems to indicate that we are likely to have as healthy a summer as usual.

The total number of deaths in New York for the week ending the 29th ultimo amounted to 765, of which 130 were of cholera.

The stories of gold mines, on the Upper Amazon, said to have been recently discovered by Americans, are pronounced to be false, in a Lima paper.

Our Steamships.

It seems to be a misfortune attached to New Orleans that almost every great advantage yearly, as soon as gained, is counterbalanced by some equivalent disadvantage. If the rivers are large the waters are low, and if the waters are navigable, there is little business to be transacted. If something beneficial to the welfare and best interests of the city occurs in one direction, something injurious is almost certain to happen in another.

We are reminded of this by a recent announcement, that in a few days two of the finest steamships that run out of this port will be taken off, and not again resume their trips. The United States will make one more trip between this city and Aspinwall, leaving here on the 7th, and will then commence running between Havana and Aspinwall. The El Dorado, immediately on her arrival from her present trip, will leave for New York, and go into some other trade. Thus all our direct communication with California, by way of Aspinwall, will be closed. The Daniel Webster, Pampero and Falcon, the two former of which ran between here and San Juan, were taken off some months since, and are now in New York repairing.

Much as this state of affairs is to be regretted, it is unavoidable on the part of the steamship companies. For some time past the different boats have been running at an expense of nearly or quite five thousand dollars a trip, while their receipts were only between eighteen and twenty-four hundred. The number of cabin passengers has varied from twenty to one hundred, and freight has been almost nominal. As a matter of self-preservation, therefore, it was incumbent upon them to adopt the course they have. By its adoption, however, New Orleans loses the presence of a fine fleet of steamers, and the profits attendant upon them.

Our communication with California is not, however, entirely closed. It is the intention of the Company owning the United States and El Dorado, to put the former vessel on the route between Aspinwall and Havana, and so to arrange her trips that she shall, at the latter port, meet the semi-monthly steamers running from here to New York. In fact the old arrangement is to be renewed—the same that existed when the Falcon used to carry three and four hundred passengers from this city, and take on almost as many more at Havana. Passengers from California here will go to Havana and be transferred to the Crescent City and Philadelphia; and passengers hence to California will leave in the same boats and be transferred in a similar manner.

By this arrangement, and the consequent withdrawal of many fine vessels, some part of the advantages expected to accrue from the running of the Cahawba and Black Warrior between here and New York, is neutralized. We lose, in fact, full as much as we gain, and are wholly deprived of direct communication on one great line of public travel just as it is secured to us on another. This state of affairs, however, can not last for ever. The business of the city is increasing and bound to increase still more. New avenues of trade are being opened, and as soon as the lines of railway now in process of construction are completed, New Orleans will be the directest, nearest, speediest and cheapest way to reach New York as it now is to reach the western cities and country. We still have left a number of fine vessels running to Texas and New York, and hope shortly to have more. In the mean time we regret to lose those whose frequent arrivals from California have placed us in the possession of late and valuable news, and been of much service to us in very many ways.

INTERMENTS.—The following is a correct report of all the interments in the several cemeteries of the city, for the week ending at 6 o'clock on Sunday morning, the 3d inst.:

	Yellow Fever.	Other Dis.	Total.
Protestant (Girod street)	(No returns)
Hebrew (Hodge)	0	0	0
Odd Fellows' Rest	1	3	4
Cypress Grove No 1	1	7	8
" " 2	1	24	25
Charity Hospital	100	42	142
St Patrick's	21	35	56
Catholic No 1	3	5	8
" 2	3	19	22
St Vincent de Paul	34	39	73
Lafayette (4th District)	18	34	52
Hebrew (4th District)	3	0	3
Total	185	208	393

The returns from the Protestant Cemetery would probably make the number more than four hundred. There was a great falling off during the last two days of the week.

HEALTH OF NORTHERN CITIES.—We cut from the Baltimore Patriot the following statement of the comparative mortality in the four great Atlantic cities for the week ending on the 26th ult., from which it appears that, compared with the previous week, there has been a decrease in the number of deaths in New York and Philadelphia, while there has been an increase in Boston and Baltimore. The decrease in the cities first named was of cholera victims, which is a very gratifying indication:

	New York.	Phila.	Boston.	Balto.
Cholera	139	22	26	—
" Infantum	126	37	11	27
" Morbus	14	8	1	5
Dysentery	44	21	12	21
Diarrhœa	55	11	2	—
Consumption	44	15	18	18
Convulsions	67	12	4	4
Marasmus	59	23	2	1
Other diseases	293	167	59	68
Total	832	316	135	140
Under 5 years of age	491	168	59	65
Decrease	110	12
Increase	—	—	31	27

HEALTH OF THE CITY.—We are gratified to be able to say that the progress of fever in the last two days has had a decided check. Yesterday there was no case of this disease carried to the Hospital, and no deaths in that institution from any cause. We are satisfied, also, from large and careful inquiry, that private practice affords the same evidence of a favorable change. These southwest winds are loaded with a terrible store of heat, but if they save us from an epidemic fever, we can afford to smile at the excesses of the thermometer. [Charleston Mercury.

BANK OF MONTGOMERY.—A report has been very current in this city for the past two days, that the Bank of Montgomery had failed, and on the strength of this report the bills were selling yesterday at a discount of 2½ per cent. In some quarters the issues were discredited entirely and refused at any terms. We have the very best of authority for saying that the rumor is utterly false and without any foundation whatever. The holders of bills should not therefore sell them at a sacrifice. This institution was established on the free banking principle and even in the event of a stoppage, there would be no ultimate loss to bill holders or depositors. [Mobile Tribune, 3.

Giddings came very near losing the Free Soil nomination for Congress in his district in Ohio. He was nominated on the sixth ballot, by a majority of two.

The journeymen brick-layers of Cincinnati struck for higher wages on the 21st ult. They have been receiving two dollars and twenty-five cents per day for their work, but think they should get two dollars and a half.

On the 25th a man named Everett fell from the top of an omnibus in Philadelphia and had his jaw broken, besides sustaining other severe injuries. The next omnibus that passed went over him and broke one of his legs.

The Plaquemine Sentinel says that the sugar crop of Iberville parish, the present year, will fall short of that of last year. It estimates that above Bayou Plaquemine there will be at least 600 hhds. less than last season.

The Great Storm at Louisville.

FURTHER PARTICULARS—FUNERAL SERVICES—PROPERTY DAMAGED.

The Louisville Courier, of the 29th ult., contains further particulars of the storm on the 27th, an account of the funeral services of most of the killed by the falling of the Presbyterian Church, etc., etc. The Courier says:

Our city presented yesterday a solemn spectacle. The awful calamity of the previous day had sensibly wrought upon the minds of all; and there was that in the air and tone of most persons suggestive of personal misfortune to each. Business was, in acquiescence with the Mayor's proclamation, in a great degree suspended, and what are generally the most thronged streets wore a Sabbath day appearance. The bells throughout the city were tolled for several hours in the middle of the day, and grief sat upon every countenance. None, we believe, were exempt from the general feeling of sympathy for the afflicted, while there was a unanimity of expression in thankfulness for the interposition of Providence in sparing so many where so much danger environed all.

At an early hour in the afternoon, large numbers began to congregate at the First Presbyterian Church, where the funeral services of most of the deceased were to be held. By the appointed time the building was densely crowded, and the large yard without likewise thronged. At the north-eastern angle of the tower, tables were placed, upon which the coffins containing the bodies of the dead were laid. Here the particular exercises were conducted by several clergymen of the Presbyterian denomination, the great multitude occupying every part of the spacious yard that surrounds the church edifice.

During the services the Rev. Mr. Morrison, who at the time of the disaster was officiating in the demolished church, was introduced. He gave the following narrative:

On the Sabbath, so disastrous to life, he was requested to preach, but it was not generally known that there would be divine service, hence the small number that were assembled. Upon next Sunday it was expected that the pastor recently invited would be installed. There were not more than eighty-five persons in the house at any time on Sunday. During the sermon which had been commenced at a later period than usual, a storm arose up, and the main door of the basement room where the meeting was being held was blown open. An elder of the church immediately arose and closed it. Again the door was forced open and again closed. A third time the violence of the wind blew the door open, notwithstanding the elder was pressing it at the time.

Instantly the whole house was filled with particles of sand, and the speaker had his eyes filled with the fine dust. This caused some disturbance in the assembly, and most of the persons arose to their feet, some jumping out of the windows near which they were sitting. Mr Morrison said he had no time to recover from the effects of the gust of wind that struck him with particular fury, before he heard a cracking sound overhead, and in a moment of time after the tempest blew open the door with violence, filling the room with sand, the whole walls had fallen in. Immediately above the pulpit in which he was standing the plastering was not broken, and to his right several old ladies escaped unhurt. He expressed himself as being greatly shocked at the suddenness of the calamity, and when he fairly recovered from the blindness caused by the ascending dust, etc., a most terrible sight presented itself. Before him he saw two men already dead, the head of another man greatly mangled just appearing among the rubbish, a lady clasping her child in the agonies of death, and a young lady with her body bent across one of the seats, and her face must horribly distorted. From different parts of the building he could hear the groans of the dying and the stifled screams of the crushed, but could distinguish no bodies but these first mentioned, the others being actually buried in the mass of ruins. In conclusion he prayed God that it might never fall to his lot to witness such another calamity.

The Rev. Mr. Hill, in the course of some appropriate remarks on the dreadful calamity, said that every person that was killed was a church member, save the smaller children. The Courier, after noticing the concluding prayer and benediction, says:

The bodies were then taken in charge by the reception friends of the deceased, and the different funeral processions began to wend their way toward the place appointed for interment. Many of the relatives and associates of the unfortunate were present, and their sobs mingled with the expressions of sympathetic grief that came from every heart and lips.

In relation to the injured, the Courier publishes the following information:

In addition to the deaths recorded yesterday, we have but one other to mention. Mrs Morsell died from the injuries received at the church, and will be buried to-day.

Miss Duff, last evening, was in a very precarious condition.

Mrs. Smith, wife of J. B. Smith, the boiler maker, had her ribs broken. She resides on the corner of Fifteenth and Market.

Mrs Wm. Marshall, wife of the foreman of the Kentucky Locomotive Works, was so much injured as to render her recovery a matter of doubt.

Miss Eunice Lane, aged sixteen years, was injured.

Miss Emma Cooper was slightly hurt.

Mrs. Taylor, mentioned yesterday, is better. Her little child had one of its legs broken.

Two young females, named Mellride, of different families, were hurt; one having a leg broken, and the other a fracture on the skull.

Mrs Christopher, residing on the corner of Twelfth and Broadway, was injured.

Mrs. Curlin, who resides next door to the church, was in the rear of her residence, and was injured by the falling timbers.

The above comprises all those injured at the church, not comprised in the list published in the Courier of yesterday.

Mr. Samuel Browning did not have his legs broken, although he was much injured.

Mrs. Nugent, residing near the grave yard on Jefferson street, was injured by the planks, etc., falling from her residence.

The sexton of the church was not killed.

Mr. Josiah Bradley, who lost an eye while he was humanely engaged in recovering the bodies of the dead and wounded, is recovering.

Miss Letitia (not Mrs.) Pennebaker was injured. The lady of C. D. Pennebaker was not at church.

Louisville, August 29.—The damage by the tornado is $100,000. The number wounded is 65. The funeral of those killed took place today, and business was suspended during the obsequies.

The New York Journal of Commerce publishes the following extract of a letter dated Paris, August 7:

"Business is very bad in this city. The war has affected manufactures, large stocks of which from England, Germany and France will be sent to the United States, and forced off for cash this fall. I think we may look for a large import, and consequently a close money market throughout the winter."

A lady of Jefferson county, Indiana, has made herself a handsome silk dress from cocoons of her own raising. The dress will be exhibited at the State Fair this fall, which is to be held at Madison.

A recent dispatch from Washington to the New York papers states that the Administration pronounce the arrest of Captain Hollins ridiculous and wicked, and declare that he will be sustained by the Government in any event.

Most distressing accounts are daily received of the drouth in the Western country. In some of the counties in Kentucky hundreds of acres have not a shoot of corn on them, and people are cutting the stalk to feed their cattle with it.

A landlord having the misfortune to admit as a lodger into his house an individual, named Belt, of doubtful reputation, turned him out the other day with the remark that he would not keep a hell in his house that wanted hanging.

We have reason to believe, says the National Democrat, that Mr. Buchanan will resign his present position and return to the United States within three months.

A MOUNTAIN ON FIRE IN VERMONT.—Extract of a letter dated Sutherland, Vt., Wednesday August 23, 1854.—We are having very hot and dry weather. There has not been so severe a drouth known for many years. It has rained but once for three months, and then only a slight shower, lasting about twenty minutes, just enough to lay the dust. The heat affects the crops most seriously. Potatoes will be just nothing at all, and other vegetables will suffer nearly in proportion. It makes the farmers look quite discouraged, and they feel as bad as they look.

The large mountain on the east of us is on fire. It has been burning about five weeks, and has burnt over about 400 acres of valuable timber land, and will be a very great loss to the owners. The sight from my window, of the tall and thick forests all wrapped in a bright flame, is one of grandeur I never before beheld.

The conflagration is supposed to have been set by some young men who went on the mountain for a frolic, and built a small fire to drive away the musquitoes; but nothing certain is known. We have much fear that unless a heavy rain occurs soon, the fire will work its way down into the surrounding villages and cause still more terrible destruction. [Boston Transcript, 26th ult.

THE FIRE IN THE WOODS OF MAINE.—Boston, August 26.—The fires in the woods are still raging in this county, Hancock, Piscataquis, etc., in the vicinity of Ellsworth, great damage is being done, and, in fact, the damage is immense all around. In some sections nothing is being done by the people, but fighting the fires.

FIRE AT POUGHKEEPSIE.—FIVE CHILDREN PERISHED IN THE FLAMES.—New York, Aug 26.—The private residence of Abraham Simpson, Esq., near Poughkeepsie, was destroyed by fire last night, and, awful to add, five children perished in the flames. Mrs. Simpson, the mother, is badly burned. The fire is supposed to have been the work of an incendiary.

FIRES IN THE NORTHERN WOODS.—New York, August 28.—The fire in the pine woods near Sutton, Canada West, threaten the city, and the smoke is so dense that the Great Western railroad trains have been discontinued.

It appears from the last English census that on the day of the taking of the census there were 60,605 foreigners resident in Great Britain, half of whom were in London. In the former number were over 1000 Russians. According to the United States census, there were at the date of the taking of the last census resident in Massachusetts 160,600 persons of foreign birth, and in the United States 2,210,839. Of the latter number, 1414 were born in Russia.

The revolution in Spain is regarded with extreme joy by the Spaniards in the United States. La Cronica, the Spanish newspaper published in New York, describes it as "a rising up of all that is most sacred in the human heart against political despotism, supported by the most shameful immorality." This same journal goes on to say that the late ministers were "proud, malignant, immoral, and, at the same time, pretentious and vain," and that they "made the crown the object of public contempt, and undermined the most national and conservative institutions."

The Telegraph Fire Alarm has been brought to perfection, or the next thing to it, in New York. By means of the telegraphic wire the occurrence of a fire in any part of city is immediately announced in the office of each district bell ringer; the magnetic influence ringing a little bell, according to the number of the district in which the fire breaks out.

BRIDGING THE OHIO.—Efforts are being made to secure the construction of a bridge over the Ohio river to connect Cincinnati and Covington. An efficient board of directors has been appointed, the right of way granted, and the requisite amount of stock taken.

DR. BROWNSON.—Dr. Orestes A. Brownson, we learn from the Boston Pilot, has concluded, on receiving a second very flattering and pressing invitation from Dr Newman and the Directors, to accept a Chair in the Irish University in Dublin—on the condition, however, that his engagement is not to interfere with the editorship of his Review. One would suppose, (says the Boston Chronicle) the editorial task, as performed by Dr B., to be sufficiently laborious and exacting for a single individual—but in his new sphere of duties, he has in addition to deliver a course of lectures to Irish scholars.

ALEXANDER HAMILTON.—Opposed, as in many instances the constitutional views of Mr. Benton have been to those of Mr. Hamilton, that gentleman, in his "Thirty Years in the United States Senate," pays the following beautiful tribute to his memory:

"He was the man most eminently and variously endowed of all the eminent men of his day; at once soldier and statesman, with a hand, to execute; a writer as orator, a jurist, an organizing mind able to grasp the greatest system and administrative to execute the smallest details; wholly turned to the practical business of life and with a capacity for application and production which teemed with gigantic labors, each worthy to be the sole product of a single master intellect but lavished in litters from the ever teeming fecundity of his prolific genius. Hard his fate when withdrawing from public life at the age of thirty-four he left himself constrained to appeal to posterity for that justice which contemporaries withheld from him. And the appeal was not in vain. Sixteen years to his memory, history embalms his name; posterity will do justice to the man who at the age of twenty was "the principal and most confidential aid of Washington," who retained the confidence of the Father of his Country to the last, and to whom honorable opponents, while opposing his system of policy, accorded honor and patriotism, and social affections, and transcendent abilities."

THINK AGAIN.—It is related that during the first few days of the reign of Queen Victoria, when a girl between nineteen and twenty years of age, some sentences of a court martial were presented for her signature. One was death for desertion; a soldier was condemned to be shot, and his death warrant was presented to the Queen for her signature. She read it, paused, looked up to the officer who laid it before her, and said:

"Have you nothing to say in behalf of this man?"

"Nothing; he has deserted three times," said the officer.

"Think again, my lord," was her reply.

"And," said the gallant veteran, as he related the circumstances to his friends, (for it was none other than the Duke of Wellington,) "seeing her majesty so earnest about it, I said, he is certainly a bad soldier, but there was somebody spoke me to his good character, and he may be a good man for aught I know to the contrary."

"Oh, thank you a thousand times!" exclaimed the youthful Queen, and hastily writing Pardoned in large letters on the fatal page, she sent it across the table with a hand trembling with eagerness and beautiful emotion.

A correspondent of the New York Evening Post tells the following good story of Daniel Webster:

He was one day fishing off the beach with the Commodore, when he saw a boat making towards Marshfield, from the direction of Cohasset. The occupants were evidently not on a fishing excursion, and Mr. Webster suspected that they must be coming to Marshfield to see him. After looking for some moments steadily at the suspicious-looking craft as it approached toward them, he turned to Peterson and asked,

"Which way will the boat go best, Commodore?"

"With a free wind, sir," was the reply.

"Where will that take us?" said Mr. Webster.

"To Provincetown," was the answer again.

"Then, head for Provincetown, Commodore, by all means. That's a politician. He wants an office, and we must not let him overtake us."

And away the boat went with full sails before the wind, without stopping till they reached Provincetown, thirty miles off, at the extreme point of Cape Cod. Mr. Webster's instinct proved afterwards to have been right, the individual whose project was thus baffled having come to obtain Mr. Webster's influence in obtaining the keepership of the Cohasset light-house.

LIVING SKELETONS.—Last week Mr. J. T. Foster had an exhibition at Norristown, two living skeletons, both from Bristol township, Bucks county, named Joseph Brown and John Tunsell. The first one is about thirty-eight years of age, is over six feet in height, and weighs some seventy-eight pounds. The other is about twenty five years old, five feet six inches high, and weighs fifty seven pounds. We found that Brown measured six inches round the thick part of the arm near the shoulder, his arm being of the usual length. Around his chest he was full thirty-two inches, showing that he had a large frame. His legs were not so reduced. He is evidently a complete wreck. When he walks his figure is very crooked, much like an S in shape, and he appears to walk with pain. Tunsell's ankles are only about seven inches in circumference. They both eat and sleep well, and are cheerful, as a general thing, and not often indisposed. What is most singular is, that they have both been much larger, the one having been a carter on the road, while the other worked at farming. Brown thinks his present condition was induced by an injury he received, while the other's thinness came on without any apparent cause. They are now about as small as they have ever been, and both now and in former times used tobacco. They are singular looking objects, and it is painful to see them on their feet. They were personally acquainted with each other before they started traveling. One looks as though he might regain his flesh, while the other is a broken down man, and entirely devoid of flesh or fat except the calves of his legs.

NOT SICK BUT SENTIMENTAL.—It would seem from several articles which have recently appeared in the New York Mirror, that the sympathy so liberally bestowed by the press upon Mr. Willis, in consequence of his supposed failing health, is entirely uncalled for. A correspondent of the Mirror tells the following good story, at the expense of the poetic invalid:

"A ridiculous story is just now current along the road. Willis, you know, excels in the plaintive species of composition, and cannot exist without large daily doses of sympathy and admiration. Consequently, he keeps himself diligently at this point of death. The story is, that the Brigadier, a short time since, was actually taken in himself by this point of death humbug. Reading in a Boston paper that his beloved partner was, really and truly, in a very bad way indeed, he rushed up to Idlewild in great alarm. The Brigadier, you are aware, never writes much for his paper, and depends on Willis for the greater part of his supply of matter. Of course, if N. Parker Willis should happen to be seriously unwell, the Brigadier would be in an extremely awkward predicament. Breathless and anxious, the old soldier hurried to the gates of Idlewild. What was his surprise, what his relief, what his merriment, to find the plaintive and ruddy Home Journalist, sans hand, trimming his trees with the energy of a backwoodsman! That was a tough but happy day for the Brigadier. His energetic partner tired him out with rambling over the place. No matter. He returned with his pockets stuffed with copy."

KILLING MADE EASY.—The New York Tribune says that important experiments with new artillery have just been made in England, in the presence of military and naval commanders. The practice commenced with a 68-pounder gun, ten feet long, weighing 95 cwt., on Lancaster's principle of the bore, being oval instead of round, which gives the largest guns all the advantages possessed by the best rifle, when shot or shells of a particular description are used. Excellent practice, it is stated, can be made with rifles at considerable ranges, but until the experiments with Lancaster's oval guns or egg-shaped shells, correct aim could not be taken at the astonishing distance of 5,000 yards, the range of the practice with Lancaster's invention. The long period which elapsed during the flight of the destructive projectile, weighing upward of 68 pounds, owing to its elongated form, caused, according to the account given, a feeling of great suspense, but when it fell at a distance of 5,000 yards, and in no instance did the shells fall wide or short of the target, the spot where it fell and burst presented the appearance of the eruption of a volcano, the sand being raised to a great height in the air. Experiments were also carried on with Moorsom's shells at 3,600 yards, and the practice with them and with shot is described as very good. Several other guns have been made of smaller bores, on Lancaster's principle, for the purpose of carrying on experiments with them.

ALARMING IMPROVEMENT.—I had, last week, the pleasure of witnessing, at one of the first boarding-schools in Paris, an exhibition of private theatricals. The language spoken was French, and the performers were, four-fifths of them, American girls. The performance was not the object aimed at so much as the study and application necessary to divest the pupils' utterance of its natural foreign accent. Beyond a certain age, the most infallible means—perhaps the only means—is to follow a course of declamation, and break the mouth down with versification of Moliere and the hexametere of Racine. Mlle. Bardet, a pleasant enthusiast in her profession, is a speciality in this apartment of instruction, and parents coming to Paris for the education of their children will do well to remember her name. She fills the pupils' mouth with small India rubber balls to begin with; these are called

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Curious Circumstance.

As once I was walking o'er mead and lea,
A curious circumstance happened to me;
A huntsman I saw in the forest's brake,
He rode up and down beside a lake,
And many a deer flew past the spot,
But what did the huntsman?—He shot them not,
He drew his horn by the forest green,
Now tell me, good people, what could that mean?

And as I walked along the shore,
A curious circumstance happened once more;
In a little bark a fisherm'aid
Rowed o'er by the side of the forest glade,
In the twilight the fishes around her shot,
But what did the maiden?—She caught them not,
She sang a song by the forest green,
Now tell me, good people, what could that mean?

Refreshing my steps at evening's fall
The most curious circumstance happened of all;
A rebel was brave stood in the brake,
An empty skiff reposed on the lake,
And passing the grove of alders there,
What heard I therein?—A whispering pair;
The moon shone brightly, the night was serene.
Now tell me, good people, what could that mean?

BALLOU'S HISTORY OF CUBA

The interest taken in Cuba, in the United States, brings out a series of works on the Island of different degrees of merit—each author trying to add to the general knowledge—and, as we are to annex the ever faithful Isle, it is as well that we learn all about it we can. The work before us contains a history of the Island from its discovery, giving two chapters in the unfortunate Lopez Expedition. It appears to be written candidly, and with accurate information. The chapter on statistics is the only one deficient; for the number of births and deaths for five years, from 1825 to 1829, and the exports and imports for sixteen years, from 1826 to 1842, are not of much use in 1854.

The style of the author we are much pleased with, and below we give the story of "Marti, the Smuggler," for our readers to judge. Mr Ballou, like all travelers, admires the ladies of Cuba, and refers to them in nearly every second chapter. We almost fancy the flirt of one of those Spanish fans has taken his heart, his admiration is so heartfelt.

The Story of Marti, the Smuggler.

One of the most successful villains, whose story will be written in history, is a man named Marti, as well known in Cuba as the Governor-General himself. Formerly he was notorious as a smuggler and half pirate on the coast of the Island, being a daring and accomplished leader of reckless men. At one time he bore the title of "King of the Isle of Pines," where was his principal rendezvous, and from whence he dispatched his vessels, small, fleet crafts, to operate in the neighboring waters.

His story, well known in Cuba and to the Home Government, bears intimately upon our subject.

When Tacon landed on the island, and became Governor-General, he found the revenue laws in a sad condition, as well as the internal regulations of the island; and, with a spirit of mingled justice and oppression, he determined to do some thing in the way of reform. (Tacon governed Cuba four years—from 1834 to 1838). The Spanish marine sent out to regulate the maritime matters of the island, lay idly in port, the officers passing their time on shore, or in giving balls and dances on the decks of their vessels. Tacon saw that one of the first moves for him to make was to suppress the smuggling upon the coast at all hazards; and to this end he set himself directly to work. The maritime force at his command was at once detailed upon this service, and they coasted night and day, but without the least success against the smugglers. In vain were all the vigilance and activity of Tacon and his agents; they accomplished nothing.

At last, finding that all his expeditions against them failed, partly from the adroitness and bravery of the smugglers, and partly from the want of pilots among the shoals and rocks that they frequented, a large and tempting reward was offered to any one of them who would desert from his comrades and act in this capacity in behalf of the Government. At the same time a double sum, most princely in amount, was offered for the person of one Marti, dead or alive, who was known to be the leader of the lawless rovers who thus defied the Government. These rewards were freely promulgated, and posted so as to reach the ears and eyes of those whom they concerned; but, even these seemed to produce no effect, and the Government officers were at a loss how to proceed in the matter.

It was a dark, cloudy night in Havana, some three or four months subsequent to the issuing of these placards announcing the reward as referred to, when two sentinels were pacing backward and forward before the main entrance to the Governor's palace, just opposite the Grand Plaza. A little before midnight a man, wrapped in a cloak, was watching them from behind the statue of Ferdinand, near the fountain, and, after observing that the two soldiers acting as sentinels paced their brief walk so as to meet each other, and then turned their backs as they separated, leaving a brief moment in the interval when the eyes of both were turned away from the entrance they were placed to guard, seemed to calculate upon passing them unobserved. It was an exceedingly delicate maneuver, and required great care and dexterity to effect it; but at last, it was adroitly done, and the stranger sprang lightly through the entrance, secreting himself behind one of the pillars in the inner court of the palace. The sentinels paced on undisturbed.

The figure which had thus stealthily effected an entrance now sought the broad stairs that led to the Governor's suit of apartments with a confidence that evinced a perfect knowledge of the place. A second guard-post was to be passed at the head of the stairs; but, assuming an air of authority, the stranger offered a cold military salute and pressed forward, as though there was not the most distant question of his right so to do; and thus avoiding all suspicion in the guard's mind, he boldly entered the Governor's reception-room unchallenged, and closed the door behind him. In a large easy chair sat the Commander-in-Chief, busily engaged in writing, but alone. An expression of undisguised satisfaction passed across the weather-beaten countenance of the new comer at this state of affairs, as he coolly cast off his cloak and tossed it over his arm, and then proceeded to wipe the perspiration from his face. The Governor, looking up with surprise, fixed his keen eyes upon the intruder:

"Who enters here, unannounced, at this hour?" he asked, sternly, while he regarded the stranger earnestly.

"One who has information of value for the Governor-General. You are Tacon, I suppose?"

"I am. What would you with me? or, rather, how did you pass my guard unchallenged?"

"Of that anon. Excellency, you have offered a handsome reward for information concerning the rovers of the Gulf?"

"Ha! yes. What of them?" said Tacon, with undisguised interest.

"Excellency, I must speak with caution," continued the new comer; "otherwise I may condemn and sacrifice myself."

"You have naught to fear on that head. The offer of reward for evidence against the scapegraces also vouchsafes a pardon to the informant. You may speak on, without fear for yourself, even though you may be one of the very confederation itself."

"You offer a reward, also, in addition, for the discovery of Marti—Capt. Marti—of the smuggler, do you not?"

"We do, and will gladly make good the promise of reward for any and all information upon the subject," replied Tacon.

"First, Excellency, do you give me your knightly word that you will grant a free pardon to me, if I reveal all that you require to know, even embracing the most secret hiding-places of the rovers?"

"I pledge you my word of honor," said the Commander.

"No matter how heinous in the sight of the law my offences have been, still, you will pardon me under the king's seal?"

"I will, if you reveal truly and to any good purpose," answered Tacon, weighing in his mind the purpose of all this precaution.

"Even if I were a leader among the rovers, myself?"

The Governor hesitated for a moment, canvassing in a single flash the subject before him, and then said: "Even then, be you whom you may; if you are able and will honestly pilot our ships, and reveal the secrets of Marti and his followers, you shall be rewarded as our proffer sets forth, and yourself receive a free pardon."

"Excellency, I think I know your character well enough to trust you, else I should not have ventured here."

"Speak, then; my time is precious," was the impatient reply of Tacon.

"Then, Excellency, the man for whom you have offered the largest reward, dead or alive, is now before you!"

"And you are—"

"Marti!"

The Governor-General drew back in astonishment, and cast his eyes toward a brace of pistols that lay within reach of his right hand; but it was only for a single moment, when he again assumed entire self-control, and said: "I shall keep my promise, sir, provided you are faithful, though the laws call loudly for your punishment, and even now you are in my power. To insure your faithfulness, you must remain at present under guard."

Saying which, he rang a silver bell by his side, and issued a verbal order to the attendant who answered it. Immediately after, the officer of the watch entered, and Marti was placed in confinement, with orders to render him comfortable until he was sent for. His name remained a secret with the Commander; and thus the night scene closed.

On the following day, one of the men-of-war that lay idly beneath the guns of Moro Castle suddenly became the scene of the utmost activity, and before noon had weighed her anchor, and was standing out into the Gulf-Stream. Marti, the smuggler, was on board as her pilot; and faithfully did he guide the ship, on the discharge of his treacherous fruelness, among the shoals and bays of the coast for nearly a month, revealing every secret haunt of the rovers, exposing their most valuable depots and well-selected rendezvous; and many a smuggling craft was taken and destroyed. The amount of money and property thus secured was very great; and Marti returned with the ship to claim his reward from the Governor-General, who, well satisfied with manner in which the rascal had fulfilled his agreement, and betrayed those comrades who were too faithful to be tempted to treachery themselves, summoned Marti before him.

"As you have faithfully performed your part of our agreement," said the Governor-General, "I am now prepared to comply with the articles on my part. In this package you will find a free and unconditional pardon for all your past offences against the laws. And here is an order on the treasury for—"

"Excellency, excuse me. The pardon I gladly receive. As to the sum of money you propose to give me, let me make you a proposition. Retain the money; and, in place of it, guarantee to me the right to fish in the neighborhood of the city, and declare the trade in fish contraband to all except my agents. This will richly repay me, and I will erect a public market of stone at my own expense, which shall be an ornament to the city, and which, at the expiration of a specified number of years, shall revert to the Government, with all right and title to the fishery."

Tacon was pleased at the idea of a superb fish-market, which would eventually revert to the Government, and also at the idea of saving the large sum of money covered by the promised reward. The singular proposition of the smuggler was duly considered and acceded to, and Marti was declared in legal form to possess for the future the sole right to fish in the neighborhood of the city, and to sell the article in any form, and he at once assumed the rights that the order guaranteed to him. Having, in his roving life, learned all the best fishing-grounds, he furnished the city bountifully with the article, and reaped yearly an immense profit, until, at the close of the period for which the monopoly was granted, he was the richest man on the Island. According to the agreement, the fine market and its privilege reverted to the Government at the time specified, and the monopoly has ever since been rigorously enforced.

Marti, now possessed of immense wealth, looked about him to see in what way he could most profitably invest it to insure a handsome and sure return. The idea struck him, if he could obtain the monopoly of theatricals in Havana, on some such conditions as he had done that of the right to fish off its shores, he could still further increase his ill-gotten wealth. He obtained the monopoly on condition that he should erect one of the largest and finest theatres in the world, which he did, as herein described, locating the same just outside the city walls. With the conditions of the monopoly, the writer is not conversant.

Many romantic stories are told of Marti; but the one we have here related is the only one that is authenticated, and which has any bearing upon the present work.

A CLEVER ANECDOTE—THE EMPEROR AND HIS DAUGHTER.

[Translated from the French by S. O. Turner.]

A few years since, there was in the city of St. Petersburg a young girl, so beautiful and so lovely that the greatest prince of Europe, had he met her, even in a peasant's hut, might well have turned his back upon princesses to offer her his hand and his crown.

But far from having first seen the light in a peasant's hut, she was born in the shadow of the proudest throne on earth. It was Marie Nicolawna, the adored daughter of the Emperor of Russie.

As her father saw her blooming like the May flower, and sought for by all the heirs of royalty, he cast his eyes upon the fairest, the richest, and the most powerful of them, and, with the smile of a father and a king, said to her:

"My child, you are now of an age to marry, and I have chosen for you the prince who will make you a queen, and the man who will render you happy."

"The man who will render me happy," stammered the blushing princess, with a sigh, which was the only objection to which her heart gave utterance. "Speak father," she said, as she saw a frown gathering on the brow of the Czar. "Speak, and your Majesty shall be obeyed."

"Obeyed!" exclaimed the Emperor, trembling for the first time in his life, "let the only as an act of obedience that you will receive a husband from my hands!"

The young girl was silent and concealed a tear.

"Is your faith already plighted?"

The young girl was still silent.

"Explain yourself, Marie; I command you."

At this word, which swayed sixty millions of human beings, the princess fell at the feet of the Czar.

"Yes, father, if I must tell you, my heart is no longer my own; it is bestowed upon a young man who knows it not, and who shall never know it if such be your wish. He has seen me but two or three times at a distance, and we will never speak to each other if your Majesty forbids it!"

The Emperor was silent in his turn. He grew pale. Three times he made the circuit of the saloon. He durst not ask the name of the young man.

He who would have braved, for a caprice, the monarchs of the world at the head of their armies—he, with his omnipotence, feared this unknown youth, who disputed with him the possession of his dearest treasure.

"Is it a king?" he demanded, at last.

"No, father!"

"The heir of a king, at least?"

"No, father."

"A Grand Duke?"

"No, father."

"A son of a reigning family?"

"No, father."

At each step in the descending scale, the Czar stopped to recover breath.

"A stranger?"

"Yes, father."

The Emperor fell back into an armed chair, and hid his face in his hands, like Agamemnon at the sacrifice of Iphigenia.

"Is he in Russia?" he resumed, with an effort.

"Yes, father."

"At St. Petersburg?"

"Yes, father."

And the voice of the young girl grew faint.

"Where shall I see him?" said the Czar, rising, with a threatening aspect.

"To-morrow, at the review."

"How shall I recognize him?" repeated the Czar, with a stamp of his foot.

"By his green plume and his black steed."

"Tie well. Go, my daughter, and pray God to have pity upon that man." The Princess withdrew in a fainting condition, and the Emperor was soon in thought.

"A childish caprice," he said, at length. "I am foolish to be disturbed just it. She will forget it. She shall forget it!" and his lips dared not utter what his heart added. "It must be; for all my power would be weaker than her tears."

On the following day, at the review, the Czar, whose eagle eye embraced all at a glance, sought and saw in his battalions, nought else than a green plume and a black charger. He recognised in him who wore the one and rode the other, a simple Colonel of the Bavarian Light Horse, Maximilian Joseph Eugene Auguste Beauharnais, the Duke of Leuchtenberg, youngest child of the son of Josephine (who was, for a brief time, Empress of France) and of the Auguste Amelie, daughter of Maximilian Joseph, of Bavaria, an admirable and charming cavalier, in truth; but as far inferior then to Marie Nicolewna, as a simple soldier to an emperor.

"Is it possible!" said the Czar to himself, as he sent for the Colonel, with the design of dismissing him to Munich.

But at the moment when he was about to crush him with a word, he stopped at the sight of his daughter—fainting in her calèche.

"There is no longer a doubt," thought the Czar, "'tis indeed he."

And turning his back upon the stupefied stranger, he returned with Marie to the Imperial Palace.

For six weeks all that prudence, tempered with love and severity, could inspire, was essayed to destroy the image of the Colonel in the heart of the princess. At the end of the first week, she was resigned; at the end of the second, she wept; at the end of the third, she wept in public; at the end of the fourth, she wished to sacrifice herself to her father; at the end of the fifth, she fell sick; at the end of the sixth, she was dying.

Meanwhile, the Colonel, seeing himself in disgrace at the court of his host, without daring to confess to himself the cause, did not wait for his dismissal to return to his regiment. He was on the point of setting out for Munich, when an aid-de-camp of the Czar came for him.

"I should have set out yesterday," he said to himself; "I might have avoided what awaits me. At the first flesh, save yourself from this thunderbolt."

The bolt in reserve for him was the following: He was ushered into the cabinet, where Kings only are allowed to enter. The Emperor was pale, and his eye was moist; but his air was firm and resolute.

"Colonel Duke," said he, enveloping and penetrating him with his glance, "you are one of the handsomest officers in Europe. It is said, also, and I believe it true; that you possess an elevated mind—a thorough education, a lively taste for the arts, a noble heart and a loyal character. What think you of the Grand Duchess, my daughter Marie Nicolawna?"

This point blank question dazzled the young man. It is time to say that he admired, adored the Princess, without being fully aware of it. A simple mortal adores an angel of Paradise as an artist adores the ideal of beauty.

"The Princess Marie, sire!" exclaimed he, reading at last his own heart, without daring to read that of the Czar; "your anger would crush me if I told you what I think of her, and I should die of joy if you permitted me to say it."

"You love her; 'tis well," resumed the Czar, with a benignant smile; and the royal hand, from which the Duke was awaiting the thunderbolt, delivered to the Colonel the brevet of General Aid-de-Camp of the Emperor; the brevets of commandant of the Cavalry of the Guerde, and of the regiment of Hussars; of Chief of the Corps of Cadets, and of the Mining Engineers; of President of the Academy of Arts, and member of the Academy of Sciences at the Universities of St. Petersburg, of Moscow, of Kessan, of the Council, of the Military Schools, etc. All this, with the title of Imperial Highness, and several millions of revenue.

"Now," said the Czar to the young men, who was beside himself with joy, "will you quit the service of Bavaria and become the husband of the Princess Marie?"

The young officer could only fall on his knees and baths with his tears the hands of the Emperor.

"You see that I also love my daughter," said the father, pressing his son-in-law in his arms.

The 14th of July following the Grand Duchess was restored to health—to life—and the Duke Beauharnais Leuchtenberg espoused her in the presence of the representatives of all the royal females of Europe.

Such an act of paternal love merited for the Czar and for his daughter a century of happiness. Heaven, which has its secrets, had ordered otherwise. On Tuesday, November 5, 1852, the Duke of Leuchtenburg died at the age of thirty-five; worthy, to the last, of his brilliant destiny, and leaving to Marie Nicolewna, eternal regrets.

All the young Princes of the world will again dispute the prize of her hand; but she has been too happy as a wife to consent to become a Queen.

Anecdote of Gen. Taylor.

